"No, not a red," said the other, "and it's all owing to a little observation on my part as to the working of the meter there. I'll explain. You see, when I first moved into the house I was doing a good business, and so I had everything fixed up in tony style—chandeliers in every room in the house, kitchen included. But after awhile my business began to run down, and I had to shut down on expenses. My wife suggested that we economize on the gas bill, so I bought a lot of lamps, and we stopped using the gas-burners, except in the parlor when we had company. When the man with the lanters came around to look at the meter, I fairly kicked myself with joy to think how it would astonish him. But it didn't.

"The bill for that month was just as big as it was the month before, and when I squeezed there was the meter to back them up. I couldn't get around that. Well, next month I thought I'd experiment. So I put the lamps away in the garret, and used every gas-burner in the house. Kept two chandeliers in the bedrooms going gay and night just for luck. Bill for that month just the same. Then I thought I might just as well be getting all the good out of that meter that it would stand, so I told the gas company that I'd like to have a couple of chandeliers put in the stable for the use of the hired man. They came and put them in, and that very same day a man came to fix up the meter. Said some of the meters were wearing out inside, and had to have some of their driving-wheels renewed, or something of that sort. The hired girl said that he took out a cog-wheel and put in a bigger one, and then wound it up like an eight-day clock. At the end of that month the bill was about twice as big as before.

"Well, that month's bill just settled me, you can just bet. I unpiped a hole in the pipe leading to the barn, ran another pipe over to our next neighbor, and let him have all the gas he wanted for 10 per cent. off. Inside of two months I was supplying the whole square, and it didn't cost a cent more than it did to supply my house and stable. By this little schemeand by strict economy I have been enabled to amass a handsome sum of money, and as soon as you take this house off my hands I'm going to move into the big brick down on the corner. I'll turn this little monopoly right over into your hands. It's a little dangerous, but if you've got the nerve your gas needn't cost you a cent, as I said at first, and—

"My gas isn't likely to cost me anything, anyway," said the stranger, interrupting him for the first time.

"Why?"

"Because," said the stranger, solemnly, "I'm the new secretary of the gas company."

Photography.

Question—"I suppose a great advance has been made in the art during the past few years?"

Answer—"We think we have made some advance, but then we thought so ten, fifteen and twenty years ago. I can remember when we thought we had reached the top of the ladder and were doing perfect work, but when we look at that work to-day we are ashamed of it, and we well may be. The photographs which were taken twenty years ago are old and faded, and cannot be compared in any respect with those of to-day. I suppose twenty years hence those of us who are living then will smile as they look at what we now admire in photography. We are constantly making advances in the art, and while they are not perhaps so noticeable as those made in other branches of science, they are none the less advances, which become easily apparent when the work of to-day is contrasted with that of a score of years ago. I anticipate still greater advances in the future, and I believe the time will come when the press will not only chronicle the events of the day all over the world, as it now does, but, by the combined aid of telegraphy and photography, will daily present its readers with views of the most striking events of the day, 'taken on the spot,' and transmitted around the world by telegraph."—Boston Transcript.

How stand the presidential aspirants now? The drawn battle of Tuesday will revive the hopes of republican candidates. Mr. Blaine may come out of his shell and survey the field with better prospects than ever. New York aspirants will be looking up, and doubtless the admirers of President Arthur's tailor, fishing rod and wine cellar, will regard the result in that state as favorable to his hopes. As to the democrats in New York they seem to lack a man, unless it be Abram Hewitt, who has not been scotched. Cleveland withered very soon after his sudden blooming, and John Kelly has marked him for his prey. No other eastern state offers man or hope. Southward they dare not go. Ohio and Indiana are left. The former offers Thurman and Hoadly—Hoadly just flushed by an extraordinary victory; Thurman willing and willing, and in elegant shape to trade off the senatorship for the sake of support of his state for the presidency. In Indiana there is McDonald, of whom it is said he could carry his state against any living man within its borders—very available and discreet and with a sound record on finance and the tariff; and Holman, the great "Objector," upon whom the New York Sun depends to sweep the country in a whirlwind of enthusiasm for retrenchment and economy. Hendricks is in the background and likely to stay there. The democrats will hardly dare nominate a man from Ohio. It is too uncertain, too fresh in its democracy. The Pacific slope offers Justice Field, but he has given offense there on the Chinese question since 1880, and he will not be the candidate. It looks as if Indiana was going to furnish the coming man. Will it be McDonald, the shrewd, or Holman, the treasury watch dog?—Evening News.

Letters to Millionaires.

The name of Mr. W. W. Corcoran is so widely known by his deeds of philanthropy, and is intimately identified with every movement that is calculated to alleviate suffering and improve the condition of the unfortunate, that the appeals which come to him for all sorts of charitable purposes are almost overwhelming.

For instance, a lady, entirely unknown to Mr. Corcoran, writes a long letter, in which she states that her husband is worth $50,000, and is doing a large and prosperous business. The writer, however, desires to be independent of her husband, and asks Mr. Corcoran to send her enough money so that she may live on the interest. The letter is well-written, and closes with an urgent invitation to Mr. Corcoran to come and make her visit at her home in New England, to see her garden and enjoy the fruits and flowers. The writer was evidently well-to-do in this world and refined and educated, yet, and her prosperity, she had one ambition which was not satisfied, and that was to have a bank account of her own. In this particular she is not, perhaps, an isolated example, but the course of reasoning which led her to think that an entire stranger would help her is entirely unique.

"I want a barrel of mess pork, and I want you to send it to me," was the laconic but peremptory letter received from a man in one of the Southern States. Mr. Corcoran, amused by this strange demand, sent the pork as requested. What was the result? He was rewarded by receiving a request for "another barrel."

A young lady asked Mr. Corcoran to send her a pink silk dress, trimmed to order, to enable her to attend a ball in Virginia. This letter is much in the style of an order to a dressmaker, and it seems to have full possession of your body but somehow that "on mine of generosity" seems to be a pound of cure." This fine preparation will stimulate up the kidneys and liver and cleanse the system of all impurities. Price $1.00 per bottle. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

PERHAPS the deepest coal-mine on this continent is at Pottsville, Pa. The shaft is 1,576 feet deep—nearly a third of a mile. Every day during the busy season 200 cars, containing four tons each, are sent from below to the upper world, the time of each trip being a little over a minute.

Thoroughly Tried.

After many years of experience in my own family and among my home and outside connections to say that Parmelee's Universal Liniment is the most complete remedy for the cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Lame Back, Sore Throat, &c., in the human family, and of Bone Spavin, Sweeny, Ringbone, Sunrise, Bruises on Horses; Caked Udder, Sore Teats, &c., on Cattle, that I have ever known and take pleasure in recommending it to others. Large bottles 50 cts; common size, 25 cents. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

Pilfered Paragraphs.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unrivalled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co. 5-60

THERE is a pretty female barber at Haley, Indian Territory, who is earning, on an average, $50 a day. She charges 50 cents for a shave, and "next" is always on hand during business hours.

Do You Know?

That the Horse and Cattle Powders prepared by E. M. Parmelee are composed of the very best and most concentrated tonics, Gentian, Quassia, Blood Root, Cinchona, Iron, Potassium, Nitre, Epsomite, Bicarbonate, &c., Sulphur, Manganese, Sodium, Magnesia, for Human Blood; besides many other ingredients especially adapted to the cure of colds, Worms, Humors, and all diseases of Horses, Cattle, Hogs, Sheep and Poultry. Buy no other. Full pounds only 25 cents. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

If you devote your time to study, you will avoid all the uncomfortness of life; nor will you long for the comforts of night, being tired of the day; nor will you be a burden to yourself, nor your society unsupportable to others.—Seneca.

Why Suffer?

with Dyspepsia when Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure will work wonders, restoring you at once. Do not wait till Dyspepsia has become chronic, or Diabetes has taken full possession of your body but remember that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." This fine preparation will also tone up the kidneys and liver and cleanse the system of all impurities. Price $1.00 per bottle. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

An Empress' Whims.

The Empress Josephine had 600,000 francs for her personal expenses, but this sum was not sufficient, and her debts increased to an appalling degree. Notwithstanding the position of her husband, she could never submit to either order or etiquette in her private life. She rose at 9 o'clock. Her toilet consumed much time, and she lavished unwearied efforts on the preservation and embellishment of her person. She changed her linen three times a day, and never wore any stockings that were not new. Huge baskets were brought to her containing different dresses, shawls and hats. From these she selected her costume for the day. She possessed between 300 and 400 shawls, and always wore one in the morning, which she draped about her shoulders with unequaled grace. She purchased all that were brought to her, no matter at what price. The evening toilet was as careful as that of the morning; then she appeared with flowers, pearls or precious stones in her hair. The small-est nonsense was always an occasion for her to order a new costume, in spite of the honest remonstrances of the princess palaces. Bonaparte was irritated by these expenditures; he would fly into a passion, and his wife would weep and promise to be more prudent, after which she would go on in the same way. It is almost incredible that this passion for dress should never have exhausted itself. After the divorce she arrayed herself with the same care, even when she saw no one. She died covered with ribbons and pale rose-colored satin.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

GEO. W. MILLER,

DEALER IN

Clothing

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

Hats and Caps, Trunks and Satchels,

GLOVES MITTENS, ETC.

Buttars' Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

CHICAGO WEEKLY HERALD

The Largest, Best, and Most Complete Newspaper ever sent

One Year for $1.00.

EIGHT LARGE PAGES,

Containing the News of the Day, Agricultural and other matter interesting to the farmer and his family, complete Market Reports, Stories, Sketches, etc. Sample copies free. Address

CHICAGO WEEKLY HERALD,
Chicago, Ill.

If you want a daily paper try

The Chicago Herald,

An enterprising, fearless, and reliable Chicago daily that has been a great success because of its excellence in every particular. It presents all the news every day on four large pages and at a price that permits its being taken by everybody. For sale by all newsdealers. Sent on trial by mail, postage paid, six days each week, for TWO MONTHS FOR ONE DOLLAR. Address

THE CHICAGO HERALD,
120 and 122 FIFTH-AV., Chicago, Ill.
JAMES W. SCOTT, Publisher. tf

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used, (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for CONSUMPTION, COLDS, CONSUMPTIVE ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. Parties wishing the prescription, will please address, Rev. A. WILSON, 195 First-St., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

$1 A YEAR. $1 — ONE DOLLAR

THE WEEKLY Detroit Free Press AND THE HOUSEHOLD

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

The Large Pages of News and Reading Matter, The Fine Illustrations, The Great Number of Dollar Weeklies, Stamp Collectors' Department, Sunday Reading, Household Department, Agricultural Department, Puzzle Department, Etc., Etc., Make it the Best Family Paper Published. Sample Copies Free. Address, THE DETROIT FREE PRESS CO., Detroit, Mich.

$1 A YEAR. $1 — ONE DOLLAR

TWO PAPERS FOR THE PRICE OF ONE

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 30. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1883. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

is published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

Office over T. B. Smith's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX. MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH. AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Business Directory.

ATTORNEYS.

CHRISMAN & CHRISMAN, Attorneys at Law, Office in Barnes' Block, Charlevoix, Mich. A. H. CHRISMAN, C. A. CHRISMAN.

FRED W. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Real Estate business promptly attended to. Office over TE DONA'S.

H. A. JERSEY, Attorney and Counselor at Law, office in Gidley's Block, East Jordan, Mich.

J. A. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

VARNUM & KEYT, Attorneys at Law. Office opposite U. S. Hotel, Boyne, Mich.

OSCAR F. WINSLOW, Attorney and Solicitor, and U. S. Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX. Capital $50,000. Receives deposits, makes collections, negotiates loans, deals in government bonds, real estate, and general banking business. Interest allowed on time deposits. Drafts issued payable in any town in the United States. Highest price paid for Michigan Bonds. H. W. LANGFORD, Cashier.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. Sabbath services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sabbath school at 12 m. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7:30. Pastor's class every Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock. A. W. CLARK, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7 o'clock. Pastor's class meeting Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock. T. F. RODGERS, pastor.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. A. CHRISTIEN, M. D. Office at the Eagle hotel, Charlevoix, Mich.

L. LEWIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office in Gidley's new block, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. F. TREDO, M. D., Surgeon and Physician. Office in Pinney's building, Charlevoix, Mich.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HORACE S. HAMILTON, Notary Public, Real Estate, Loan, and Insurance Agt. Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

A. O. U. W. Charlevoix Lodge No. 148, meets every Saturday evening in each month, at Odd Fellows' Hall. A. R. PERSONS, Recorder. A. E. FERGUSON, P. M. W.

I. O. O. F. Charlevoix Lodge No. 207, meets every Friday evening, at Odd Fellows' Hall. A. MAYNARD, Secy. H. A. JERSEY, N. G.

I. O. G. T. Charlevoix Lodge No. 67, meets every Wednesday evening, in Good Templars' Hall. DAVID MAYNARD, Secretary. JOHN WEIDMAN, W. C. T.

I. O. O. F. Round Lake Lodge No. 247, meets every Saturday evening, in Good Templars' Hall. DAVID MAYNARD, Secretary. JOHN WEIDMAN, N. G.

I. O. O. F. Three Rivers Encampment, meets the 1st Tuesday in each month in Odd Fellows' hall. C. A. CHRISTIEN, Scribe. A. H. CHRISTIEN, C. P.

A. O. U. W. Charlevoix Lodge No. 250, meets every Monday on or before full moon in each month, at Odd Fellows' hall. A. E. FERGUSON, Recorder. A. R. PERSONS, M. W.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss. At a session of the Probate Court for said County of Charlevoix, in the village of Charlevoix, in said County, on the 17th day of November, A. D. 1883. Present, Jas. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of Jacob Wolf, deceased. On reading and filing the petition of Jacob Wolf, praying that the administration of said deceased be granted to Jacob Wolf, or to some other suitable person. It is ordered that the 17th day of December, A. D. 1883, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs at law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be held at the Probate office in the village of Charlevoix, in said County, and show cause why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted. And it is further ordered that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Journal, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County, for three successive weeks previous to said time of hearing. JAS. MILO EATON, Judge of Probate.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a mortgage made by Mary Ann Wilson, of the village of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, widow, residing in said village, to Horace S. Hamilton, of said village, dated the 1st day of August, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for said County of Charlevoix, on the 2nd day of August, A. D. 1882, in Liber A of Mortgages, on page 179, which said mortgage was assigned to the undersigned by said Horace S. Hamilton, by assignment dated the 18th day of July, A. D. 1883, of which assignment the record is in said Register's office, which said mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date hereof the sum of Two Hundred Dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted, and no action been taken to recover the same, secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and the undersigned, the assignee, does hereby elect to declare the whole of said principal sum, with all arrears of interest thereon, immediately due and payable, and to foreclose said mortgage, on Saturday, the ninth day of February, A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at the south door of the front division of the Court House in the village of Charlevoix, County and State aforesaid, the premises in said mortgage described, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy said principal sum and all arrears of interest thereon, with costs and expenses of foreclosure and sale, namely, lots 17, 18 and 19, in Barnes' Addition to the village of Charlevoix, according to the recorded plat thereof. Dated November 14, A. D. 1883. HORACE S. HAMILTON, Assignee of Mortgage. PRICE, KEYES & CHRISTIEN, Attorneys for Assignee of mortgage. 1830

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few late sewing machines for sale at ten dollars each and upwards. Also a few second hand machines.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED FOR 5 YEARS.

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY

has purchased the Lenox and Singer Sewing Machines of the Chicago Manufacturing Co., and is now prepared to furnish the old customers, and can supply new ones cheaper than any other house in the country. Needles, Shuttles, and Attachments for all machines. Also agent for the celebrated Davis Vertical Feed Sewing Machine. Office and Salesroom, Bridge Street, Charlevoix, Mich.

Furnishing Goods.

Labels entitled to Fisher & Tremont, and will be pleased to retail all the old customers, and can supply them cheaper than any other house in the county. Also a full line of Gents' Furnishing Goods, Hats and Caps, Boots and Shoes, Trunks and Valises. Remember the place, Bridge Street, Charlevoix, Mich.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 75 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Democrat, by mail, $6.00 per year or in advance, postage paid.

Weekly Democrat, $1.50 per year, 25 cents for three months, or cents for three months on trial, postage free to all parts of the United States.

Address,

THE DEMOCRAT,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

FOR

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

GO TO

Dr. G. W. CROUTER'S DRUG STORE.

Santa Claus' Headquarters.

An Immense Line to Choose From.

From the Detroit Evening News.

THAT LITTLE RED BOOK.

The Light of Truth Against "Stink-pot Warfare."

Gov. Begole's Vindication from the Malicious Attacks of Certain Alleged Newspapers—Road it Through, in Justice.

Flint, Mich., Nov. 21.—The Flint Evening Journal of to-day will contain the following:

We take pleasure in placing the facts before our readers in regard to an issue raised by a scurrilous article which appeared in the Post and Tribune of Nov. 12. Gov. Begole refused to make any statement, merely saying that the utter lack of character of the paper would prevent his noticing any charges it might make. George L. Walker, the governor's business partner, last participated with the facts, but out of delicacy, and we have been compelled to await his return.

Mr. Stevenson, the governor's secretary, who has held the same character had said to a reporter in Detroit that he the secretary) was preparing a statement in regard to the railroad pass business, replied:

"Reporters never lie, but are sometimes strictly mistaken. I think the governor meant, as the easiest way to escape the reporter, to say that I have not prepared any statement, and had proposed to do so.

"Well, you are a good talker when you get started," we said; "tell us what you know about it."

"Well, the first I heard of this 'red book' business was at Lansing last winter. A reporter from one of the Detroit papers told me that a railroad man had offered to furnish him for publication a letter of Gov. Begole to the F. & P. M. R. R. Co. 'begging for a pass,' but telling them not to let members of the legislature have any. I asked the governor about it and he said that he had written to the company a month before his inauguration for a 500-mile ticket book in order to furnish him private business. That it was his by right, under an agreement with the railroad company as to transporting logs, and was not in favor or in donation on the part of the company, and when that book was used up in his private business he would send for another one. He refused absolutely to believe the reporter's statement that my letter of his had been offered for publication. That what he had said in his letter in regard to furnishing passes to members of the legislature was just what he had said in his messages—that it greatly prolonged the session; adding, that he was sorry he had made any of this session is being wasted by members running home on free passes. He said he never asked, I don't know how many free passes they got.

"Next I heard quite lately, that certain parties in this city connected with the institution for the deaf and dumb were showing round the letter of the governor's begging for passes on the F. & P. M. R. R. The publication of the fac-simile letter in the Post and Tribune I regarded as a great favor to the governor, as it effectually ended the chances for successful lying in regard to their contents."

"How much of the governor's 500-mile ticket has he used to date?"

"Nearly 400 miles. Now since the governor got that 500-mile book he has traveled about 3,000 miles on the F. & P. M. R. R., paying full fare like any other citizen. The 100 miles remaining unused of the ticket book he will not use except when traveling on his private business, and when it is used up he will send for another book."

"The Post makes quite a handle of his sending for a book for Mrs. Begole?"

"Why shouldn't he send for one? Any man in Michigan can buy a 500-mile ticket for his wife at 2½ cents a mile, unless you make Mr. Begole an exception. The governor expected to pay for Mrs. Begole's book the market price. The railroad company were under no obligations to furnish ticket books for Mrs. Begole, and the governor saw no reason for adding to that letter: 'P. S.—I will pay you for Mrs. Begole's ticket.' He supposed it would be charged to him, of course. If it had been received and not paid for there might be some reason to question the governor's intentions in regard to it. Just so with his first letter. He might have, in set phrase, recited the agreement with the railroad company and asked that the ticket book be sent to him in conformity therewith, but the governor is not disposed to suspect anybody, and is never disposed in the use of words. It is just about impossible to make him believe that persons who meet him with professions of friendship are really maneuvering for a chance to stab him in the back. The republican editors of this state are a class are gentlemen and have treated the governor fairly and kindly. A few of the other class have become possessed with the insane idea that they can beat anybody but Gov. Begole, and that if one can be crushed out Michigan will be redeemed. Now some of the very best and most conscientious men in Michigan are leading republicans, and the masses of that party, like the masses of all parties, want to do right, and will do it as nearly as their prejudices will permit. If these fellows who have attacked the governor don't stop lying about him pretty soon, the party they represent can't beat anybody in Michigan."

George L. Walker, a business partner of Gov. Begole, and an active working republican, when asked what he knew in regard to the use of mileage ticket books by members of the firm of Begole, Fox & Co., made the following statement:

"About three or four years ago, an agreement was made between Begole, Fox & Co. and the F. & P. M. railroad company for the transportation of logs from Clare county to one mill at Flint. As one of the considerations it was agreed, by the representative of the railroad company, that the members of our firm should have such mileage ticket books as were necessary for use in our business. Passes they said they preferred not to issue to shippers. Since that time we have paid that railroad company between $20,000 and $30,000 yearly, on that contract, and for shipment of timber. A book of tickets was at once issued to Begole, Fox & Co., and several books were afterwards issued to the firm for the use of its members, as required. After that a rule was adopted by the railroad company that such tickets should be issued to individuals, and not to firms. Under this arrangement Mr. Begole got his ticket book in his own name, and I in mine. I have had three or four 1,000-mile books of the company. I have received them as a matter of course, no per agreement. Here is my present book. It contains 7 tickets for 1,000 miles, and when it has been used up by travel on business of the firm, I am entitled to another. When we pay for hauling logs, the books are paid for, as it was a part of the agreement when the contract was made. I cannot see that being elected governor affects Mr. Begole's standing as a member of the firm, or his right to travel as heretofore on business. If Mr. Begole has had but one 500-mile book since the 1st of June (traveling as much as he does) he must have been very careful not to use it on public business."

When asked if it would not have been equally necessary for him (Mr. Walker) to have resigned his 1,000-mile ticket book when he was supervisor, alderman and president of the school board, he replied: "That is the way it will not become tilted."

In answer to the question, "When a book is used up how do you get another?" Mr. Walker replied, "Well, when I see my book getting thin I step into the office at East Saginaw and call their attention to the fact, and another book is handed over and no questions asked."

Hon. Daniel S. Fox, ex-mayor of Flint, and the remaining partner of the firm of Begole, Fox & Co., on being shown Mr. Walker's statement, said, "Those are the facts; I could not state them any more clearly than Mr. Walker has done."

As it is well known that the governor does the majority of his traveling over the F. & P. M. railroad, H. S. Pitt, ticket agent at their depot in this city, was next interviewed. He said:

"While I am strongly opposed to Gov. Begole in politics, I am just as strongly opposed to the deliberate lies that have been circulated about the governor, in respect to this 'pass' business. Ever since he has been governor he bought tickets from me when traveling on state business on this road, and paid his money for the same like any other private citizen. During his present incumbency he has paid a large amount of money for tickets. I do not know for a fact, that the governor has a little red book, or mileage tickets, as I never saw it. When the governor gets ready to do my traveling, on this road, he comes to me and I look up his route for him and sell him a ticket. If he has a mileage book I see no reason why he should be debarred from using it while traveling on private business, any more than another citizen. I am generally called a radical republican, but all the same I have too much respect for Gov. Begole to allow the base falsehoods that have been launched against him to pass without raising my voice against it, in common justice."

From the facts given certain conclusions may be arrived at:

1. Gov. Begole never asked for a pass or had a pass on the F. & P. M. R. R.

2. Since his inauguration as governor he has used about one-500-mile ticket book of the market value of about $12.50, received under an agreement with the company for use in his private business.

3. That while the governor was using up this 500 mile book his firm have paid about $25,000 to the F. & P. M. R. R. company.

4. That the governor has been conscientiously careful not to use his ticket book on public business, having traveled over 3,000 miles on the F. & P. M. R. R. since his inauguration, paying full fare like any other citizen.

5. That his firm have never had a pass or mileage ticket book on the F. & P. M. R. R. The groundless assumption that the governor "begged" one for her was based on the preposterous idea that he was "begging" one for himself, and is a wanton insult to an honorable man who has always promptly paid one hundred cents on the dollar.

6. The gentleman who was so anxious to furnish business correspondence for the transportation of logs from Clare county to one mill at Flint, as one of the considerations it was agreed, by the representative of the railroad company, that the members of our firm should have such mileage ticket books as were necessary for use in our business. Passes they said they preferred not to issue to shippers. Since that time we have paid that railroad company between $20,000 and $30,000 yearly, on that contract, and for shipment of timber. A book of tickets was at once issued to Begole, Fox & Co., and several books were afterwards issued to the firm for the use of its members, as required. After that a rule was adopted by the railroad company that such tickets should be issued to individuals, and not to firms. Under this arrangement Mr. Begole got his ticket book in his own name, and I in mine. I have had three or four 1,000-mile books of the company. I have received them as a matter of course, no per agreement. Here is my present book. It contains 7 tickets for 1,000 miles, and when it has been used up by travel on business of the firm, I am entitled to another. When we pay for hauling logs, the books are paid for, as it was a part of the agreement when the contract was made. I cannot see that being elected governor affects Mr. Begole's standing as a member of the firm, or his right to travel as heretofore on business. If Mr. Begole has had but one 500-mile book since the 1st of June (traveling as much as he does) he must have been very careful not to use it on public business."

When asked if it would not have been equally necessary for him (Mr. Walker) to have resigned his 1,000-mile ticket book when he was supervisor, alderman and president of the school board, he replied: "That is the way it will not become tilted."

In answer to the question, "When a book is used up how do you get another?" Mr. Walker replied, "Well, when I see my book getting thin I step into the office at East Saginaw and call their attention to the fact, and another book is handed over and no questions asked."

Hon. Daniel S. Fox, ex-mayor of Flint, and the remaining partner of the firm of Begole, Fox & Co., on being shown Mr. Walker's statement, said, "Those are the facts; I could not state them any more clearly than Mr. Walker has done."

As it is well known that the governor does the majority of his traveling over the F. & P. M. railroad, H. S. Pitt, ticket agent at their depot in this city, was next interviewed. He said:

"While I am strongly opposed to Gov. Begole in politics, I am just as strongly opposed to the deliberate lies that have been circulated about the governor, in respect to this 'pass' business. Ever since he has been governor he bought tickets from me when traveling on state business on this road, and paid his money for the same like any other private citizen. During his present incumbency he has paid a large amount of money for tickets. I do not know for a fact, that the governor has a little red book, or mileage tickets, as I never saw it. When the governor gets ready to do my traveling, on this road, he comes to me and I look up his route for him and sell him a ticket. If he has a mileage book I see no reason why he should be debarred from using it while traveling on private business, any more than another citizen. I am generally called a radical republican, but all the same I have too much respect for Gov. Begole to allow the base falsehoods that have been launched against him to pass without raising my voice against it, in common justice."

From the facts given certain conclusions may be arrived at:

1. Gov. Begole never asked for a pass or had a pass on the F. & P. M. R. R.

2. Since his inauguration as governor he has used about one-500-mile ticket book of the market value of about $12.50, received under an agreement with the company for use in his private business.

3. That while the governor was using up this 500 mile book his firm have paid about $25,000 to the F. & P. M. R. R. company.

4. That the governor has been conscientiously careful not to use his ticket book on public business, having traveled over 3,000 miles on the F. & P. M. R. R. since his inauguration, paying full fare like any other citizen.

5. That his firm have never had a pass or mileage ticket book on the F. & P. M. R. R. The groundless assumption that the governor "begged" one for her was based on the preposterous idea that he was "begging" one for himself, and is a wanton insult to an honorable man who has always promptly paid one hundred cents on the dollar.

6. The gentleman who was so anxious to furnish business correspondence for the transportation of logs from Clare county to one mill at Flint, as one of the considerations it was agreed, by the representative of the railroad company, that the members of our firm should have such mileage ticket books as were necessary for use in our business. Passes they said they preferred not to issue to shippers. Since that time we have paid that railroad company between $20,000 and $30,000 yearly, on that contract, and for shipment of timber. A book of tickets was at once issued to Begole, Fox & Co., and several books were afterwards issued to the firm for the use of its members, as required. After that a rule was adopted by the railroad company that such tickets should be issued to individuals, and not to firms. Under this arrangement Mr. Begole got his ticket book in his own name, and I in mine. I have had three or four 1,000-mile books of the company. I have received them as a matter of course, no per agreement. Here is my present book. It contains 7 tickets for 1,000 miles, and when it has been used up by travel on business of the firm, I am entitled to another. When we pay for hauling logs, the books are paid for, as it was a part of the agreement when the contract was made. I cannot see that being elected governor affects Mr. Begole's standing as a member of the firm, or his right to travel as heretofore on business. If Mr. Begole has had but one 500-mile book since the 1st of June (traveling as much as he does) he must have been very careful not to use it on public business."

When asked if it would not have been equally necessary for him (Mr. Walker) to have resigned his 1,000-mile ticket book when he was supervisor, alderman and president of the school board, he replied: "That is the way it will not become tilted."

In answer to the question, "When a book is used up how do you get another?" Mr. Walker replied, "Well, when I see my book getting thin I step into the office at East Saginaw and call their attention to the fact, and another book is handed over and no questions asked."

Hon. Daniel S. Fox, ex-mayor of Flint, and the remaining partner of the firm of Begole, Fox & Co., on being shown Mr. Walker's statement, said, "Those are the facts; I could not state them any more clearly than Mr. Walker has done."

As it is well known that the governor does the majority of his traveling over the F. & P. M. railroad, H.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—A charming way to flavor custards is to beat fruit jelly with the whites of the eggs; red jelly for strawberry custards is especially nice for this.—Chicago Journal.

—A practical farmer recommends the growing of two crops of buckwheat in succession as a means of exterminating wire-worms. They will not eat buckwheat and are starved to death.—Chicago Tribune.

—A correspondent writes that a sure way to kill bankes is to run the top to the ground, then with a sharp knife scoop out a hole put in a teaspoonful of kerosene oil. There will be no further trouble from that plant.—Prairie Farmer.

—To clean a brass kettle: Put it over the fire with a little water in it, and when it is quite warm, wash it out with soap and water thoroughly. Dry it, and then take sweet oil and rotten-stone to polish it and it will shine most beautifully.—The Household.

—A western farmer was asked when ocean as a manure for wheat, reports that the effect of an application of one ton of fish to the acre was equal to that obtained from the usual application of a mixture of bone dust, guano, lime and wood ashes, and the difference in yield of the crops that received fish as compared with those not so treated was very great.—Boston Transcript.

—Pure, wholesome milk in a clean cellar or milk house, where the temperature is not over seventy degrees, will keep sweet for thirty-six hours, and will not become tilled under forty-eight hours. Otherwise something is wrong with the cows. A cow exposed to the sun in a pasture, or having impure water to drink, can not be in a healthy condition, and the first appearance of trouble will be the premature souring of the milk.—New England Farmer.

A PHILADELPHIA undertaker advertises for bearded men to assist him in his business. Being questioned by a representative of the Press, he said that he found that the public, especially the bereaved public, had more confidence in bearded men, and more respect for them. There was a solemn dignity about them that comported admirably with everything pertaining to funerals.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

IT is proposed to hold a grand international jubilee upon the completion of the Washington Monument in the spring of 1885, to which all the world, but especially those countries which have contributed blocks of stone to the monument, will be invited to send representatives.

CHASTENED by defeat, Yale has at length decided to go back to the old "Bob Cook" stroke, which proved to be pretty good seven or eight years ago. The Captain of the Yale boat crew and two of his men have been putting in their vacation time under Cook's instruction in Philadelphia, and hope to be able to teach their fellows how the thing should be done. Mr. Cook has dropped boating for journalism, and is business manager of the Philadelphia Press.

PEORIA has only 40,000 inhabitants, but there is one respect in which it is the biggest city in the land. There is no other from which the Government receives so large an amount of internal revenue. Thirteen immense distilleries make this the center of whisky manufacture. The tax is 90 cents a gallon. The liquor when it is under control to send every drop of its product to France, to be used in the native wines of that vine-clad country.

ONE little girl who had lived in London all her life and had never seen a tree was recently taken into the country, together with many others, at the expense of a "fresh air fund." She clung to one of the teachers in dreadful alarm on seeing a tree, and could not understand what such an immense green thing could be. "Why don't it keep still?" she said, in a paroxysm of terror, as the wind swayed its branches; and it was only after some time that she could be induced to go near enough to touch it.

A CHICAGO physician suggests that elopements of medical men with their young lady patients would be avoided by leaving the professional treatment of women to doctors of their own sex. A slanderous Brooklyn paper comment-ing on the proposed remedy says such a course would diminish the number of female patients at least 50 per cent., and make the practice of medicine an unprofitable one. Are there no able-minded women who will come forward to defend their invalid sisters from such vile expressions?

WHILE Mr. Moody, in Chicago, was remarking that he hoped the time would soon come that poor women with babies would be allowed to bring their babies in church, one in the gallery whose mother had already availed herself of the opportunity set up a yelling. But Moody was not discomfited. If the children cried those who didn't like it could go, he said. Here came another protest yell. "If a child cried," he said, screaming at the top of his voice, he would speak louder." Here the child cried louder than ever. Everybody roared with laughter, in the midst of which the unhappy mother made her escape.

A GEORGIA camp meeting was well under way, having been greatly stirred by the preacher, when Mrs. Nichols began denouncing every one around her so violently that the preacher stepped and hundreds pressed around the woman for explanation. She pointed to her daughter, clinging to the arm of a well-known young gentleman, whose attention to the daughter were forbidden by the mother. Having in his possession a license, and procuring the service of a friendly preacher, they crowded up to the young lady and mother and a marriage was performed before the old lady realized what was going on.

A WORKER in mine in Telluride, Col., is described by a correspondent of the New Orleans Times-Democrat: "About fifty feet from the entrance is a large conchoidal chamber, about eighty feet in height and forty in diameter. The walls and roof are almost solid galena, and the floor, to the depth of six or eight feet, is composed of soft lead carbonates. Three chambers, ranging from seventy to 120 feet in length and averaging about eight feet in diameter, radiate from the chamber described, and are about the same formation of galena. These three passages have numerous small ones running off in every direction, and in them the carbonates are of higher grade, and they run much better in silver. The ore can be easily detached.

GEN. BEAUREGARD says: "In the early spring of 1861 it became evident to her physician and her family that Mrs. Beauregard had not long to live. Our good old friend, Dr. Mercier, again went to Gen. Butler to know if there were any possibility of my seeing once more the tender and loving wife from whom I had been so suddenly and long separated. He immediately turned to his desk, and, with his characteristic promptness, wrote an unconditional pass, which authorized me to enter his lines and to come to New Orleans, where I could remain unmolested as long as circumstances required my presence there. That was a noble act, for which I shall ever be grateful."

THE London Times, in speaking of the literary decadence of Boston, points out that Edinburgh, too, has been deposed from its literary ascendancy as literature has left Boston for New York, so has it abandoned Edinburgh for London. It is the same with other cities. Wealth has tempted to be a costly residence town. Geneva has gone into trade and politics. Florence is no more an intellectual center. Oxford and Cambridge retain no dictatorship in letters. It may seem to be only a transfer of the intellectual headship from one locality to another. The charge may be supposed to be nothing but an instance of the common law of the rise and decline of local greatness.

"HELENA: is hopeful, sure enough, unanimously so than Bozeman," a correspondent of the St. Paul Pioneer Press says, in a letter from Montana. "Helena claims to have added 3,000 within a year or two to the 6,000 to which she grew as a mining town without a railroad. The town is just passing through the transition from a placer mining city to a permanent center of quartz mining and trade. The once rich gulches on the debris of whose mines the city stands have been exhausted to a relatively insignificant product of about $100,000 a year. The permanent mining industry of the place will find its material in the rich quartz veins of the mountains at whose feet it nestles, where one unknowing mine was lately sold to an English syndicate for $1,000,000.

WHEN Proctor Knott delivered that Congressional speech which brought Duluth into such ridiculous prominence, and which added so largely to his own reputation as a satirist, he did not foresee what now seems to be the almost inevitable great future of that much-abused part. For many years Duluth trembled between small hope and great fear, but when it became evident that the Northern Pacific and Canada Pacific Railways would be completed to the Western coast, she held up her head in the very glory of confidence. Nor was this confidence unreasonable, for, with the completion of those railways and the development of the great Northwest, Duluth's natural advantages must make her a very important city. Situated on a broad water bay, she has a harbor which, for extent, safety and convenience, is excelled by few, if any, in the United States. Into this bay, and but a short distance from the city, empties the St. Louis river, with its eight miles of "rapids"—a water power of inestimable value in a country of vast pine forests, rich iron mines and the greatest wheat crops in the world. Here is work for mills, and here is power to run them; and here, too, is water connection with the Eastern markets. These things suggest a great future for Duluth.

Hash Called Up by a Locomotive Bell.

On one of the Northern trains was an old lady who evidently had never before made a railroad journey. After looking about her some time in timidity, her eyes alighted on the bell line and asked the water boy, who happened to be passing at the time, what it was for. "That, marm," said the boy with a wicked twinkle in his eyes, "is to ring the bell when you want anything to eat," and passed on. Shortly after the old lady got down the family umbrella and reaching up to the bell line gave it a vigorous pull. Of course the brakes were applied, the windows thrown up, questions asked, etc., the old lady sitting calmly through the confusion. Presently the conductor came rushing into the car, exclaiming, "Who pulled the bell?" "I did," replied the old lady meekly. "Well, what do you want?" snapped the official impatiently. "Well," said the old party meditatively, "you may bring me some hash." Buffalo Commercial.

IOWA has increased her stock 130,730 during the last year, while in Ohio there has been a decrease of 14,671 head.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

Our Pet.

We music him a crow from the apple-tree,
Where he lived the summer long;
And we coaxed to think we missed a bear or more,
At nightfall, his cue rival song.

He's mostly stopped to feed from the paint
We eat first him the gardener's pet;
Peg he pry at the sitchen-door the and slugs—
My heart is breaking yet.

And then He was a bit too easy to school,
Proved the rhetoric sad.
For I tried to teach him to speak to the last,
Who would tell each clear little lad.

—Kate Lancraft, in Wide Awake Companion.

My Chum Mike.

We were off for our summer vacation, Mike (my chum) and I. Mike took it rather quietly, but that's his way. People have different ways of taking; his was through his eyes and how much they could tell a fellow! But, I'm not the mean kind, and I wanted to talk to everyone—and touch them if they, too, were going away from the hot, dusty city, to-day's three long, restful, delicious weeks.

Finally, as we came near our journey's end, we packed ourselves away in the old stage which was to land us at the lakeside. I felt that I must talk or explode. I tell you, being shut up in a dingy little office in a dingy little street kept in the heat of the summer months of the year makes one appreciate some things; so, when I sniffed the sweet country odors, and then caught sight of a pond through the trees, I gave Mike a rapturous shake; but he made no reply except to rattle the fishing-tackle in his pockets. This was provoking, but rather dull for steady conversation; so, in desperation, I began to sum my fellow-passenger up. Mike was a dingy little body, a pale-looking boy, who sat working his eyes at me in such a peculiarly funny way, that I laughed, which laugh seemed to set on him like an inspiration, for he immediately broke his silence by inquiring in a rapid voice:

"Where you going? Where going to the Lake View house—tip-top place—ever been? Splendid fishing—was there last summer—lots of fun."

I informed him that I was going there also, and then drifted into a lively discussion as to the relative merits of grasshoppers or angle-worms for bait, as my experience with either was limited, this subject soon dropped, when he inquired, "Aren't any of your folks going to be there? possibly enjoying freedom from the sidewalk.

"None of my folks," I replied; "but my chum, my best friend; we're going to have fine times together. You'd like him; he's a capital fellow—when he is in the mood." I said, laughing, as I noticed him sitting silent and quiet by my side me. "You must come up to our rooms some day," I added, as the stage stopped before our hotel.

I saw nothing of my new acquaintance for a day or two, and Mike, who had come out of his dumps was such good company that I forgot all about the boy. One afternoon, we were rushing down the hall after us as I was returning to our room from a long tramp.

"Hallo! Where you been—fishing?" he asked, breathlessly.

"Yes," I answered.

"Catch anything?"

"Of course."

"Where's your chum?"

"Mike's off for a tramp; he doesn't like fishing. Come and see him. He will be in a rare humor when I show what I have. We will have a festive time. Come up."

"Yes, guess I will. I'm sick of things here, anyway."

This was an uncommon boy. He was just like a thousand others—rough, boyish, thoughtless, a little slap, but good-hearted, and ready to learn anything I put which ever happened to come in. I felt a little ashamed of my hasty judgment of him, and I listened to his lengthy and oft thrilling adventure with a pick-rel and congratulated myself that he would be quite as delightful to my friend, Mike, as I have intimated, was a queer mixture, and fond of the outer part of living or hunting; but he had ample provocation for my pride, as I learned Bob—which I found to be the boy's name—when he made some damaging remark, about my friend, to the effect that "Mike couldn't be much of a fellow if he didn't fish." So I had to plead his cause as we ascended the last flight of stairs, declaring that he made up for this unexpiable deficiency by the best of things he knew. "Why," I said, "he is the most interesting company in the world; he tells the most wonderful stories—more marvelous than the Arabian Nights, or Jules Verne, and all true, too, and he will keep it all as long as you have a mind to sit up of an evening. The look of disdain over Mike's deplorable lack of interest in those sports dear to the heart of every well-regulated boy had changed to one of interest, as we entered where he was turned the key of 131 and flung open the door, to "Set Mike a-going for his life when you want anything to eat," and passed on. Shortly after the old lady got down the family umbrella and reaching up to the bell line gave it a vigorous pull. Of course the brakes were applied, the windows thrown up, questions asked, etc., the old lady sitting calmly through the confusion. Presently the conductor came rushing into the car, exclaiming, "Who pulled the bell?" "I did," replied the old lady meekly. "Well, what do you want?" snapped the official impatiently. "Well," said the old party meditatively, "you may bring me some hash." Buffalo Commercial.

A JAPANESE RAILROAD.

Some Peculiarities of Management.—A Peep at the Passengers.

The Tokio-Yokohama railroad is a Government affair, as everything else is here. Although it cripples individual enterprises, it secures the success of a thing to have the Government control it. The railroad and the telegraph systems are very satisfactory, and the postal system is just about perfect.

Trains are run between the two stations every hour and a quarter during the day, leaving both stations simultaneously. The whole equipment is English. The cars are divided into three classes. Even the first-class cars are decidedly plain. Themselves are divided into three compartments. The second-class cars would hardly be used on a horse-railroad in Boston. They are as plain as plain can be, and make you like a horse-car, having two long seats on the sides facing each other. The seats are upholstered with the same kind of matting which the Japanese use on their floors.

The third-class cars have simply plain benches for seats. The entrance of all three classes is the same. This does away with platforms and gates. Everything pertaining to the road is kept in the best condition. The roadbed is like a floor; the cars are clean; the stations are clean; all officials are uniformed. I have seen one of this kind of a stupid impolite. Passengers are not allowed to cross the track except by the bridges overhead. Being English crakes, trains run on the left-hand track. No baggage is allowed to go free, save such as one can take in his hand. We can take no living thing into the train, not even a cat, without paying an extra price. Posted up in the stations is a notice to the effect that the Government does not run "Noah's Ark" for the transportation of dogs, but, if dogs must travel, provision has been made for them. So every station is provided with boxes labeled on top in which poodle or mastiff can be transported for a definite sum.

Five minutes before the train starts a warning-bell is rung. The ticket office is stocked with "bookings," and a notice tells you that you must be "booked" before you can enter the train.

Just before the train starts the bell is again rung to warn people and to clear closed, so there is no possible chance for a belated passenger to run for the train," and possibly get recove in the train. There are no side doors either through which you can dodge the official.

Having booked yourself or purchased your ticket, you are allowed to pass through a very narrow passageway to the train and have your ticket punched as you pass. Although there is no gate, as there are in Boston and Paris, there are other arrangements that more than compensate for this loss of elegance.

No official goes with the train; no brakeman, in dishcloth times, whipped out the number of the train and the time-table book on the train is on a rack specially for that purpose and attached to the rear of the train. No conductor shouts, "Tickets, please," and when he has finished his rounds stands by the fair man who goes daily for her time and tickets. Any passenger is expected to enter the class one for which he holds a ticket. If he doesn't do this and he is found out there is a penalty for his mischievousness.

When it is time for the train to start an official on the platform blows a little whistle, the stoker engine blows a shrill whistle, which would be terrific if it were only powerful enough, and off we go. And now we see one advantage over the average American railroad—there is not the slightest jerk in starting; indeed, you never know when you are really in motion unless you look at objects outside the window.

The train glides (that just expresses it) not swiftly to be sure, for it never will probably the day would condemn it. Nothing upsets a native Hiroshimian more than a jerking train.

The road follows the Tokaido and the coast of the bay most of the distance. It is nearly a dead level. On both sides are the rice fields, where, at the time of the year, the farmers stand nearly up to their knees in mud, setting out the rice plants. There is nothing particularly attractive to see; miles on a bright day you watch the changing forms of that noble mountain—Mount Fuji—the "peerless," as it towers up in the distance.

Let us look at our fellow-passengers in the car. As it is early train there are various officials going to Yokohama for their daily business. These men are dressed in foreign clothes, and many of them understand some foreign language, English or German. They are mostly an intelligent looking group of men.

Besides these somewhat foreignized natives we have the real, genuine native article, with nothing foreign about him save and except the cloth he wears occasionally worn, except it is a rainy day, when they are left at home and the wearer goes barefooted.—Tokio Cor. Boston Transcript.

Moon and Earth.

Prof. Proctor seems fear that the moon has grown old six times as fast as the earth, a comparison of the masses and relative surfaces of the two leads to making it evident that the earth's inclined has originally sufficient to last six times as long as the moon's supply. On the very moderate assumption, therefore, that only 12,000,000 of years have passed since the earth and the moon were at the same stage of planetary life, this astronomer shows us that 72,000,000 of years must elapse before the earth will have reached the stage through which the moon is now passing.

Many expressions struggled for the field, but disgusted disappointed gained the day, and he muttered, as he picked up his hat and started for the door, "Who wants to see your old telescope?"

"Hold on!" I cried—"stay five minutes; then you can go back to the girls and whose me and my friend if you want to."

So back he shuffled, but slowly, and with a look of determined suspicion at me. I went about my affairs, feeling sure he would change his time when once Mike had a chance to defend himself. And sure enough, as soon as Mike began to show him and enlarge upon the "catch" of my fishing, which I had brought home in a wide-mouthed bottle of slimy water, Bob was all attention.

By the time Mike had been put back into his box, Bob was ready to acknowledge that my chum was a nights fine fellow.—Rose Baltimore, in St. Nicholas.

Sayings of the Little Ones.

"JENNIE, what makes you such a bad girl?" "Well, mamma, God sent you just the best children he could find, and if they don't suit you I can't help it."

"MAMMA, how can God hear me pray when he is far away?" Before Mr. Bear could reply a younger one said: "He's got the telephonus runnin' to every place."

A LITTLE boy who wouldn't run to the store for his mother said he had a drink of water, plumbed in ex-tenuation of his disobedience that "even a river valley can when it was dry."

Mary has told a fib, "Oh, how naughty it is to tell a lie!" said the mother. "God will be much troubled." The child, after some reflection—"I won't tell Him, mamma; I won't say my prayer to-night!"

A VISITOR in the country seeing a very old woman dozing at her cottage door asks a little boy of 6 or 7, who happens to be playing near by, how old she is. "I can't say, sir," replies the child politely, "but she must be very old. She has been here ever since I can remember."

A LITTLE girl who had occasion to "just run across the street," doubled up her mother's shawl and threw it around her shoulder. As she ran, she tripped and fell. "Don't cry, sissy," said a sympathetic man. "Who's going to?" was the sharp reply. "I guess when I little girl too her mother's gone out she's not going to let anybody she hurt."

THAT a beautiful thing is the unquestioning faith of childhood. A Western minister tells a story of a child who asked her teacher: "Miss Mary, the Bible says he that believeth hath everlasting life, doesn't it?" "Yes." "Then you believe, don't you?" "Yes." "Then you will have everlasting life?" "I hope so." "No, I thought it was a sure-enough thing." The teacher, as she said, went home that day with something to think about.

Jewels for Receptions and Weddings.

"That was an expensive set of jewelry," remarked a reporter to the proprietor of a large Washington street store, alluding to a set of diamonds a young lady had just taken away with her.

"It is the most expensive set we have in the store," was the reply, "but she has only hired them."

"Is that a common thing in Boston?" asked the newspaper man.

"Most certainly. Many of our best customers hire a set of jewelry for an evening, and for a comparatively small price enjoy the envy and jealousy of their friends. I wonder you have never heard of it before. We take our reputation for fair dealing with our customers, and thus rent them. Of people whom we know we never require any security, but a stranger would, of course, have to deposit the full value of the gems. There are lots of our best sets at Swampscott now, where, I understand, they have been much praised and their temporary possessors congratulated.

"A funny thing happened in connection with this branch of our business. There was to be a large reception, and a young lady, well-known in the city, came to make arrangements about a set of diamonds. I was not in the store at it, I time and knew nothing of the matter, so when I came in I let out the same set to another young belle. In the afternoon No. 1 came in and asked to see the set of her diamonds had been released. While she was talking, No. 2 put the same question to me. The situation was very awkward, but I explained the matter, and all was finally settled in favor of No. 1, the young ladies pledging each other and me to eternal secrecy.

"I wouldn't have it get out for the world, you know," explained No. 1.

"Neither do I," said the lady to whom the jewels were released. These were very well paid for. Most of the designs are antique, and some of them have figured in many Boston homes as highly treasured family jewels. At weddings, frequently formal large collections of jewels are hired, other articles to avoid the mischief of "gifts" and make a fine display. We rarely get much for this, as the jeweler's name is frequently published when there is anything particularly beautiful given as a present, and the advertising compensates us.—Boston Globe.

HIGH medical authority denounces blinkers upon horses as useless, ugly and hurtful to the sight.

CARDINAL virtues—Good culture and economy.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Philadelphia Press, undertaking the sudden rise and rapid growth of the towns along the line of the Northern Pacific railroad, says: "Ten years ago there was hardly a hut on the long line through Dakota. The great majority of settlers came on the railroad, not as the first pioneers. The pioneers of to-day cross the Alleghanies and the Valley of the Mississippi with all their Eastern civilization so thoroughly developed as at home. The ladies dress in the fashion of the day. Their chinaware and glassware are fine, and they eat with silver forks. Some pianofortes have already arrived and others are coming."

It seems that the decision of Lord Chief Justice Coleridge not to visit Canada during his present sojourn in America, says the New York Tribune, "has the effect of some unpleasant feeling in that country. The News, of St. John, N. B., speaks of it as a "slight," and adds that while Canadians are sorry not to have the opportunity to show courtesy to the distinguished jurist, they believe that by-and-by he will be still more sorry at not having furnished the opportunity. It is rather late in the day for Canadians to be jealous of the partiality showed by distinguished Englishmen for the United States. Whatever the reason may be, it is a fact that hardly a visitor to America ever thinks of going to Canada. And those who do go, find there little to repay them for their journey. If Canadians wish to have distinguished guests visit them, they will have to amuse themselves to the United States.

A REMARKABLE instance of the fecundity of bees under certain conditions has just been afforded. The Pall Mall Gazette says that a couple of days since the Topsham Horticultural and Cottage Garden Society held its annual exhibition at the Retreat, near Exeter. One of the tents was occupied by the Devon and Exeter Beekeepers' Association, and among the exhibits was one which evoked a great deal of interest. This was a case containing several thousand dead drones which had lost their lives in a sanguinary conflict a couple of days previously. A well-known apiarian was visiting a friend's house a day or two previously, and on coming to one of the beehives it was found that there was great uproar inside. Closer inspection showed the ground below the hive to be covered with several hundred dead drones, and hosts of them were still being brought to the entrance and bundled out by the workers, generally being seized behind the head and dragged along to the exit, where, as a kind of coroner, a sting was given to them. Examination of the slain revealed the fact that they had been severely handled. Many were headless, others had lost legs or wings, or both, and all bore evidence of rough usage. That the bees were very much the superior force was shown by the fact that only about fifty of them had fallen in the fray, a remarkable disproportion to the number slain of the enemy. The battle had raged from about 7 in the morning to the same hour in the evening, and seemed then to end only with the utter annihilation of the drones.

Cheap Postage.

It was in the midst of the War of the Rebellion, March 3, 1863, that the act of Congress was passed which established the uniform rate of 3 cents postage for a half-ounce letter everywhere in the United States. Prior to that the limit, under the act of 1855, was 3,000 miles; and for any half-ounce letters to be carried farther the charge was 10 cents. Going behind this again to 1845, the rate was 5 cents for a single sheet letter carried 300 miles or under, and 10 cents when the distance was over 300 miles.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

Jeannette and the Cigarol.

Big brother's
Cigarol,
Make sniffle,
Make you sneeze.

Sudden change,
Pals gossiped—
Newspapers
Fetes doth get.

Dissent perfect,
Hands set,
On stomach
Of Jeannette.

Fair stranger
Moments yet,
Spoil sociability
Never had met.

Darter comes,
Takes pet,
With neighbors—
Sly old cat.

Next morning,
Sad Jeannette:
"Had enough
Cigarol."

What Geraldine Said.

"Does Geraldine ever say anything about me?" asked an enthusiastic Brooklyn lover of his sweetheart's brother.

"Yes, indeed," answered the little man; "she says you are so very kind to bring her so many caramels."

"Anything else?"

"She says that album you gave her on her birthday must have cost $5."

"She is great at guessing. It cost $25, Johnny. But does Geraldine ever say anything about you know, about—what she thinks of me?"

"Oh, yes, sometimes. She said at the breakfast this morning that she thought your vests would make good bird-seed, and that when she got you she would rent your feet to a contractor as pile-drivers."

Unfortunately for Geraldine's little commercial project, he used his feet to carry him away, and the lost board of him was in New York, where he was looking for rooms for a single gentleman.—New York World.

Women in the Water.

Fragile woman, so often considered as a mere plaything for man, has more than once both astonished man and annihilated him by her exploits of endurance in the water. It is the fact, however, that woman can float more easily in the water than a man can, because she has the advantage over him in having smaller bones in proportion to her total weight than a man has, and her shape is also a better one, being more in keeping with the proportions of man, and possibly get rice in the train. There are no side doors either through which you can dodge the official.

Having booked yourself or purchased your ticket, you are allowed to pass through a very narrow passageway to the train and have your ticket punched as you pass. Although there is no gate, as there are in Boston and Paris, there are other arrangements that more than compensate for this loss of elegance.

No official goes with the train; no brakeman, in dishcloth times, whipped out the number of the train and the time-table book on the train is on a rack specially for that purpose and attached to the rear of the train. No conductor shouts, "Tickets, please," and when he has finished his rounds stands by the fair man who goes daily for her time and tickets. Any passenger is expected to enter the class one for which he holds a ticket. If he doesn't do this and he is found out there is a penalty for his mischievousness.

When it is time for the train to start an official on the platform blows a little whistle, the stoker engine blows a shrill whistle, which would be terrific if it were only powerful enough, and off we go. And now we see one advantage over the average American railroad—there is not the slightest jerk in starting; indeed, you never know when you are really in motion unless you look at objects outside the window.

The train glides (that just expresses it) not swiftly to be sure, for it never will probably the day would condemn it. Nothing upsets a native Hiroshimian more than a jerking train.

The road follows the Tokaido and the coast of the bay most of the distance. It is nearly a dead level. On both sides are the rice fields, where, at the time of the year, the farmers stand nearly up to their knees in mud, setting out the rice plants. There is nothing particularly attractive to see; miles on a bright day you watch the changing forms of that noble mountain—Mount Fuji—the "peerless," as it towers up in the distance.

Let us look at our fellow-passengers in the car. As it is early train there are various officials going to Yokohama for their daily business. These men are dressed in foreign clothes, and many of them understand some foreign language, English or German. They are mostly an intelligent looking group of men.

Besides these somewhat foreignized natives we have the real, genuine native article, with nothing foreign about him save and except the cloth he wears occasionally worn, except it is a rainy day, when they are left at home and the wearer goes barefooted.—Tokio Cor. Boston Transcript.

Moon and Earth.

Prof. Proctor seems fear that the moon has grown old six times as fast as the earth, a comparison of the masses and relative surfaces of the two leads to making it evident that the earth's inclined has originally sufficient to last six times as long as the moon's supply. On the very moderate assumption, therefore, that only 12,000,000 of years have passed since the earth and the moon were at the same stage of planetary life, this astronomer shows us that 72,000,000 of years must elapse before the earth will have reached the stage through which the moon is now passing.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THEY danced the Virginia reel at the White Sulphur Springs during the late summer season every night in the hotel parlor, young and old participating. A school band supplies the music, and it is "just as it used to be forty years ago."

THE statistics of marriages, births and divorces in Switzerland which have just been published bring out some interesting and suggestive facts. Compared with other countries in Europe the proportion of marriages to the population is very low. The average age of marriage is all years for men and 27 more for women. In 1881, the last year for which statistics are furnished, the number of divorces was greater than during any year on record.

CHAS. IN SARC, Mo., recently bought a box of second-hand theological books and got manuscript sermons which had belonged to a Baptist minister. A curious feature about the sermons is that they are numerous stage directions, of which a few samples are given: "Deliver this passage in solemn tones;" "Scornful smile after the word 'never;'" "Here pause enough to count twenty-five after this passage;" "close Bible with emphatic slam after this passage;" "extemporize rolling in attitude of adoration at this point;" "sarcastic tone of hand;" "rapid gesture."

A FIREMAN in Tennessee is known as the "satisfying preacher." Whenever a man begins to grow tired of its regular pastor the "satisfying preacher" is sent for; and so attractively bad is his fire after hearing him once or twice the congregation is entirely "satisfied" to keep the peace in the land. A new source of usefulness is thus opened to per preachers. They will act as a sort of counterpoison to those perpetuate pastors whose showy eloquence often crosses a congregation to be dissatisfied with its unsalmon pastor.

THE old fancemen of the Banks will breather endeavor to go to sea provided with a liberal allowance of oil with which to calm troubled waters. There is no doubt about its efficacy. The plan was tried by many vessels of the Gloucester fleet during the recent long gales, and probably saved many a life from being badly damaged, if not entirely wrecked by the terrible sea. The effect is almost magical, as the oil dropping into the water prevents a wave breaking, and the vessel is enabled to ride safely on the waves.

AFTER seven years of helplessness from spinal disease, Miss Annie Stone, of Rottville, Pa., was cured by prayer. The first her friends knew of it was when they met her down town on a shopping tour, and, as the food said, "as fast as she could walk." Of course they were surprised. They should not have been surprised. What else can be expected of a woman who has been laid up for years, when she makes up her mind to use a couple of days previously. A well-known apiarian was visiting a friend's house a day or two previously, and on coming to one of the beehives it was found that there was great uproar inside. Closer inspection showed the ground below the hive to be covered with several hundred dead drones, and hosts of them were still being brought to the entrance and bundled out by the workers, generally being seized behind the head and dragged along to the exit, where, as a kind of coroner, a sting was given to them. Examination of the slain revealed the fact that they had been severely handled. Many were headless, others had lost legs or wings, or both, and all bore evidence of rough usage. That the bees were very much the superior force was shown by the fact that only about fifty of them had fallen in the fray, a remarkable disproportion to the number slain of the enemy. The battle had raged from about 7 in the morning to the same hour in the evening, and seemed then to end only with the utter annihilation of the drones.

Cheap Postage.

It was in the midst of the War of the Rebellion, March 3, 1863, that the act of Congress was passed which established the uniform rate of 3 cents postage for a half-ounce letter everywhere in the United States. Prior to that the limit, under the act of 1855, was 3,000 miles; and for any half-ounce letters to be carried farther the charge was 10 cents. Going behind this again to 1845, the rate was 5 cents for a single sheet letter carried 300 miles or under, and 10 cents when the distance was over 300 miles.

is a little new; for, although we are perfectly accustomed to the sale of grown-up daughters, it is generally for a fair equivalent; there is no particularly eager effort to dispose of them at exceptionally cheap rates.

IT is seldom that retribution overtakes a scoffer and sinner as promptly as it did in the case of Butch Shannon, of Lancaster, Ohio. A colored camp meeting was in progress at the fair grounds near the town. Shannon and a few associates of his kind ascended Mount Pleasant, near by, and started a burlesque of the proceedings below. While in the enjoyment of this pastime, Mr. Shannon lost his balance and fell over a precipice, a distance of 200 feet. He fell upon the rocks below, and was reduced to the condition of dog meat. Of course the devout colored people in that region regard the humorous Mr. Shannon's misfortune as a special visitation.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Philadelphia Press, undertaking the sudden rise and rapid growth of the towns along the line of the Northern Pacific railroad, says: "Ten years ago there was hardly a hut on the long line through Dakota. The great majority of settlers came on the railroad, not as the first pioneers. The pioneers of to-day cross the Alleghanies and the Valley of the Mississippi with all their Eastern civilization so thoroughly developed as at home. The ladies dress in the fashion of the day. Their chinaware and glassware are fine, and they eat with silver forks. Some pianofortes have already arrived and others are coming."

IT seems that the decision of Lord Chief Justice Coleridge not to visit Canada during his present sojourn in America, says the New York Tribune, "has the effect of some unpleasant feeling in that country. The News, of St. John, N. B., speaks of it as a "slight," and adds that while Canadians are sorry not to have the opportunity to show courtesy to the distinguished jurist, they believe that by-and-by he will be still more sorry at not having furnished the opportunity. It is rather late in the day for Canadians to be jealous of the partiality showed by distinguished Englishmen for the United States. Whatever the reason may be, it is a fact that hardly a visitor to America ever thinks of going to Canada. And those who do go, find there little to repay them for their journey. If Canadians wish to have distinguished guests visit them, they will have to amuse themselves to the United States.

A REMARKABLE instance of the fecundity of bees under certain conditions has just been afforded. The Pall Mall Gazette says that a couple of days since the Topsham Horticultural and Cottage Garden Society held its annual exhibition at the Retreat, near Exeter. One of the tents was occupied by the Devon and Exeter Beekeepers' Association, and among the exhibits was one which evoked a great deal of interest. This was a case containing several thousand dead drones which had lost their lives in a sanguinary conflict a couple of days previously. A well-known apiarian was visiting a friend's house a day or two previously, and on coming to one of the beehives it was found that there was great uproar inside. Closer inspection showed the ground below the hive to be covered with several hundred dead drones, and hosts of them were still being brought to the entrance and bundled out by the workers, generally being seized behind the head and dragged along to the exit, where, as a kind of coroner, a sting was given to them. Examination of the slain revealed the fact that they had been severely handled. Many were headless, others had lost legs or wings, or both, and all bore evidence of rough usage. That the bees were very much the superior force was shown by the fact that only about fifty of them had fallen in the fray, a remarkable disproportion to the number slain of the enemy. The battle had raged from about 7 in the morning to the same hour in the evening, and seemed then to end only with the utter annihilation of the drones.

Cheap Postage.

It was in the midst of the War of the Rebellion, March 3, 1863, that the act of Congress was passed which established the uniform rate of 3 cents postage for a half-ounce letter everywhere in the United States. Prior to that the limit, under the act of 1855, was 3,000 miles; and for any half-ounce letters to be carried farther the charge was 10 cents. Going behind this again to 1845, the rate was 5 cents for a single sheet letter carried 300 miles or under, and 10 cents when the distance was over 300 miles.

Beauties for Marrying.

An intelligent lady of Newark, N. J., writes to the Sunday Call of that city, giving what she deems good reasons for her sex to marry. We make the following extracts:

"It does seem that many of the younger women of the present generation are not enough determined in matters pertaining to matrimony, or I should say, in such things as may terminate in matrimony. The girl of the present generation does not seem to be far-sighted enough to look for qualifications of affliction and affection, but she rather looks more to the broad and bitter side of the question. This a good point, but it is not the best and most trustworthy. Now, for instance, here is a young lady of average ability, of good looks, etc., who is not exactly skilled with her present company, to whom she is perhaps engaged, for the reason that he is not making money fast enough to suit her ideas. She has also become disgusted with another man who, she thinks, is making his $40 per week, and she is trying her best to catch him. She will let the first mentioned if she can catch the second go, leaving the former to the fate of "I did not think that such a girl is doing a wise act for various reasons. One important reason is, times may change the financial circumstances of both men, as it often does, and is almost the twinkling of an eye, and then the tables are reversed upon her for a punishment. I know several young men who keep steady company with young ladies of a marriageable age, and all along have pretended to be poor in order to try their will and affection. It is not taking the young lady to this place of amusement or to that seaside resort and lavishing upon her your cheap smiles and presents that makes the impression upon a woman's genuine feeling. It is something greater. It is manliness. This the young lady should seek after. Manliness means truthfulness, honesty, integrity, sobriety, diligence and self-respect. A man with these and no money is worth more than forty without them, though possessing half a million. But how many young ladies ever think what light they put themselves in before the men upon they accept good-natured invitations to the theater or to Ocean Grove or Coney Island? And the whole time really they don't care I rest for the man.

Women Who Go Around.

"A man who is posted in this rapid age of ours," said a prominent member of the New York detective department, "knows that women have undergone a radical change in their system of life."

"What do you mean?"

"Simply that women are more self-reliant than they were in the days of our grandmothers. The woman's rights movement has made them so. When a woman is insulted now, in nine cases out of ten, she defends herself, and if the fellow doesn't look out, he is apt to get a hole blown through him."

"Is it common for women to carry pistols?"

"You may think I am exaggerating, but there are more women who go armed than men. Hundreds of cases come to the notice of the police department where women get away with rough-and-ready burglars out of their homes that the police never hear of. Now, if a man hears anything in the house at night, he throws on the winguipowder. Another wonder meets the eye on the other side of the river, where in the middle of the Upper Geyser basin is the grandest geyser of the world. Around it are other craters of boiling springs, throwing water to the height of three and four feet, but this grand geyser on the summit of a hook of rock is a well in the strata twenty by twenty-five feet in diameter measurement, when at what it has a depth of 100 feet. The edge of this basin is bounded by a heavy fringe of rock, and stalagmites in solid layers are deposited by the overflowing waters.

When an eruption is about to occur the basins gradually fill with boiling water to within a few feet of the surface; then suddenly, with heavy concussions, shaking the ground in every direction, immense clouds of steam rise to the height of 500 feet, and the whole great body of water, twenty by twenty-five feet, ascends in one gigantic column to the height of ninety feet, while the steam ascends 1,000 feet or more. From the apex of this column five great jets shoot up, radiating slightly from each other, to the unparalleled altitude of 250 feet from the ground, and seem to be held at that great height for the space of twenty minutes. The earth trembles under the descending deluge; a thousand hissing sounds are heard in the air, and rainbows encircle the summits of the jets with a halo of celestial glory. The heavy water flows up and bears away the shelly terraces, and a seething flood pours down the slope and into the river. Three times in one afternoon has this grand geyser played for twenty minutes, then lowering its waters into the crater out of sight, the steam gradually ceasing to escape, till all is quiet. The sunlight glowing on this tall, waving fountain, with its sparkling jets of deep blue waters rising high in the air, is a spectacle never to be forgotten. It is the "grandest, most majestic, most terrible fountain in the world."

Another geyser, not quite so remarkable, but more curious, perhaps, is called "The Fan." From a double orifice discharge five radiating jets to the height of sixty feet. The spray and the falling drops look like feathery fan. Its eruptions sometimes last thirty minutes. First the steam rushes from the upper crater, roaring violently; then suddenly ceasing, a fan-like jet of water rises from the lower crater to the height of over forty feet, playing for two minutes; then, suddenly stopping, the steam rushes forth again; occasionally the small crater sends forth a transverse stream, thus playing into the others for hours, then subsiding in a gentle bubbling." While this geyser is in action you hear loud, sharp reports. Along the river banks craters in every shape are seen, and all around are small geysers playing at intervals. Two hundred yards from this fan are two small geysers called the Sentinel, one always playing, its waters revolving horizontally without violence.

An Exploded Theory.

"Hi say, Mr. Pongranate," observed a colored Austin expressman, who was the unfortunate owner of a balky mule, which some one had unloaded upon him in the melancholy past, "didn't I hesh you say a great many times dat dere was reason in all things?"

"Yes, Sam," replied Mr. Pongranate, "I believe that precept, and have never been afraid to say so."

"Yer wasn't?"

"No."

"Well, den, I jes wish yell come out in de alley an' look at my mule. He's dun been stuck dar for me an hour."—Texas Siftings.

CONTENTMENT is a pearl of great price, and whoever procures it at the expense of 10,000 dollars, makes a wise and happy purchase.—Balzac.

A FEW years ago the population of the whites in Manitoba scarcely numbered 10,000. To-day it reaches 135,000, and is increasing daily.

WHERE NATURE SMILES.

Beauty and Grandeur of the Yellowstone Scenery.

Near the banks of the Yellowstone is a remarkable group of sulphur and mud springs. On the brow of a hillock, amid the green pines, vapor rises from the bubbling jets of several craters and fissures. Passing over this

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

More Murders.

At present there seems to be a mania for murder. The telegraph is burdened, and the daily press is full to overflowing with the horrible details of crime, and the same terrible story comes from every part of the continent. Our own Michigan furnishes her full proportions. In Jackson county last week, in a single night, a family of three persons and a guest at the house were shot while asleep in their beds, and two servants in another part of the house were undisturbed. And the murderer is still at liberty, unless, perhaps, a man arrested on suspicion, proves to be the criminal. The whole transaction is wrapped in mistery, and the people in the vicinity are likely to commit another murder by lynching the first man against whom the circumstances seem to point. At Marshall, the same week, a promising young man was found murdered, with a bullet hole in his temple, and not a clue to lead to the arrest and conviction of the perpetrator. At Detroit a man is found insensible and dying, with his skull fractured, and bearing every evidence of having been the victim of a murderous assault. From them all the same mysterious story: "No clue to the murderer." From nearly every state, and every large city comes the same terrible details, day after day, occasionaly varied with burglaries and quarrels wherein one of the parties is caught, or where the offender is allowed to escape, as was done in this county recently. These details are served up by the daily press in a manner to still further excite the people, and in a manner to add fuel to the flame of passion.

Money has been a mover in many of these horrible transactions, while whiskey and an improper intimacy of the sexes have added a full proportion,—these three constituting the cause of a vast majority. But are they the real cause? Can any true cause be assigned? A perverted literature, best known as "nickel" and "dime libraries," wherein the exploits of brigands and cowboys are sensationally depicted, has had a part in educating the youth and young men to deeds of this character. The sensational details of certain daily papers strike deeper, because of their near approach to the actual fact, and are read where the "dileraries" would not be recognized. Added to these, the failure of the courts to convict and properly punish the criminals where arrests are made and circumstances point almost positively to the accused; and the almost certainty of a pardon, (even after the expense of trial and conviction,) thus robbing courts and prisons of their terrors.—in all these can be found a primary cause of a large portion of crime, which, like the cases mentioned, destroys valuable human life. Even church-going people must come in for a share of the censure, so far as a perverted public sentiment is concerned. Infidelity, Rationalism, and a rejection of the future "hell," have their influence, and tend to rob crime of the terrors of punishment. Whatever the cause, or whatever the remedy, the daily grist grows larger, and the public read, are shocked for a moment, then apparently forget and move on unconcerned.

The Assaults upon Governor Begole.

No fair minded man can read the plain statement of facts, published elsewhere, with reference to Governor Begole and his mileage ticket book over the Flint & Pere Marquette railroad without being convinced that the governor has been outrageously assailed without just cause.

It appears very clearly from the statements that the firm of which Governor Begole is the head, has had and now has very large business dealings with the road in question. As heavy shippers it was agreed that they should receive such mileage ticket books as were necessary for use in their business. Mileage books were given, and renewed as they ran out, and Josiah W. Begole, the head of the firm, received no more or greater consideration than other members of the firm. The books were received as a matter of course, as per agreement; and the firm in this regard was no different from many others throughout the state which, having heavy transactions with railroad companies, are accorded mileage books.

It appears also from the statements that Governor Begole has been seen perhaps careful to use his mileage book only when traveling on private business. When in his traveled on public business he has paid full fare, and even taking advantage of the opportunity which is afforded every citizen of buying mileage tickets at a reduced rate.

For conduct in which there is no stain, Governor Begole has been misrepresented and villified by the republican press of this state, and journals in other states have joined in the cry. He has been assailed as a pressgraber, and it has been insinuated, if not openly charged, that while taking ground against legislative dead beatism, he has sought, by begging and importunity, to secure for him self favors at the hands of railroad managers. How devoid of foundation these charges are—how gross and wanton the assaults have been—any one can appreciate who has seen the flings and jibes and sneers at the governor, and who will read the statements made by the Flint people who are cognizant of the facts.

Journalism which will make a battle of us innocent a matter as were Mr. Begole's letters to the Flint & Pere Marquette railroad will stoop to anything. It is, however, in reality but a continuation of the indecent warfare made against Mr. Begole in the campaign of 1882, but which, to the credit of the people of Michigan be it said, helped the man it was hoped to hurt.—Free Press.

Serious Riot in Menominee.

At an early hour Wednesday morning Gov. Begole received a dispatch from David Barkley, sheriff of Menominee county, requesting that a company or two of the state troops be sent to his assistance in maintaining order among the 1,500 striking miners of that section, as a serious riot was threatened. The governor left on the morning train for Lansing to consult with the state military authorities in regard to the matter. Before departing he stated to a Journal reporter that he would not order out the troops until all other efforts to preserve order had failed.—Flint Journal.

An Iron Mountain dispatch says: No violence has yet occurred at the Chapin or Ludington mines of the Menominee company, but the officers have quietly sent for more police. It is said that Gov. Begole has been asked to forward a company of militia as soon as possible.

The strikers have formed all employes to join their ranks and stopped the pumps Tuesday night, which causes the mine to fill with water. The fires are now out and the water is gaining rapidly. Pinkerton's men are guarding the machinery. Several shots were fired Tuesday night by unknown parties, throwing the women into hysterics and causing general alarm. Men to the number of 1,500 have posted notices warning others to keep away from the mines. They have demanded full pay without the deduction of board bills or store accounts, but the company refuses to accede.

Concerning Gov. Begole's action in this matter, the Detroit Evening News says: Gov. Begole is not so precipitate in sending troops to the scene of strikes as some of his predecessors were and his hesitation is wise. Nothing yet appears to show that the miners at Iron Mountain have done anything which demands the interference of the military. They have refused to work under new conditions imposed upon them by their employers, which curtail their week's income by a whole day's wages. Fifteen hundred men are out, and some little disturbances have taken place of course, but the local authorities should be able to keep the peace, and probably are. Threats have been made to destroy property, but it does not appear that they have been carried out. Big iron companies which already enjoy the peculiar privilege of taxing the people to furnish them profits on their operations, would doubtless also like to have the people's militia at their beck and call; but Gov. Begole is determined to be sure of the necessity of action before he acts. He has accordingly gone to the scene of the trouble himself, and if he thereby avoids the necessity of sending a battalion of troops across Lake Michigan he will do the state a service for which he could be forgiven the enormity of using a free pass, if he were guilty of it, which he never was. If, on the other hand, he sees, when on the ground, that troops are necessary, he can call them. The chances are, however, that the author ity of the governor exerted directly with the men will suffice to avoid all serious trouble.

Notes and News.

Sergeant Mason, who attempted to shoot Guiteau, has been pardoned by the president.

Sojourner Truth, the famous colored lecturer and reformer, died at Battle Creek on Monday morning, aged 108 years.

The Frankfort Express comes to hand this week with both sides printed at home, and other noticable improvements. There is evidently a master hand in the management.

"We shall shortly find ourselves living under a monarchy. I would give a million dollars to see Grant back in the white house."—Jay Gould, in N. Y. Tribune.

Another fair sample of the republican party: Admiral J. Gibbs, a former Michigan legislator, was appointed to a land office in Dakota, and is now under the arrest for fraudulently appropriating lands to his own use, in that territory.

The recent elections have brought Arthur to the front as the republican candidate for president. It is a waste of time for republicans to talk about a candidate for the presidency. Mr Arthur, better withdraw before it is too late, rather than be an unsuccessful candidate.

The propeller Manitoba, of the South Shore line, was lost on Lake Superior during the storm of week before last, with all on board. She was loaded with 400 tons of general merchandise. Nineteen persons are known to be lost, and some accounts place the number as high as 30.

Town republicans took strong ground in favor of prohibition; but they came so near defeat and are so badly frightened that they do not dare to carry out their pledges and submit a prohibitory constitutional amendment to the people. This is another proof of the utter hypocrisy of the republican party on the temperance question. But one thing is clear, they have fooled the temperance people about as long as they can.

The Old Machine at Work.

Things begin to have a familiar look about the White House. Reports from the moonlight vigils there, carry us away back to the time when the president was collector of New York, chairman of the republican state committee, plus orderer of Conkling and chief engineer of as perfect a machine as was ever set up in politics. And the names of the president's advisers who hover about and dart in and out mysteriously. What memories of wire pullings, combinations, "fixed up" primaries and packed conventions do they awaken! "Chat" Wheeler, "Stike" Dutcher, George Bliss, "Steve" French, "Dick" Crowley, "Jo" Warren, "Barney" Biglin and Governor Cornell—they are all there, close to the president's ears in days of work. It would look as if the areas of New York politics had been removed to Washington and that the chief was again at the lever ready to put the machinery in motion.

There could be no better evidence than the presence of these familiar faces at the capital that the old machine has been run out, cleaned up, freshly oiled and made ready for action. The New York convention to elect delegates to the national convention will be held in January. That the delegation is to be made solid for Arthur is shown by the presence of the "boys" at the White House. Their duties are all assigned them. Dutcher takes care of the infernal revenue element, "Steve" French and Cornell run the state committee, Clint Wheeler keeps an eye on the converted half-breed, Robertson—who has promised the custom house help—and "Dick" Crowley takes care of the "soft" interest in the western counties. The machine seems to be in good working order, and the "chiefs" hand is clearly on the throttle.

Meantime there are rumors that Gresham is to be sent to the west to fix up things, and that Chandler himself is away on a political mission, the secrecy of which is profound, but is believed to have the arranging of a solid delegation from Pennsylvania as its object. And so the game is working. The next move, it is hinted, will be the recall of Minister Hunt from St. Petersburg, the sending of Folger to replace him, and the placing of somebody in the treasury—Chandler, perhaps—who will proceed to use the treasury machinery to organize the delegations from the solid south. The boom is working beautifully, and by the time the New York convention meets and elects a solid Arthur delegation it will be all a white lie. The master hand of the "executive" is seen in it all.—Chicago Herald.

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card in effect October, 1883.

GOING NORTH

STATIONS.	No. 1. Mixed.	No. 3.	No. 5.	No. 7.
Cincinnati.....lv	....	8 00am	7 45pm	....
Richmond	....	Not passed	on this	road.
Winchester.....	4 19	12 05pm	11 29	....
Ridgeville.....	4 36	12 22	11 46	....
Fort Wayne.....arr	7 10	2 55	2 20am	....
Fort Wayne.....lv	....	3 00	2 30	6 35am
Kendallville.....	....	4 22	3 52	7 56
Sturgis.....	....	5 13	5 42	11 00
Vicksburg.....	....	6 19	7 00	12 00n
Kalamazoo.....arr	....	7 20	7 20	12 50
Kalamazoo.....lv	....	7 30	9 00	4 25
Grand Rapids.....arr	....	9 30	10 30	6 35
Grand Rapids.....lv	7 45am	....	2 00pm	3 00
Ionia R.R. junc.....	8 25	....	2 45	3 45
Howard City.....	9 17	....	3 52	6 59
Big Rapids.....	10 14	....	12 40pm	7 52
Reed's City.....	10 47	....	1 30	8 28
Cadillac.....	12 10pm	....	2 55	9 50
Traverse City.....	....	....	3 10	10 15
Petoskey City.....	....	....	5 30	....
Kalkaska.....	....	....	4 42	12 30am
Manistee.....	....	....	5 25	1 05
Boyne Falls.....	....	....	4 52	2 48
Petoskey.....	....	....	6 52	3 42
Harbor Springs.....	....	....	7 20	....
Mackinaw City.....	....	....	7 50	5 35
St. Ignace.....	....	....	10 00pm	8 00
Gaylord.....	....	....	5 40pm	1 00am
Negaunee.....	....	....	9 12	7 08

GOING SOUTH

STATIONS.	No. 2. Mixed.	No. 4.	No. 6.	No. 8.
Negaunee.....lv	....	1 00pm	7 30am	....
Marquette.....	....	3 00	8 30	....
St. Ignace.....	....	3 45am	4 15pm	....
Mackinaw City.....	....	6 30	9 45	....
Harbor Springs.....	....	7 30	....	....
Petoskey.....	....	8 05	12 05am	....
Boyne Falls.....	....	8 38	12 35	....
Kalkaska.....	....	9 26	1 25	....
Traverse City.....	....	10 05	3 25	....
Cadillac.....	....	11 40	5 00	....
Reed's City.....	....	12 50pm	6 15	....
Big Rapids.....	....	1 30	6 55	....
Howard City.....	....	2 25	7 52	....
Ionia R.R. junc.....	....	3 32	10 05	....
Grand Rapids.....arr	....	4 00	10 45	....
Grand Rapids.....lv	7 00am	5 00	1 00pm	....
Kalamazoo.....arr	8 40	7 30	3 25	....
Kalamazoo.....lv	8 50	7 50	3 35	....
Vicksburg.....	9 26	8 26	4 26	....
Sturgis.....	9 47	8 47	4 47	....
Kendallville.....	11 16	10 03	5 59	....
Fort Wayne.....arr	1 00pm	11 20	7 15	....
Fort Wayne.....lv	1 20	6 00am	12 30am	....
Ridgeville.....	3 03	7 44	2 20	....
Winchester.....	3 19	8 00	2 35	....
Richmond.....arr	3 55	9 05	3 30	....
Cincinnati.....lv	7 30pm	1 30pm	7 30am	....

A. R. LKETT, Gen. Pass. Agt., Grand Rapids, Mich.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES,

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

Overcoats AND SUITINGS

Gents' Overcoats. Youths' Overcoats. Boys' Overcoats

Gents' Suits. Youths' Suits. Boys' Suits

I have just received a large assortment of the above goods, bought at reduced rates. I am selling these goods for less than they are actually worth at wholesale. I have a line of Overcoats I am closing out at $4. Big bonanza for the money. Call and examine these goods and judge for yourself.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Nov., 1883.

GEO. W. MILLER,

DEALER IN

Clothing

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

Hats and Caps, Trunks and Satchels,

GLOVES MITTENS, ETC.

Buttars' Block, Charlevoix, Mich

C. R. BELLINGER

carries the largest and best assortment of

JEWELRY,

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Optical Goods in Charlevoix county. Jig-saw fine fly-wheels.

ROCKFORD WATCH,

the best time piece ever sold.

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

at his store near the bridge

All kinds of fruit and vegetables in their season. Nuts, candies, pop, ginger ale, pies, cakes on hand. Call and see me. Wholesale Dealer in

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from Nervous Debility, Lost Vitality, Premature Decay, The effects of youthful indiscretion, &c., for the sake of suffering humanity, send freely to all in need it, the recipe and directions for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Sufferers wishing to profit by the advertiser's experience can do so by addressing in perfect confidence, JOHN B. OGDEN, 42 Cedar St., New York.

ROBERT GRUEN,

Boyne Falls, Mich.

Watch-maker

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry Repaired.

CHICAGO WEEKLY HERALD

The Largest, Best, and Most Complete Newspaper ever sent

One Year for $1.00.

EIGHT LARGE PAGES.

Containing the News of the big Agricultural and other matter relating to the farmer and his family, complete Market Reports, Stories, Sketches, etc. Sample copies free. Address

CHICAGO WEEKLY HERALD, Chicago, Ill.

If you want a daily paper try

The Chicago Herald.

An enterprising, fearless, and reliable Chicago daily that has been a great success because of its excellence in every particular. It presents all the news every day on four large pages and at a price that permits it to be taken by everybody. For sale by all newsdealers. Sent on trial by mail, postage paid, six days each week, for TWO MONTHS FOR ONE DOLLAR. Address

THE CHICAGO HERALD,

170 and 172 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.

JAMES W. SCOTT, Publisher.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Nov. 29, 1883.

Local Business Notices.

Those who desire to bring us wood on subscription will confer a favor by bringing it along.

Advertise the town by circulating the bird's-eye view paper and envelopes on sale at D. B. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

300 cords of good dry birch and maple block wood for sale. Good measure guaranteed. Call at the office or

J. MILO EATON.

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at O. B. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

The Charlevoix Rough and Ready for company meet the first and third Thursday evenings of each month. Jos. Lewis, Capt. B. F. Barker, Secretary.

News Brevities.

Thanksgiving to-day.

Dance at Lewis hall to-night.

H. Lee Iddings returned home last Friday.

E. M. Clark advertises overcoats in another part of this paper.

Jos. Benavais is building an addition to his boat-building shop.

The steamer Clara Belle is out for repairs at Campbell's ship yard.

The tug J. L. Higgie has closed its season's work, and gone into winter quarters.

The schooner Sea Gem is laid up for the winter, and will receive extensive repairs.

Tom Nowland crushed one of his fingers in the machinery of the Wright hot Saturday.

Lieu. Hall, of East Jordan, bought a pair of mustangs of J. A. Cameron last Tuesday for $180.

Egbert A. Freeman, living near Ironton, was killed last Friday by a log rolling over him.

"Mine host" Cooper will serve up an excellent supper to-night for the patrons of the firemen's dance.

The iron works are casting a new and novel pattern of boat-jack, which will doubtless become popular.

The frame of the manufacturing company's building is up, and it is now receiving its iron covering.

On our eighth page will be found a thrilling poem by O. F. Wyman, doubtless suggested by the blizzard of two weeks ago.

The large new safe for the county arrived on the Champlain on Thursday, and was put in its place in the clerk's office on Friday.

The union temperance services at the M. E. church Sunday evening filled the house, and the remarks by Rev Mr Morgan were listened to with apparent interest.

The continental musicists and Swiss Bell Ringers are billed to appear at the opera house on Thursday evening, Dec. 6. The press gives them many favorable notices.

Reports from the owners of the outrages reported last week as being attended by burglars, seem to indicate that nothing of value was taken, and that the mischief was done by boys.

The propeller Champlain had over 400 tons of freight on her last trip. Upright, Boyce & Co.'s warehouse and dock was full long before all the freight for this place was unloaded.

A letter in the Detroit Sentinel, from J. M. Ashley, Jr., general manager of the Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad company, would indicate that Conklin & chief engineer of as perfect a machine as was ever set up in politics. And the names of the president's advisers who hover about and dart in and out mysteriously. What memories of wire pullings, combinations, "fixed up" primaries and packed conventions do they awaken! "Chat" Wheeler, "Stike" Dutcher, George Bliss, "Steve" French, "Dick" Crowley, "Jo" Warren, "Barney" Biglin and Governor Cornell—they are all there, close to the president's ears in days of work. It would look as if the areas of New York politics had been removed to Washington and that the chief was again at the lever ready to put the machinery in motion.

Mr. E. M. Clark's new residence is fast approaching completion, and under the finishing touches of Messrs. Wheat, Carr, and Orrell will be a handsome as well as a convenient house. Mr. and Mrs. Clark ought to enjoy life in such comfortable quarters.

The Good Templars had an interesting meeting last Friday evening. Over 30 members were out, two candidates initiated, and business of interest and importance transacted. In "good of the order," there were some interesting and profitable literary exercises.

Charles Bennett, a nephew of Benj. Burgess, of Chandler township, was found dead on Tuesday last week, with a gun shot wound in the head. There are some circumstances indicating murder, but on the coroner's inquest it was shown that the muzzle of the gun when discharged was inside the mouth, and a verdict of suicide was returned.

A full house greeted the Continental last evening at the Town Hall, and their entertainment was well worth the price of admission. To be sure they presented several old times, but who does not love the old songs, Dave Williams in his character sketches brought down the house. This young gentleman will probably make a decided hit one of these days.

Elk Rapids Progress.

It has been stated, and we believe truthfully, that fruit raised in this vicinity, and anywhere in this region from Traverse City north, will keep six months longer and command a much higher price than that raised farther south. This is an important matter. While we may not supply the early market, we can supply the best fruit at a time when the prices are going higher, and when but little and that inferior fruit is to be had from any other locality. It pays to raise fruit or produce that will keep.

We have been in Charlevoix a most desirable site for a gristmill, and a disposition among our business men to give generous aid to any man or firm who means business, and will build a first-class mill and put it in operation as soon as possible. Further than this, there are at least two gentlemen of some means who desire to invest their fortunes with a thoroughly practical miller, and build and operate such an institution here. If there is a practical miller with some cash who wants a good opening, we shall be pleased to show him around, and have no doubt arrangements can be made with one or the other of the gentlemen referred to above.

Advertising pays. A recent paragraph in the Detroit Evening News announced that the JOURNAL was publishing articles descriptive of Charlevoix's advantages and resources. On the day following the arrival of the News came a letter from a young gentleman in the southern part of the state, asking for papers, and for information concerning the possibility of his being successful, if he should come here to locate and if the field here should be well occupied, information as to the most desirable town in this region in which to locate was asked. It so happens that his business is well represented in Charlevoix, but there is a location in the county which offers some inducements, and if they are sufficient, we have no doubt he will locate there within a few months. While we are not at liberty to use his name, we can say he is from a city that has graduated a large number of successful young business men. Again we say: advertising pays. This instance is but one of many that might be mentioned.

Hayes.

Old Boreas is lively now and then.

Several of the citizens on the sick list last week.

Thanksgiving will be observed by some of the Hayesites.

Three teachers of Hayes commence their winter terms of school next Monday.

A movement is on foot to organize a literary society at Fair Grove.

Miss Amie Cooper closed her fall term of school in the Whitford district last week. Miss Melissa Willis has been engaged for the winter term.

Henry Kahler, Jr., of Evangeline township, who has been in Barry county the past two years, is visiting friends in Evangeline and Hayes.

ZEKE.

Shipments.

The following are the clearances from the port of Charlevoix as reported from the custom house for the two weeks ending Tuesday, Nov. 27:

Nov. 17—Schr. Rob Roy, 80 cords wood, S. P. Miller to Milwaukee.

22—Schr. Bright Eyes, 190,000 hardwood lumber, W. Ashley to Chicago.

22—Schr. Nellie, 130,000 hardwood lumber, A. Rohr to Manistee.

22—Schr. Charlotte Rush, 180,000 hardwood lumber, W. T. Adams to Chicago.

22—Schr. Lookout, 130,000 feet lumber, 225 pieces scaffold lumber, and 30,000 feet hemlock lumber, W. T. Adams to Chicago.

Notice.

There will be a regular meeting of Charlevoix Encampment No. 146, I. O. O. F. at Odd Fellows' hall, on Monday evening, Dec. 3. Important business to be transacted.

JAS. E. WOOD, Scribe.

Historical Society.

The historical society met Tuesday evening with "Mine Host" Richard Cooper at the parlors of the Fountain City house. One would have thought from the number present that "Dick" was giving one of his famous oyster suppers. But the "feast of reason" which was served was fully as well appreciated as would have been the bivalve luxury, and far more easily digested.

The historical topic of the evening was "Concord and Lexington." Mr. Kane, to whom the subject was assigned, instead of an original production, read Bancroft's glowing description of those immortal conflicts.

After the usual intermission, the president announced that the young and numerical part of the audience were to withdraw to another room, and with the first vice president, Dr. Preston, in the chair, enjoy a part of the program intended especially for them, while the old folks would have a program of their own. The old folks listened very appreciatively to a reading from Charles Lindh by James E. Wood, and a piano solo by Mrs. Lovejoy. The young folks, if any program had been prepared for them, seemed oblivious of the fact. Judging from their actions their minds were engrossed with the subject, "How can we shorten the days of single blessedness?"

On the reassembling of the society Miss Esther Battures read a short biography of Peter Cooper. The article was well written and well read. It gave a clear and concise account of the struggles and triumphs, the good deeds and make up of this noble man, and how he was esteemed by those who knew him.

The music of the evening was well selected and finely rendered. It consisted of a piano duet by Mrs. Ella Smith and Miss Essie Battures, a vocal duet by Miss Essie Battures and Mr. Paraniece, and a piano solo by Mrs. Ella Smith.

The society meet next week at the residence of A. R. Upright.

Bay Springs.

The two unfortunate carpenters who fell lately in the new Chapman house, are reported convalescent. A wonder indeed. It is fearful to look down where they fell.

The plastering is nearly done in the three upper stories of the new hotel.

Good sawdust roads are the order of the day here. A lively next season will see Bay Springs or bust now in the village.

Mr. J. W. McNeil, a recent addition to our population, has bought of Mr. Chapman a $200 village lot, and a $500 lot back from the village about a mile. He has already built a post barn, and is building a new dwelling house, 14x24 and 14x20, two stories, on the village lot. Foundation and cellar walls are to be of brick.

Mr. James P. Biggs, the millman, has sold off all his cows but one, and proposes to replace them with others in the spring. His new house is finished, and "Jimmie" is glad. Messrs. Sails & North did the carpenter work, and it is well done, no better job on any building in the county. The same men have just put him up another new barn 20x32. He has also added two more new cisterns to supply his stock with water. He has had two more boys come to his premises, and all is complete for housekeeping; except that he has no one to keep house, "wash his grub or cook his clothes" for him yet. The premises look like a small village of themselves.

The Mormons in the Watson neighborhood, two miles from here, on the Charlevoix road, hold meetings every Sunday, commencing at half past 11 a. m.

George W. Biggs and wife go off on a visit to their folks in Ohio on the 23d, and James Biggs goes to the same place the day after.

It is reported that on last Sunday, a youth, pistol in hand undertook to shoot a squirrel off the fence in front of Mr. John Willis' house, in the northern part of town. He didn't hit the squirrel, of course, but he did send the bullet through a pane in Mr. Willis' window, knocking the window pane into fragments about the floor. The thrilling part of the story is, that little Freddie, a bright four year old, was climbing into the window, when the bullet struck it. The home was only about ten rods from the road. It does seem that if boys are authorized by parents and by law to carry fire-arms, they ought at least to be cautioned never to discharge one toward a house within a few rods of them, not to keep the muzzle while carrying, and handling, pointing upward.

Four vessels are now loading lumber at Mr. Addis' dock. Haven't learned their names.

FRANK.

South Arm.

Mrs. Barclay and daughter have gone to the state of New York to spend the winter.

Thanksgiving will be observed by services at the Baptist church, conducted by Rev's P. Blake and H. C. Scofield.

Mrs. H. Olney is very sick with erysipelas in her face, but is slowly recovering.

Mrs. Albert Smith is still seriously ill with inflamatory rheumatism, and her recovery is doubtful.

Scarlet fever is raging in the Nicloy district, and school has closed for two weeks. But one death has occurred (Susie Hill, aged six years). Others are lying very low at last reports.

Lumbering seems to be the main topic of conversation among our farmers. Whether there will be snow enough to get out all the logs now being cut is in the dim, uncertain future. Nearly all are anxious to see the "beautiful."

Miss L. M. Scofield and Mr. F. Ramey commence their schools next Monday,—one at Bennetts, the other on the peninsula.

F. A. N.

Fire at Boyne.

Last Sunday evening the citizens of Boyne had a little fiery experience, somewhat greater in extent than East Jordan's recent scarch. The victims were Mills & Carroll, general store and barn; Masonic and Odd Fellows' hall; Lewis' meat market; Dr. Sanderson's office, residence, and barn; A. J. Beardsley, barn; and Frank Littlefield, owner of the store building.

Mills & Carroll lose about $7,000, with $4,100 insurance on stock.

Littlefield's loss on building was $1,200, with $700 insurance.

Lewis' loss on meat market $1,200, with $700 insurance.

Dr. Sanderson, $500 loss with no insurance.

A. J. Beardsley, $300 loss on barn and contents, $200 insurance.

Hall occupied by Masons and Odd Fellows, loss $600; Odd Fellows insured for $200.

The fire originated in the store building from a defective chimney.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by Cushman Bros., real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Nov. 27, 1883, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Henry A. Atkinson to Charles R. Wright, n ½ of s w ¼ sec. 8, Boyne.

Wm. D. Vivian to Wm. Franks, n ½ of s w ¼, 23-34, Bay.

John E. Dawnie to Samuel P. Lord, n w ¼ of s ½ 5-35, Eden.

Wm. Franks to Wm. H. Healey, n ½ of n e ¼ 23-34, Bay.

Chas. A. Todd to Geo. D. Franks, n ½ 23-33-34, Bay.

Geo. Schanckin to Fred A. Schneidle, n w ¼ of n w ¼ 7-32-5, Boyne.

Maggie L. Washburn to Mary E. Palmer, lot 10, block 2, Boyne City.

Hiram K. Clement to Amanda L. Greenwold, lot 30, Eli's South Boyne, $1,300.

Wm. T. Adds to N. J. DeBar, s ½ of lots 2 and 4, blk 3, Spring Harbor, $200.

Jacob Hershey to Andrew J. Walker, w ½ of s ½ 5-34-5, Boyne.

Wm. A. White to B. F. Ingalls, lot 59, and e ½ of lot 58, Boyne.

J. R. Adkinson to H. C. Heaven, n ½ of s e ¼ 3-34-7, $75.

W. T. Adds to Lucy E. Boles, lots 5, 6, 7, and blk 2, Spring Harbor, $250.

D. H. Berrington to Mary H. Berrington, n ½ 10-34-5, $200.

Joe. McNulty to Samuel L. Tate, s ½ of n ½ 8-34-6, $200.

Circuit Court Proceedings.

The People vs. Wallace Weller; embezzlement. Verdict, not guilty.

The People vs. Joseph Unvro; certiorari. Discussed.

The People vs. Isaac St. John. Nolle pros. entered.

Cash vs. Van Buren on Geo. Thauer; assumpsit, judgment for plaintiff, $100 and costs.

Catherine Thier vs. Wm. T. Adds; assumpsit, continued on terms.

Frederic Thier vs. Wm. T. Adds and Jas. Holsworth; trespass. Continued on terms.

David Brown, appellee, vs. Samuel Sweet; appellant; assumpsit. Settled.

C. P. Batchelder, appellee, vs. E. E. Newville, appellant; assumpsit. Settled.

Geo. R. Thauer, appellee, vs. Louis Mebsch, appellant; assumpsit. Continued.

Wm. Hoffman, appellee, vs. Aaron Box, appellant; assumpsit. Continued.

Edward Jackson, appellee, vs. Alvin Jackson, appellant; assumpsit. Continued.

T. W. Cornell et al., plaintiffs, vs. F. Lapence et al., defendants; assumpsit. Judgment for plaintiff, $125.30 and costs.

Chas. Langlois vs. Geo. Thauer; replevin. Judgment for plaintiff, $100 and costs.

John Crawford vs. Thomas Hoskins; certiorari. Judgment for plaintiff, $43.50 and costs.

Joseph Clark vs. John Dodds and Joseph M. Clark; motion for retraxation. Costs reduced.

Thomas J. Thornton vs. Lyndon G. Kennedy; motion to open default. Denied.

Mary E. Williams vs. Wm. Ferguson; divorce. Decree granted.

Betsey Hastey vs. A. D. Hastey; divorce.

Minnie E. Bailey vs. W. Bailey; divorce. Decree granted.

E. W. Austin vs. Mary J. McIlquham et al.; bill to remove clouds from title. Defendants default entered, and decree pro confesso entered.

Ed. F. Wheeler, complainant, vs. Charlotte E. Wheeler, defendant; divorce. Decree granted.

Dean vs. Dean; divorce. Decree denied.

Rhoda M. Reid vs. A. S. Reed; divorce. Decree granted.

Thomas Taylor vs. John S. Dixon; bill to dissolve copartnership, etc. Partnership dissolved and accounting ordered.

H. B. Chapman vs. Jane Morgan; bill for specific performance. Submitted on written argument and briefs.

Amanda Atkinson vs. John E. Adkinson; divorce. Decree granted, with permanent alimony.

You ask me why so happy,
And this sudden change.
The truth is I'm a puppy,
And we've got a GARLAND RANGE

For Sale by L. D. BARTHOLOMEW.

John Nicholls

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades, WAGON TONGUES, Shingles, Lath, &c.

Lumber Sawed & Bills Filled TO ORDER.

LIVERY

The undersigned has purchased the livery formerly owned by him, and installed

Geo. Durance, Manager.

There has been added a new stock of

Horses and Carriages

And a cordial invitation is extended to all old friends and patrons to call and see him whenever they need anything in that line.

GOOD SADDLE HORSES A SPECIALTY WITH THIS STABLE.

J. MILO EATON.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS.

Patent Medicines, all Kinds,

Imported and Domestic Perfumery,

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and stock fresh and pure. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Barthold's new block.

Opera Block

Joseph Hyland,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Repairs for machinery of all kinds, and Repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Fashionable

Milliner and Dressmaker,

Dealer in

Ladies' Furnishing Goods,

Fancy Goods, &c.

HAIR WORK, STAMPING, AND DRESS-MAKING DONE IN THE BEST STYLE

Mrs. M. DePue, Milliner.

NEW GOODS IN ALL LINES.

Two doors south of postoffice.

Job Printing

AT THE JOURNAL OFFICE.

"GIVE ME THE BABY."

BY JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

Give me the baby to hold, my dear,
To hold and to long, and to love and kiss.
All I ask of you is to use, never a fear—
Come to me with a breast like this.
As warm for him as the nest of the robin,
Give me the baby to hold, my dear!

Trustfully yield him to my caress.
"Mother, you say I shall "a mother to me?"
To fill your place—can such happiness
As the love of a baby that laughs to be
Snuggled away where your heart beat long?
Give me the baby to hold, my dear!

Ah, but his hands are soiled, you say!
And would drive my kisses and clutch my hair
Well, what would pleasure me more, I pray,
Than the touch and tug of the wee hands
Here?—
The wee hands there, and the warm face here—
Give me the baby to hold, my dear!

Give me the baby! Oh, won't you see?
* * * Somewhere, out where the green of the grass
Is turned to gray, and the maple tree
Is weeping its leaves of gold upon
A little mound—a little, little one lear * * *,
Give me the baby to hold, my dear!

PEER AND PEASANT.

"And you must leave us?" There was a ring of despair in the voice of the woman who uttered these words, and she raised her large, mournful, dark eyes appealingly to the face of the handsome young man who stood beside, leaning against a giant forest tree.

"It is necessary, Victorine; and surely you would not have me stay forever in this little cabin, shut away from the world like a monk in a cloister?"

"You are not well yet," said the girl, in a low, hesitating voice.

"I am well enough to leave here, where I am only a burden," was the reply.

The dark eyes filled with sudden tears.

"You are unkind to say that, Hugo. What we have done for you has been done cheerfully."

"But your father is a poor man, Victorine. He cannot but feel the support of a stranger very burdensome. And he refuses to accept any return."

"My father is proud," said Victorine, "and does not wish payment for the favors he bestows. And the pleasure of your society has been worth much to him. He has often said that but for you he would have been very lonely."

"What did he do for company before I came?" asked the young man. "He has lived ten years in this hut, he says."

"You very unhappy years, Hugo. The loneliness has seemed to him sometimes greater than he could bear.

"Well, certainly he has had no chance to be lonely lately," said Hugo, in a tone of significance.

Victorine flushed paled suddenly.

"Tell me," she said, laying her hand on her companion's arm, "why do these strange men come here night after night? My father will answer no questions. He says women should not concern themselves with such things, and he sends me to bed that I may not hear what they say. But you know all, Hugo. He confides in you, and you will tell me, I am sure."

Hugo shook his head.

"I would willingly do so," he said, "but I promised your father that I would tell you nothing, and I cannot break my word.

"These are dangerous days," said Victorine, "and there is a constant dread at my heart that my father will join the insurgents. Pierre Rollin, who leads the Red Republicans, is always wanting more men, and the fact that these strangers come here so frequently fills me with alarm."

"Then your sympathies are with our cause, Victorine," said Hugo, eagerly.

"Yes; and yet I know how much cause the people have to complain. The wrong is terrible; but can help come to them only through blood and riot? Is there not some other way in which their condition could be improved?"

"They have taken matters into their own hands," said Hugo. "It is too late to help them now," and he sighed heavily.

A silence fell between them, broken only by the call of the night birds through the forest. All was strangely still. A few yards away stood the little cabin which had been Victorine's home for ten long years. Henri Razi was absent, and therefore no light gleamed from the windows of his home. It stood dark and desolate beneath the tall forest trees which surrounded it.

Moved by a sudden impulse, Hugo put out his arm, and drew Victorine close to his side.

"The time has come for us to say good-by," he murmured, brokenly. "Oh, do not forget me when I am far away, Victorine.

"You are going now?" she exclaimed. "Oh, Hugo, it cannot be possible that you are to leave me so soon?"

"I dreaded telling you of my departure until the last moment. No longer, Victorine. My heart aches at the thought of leaving you, but I must be in Paris tomorrow. Business of importance calls me there. Give me your good wishes before I go. I shall think of you as I journey forward tonight, and picture you sleeping here, undisturbed by battle and carnage.

She did not speak. With both hands clasped over her heart she stood like a beautiful statue before him, her eyes staring straight before her, and her breath coming in short, quick gasps.

"Must I leave you in silence then, Victorine? Will you not speak a single word of farewell?" asked Hugo, as he took in a warm, close clasp one of her cold, nerveless hands.

Still she did not speak.

"You are angry, perhaps, and perhaps you have cause for anger," a quick sigh escaping his lips.

"Good-by," she said, hoarsely, her face averted from his earnest gaze.

"Only a single word, Victorine? Can you part with me so coldly after all these weeks we have been together? Ah, I see that you really care little whether I go or stay. And I—I shall never forget you, Victorine, or the tenderness with which you nursed me back to health again. I remember what a vision of loveliness you seemed to me when I opened my eyes and saw you bending over me. I blessed my good fortune in having been found, after my fall by your father. Surely no other father and daughter could have been so kind. Nowhere else could I have been nursed so tenderly. And after ten weeks of intimate companionship you leave me goodbye as you would a stranger of yesterday."

Still she did not move or speak, and the hand he held remained unresponsive to his clasp.

"You may never see me again, Victorine," he continued. "Our paths lie far apart. Let me hear you say that you do not regret having known me."

"Why should I regret it?" she asked, turning suddenly and facing him. "You have been here ten weeks, but in that time you have told us nothing of yourself save that your name is Hugo Lascelles. You say we have been kind to you, but you have not rewarded our kindness by giving us your confidence. Do you think I have you lasting remembrance? Do you think that you deserve that I should carry your image before me, laying her hand on her heart.

The young man appeared to hesitate; then he said slowly.

"It is as well, perhaps, that you should forget me. Forgive me if my reticence has wounded you. I dare not attempt any justification. But I give you fair warning, Victorine. When the sun rises to-morrow I shall be far on my road to Paris."

"Farewell," she said, coldly.

She heard him turn and walk away, but made no effort to recall him. She stood where he had left her, silent, motionless, her head bent forward on her breast, the long, silken fringes of her eyelids resting on her pale cheeks.

It was only when the sound of his footsteps had died away that she raised her head and looked about her.

"Hugo! Hugo!" She breathed the words rather than spoke them. "Gone! gone! Never in this life shall we meet again!"

She went into the cabin and lighted a candle. As she did so she perceived a sheet of paper lying open on the table. She picked it up and found there a few lines from her father:

"I have gone away, and cannot tell you when I may return. You are safe in the cabin. Remain there until your provisions give out. Then enter the little hoard in the floor, counting from the fireplace, and take the bag you will find there. It contains sufficient money for your support for several years."

"While I talked with Hugo, he came and left this," she murmured. "His daughter is something to be considered with his desire for power. He has left me alone to live or die, as the good God may see fit. And, had I only dared to speak, I might have won back his love and status. One word would have bridged the gulf between Hugo and me. Oh, father! father! your secret has proved my doom!"

As the last word left her lips she threw up her arms with a bitter cry, and cast herself prone on the floor, her face downcrushed, no tears in her eyes, but hoarse, gasping sobs tearing their way from her breast, and her white, slender hands buried in her long, dark hair. For a long time she lay thus, making no effort at self-control, giving free license to the wild emotions of her bruised heart.

But at length she grew quiet and lay motionless, w'll utterly exhausted with the force of her strange passion. The moon rose slowly, and shed its calm, cold light upon her, the wind sighed through the forest like a lost spirit, and the leaves wrung, but still she slept on. She lay there like a dead thing, and the cold, gray light of morning found her position unchanged. * *

On the morning of Friday, June 23, 1848, the city of Paris presented a scene of horror seldom equaled. In the eastern half of the city, every street had its battle, and every stone of the barricades was spatted with human gore. Each window was a loophole from which flashed the leaden death. The light raged from house to house, from chamber to chamber. Men fired at each other from parapets on the roofs, and the dead bodies fell heavily on the streets below. Every atrocity of civil war or heavy provocation was perpetrated on the prisoners by the insurgents. Beaten from barricade to barricade, they were unable to guard their captives, and condemned them to die as traitresses. The young men of the Mobile Guard, nearly all natives of Paris, the heroes of the barricades of the preceding February, were treated by the insurgents as traitors. Some of them were decapitated, and their heads stuck on pikes, and surrounded by the mutilated bodies of their comrades on the heights of several barricades. In the Pantheon, near the tomb of Voltaire, a Mobile Guard was crucified. At other points they were disembowled and placed in front of the barricades, to strike their comrades with horror.

Nothing was heard but the discharge of live musketry, the thunder of the ocean cannon, the roll of the drums and the shrieks of the victims. The women stood in silent no cry, but paraded in silence the work of death. The beautiful city presented a most changed appearance from what it bore before the beginning of the uprising. And the palace of the Tuileries, with its magnificent furniture, its velvet and satin-covered chairs, its soft Turkey carpets, its tapestried chambers, its luxurious apartments of every description, was turned into a hospital.

In the Quarter St. Jacques, on the Rue Sorbonne, the battle had raged for seven long hours, and the dead and dying lay in every direction. The troops had moved on, and a few of the Red Republicans were engaged in removing their wounded to the hospitals, when, making her way slowly through the scene of carnage, came a young girl, alone. Her long, dark hair hung in wild confusion over her shoulders, her dress, that of a peasant, was torn and soiled, her shoes were broken and worn, and she seemed ready to fall with fatigue. But still she went on, her large, lustrous eyes scanning with a look of horror the blood-stained, smoke-begrimed faces upturned to the cloudy sky. She appeared to be searching for some one, and paid no attention to the rude glances cast upon her.

Suddenly she gave a wild, unearthly cry, and fell on her knees beside the body of a young man dressed in the uniform of the regular.

"My dream!" she moaned. "The vision of my dream!

She tore aside the coat, and pressed her hand to the young rifleman's heart.

"It beats!" she cried. "Oh, my God! he is alive! Men! men! give me help to bear him to a place of safety.

"Who are you, and what is your name?" cried the men in answer. "You ask too much."

"Let me put him where he'll need no help," said a rough-looking fellow, staggering forward with a stretcher in his hand. "Vive la Republique Sociale!"

But before he could strike the blow his murderous heart dictated, the girl had covered the body of the young officer with her own.

"Coward!" she cried; "to seek to kill a helpless man!

"There was the sudden sound of a leaden bullet, and an officer, on whose breast glittered the star of the Legion of Honor, grew rein before the prostrate woman.

"What does this mean?" he cried, "put my men bayonet, man. Would you strike a woman?"

The girl sprang to her feet. "Help me, General," she cried, passionately. "God will forever bless you, if you save me and now. There has one whose life is dearer far to me than my own. Protect him; let me remove him to a hospital where I can nurse and care for him."

She looked so beautiful, so brave, as she stood there, that the stern man's look of such passionate appeal, that the General's heart softened.

"It shall be as you desire," he said. "I will act as your body-guard, my brave girl.

Half an hour later the young officer was unconsciously saved by a comfortable bed in the house of a kind American, tenderly guarded and cared for by the dark-eyed girl who had dared so much for his sake.

But it was many days before he knew anything of what was passing around him; days in which he lay in the valley of the shadow of death, deaf to the tender words whispered in his earlobe to the anguish in the face of his sweet nurse, unconscious of the care which fell fast on his face as she bent over him.

"Where am I?" the pallid lips asked, faintly.

"With me, Hugo," answered the nurse, bending over him, a world of gladness in her beautiful eyes.

He smiled as if well content. Two week to make further inquiry, he was satisfied with the knowledge that Victorine was near him.

It was from the doctor that he learned how his life had been saved, and how unfaltering had been the courage and care of the girl he had thought never to see again when he left her in the desolate cabin in the forest.

"Victorine," he would say, when he was feeling almost well again, and was sitting by the window, with his gentle nurse beside him, "I haven't spoken to you yet of what I owe you. I wanted to wait until I was strong enough to talk with you about it. Tell me, what did you come to Paris?"

Victorine shuddered, and her cheek paled.

"The night you left me I had a vision," she answered. "I saw you lying in the street, wounded and helpless. About you were soldiers, removing the dead and dying. Suddenly you raised your head and uttered the single word, "Come." Then all was blank about me. I saw no more, but I lost no time. I knew that heaven had sent a message, and that I must obey it. I set out on foot for Paris, and reached here five hours before I found you. I knew from the first that my search would not be in vain.

Victorine, I have a confession to make. From the first hour I met you I loved you, I think. But between us lies a gulf I can never cross. I am simply Hugo Lascelles; I am a Marquis, the son of the Duke de Villars, and my blood is among the best in France. But I feared my father's displeasure should I make it the one so lovely and so dear to me of a poor peasant. I determined to leave you before my heart mastered my reason. But the longing to know if my love was returned proved too great for resistance, and I sought, on the evening of my departure, to learn your secret. I became convinced that you did not care for me. You were so cold and even unkind. So I left you and came to Paris, eager to help my friends in this conflict. It was from your father that I knew of the fresh rebellion which was to shake all Paris. He was a bitter insurgent."

"He is dead," said Victorine. "My poor father! He just suffered many wrongs at the hands of the monarchy. Victor, I, too, have a confession to make. I knew from the first who you were, for you told your secret in your delirium."

"And you did not reveal it?" cried Hugo. "Victorine! that was noble; for you know your father's hatred of all connected with the throne."

"My father was not a poor peasant, Hugo, but a noble, exiled fifteen years ago, because of his political opinions. He found life unbearable out of France, and returned in secrecy and poverty, and secluded himself in that forest."

"Victorine! Ah, then, my father will not refuse to give you a daughter's place in his heart. Be my wife, dearest—my sweet, devoted wife! Ah, cannot you love me?" Victorine, your coldness was but genuine when you spoke of

"No; I dared not permit you to know my feelings. I knew that as long as you believed me the daughter of a peasant your filial duty would not permit you to marry me. But my father's death has unsealed my lips, and, Hugo, I am yours for time and eternity."

He drew her to his arms, and, with a heart too full for words, pressed on her lips the seal of betrothal.—Frank Leslie's Monthly.

The Ozier Willow Excitement.

"What about the Ozier willow excitement?" asked a friend of mine, "I never heard about that."

"Didn't you ever hear about that? Well, I must tell you. That was too good," and the sawdy man laughed. "Don't you remember, about three years ago, the agricultural papers were full of articles about the fortunes to be made on prairie farms? Every paper was full of it. They claimed that if farmers would set out Ozier willow cuttings around the farms they would grow up rapidly and hardy, that the first year the willows would make the best kind of fences, and after that they would furnish an unfailing supply of fuel. My partner and I went out in Southern Minnesota as we took orders for over $30,000 worth of ozier willow cuttings. Every farmer snapped at them. We went to the bottoms, along the Mississippi river, along in the spring, and cut willows, three-cornered willows, and in the spring we delivered them and took our money, or the farmer's notes, which we sold at the banks. The farmers set out the cuttings, expecting to realize all that the papers had said. I don't think a single willow, of the tens of thousands that we delivered, ever grew. They were of no account on earth. I never thought much about it after we got away, except to laugh at the farmers, till four years ago some fellow wanted me to go out in Minnesota, shooting chickens. I didn't think I would go anybody I had ever sold willows to, but one day our party took dinner at a farmhouse near Albert Lea. The farmer looked at me, and after a while he says to his wife, "Marie, that man looks like the pirate that sold us those are Ozier willows, and Marie put on her spectacles and looked at me and said, "Hiram, it is the same critter, as sure as you live." Well, I was in a fix. But I tumbled to myself in an instant and got up from the table and shook hands with them, and told them I had seen the error of my ways and joined the church, and was now traveling through the country, making amends for the trouble by paying back the amounts that had been paid to me, and I actually paid that old granger $5.20, and then the old fellow was so pleased that he asked me to lead in prayer. But I kicked on that, and when he told his boy to saddle up the old mare and go around to the neighbors and tell them that the Ozier willow pirate had got religion and was there to pay them back, I told the boys we had better go out and shoot a few chickens and come back to supper and I would pay them all off in a lump. We got away and took a freight-train for Austin, and I got out of that country alive, but I heard afterward that they tried to lynch me. I wouldn't go back to Southern Minnesota for a million dollars."—Peck's Sun.

Big-hearted David Davis.

David Davis was not the greatest man in Washington while he lived here. He did not live at a third-rate hotel, nor did he boggle with the pro-consuls at the Capitol. Those statements, like many more of the same sort, originated with some of that very numerous class of men who know all about Washington without having been here. They are not tormented by facts. David Davis is a very careful man. His prudence has given him his fortune. He did not live at the most fashionable hotel in Washington, although he but placed rooms at one of the best, and he did not supplemental his lunch sometimes at a stand in one of the Senate corridors. But his big body carries a big heart as well as a big brain, and I know of dozens of cases where other people's vexigation, he put his big hand into his pocket-book and gave out "big money," as they say in Kentucky, for the good of his unfortunate neighbors. So careful was Judge Davis that no word of any of these helpful acts should ever reach the ears of publicity, that only one case was ever publicly published to. It was that of a ragged little urchin boy whom the Judge picked up on the steps of the Capitol, hungry and cold, and blundering winter day. Judge Davis bought his wet and dirty newspapers, fitted and Louisiana have clothed his naked form, put something in his pocket for the next day, and stopped his thanks with his big hand. Judge Davis is as hard as flint-rock in the presence of fraud and humbug, and soft as wool to the unfortunate and distressed.—Washington Cor. Philadelphia Record.

For long evenings—Good books and papers.

HUMOR.

[From Texas Siftings.]

An exchange says that Vanderbilt grows gross. His father used to grow cabbages.

A Vonso girl in Missouri, crazed by religion, imagines herself an angel. Her case is not quite so bad as that of the young Austin dude, who, crazed by the girls, imagines himself a devil of a fellow.

A Texas local reporter described a young lady's costume, worn at an evening party, as "rose-colored dress." The paper appeared the next morning calling it a "nose-colored dress," and the young lady's admirers are now anxiously inquiring "who's nose?"

"Aw, can you sell me, aw, a line neckties to match my eyes, you know? inquired an Austin dude in a gentleman's furnishing store. "Don't know as I can, exactly," replied the salesman, "but I think I can fit you with a soft hat to match your head." Then the dude withdrew from the store, a crushed, strawberry line suffusing his effeminate features.

"Going to visit Germany this winter, I hear," said Mr. Pinnord to old Crib Pettigrew, whose reputation for stinginess was almost sublime. "Yes, I thought I would go over in about two weeks." "Don't believe they will let you go ashore," observed Pinnord. "Why won't they let me go ashore?" anxiously inquired Pettigrew. "Why, you know Germany has declared against the importation of American hogs."

[From Puck's Sun.]

The continuance of hard times becomes liberalism in the churches.

It's suggested that Private Dalzell be put in command of the next Arctic expedition. Well, as he is an Ohio man there is a fair prospect of his getting that.

By all means make out the commission to Dalzell. Let no Ohio man escape.

The strike that generally results is good to all parties concerned is that over the tailors, who use the presses all the news that might in any way compromise them. Finally, with a view of avoiding the publication of stains of affairs, there was founded at St. Petersburg a short time ago a weekly journal, the Oriental Review (Nosvi Schnale Obozrenie), under the management of a man who has a thorough knowledge of Siberia. As the journals Moscow and St. Petersburg are not subjected to censorship, the Oriental Review has been able to bring to the knowledge of the Russian Government many abuses that would otherwise have remained forever unknown. It was based in justice to the Central Administration that it attaches a great importance to the revelations made in the Review, and more than one official has been dismissed from his post or put on trial in consequence of these revelations.

On the War-Path.

"Do not be the habit of traveling, and I want to know if there is any well-to-do-do," said a brawny woman, as she stood at the door of the car and glared round.

"Take a seat, madam," suggested the conductor. Much beguiled.

"Oh, I am afraid," shouted the woman, waving her umbrella. "What I want to see is the fellow who has got out for a fourth hand at euchre, and then wind up by asking me to fill in for him." Just point out that trip!" and she was shed into the car and stamped her foot.

They got off at the last station, and I always troubled with a lack of nerve when I think about going to the Dakotas," said the smallerhika; "but when I get in the chair and he comes up to have around in my teeth with his drill, I feel as if I would rather be home and I have other thoughts of it."

It can old saying that to make a goose intime requires considerable time and a large number of quills. Just so with a man. He can make a goose of himself with one quill in a short time.

When a negro is poor and worthless we are content to call him a negro; when he is respectable and well-to-do he is an African; and when he amounts to something he is a colored gentleman.

On Marriage.

Here is sound advice on marriage, coming from a magisterial bench in Dublin: "From the experience which I have gained in the Police court," said the Magistrate, "I would advise people not to get married at all, especially females; for, in the number of assault cases between married people which have come before me, I have had only one case in which the wife was charged with assault upon her husband." It was generally supposed that a "beadle" was a necessary concomitant to a marriage, in particular, and, to say the truth, probably the rule is altered for Dublin, where the last number of Parliament recently declared that as long as Ireland remained silent, England would be deaf to her cries of anguish.

Maternal Conceit.

"Fred has asked me to go to the theater with him."

"Has he? He must have got around to the box office quite early to secure two seats together."

"Three, mother." Why, he bought only two."

"Two, eh? Tell him you can't go, of course; people are already talking about the young shrimp spending more money than he earns."—Hartford Sunday Journal.

Mistake Step in Dentistry.

Havana, Cuba.—The most popular dentist of this city, Dr. D. Francisco Carrera, graduate of the Royal University, states that he can cure all troublesome neuralgia, arresting the pain in twelve hours, his patrons are recommended to call at 22, Jesus Oil, and the most speedy cures have followed. It is a specialty. It soothe, subdues, healthy pulse, and proof against household accidents.

Exile Life in Siberia.

A Russian journal gives this picture of desolation of life in the frozen and barren regions of Siberia:

A steam-boat arrived at St. Petersburg, from Tioumen, towing a transport with 664 prisoners on board bound for Siberia. The transport had a terrible passage. Caught in the ice, it was delayed six days in the trip from Tioumen to Tomsk. On account of this delay the prisoners on their arrival at the latter town were in a deplorable condition, deprived of everything and infected with diphtheria, typhus, smallpox and other diseases. Two days afterward there came from Tioumen another transport with 538 prisoners. Finally added vessel cases with 700 of these unfortunates. The prison was too small for these 2,000 people, but nevertheless they were crammed into it. Among them were 100 political prisoners; and this fact is noteworthy, since it cannot be ascertained from whence they came. Whether they are condemned to banishment or to a good sentence in the mines nobody knows. Neither can it be ascertained by what ukase they have been tried, since, according to the official figures, the total number of convictions for political offenses during the last few years fall short of so high a figure.

Most we, I believe, know that there is some truth in the rumors according to which people arrested on the charge of high treason have been brought before secret tribunals? Or have these political prisoners been simply dealt with by the legislative branch of the Government? There is no distinction except between these two alternatives, and only to be deplored.

Naturally, the population of Siberia is far from contented with this continual arrival of prisoners, and vigorous protests are raised against the convoys of exiles, coupled with demands for its total abolition, and for a more efficacious control over the functionaries appointed in Siberia. The Siberian presses of only a small number of papers, which are for the most part at the mercy of the local authorities, who suppress all the news that might in any way compromise them. Finally, with a view of avoiding the publication of stains of affairs, there was founded at St. Petersburg a short time ago a weekly journal, the Oriental Review (Nosvi Schnale Obozrenie), under the management of a man who has a thorough knowledge of Siberia. As the journals Moscow and St. Petersburg are not subjected to censorship, the Oriental Review has been able to bring to the knowledge of the Central Government many abuses that would otherwise have remained forever unknown. It was based in justice to the Central Administration that it attaches a great importance to the revelations made in the Review, and more than one official has been dismissed from his post or put on trial in consequence of these revelations.

The Best of a Reliable Diuretic

Within white clover as a remedy for the kidneys, neither exciter nor irritant there, was also ever found a substitute for Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This fine medicine exerts the requisite degree of stimulation upon these organs, without exciting them to undue action, and is therefore adapted for the purpose then unsuitable. Moreover, it is a tonic, and, in addition to the kidneys and bladder there is impaired vigor in the system, it imparts to them the strength and vigor which prevents the necessity of assisting their action by resorting to artificial means. Malaria, dyspepsia, biliousness, rheumatism, and nervousness are also relieved by this invigorant.

Rescued from Agonizing Death.

New York—Mr. James White, 1552 Broadway, formerly chief instructor in Dickinsonian Business College, in this city, said to a newspaper reporter: "I broke my shoulder, arm and elbow, splitting the socket in four parts. Rheumatism set in, and I employed the best physician. He tried everything, but I grew worse, and at last he said: I have one more thing to try, and if that fails nothing can give you relief, and that is St. Jacobs Oil." I used this great pain reliever, and am able to use my arm, free from all rheumatic trouble. I have also recommended the remedy to a number of people, and in every case they have been speedily and effectually cured."

Catholic Teachings About Liquors.

A Boston Catholic subscriber sends us the following as "the doctrine of the Catholic church about liquor." The decisions have been collected by Bishop O'Reilly, of Liverpool, and are said to be "based on the teaching of the best Catholic theologians." That does not make them altogether authoritative, but they are worth the consideration:

1. Whosoever drinks deliberately to such an extent as to lose his reason commits a mortal sin.

2. Whosoever knows by past experience that when drunk he is accustomed to blasphemy, or utter other improper language, or to injure others about him, besides the sin of drunkenness, is guilty of those other crimes committed during the state of intoxication.

3. Whosoever does not adopt the proper means for the correction of this vicious habit of drunkenness remains in a continual state of sin.

4. Whosoever entices and urges another to excess in drinking, who he knows will be intoxicated, commits a mortal sin.

5. Any seller of liquor who continues to supply liquor to any individual that he knows will become intoxicated therewith commits a mortal sin, because he deliberately co-operates in the grievous sin of another.

6. Whosoever is guilty of excess in drinking, thought not to intoxication in such a way as to cause distress to his family by squandering that which is needed for their support, commits a mortal sin against charity and justice. In like manner whosoever thus renders himself incapable of his lawful duties, although he may not drink to intoxication, commits a mortal sin.—New York Times.

There's something wrong about this. The law allows the minister only $1 for marrying a couple, while the lawyer who divorces them same people gets anywhere from $100 to $1,000. The lawyer, I'm sorry to say, is a sinner, should divide with the parson, sincerely is plain that he ought to share the fee. If it is the first time the preacher didn't make up his case by marrying the client.

The Wonderful Diuretic

Dr. Guilfoyle's French Moustache Wax
Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers, or by C. H. MARK & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

SOLD BY ALL MEDICINE DEALERS.

$1.00 A YEAR!
THE BEST STORY PAPER
IN THE WEST.

$1.00 Four complete and very entertaining serials, by Eminent authors, and 52 serials, by Eminent authors, and 52 stories of rare merit, 12 Columns of valuable Agricultural Department for the Farm and Garden, Fashion Department for the Ladies, Sparkling Editorials, Choice Miscellany, etc., etc. A Paper for Every Body, and everything in it is new and fresh. Sample copies free.

$1.00 Address The LEDGER PUBLISH. CO. A Year

$1.00 A Year

$1.00 A Year

$1.00 A Year

$1.00 A Year

$1.00 A Year

$1.00 The LEDGER PUBLISH. CO. A Year

Subscribe at Once.

$72 A WEEK. $72 to $5 at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

PISO'S CURE FOR
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION

$25 Reward!

We will pay the above reward for any case of Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, Fever and Ague, Fever and Chills, or Liver Complaint, Malaria, Jaundice, Kidney Complaint, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Headache, Female Complaints, Piles, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Consti-pation, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Constip

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Nov. 29, 1883.

These "Who Died for Me and You."

With most of us memory goeth not back further than war times, and in the mist of forgetfulness there stands one event permanent in the minds of many —when father went to war. We could not then understand why mother cried as if her heart would break, when father looked so handsome in the blue infantrine uniform, and we lovingly wanted to go also and fight. Then followed a period of paper pinnes and wooden swords, of playing truant to see the soldiers, and of tagging block after block at the heels of brevets marching bravely "down to Washington to fight for Uncle Abe." Laboriously spelling out the inflammatory head-lines above dispatches from the seat of war (which we did not then know were largely written in Washington and padded in the newspaper offices), we puzzled over such names as Reinzelman and Zollicoffer, and wondered why the newspapers didn't mention father. We could hardly understand why mother so timidly and yet so quickly answered the postman's ring, nor why when she got those musty-smelling letters, with pictures upon the envelopes of red-legged soldiers jumping upon snakes, that she kissed us so tenderly and wept as she smiled. And the army boxes—how much circus money and how many holiday allowances went to get some things for "papa to war." How often mother asked us if we didn't wish father would come back—and how many of us remember a day among all days when father did come back, and the whole house was wailing and mourning, or those other terrible days when mother heard the dreadful news that father never would come back! And now, looking back over a score of years, memories of those events so sadly impressed upon our boyish hearts become hallowed, and we young men that go up, down and around town should sight all heart in reverence to the day that is set apart for honor to the memories of those "Who died for me and you."

—Boston Globe.

Pilfered Paragraphs.

GREAT BRITAIN cultivates 2,367,059 acres of wheat, 2,062,927 to barley, and 4,306,391 to oats.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and lose no time when you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders invaluable. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co.

A MAN offered $10,000 for a license to sell liquors at wholesale in Westfield, Mass., for five years, but the authorities refused.

Do You Know?

That the House and Cattle Powders prepared by F. M. Parmelee are composed of the very best and purest materials, Lineseed, Fenugreek, Blood Root, Elecampane, for Coughs, Colds, Pleuro-Pneumonia, &c., Sulphur, Mandrake, Gentian, Silica, Magnesia for Impure Blood, besides many other ingredients especially adapted to the cure of Colic, Worms, Hoven, and all diseases of Horses, Cattle, Hogs, Sheep and Poultry. Buy no other. Full pounds only 25 cents. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co.

AN idea of the magnitude of the flower trade of New York may be gained from the statement that one florist in that city ships on an average 1,000 lbs a week by express to every part of the Union.

Why Suffer?

With Dyspepsia when Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure will work wonders, relieving you at once. Its not wait till Dyspepsia has overcome you! Diabetes has taken full possession of your body but remember that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." This fine preparation will also tone up the kidneys and liver and cleanse the system of all impurities. Price $1.00 per bottle. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co.

ARABIANS say that it takes forty days to purify the mouth that has been pucker-ed by whistle. In Tobago and Ireland whistling is considered to be disrespectful to God. In North Germany the peasants claim that to whistle in the evening will make the angels weep.

Thoroughly Tried.

After many years of experience in my own family and upon my horses and cattle I am constrained to say that Parmelee's Universal Liniment is the most complete remedy for the cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Lame Back, Sore Throat, &c., in the human family, and of Bone Spavin, Sweeny, Ringbone, Spavins, Bruises on Horses; Caked Bag, Sore Teats, &c., on Cattle, that I have ever known and take pleasure in recommending it to other. Large bottles 50 cts; common size 25 cents. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co.

A THREE-LEGGED jackass has been born in California. He is an unhappy lot. With one leg too many he be classed as human, and one too few to be on a par with the brute variety, he doesn't know where he properly belongs.—Boston Transcript.

By Neglect

What is at first but a slight cold, becomes a cough, straining and exhausting the lungs till such an inflamed condition exists, that powerful remedies are not always able to stop the disease and the person goes into consumption from mere neglect. Do not be so foolish but use Hamilton's Cough Balsam, which removes the impure matter from the throat and lungs and exerts a healing influence on the diseased parts. Even those who have had the worst of their former selves receive wonderful help in Croup and Whooping Cough it is invaluable. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co.

THE FROST KING.

BY OSCAR F. WEBER.

In his palace of ice sits the Frost King, who reigns apart of the year,
And ordering old Boreas to blow, sendeth the frozen air fear;
And he blows on his trumpet, that echoes through sky-pierced temple sublime,
Most slavery had stood for long ages, supposed by the Emperor of time;
And he called his clan-fellows around him, and made them to march at morn,
With his best he soon received topplings, and he heard called their set "forlorn,"
"For I take a long journey," said he "to regain my realm with a sword-stroke day
My realms that in beauty lie sunbound, in view of the portals of day."

His cohorts a period is joining, for they hoard the dangers of fight,
And enfold their warriors at midnight, with bagh-motte breathing delight,
And hence were the subjects of Frost King, and hence to them was unknown,
For the Frost King was his kingdom to show, his dangers and heights of renown,
And now when the sun hid had faded, and day glimmer of fairy in the Blue,
Up rose from ambush of the Frost King, from their cover and surrounding foes;
And forming their squadrons for battle, they lead them in numbered array,
In bright blue Tour the King in review, at earliest dawn of the day.

Now the King throws his mantle and so on his sons white shoulders was free,
And mounts his proud steed of the North clime—his steed that rows the air;
And takes his flower march to the South, where sunrises in beauty rise
With vales of Dorado in splendor, ah a day dawn of Summer is night—
The hungry-hill children of crime hear the tramp of his frosted hoof,
As he marches in triumph along, over the sunn-parted desolate street
And closer and closer they gather, as lords when the lion is near,
And cooler and cooler the weather, for King of the Winter is here!

Let the columns of Winter are coming—numbers too as the sands
That lie on the shores of the ocean, and nearer, still nearer at hand,
And the hollow winds freighted with horrors, fend their long dirge at night,
And sing their white pinions of terror, like demons in female delight,
And sweep they sweep in their fury—sweep onward over forest and glen,
And hoary Youth sons-drifts of Winter the fields and the dwellings of men,
Whilst fowl weighing squadrons in darkness are heard on the hill-tops away,
Where the host of the Frost King is pitched, awaiting the coming of day.

O, terrible King of the North clime! in beauty thy banners unseen
Floating out on their snow-flight of splendor, over hill, landscape, and stream—
We welcome thy garments that lie upon the beds that sleepeth below—
The green-headed wheat and the grasses and flowers all covered with snow;
But when thou comest in terror than thy palace and storm realms afar,
And bringest on wing of the tempest thy white-winged squadrons for war,
Tis then that we dread thee, most invincible and terrible King;
For out of thy kingdom come terrors on freedom and accusations wing.

Invincible! too, are thy subjects, and mighty as Titans of old;
For they glide, through the crannies of houses, and plunder the poor dwellers with cold
They battle in silence at midnight, they battle in silence at noon,
And countless their efforts for conquest as they mock at wretches forlorn.
Oh, wilt thou relinquish our hearts of sorrow, that they ever thee thus open to pride,
Are? Stand to their squadrons in battle to fetter the swift-running tide,
And find on the other of the tempest, these crowding warriors to fly,
And battle for Frost King and country, like soldiers that fear not to die.

Now he bridges the rivers with ice, supported by columns of frost,
And over them pass his good legions, his legions that never are lost;
For he rears up of iron fortresses, and—iron bolts polished and strong—
To bear up his squadrons in battle, as they march in triumph along.
And pressing now into his service the winds of Eolus than play,
Mist the regions of darkness that stretch in measureless distance away,
He bids them to flank his block columns as mutterers pantom of moan
And souls at horrors that gather round the dwellings of mortals below.

Our Father! look down from thy temple that standeth mid glory and light,
On desolate homes of Thy children, made fearful by Frost King at night,
For the Frost King in terror has come, with his faithful squadrons of snow,
And freezes the blood of the homeless, and laughs at their sorrow and woe.
They enter the palace of marble, they knock at the peasant's low door,
And hoist their white banners of frost in the face of the rich and the poor,
Hark! 'tis the shout of the King as his host—without that is fearful and loud,
Like that which is heard when the tempest calls out to the lightning its cloud.

And the West and the South have unless with grim-featured subjects for fight,
And white-winged horses are gathered from homes in the North regions of night.
Whilst the Frost King sits on his charger, his locks all hidden by snow,
Commanding his troops of thunder to rally and charge on the foe,
And ere the gay city is covered by mantle that Frost King has spread,
Are through palace and cottage his warriors with visages sombre and red,
Many hearts of whom in the city, and drank at poverty's bowl,
And succored at tickets pointed from the hearts of their victims grown cold.

* * * * * * *

But the mild Southern breezes of Spring from chambers of beauty come forth
And fondle with softest caresses the Frost King and chiefs of the North,
And bid them retire! for a seven-fold open the gates of the East
With greatest of splendor—"So they say," whispered but the breezes, at least,—
When let comes the sun in his glory, and battles the Frost King away,
Clothing his banners of gold, his host fled banners of day.
And men, on his chariot of flame, sweep upward, upward still higher!
Quick, hurling he arrows on Frost King his glittering spears of fire.

And the Monarch in terror now hastens, to his home that lies afar,
Where his chieftains, all shorn of their plumes, recount the and losses of War.
And there in his palace of beauty he plans out his Winter campaigns,
And shoots fond desires to southerners that flash from chariot of flame.
Defeated for the Frost King is conquered, his first work is over at last,
And his snowy-hid treasures of Winter no longer are seen on the blast,
He begins have melted away, have the rain and the breezes of Spring,
And the green-wooed forests of May with the notes of the songsters ring.

Charlevoix, Mich., 1883.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

THE MOST USEFUL BOOK EVER PUBLISHED!

A Book that should be in Every House.

The press, teachers, and professional people throughout the country pronounce it to be the BOOK OF BOOKS. It contains upwards of 800,000 WORDS, with their definition and pronunciation, according to Webster and other recognized authorities; a large number of additional words and definitions in general; it contains a mine of information for everybody. This book is handsomely bound in cloth, containing 542 Pages Profusely Illustrated. We propose to send you one of these valuable books, by mail, postpaid, shipping charges prepaid, to any address, on receipt of only ONE DOLLAR.

Address M. STOLZ & CO.,
20 Park Place, New York.

PIMPLES.

I will mail (Free) the receipt for a simple Vegetable Balm that will remove Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Blotches, and leave the skin clear and beautiful; also instructions for producing a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, inclosing a 3c. stamp, Rev. VANDELF & CO., 12 Barclay St., N. Y.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, in German, French, or English, by mail, and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for COLDS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. Parties wishing the prescription, will please address, Rev. E. A. WILSON, 194 Penn St., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

EVERYTHING

In the line of

Furniture

AND

Undertakers' Goods

Can be found at the old reliable house of

H. C. Cooper,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

COME AND SEE US BEFORE BUYING.

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS.

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING,

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US.

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 21. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1883. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

Is published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG,

Office over L. D. Sudds's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Business Directory.

ATTORNEYS.

CULBERSON & GOULD, Attorneys at Law, Wilson Bros' Block, Charlevoix, Mich. C. C. GOULD.

FRED W. WAYNE, Attorney and Counselor at Law, Charlevoix, Mich. Prompt attention to business in Probate Court.

J. M. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

VORNAN KEAT, Attorney at Law. Office Stimson's Hotel, Petoskey, Mich.

FRANK F. WISKER, Attorney and Solicitor, Patents & Copyrights, Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX. Capital $50,000. Does a general banking business; receives deposits, makes loans, buys and sells real estate, and collects money on the best of terms. Exchange on Detroit and Chicago. Interest allowed on time deposits. Loans made on approved security. Drafts on Europe for sale. Collections promptly attended to. Interest allowed on time deposits. Loans made on approved security. Drafts on Europe for sale. Collections promptly attended to.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. Sunday service at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer-meeting every Thursday evening at 7 o'clock. E. P. SAWYER, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sunday service at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer-meeting every Thursday evening at 7 o'clock. J. H. BOWLES, pastor.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. C. GILBERT, M. D., Office at his high-sidle.

L. HOIN, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office at the house formerly occupied by Dr. Wilson, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. A. JOHN, M. D. Surgeon and Homeopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

DOUGLAS HARBOR, Notary Public, Real Estate Agent, Conveyancer, Charlevoix, Mich. Office on Bridge St., Lower Town.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

F. & A. M. Charlevoix Lodge No. 416. Meets on or before full moon. E. B. TOWNSLEY, Sec.

I. O. O. F. Charlevoix Lodge No. 295, meets every Thursday evening. C. H. WILSON, Sec.

I. O. O. F. Simon Lake Lodge No. 207, meets every Wednesday evening in each month. L. D. BARTHOLOMEW, Sec.

I. O. G. T. Temperance Lodge No. 1, meets every Tuesday evening at Temperance Hall. Lena Bentley, Sec.

DAVID CLARK, Justice of the Peace and Notary Public, Office on Bridge St., Lower Town.

A. R. TOWNSLEY, Notary Public, Conveyancer, Real Estate Agent, Insurance Agent, Charlevoix, Mich.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

General banking business transacted. Money loaned on approved security. Accounts solicited. Interest allowed on time deposits. Exchange on Detroit and Chicago sold cheap. Collections and remittances made promptly.

O. S. TITUS, Cashier.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Oysters in season. Terms reasonable. W. S. JOHNSON, Opp. Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Patronage is respectfully solicited. Good accommodations for the traveling public. Refreshments for the Pedestrian and Rig Boys stopping.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD CORSER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public. Refreshments for the Pedestrian and Rig Boys stopping.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CARLOS, Proprietor.

Boyne City, Michigan.

House thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand at his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in a First-Class Establishment. The highest market price in cash paid for Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

FOR

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS,

GO TO

Dr. G. W. CROUTER'S DRUG STORE.

Santa Claus' Headquarters.

An Immense Line to Choose From.

NOTICE FOR DISSOLUTION.—The partnership heretofore existing between the undersigned under the firm name of Miller & Wright, doing business at Marion, Charlevoix county, Michigan, has dissolved by mutual consent, the business will be continued by the undersigned, who will pay all outstanding accounts and receive all the outstanding accounts. Dated Marion, Michigan, October 20, A. D. 1883.

ROBERT A. MILLER.
LEWIS W. WRIGHT.

DISSOLUTION OF COPARTNERSHIP.—The copartnership heretofore existing between the undersigned, under the firm name of A. B. Stone & Co., doing business in the village of Charlevoix, Michigan, is hereby dissolved by mutual consent. The said firm will be continued by said A. B. Stone, who will pay all debts owing by the late firm, and receive all debts owing to the late firm. The said firm will be continued by said A. B. Stone, who will pay all debts owing by the late firm, and receive all debts owing to said firm in the usual manner. Dated Charlevoix, Mich., Nov. 26, A. D. 1883.

A. B. STONE,
HOWARD A. MASON.

NOTICE OF DISSOLUTION.—Notice of dissolution of partnership.—The firm of McGregor & Mason, dealers in boots and shoes, at Charlevoix, Michigan, has been dissolved, notice is hereby given that the business will be continued by the undersigned, who are authorized to receive all debts due the late firm, and pay all debts owing by the late firm. Dated Charlevoix, Michigan, November 1st, 1883.

HOWARD A. MASON.
HENRY W. COOK.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made by Charles Sidney Mills, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Lucius Lyon, of Detroit, Michigan, dated the 1st day of April, 1882, and recorded in the Register's office, in and for the county of Antrim, in liber 2 of mortgages, on page 19, the said mortgage having been duly assigned by said Lucius Lyon to the undersigned, by assignment bearing date the 1st day of April, 1882, and recorded in said Register's office in said county of Antrim, in said liber 2 of mortgages, on page 19, the said assignment having been duly executed by said Lucius Lyon, and the said mortgage being duly executed by said Charles Sidney Mills, and the said mortgage being given to secure the payment of the sum of $600 and interest, and no action or proceeding has been instituted to recover the said debt, or any part thereof, and the said mortgage has been foreclosed by notice, duly given, and the said mortgage has been foreclosed by notice, duly given, and the said mortgage has been foreclosed by notice, duly given

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, — MICHIGAN.

A CHINAMAN was arrested in Reno, Nev., for stealing a bucket of paste from a bill poster. When found the Celestial epicure was smacking his lips over a batch of pancakes made of the paste.

FROM recent disclosures the fact appears that of all the unconscionable sharpers and swindlers in this country the professional pension-agents and claim-agents at Washington, with stool-pigeons in other parts of the country, are the meanest and most thievish. The official authorities having at last become fully cognizant of the operations of these rascals, and how they have been robbing veterans of the late war and others by false pretenses, vigorous measures are being adopted for their suppression.

A RECENT cable dispatch announces that Mr. Lewis Cohen, of London, has been exempted from duty on a Coroner's jury because he is a lineal descendant of the High Priest Aaron. The Herald says that this will work a revolution in London legal proceedings; for, according to the orthodox Hebrew law, as interpreted by the old authorities, all Cohens—the word "cohen" meaning priest—are the descendants of the Levites, of whom Aaron was one, who have the right, in certain matters of ceremonial, before all others.

IN 1832 there were less than 600 clergy and 500 parishes in the eighteen Episcopal dioceses of the United States. The communicants numbered not more than 30,000. The report for this year shows forty-eight dioceses, 2,037 parishes, 3,572 clergymen and 372,484 communicants. In the interval the population of the United States has increased 400 per cent. The number of communicants of the Episcopal church, it will be observed, has increased over 1,200 per cent. The question then arises, Are we becoming Episcopalians?

MR. MIFFLIN E. BELL, of Des Moines, Iowa, the new Supervising Architect of the Treasury, is a native of Chester county, Pa., and is 36 years old. He studied architecture in Pennsylvania, and coming West took positions with A. H. Pajneard, of Chicago, soon rising to a foremanship. He had charge of the construction of the Illinois State house, at Springfield, the plans of that edifice and of the Iowa Capitol having been the work of Pajneard. Upon the death of Pajneard, in 1876, Mr. Bell succeeded to his business. Mr. Bell was the architect of the Southern Illinois penitentiary at Chester, and supervised its construction.

LOUISVILLE Courier-Journal: Said the Prince, on being introduced to Mary Anderson: "I understand your exposition at Louisville is a big thing." "You just ought to see it," said Mary. "I'm just burning to see how those chickens are hatched without any mamma," said the Prince. "Yes, but you'd be scared when you saw the man hold up the little alligator by the tail," said Mary. "You forgot how I hunted the tiger in India," said the Prince. "But an alligator is a good deal awfuler than a tiger," said Mary. Here Dr. Grippin, seeing that a dispute might arise, involving the peace of two friendly nations, adroitly put in and directed the talk into another channel.

THE pleasing notion that there is no such thing as slavery in England, remarks the London Truth, is rather rudely shaken by an extraordinary story which was told the other day in the Croydon Police court. A lodging-house keeper applied for a summons against one of the lodgers for systematically ill-treating a little negro boy, whose mamma she had often heard through the door. The boy had been purchased in Africa as a servant, and, when the lady remonstrated with her lodger for his cruelty, he replied: "Oh, he is only a colored child; and, besides, he belongs to my brother." The landlady's interference seems to have been visited on the little boy, who had his wrists tied together, and was hung up to a hook on the wall in the room.

In connection with the death of Gen. Steedman, who instituted the order of the Sons of Malta in Lafayette, Ind., the Courier, of that city, gives an incident which it claims terminated the career of that order in the country. George Harding, an employe of the wholesale grocery establishment of Reynolds, Earl & Hatcher, a brawny Scotchman, desired to become a member of the order, and the order was only too glad to "take him in." A night was set apart for his initiation, and, as he was a particularly powerful man, the gathering of the clans was unusually large. The initiation proceeded amid uproarious fun up to the elevated railway and a plunge into the seething waters of the lake. A wet blanket was in the hands of a dozen strong men, in which the aspirant was tossed about until they became exhausted. Harding was an intensely earnest man, and took the initiation to be a serious affair. Being told by the Grand Conductor that from the elevated railway he should be plunged into the lake, he had contracted his muscles and nerved himself for the battle with the waves. When he struck the blanket the shock was too great for his nerves. He was taken to his home a paralytic. He lived a year, suffering intensely, and died in great agony. The order paid out over $2,000 in his behalf. All that medical skill could do was done, but to no purpose. He was a nobleman, and bore his sufferings like a hero or a martyr. He never once complained or spoke hardsily of those who caused it all. His sufferings and death were the death-knell to the Sons of Malta, not only in Lafayette, but throughout America.

"ONLY eighteen years ago that the rebellion closed," said an old army officer to a Washington correspondent recently, "but the Generals of the war are fast going out of sight." Then he went on to say: "Meade, Thomas, Hooker, Garfield, Kilpatrick, Burnside and Halleck are dead. The next few years will see that list lengthened. Grant is well on toward 70. He comes to Washington often, and walks quietly about the streets, with his cigar in his mouth, better dressed than when he was President, and looks as if life agreed with him. Sherman is 64, and looks older, but the fire of his mind and he is likely to see 1900. The youngest of all the great leaders is Sheridan, now in command of the army, and he is but 51. Sheridan was a Major General at 30. Fitz John Porter appears here every winter, white-haired and broken in frame—a little old gentleman, who looks back on twenty years of disgrace. He did command, McClellan, was a round man, with bending shoulders, has not gained much of late. He is rich, and entertains well in his New York city home, but the activity of his life is over. He likes to tell or his campaigns. Pleasonton, the hero of a hundred cavalry fights, lives quietly here, and can be found any day reading newspapers in one of the offices on Newspaper row. His hair and mustache are white, and his voice as gentle as a woman's. You can say the same of Rosecrans, the idol of the Army of the Cumberland. He and his wife live, almost unnoticed, on Capitol hill during the time he spends here performing his duties as a California Congressman. His complexion is like a youth's, and his hair, with a military cut, white as snow. McDowell is on the retired list; Dan Carlos Buell runs an iron furnace in Kentucky; Banks is a United States Marshal; Hancock, Schofield and Pope are still Major Generals, but the last of them will retire in three years. In ten years there will not be a General officer of the war in active life."

A Bat Can See with its Wings.

There is a singular property with which the bat is endowed too remarkable and curious to be passed altogether unnoticed. The wings of these creatures consist of a delicate and nearly naked membrane of great size considering the size of the body; but, besides this, the nose is, in some varieties, furnished with a membraneous foliation, and in others the external membraneous ears are greatly developed. These membraneous frames have their sensibility so high that something like a new sense is thereby developed, as it is said of the sense of sight. The modified impressions which the air in quiescence or in motion, however slight, communicates the tremulous jar of its current, its temperature, the indescribable conditions of such portions of air as are in contact with different bodies are all apparently appreciated by the bat. If the eyes of a bat be covered up, or if he be cruelly deprived of sight, it will pursue its course about a room with a thousand obstacles in its way, avoiding them all, without coming against a wall or touching the smallest thing, but threading its way with the utmost precision and quickness, and passing adroitly through apertures or interspaces or threads placed purposely across the apartment. This endowment, which almost exceeds belief, has been abundantly demonstrated. —Forest and Stream.

THE cotton plant takes its name from the Arabic lattonl, by which it was known to the Arabs centuries ago.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

The Sweetest Thing in Print.

"The song you quote is fine," said Hose,
"To like you I stood. Yed thing,
As much the spreading trees they walked,
Has ever summer day.
"Blest as the immortals," the sun's first rays
Had fine language to say;
I saw the very sweetest thing
I ever saw in print.

"Was it in verse or prose?" asked Tod;
"Have you brought it with you?"
"I wish I had," said Hose, "but that same
I had no right to do.
"Twas poetry so lovely that
I wrote it down in haste at dine,"
Hose sighed. "By far the sweetest thing
I ever saw in print.

"Dare give me some idea of it?"
His mamma begged. "Well, I'll try,
He said we gondolas and its song
As blue as yonder sky.
It seemed a gem of a gallon,
And never was a sweeter thing,
I wish, never to relish."
—Harper's Bazar.

How to Be Beautiful.

Whatever the internal application of hot water may effect, girls desirous of having a good complexion should be well up in it to their faces. They should either dip their faces into a basin of very hot water or apply the water with a sponge. At first they are like lobsters, but in a few minutes this is replaced by a tint of lilies and peaches.

Positions and Wages.

The Puritans of New England had their own way of testifying how much thought of the female sex. If a man and a woman were convicted of a capital crime, they hanged the man and burnt the woman. Mr. Bonner's Ledger recalls the last instance of this discrimination. It occurred in 1775, at Cambridge, when two servants were executed for poisoning their master. They were drawn on a sled to the place of execution, and Mark, a negro of about 20, was hanged, and Phyllis, an old creature, was burnt to death.—Philadelphia Press.

Women in Journalism.

The nature of the work to be done is not changed by the fact that it is a woman that undertakes it. It may be done better, more delicately, more attractively, more honestly, but it is the same work, and requires the same qualities, whether the worker be man or a woman. There are, indeed, some special branches of labor upon a newspaper, such as relate to the dress of women, to needle and other work of the kind, with which women are naturally more familiar than men, and women will therefore treat them more satisfactorily and intelligently. But "a woman's duty upon a newspaper" is substantially the same with that of a man.—Harper's Magazine.

What a Woman Has Developed.

A MRS. Chapman, of New York city, has created a small industry on a large scale for women. She began by making the large collars for children out of two braids, the ordinary "fashion edge" and "rick-rack" connected together, or added in forming a design, to be made, as, executed with crochet needle and knitting cotton. The demand became so great that her own hands were unable to supply it, and she began to employ other women and give instructions in the art, which is not difficult.

It was four years ago. Mrs. Chapman has now 700 women on her books living in different parts of this and other States, many on Long Island and New Jersey. They are mainly married, and do the work at home, and as a help, or in order to have some "money of their" Very own." Some few ladies come in carriages to get their work, which, of course, is not very remunerative, but is a kind that can be taken up readily and does not require much skill. The pecuniary result of ten hours' work amounts to almost nothing. The articles includes collars, cuffs, collarettes, dress caps, lace covers for the toilet and the like, and, in addition to these, coverlids, curtains, shams, and other things indefinitely. Seventy-five thousand collars were supplied last year by the wholesale house that takes all of Mrs. Chapman's productions.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Shopping in Paris and London.

English hosiery and underwear are far superior to the French, and are far less expensive. The same may be said of tailor-made suits for ladies, cloth jackets, quilted satin underskirts, and other articles of feminine apparel. In fact, except in the way of very handsome dresses, bonnets, gloves, shoes and under-linen, a lady can do her shopping cheaper, and be her greater satisfaction, in London than in Paris. Parisian prices have, in fact, been rising steadily ever since my arrival two ten years ago. In 1871 you could have a dress made well and stylishly for $10. Ready-made dresses could be purchased for from $5 to $10, and bonnets for from $10 to $15 each. A tasteful but stylish bonnet could be procured for from $8 to $15. Everything we so kind now costs half as much again at the very least. Rents, carriage hire, food and wages have risen in a similar proportion. Paris is now a far more expensive city to live in than is London, so far as the actual prices of articles go concerned. The tax-gathering system in Paris alone keeps down household expenses within any reasonable limit. London housekeeping is that of America, is rendered burdensome and costly by the necessity of having an entire house for lodging each family, and by the contingent necessity of having an army of servants to keep the house in order. Gloves, the cab system, and the wonderfully cheap things to be had in Paris. American buyers tell me also that the Parisian manufacturers have lost much of their originality and enterprise. The copyplant is that they have no appetite to offer. They fall back on old models and old designs, particularly in the matter of porcelains, and suffer England to go ahead of them in that exquisite branch of artistic industry. Except in the matter of pictures France is being rapidly distanced in the competition of the nations. In that branch as yet she stands unrivaled. The great French artists are still the greatest painters in the world.—Lucy Hooper's Paris Letter.

Burmese Women.

The Burmese women are noted for their well-proportioned, though small, figures. To one accustomed to seeing the regular features so prevalent among the many pretty Indian girls, the Mongol-like features of their Burmese sisters look ugly and coarse, but after a while this impression wears off; the women of the country have many pretty little ways, and they are very clean. Their hands and feet are small and well-shaped, ears symmetrical, the head well put on to the neck; their carriage is erect; their hair is most luxuriant, and is taken the greatest care of, tied up a la chinoise, with a wreath or garland of flowers entwined; they disfigure their ears, which are naturally small and pretty, by being huge holes in the lobes, and wear in them either gold or amber cylindrical-shaped ear-rings; they cover themselves over with necklets, bracelets, rings, etc., and the quantities of gold and silverware are nearly as good as those in a Hindoo Trichinopoly or Delhi.

A Burmese girl who wishes to kiss presses her nose up against a face and sniffs. She is a born coquette, and spends hours in adorning her person. Their dress consists of a tight underjacket to support the bust, and a loose and flowing jacket over for show; a gauzy scarf hangs down over the shoulders; from the waist they wear either a many-colored thamine, which exposes the inside of one leg half way up the thigh, or a "lounghi," a sort of petticoat, fastened round the waist and reaching to any part of the person. All the women smoke and chew betel nut, but have nice, white, even teeth; they can swim, as a rule, and delight in sailing in water, and invariably bathe once, perhaps oftener, during the day.

The Burmese seldom have more than one wife, and she reigns supreme in the house and conducts the purchase and sale of all necessaries. A girl's great ambition is to keep a shop in a bazaar; it is her introduction into society, and the equivalent to our girls being brought out. The women are, as a rule, either read or write, for their priests are not allowed to teach them. A few have been educated by well-meaning missionaries, but shrink from coming in contact with native children, or some other reason, these girls too often are not so well versed in such as their more ignorant sisters.

Every Burmese girl is a born actress, and delights in taking part in a play, or national drama. There is no stigma attached to women who take part in these performances, as there is to dancing girls in India, and they are invariably well-conducted, modest girls. They have some curious customs, such as throwing pots of water over one another and everyone they meet on their New Year's day, which corresponds, I think, with our 1st of April; what this is typical of I have not learnt, but the custom is universal. Like the men, the women are extreme gamblers; at a boat or a play men, the men and women let together freely, and often a girl, after losing all she possesses, will stake herself against what she considers her liberty, and if she loses she follows the winner and becomes his wife or concubine, for the two are nearly synonymous in Burmah.

In the slightest provocation a woman will commit suicide, generally by means of opium, which can be purchased without restriction in every bazaar.

America's Richest Church.

The annual reports of Trinity affairs contain no explicit information as to its income, further than that about $80,000 is raised by pew rentals and collections. The vestry will not permit the publication of the facts as to the real estate. I asked the rector, Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, if he would personally give them to me.

"If we were to set up that graveyard into building lots," he answered, pointing out of the window at the crowding old stones of its yard that surround Trinity, "and do the same to St. Paul's burial ground, we might get together an income somewhere near what people suppose it to be. The prevailing idea on the subject are wild. We shall not undertake to correct them."

"But about what is the income?" I insisted. "And why is it done with it?"

"Half a million dollars.

"We entirely maintain seven churches, paying the salaries of the clergymen, seven organists, twelve sextons, over 100 singers, six free parish schools, with eighteen teachers, two medical dispensaries; a system of charities in each of our parishes and we contribute, besides, to a large number of deserving institutions.

I have no doubt that the revenue of Trinity is expended in religion and charity to a proportionately degree, and that the amount absorbed to sinecures is much smaller than in the houses, by their imperturbability, lead carpets to state it.—New York letter.

ACCORDING to the Bowling Green Gleaner, the boss tin stole his girl from an upper story window with the aid of a ladder belonging to a hook and ladder company.

THE GREAT ARMY OF WORKERS.

Different Occupations of Americans, and the Number Engaged in Each.

The following list shows the principal occupations in which the American people are engaged. It is compiled from the last census report, and may be accepted as correct:

In Agriculture.
Farmers and planters	4,225,309
Agricultural laborers	7,053,837
Dairymen and dairywomen	9,563
Gardeners, nurserymen and vine-growers	35,029
Stock-drivers	2,946
Stock-herders	5,206
Graziers	2,733
Florists	16,693
All others	4,449
Total in agriculture	7,546,481
In Manufacturing and Mining.
Boot and shoemakers	174,575
Butchers	79,265
Cabinetmakers	36,235
Carpenters and joiners	428,659
Carriage and wagon makers	101,135
Cooperages	16,003
Cotton mill operatives	172,267
Engineers and firemen	194,775
Foundrymen and molders	61,461
Glassworks operatives	21,326
Gunsmiths and locksmiths	7,036
Iron and steel operatives	115,369
Leather makers, tanners, etc	115,135
Lumbermen and raftsmen	179,041
Manufacturers	38,664
Machinists	51,076
Machine and saw makers	19,781
Millers, grain and stone	179,537
Mill operatives, not specified	149,652
Miners	181,239
Millinery, dressmakers and seamstresses	506,402
Molders	38,488
Painters and varnishers	176,205
Paper-mill operatives	28,356
Plasterers	37,000
Plumbers and gas-fitters	46,961
Printers, bookbinders, etc	170,135
Rubber works	12,728
Saw and planing-mill operatives	79,000
Shipwrights, calkers, riggers and ship-builders	17,421
Stone cutters	38,276
Tailors and tailoresses	68,765
Tobacco factory workers	37,000
Wheelwrights	37,441
Woolen mill operatives	64,302
All others in mines and factories	49,088
Total	3,837,152
In Trade and Transportation.
Bankers and brokers	14,448
Drawers, bookkeepers and tellers	47,000
Commercial travelers, not clerks	35,000
Clerks (not) officials and employes	207,000
Draymen, teamsters and express men	72,000
Hostlers	39,000
Keepers of boarding-houses, hotels	60,461
Keepers of saloons and liquor shops	51,000
Keepers of restaurants and eating-houses	19,000
Keepers of gambling-houses	1,000
Keepers of pool and billiard rooms	15,000
Longshoremen, stevedores, etc	35,000
Pilots	4,000
Sailors and boatmen	41,000
Telegraph and telephone operators	13,000
Telegraph messengers	11,000
Officials of Federal and State governments	37,000
Officials of Federal and State governments, not specified	37,000
Peddlers	35,000
Porters and messengers	49,000
Railway officials and employes	194,000
Teachers and professors	112,000
Other occupations	1,576,576
Total in professions and trades	2,806,037
Total in Federal and State service	64,000
Total in trade and transportation	1,096,000
Total in agriculture	7,546,481
Total in manufacturing and mining	3,837,152
Total in professions and trades	2,806,037
Total in Federal and State service	64,000
Total population	17,392,099

The total number of persons in the United States reported as employed is 17,392,099, of a population of 50,155,783, out of a total population of 50,155,783, being 34.68 per cent. of the population of all ages, and 47.31 per cent. of the population over 16 years of age. Of these 14,744,042 were males and 2,647,157 were females. Of the total population 25,517,926 were between 10 and 15 years of age, and of the females, 256,169.

A Considerate Conductor.

"How did Dunbar get his leg broken?" answered the railroad official. "Why, in this way: I was conductor of a morning passenger express, and one day, as we were coming down by Dunbar's junction, we struck a misplaced switch and ran into a freight train that was standing on the siding. As we were running about 30 miles an hour, of course it piled things up a good deal. Our engine was smashed all to pieces, the 'smoker' telescoped half way into the forward passenger coach ran up the hill and rolled over. I was standing on the platform at the time the thing happened, and, finally, was slung off about thirty feet I came the track. When I picked myself up everything was confusion, the air was filled with clouds of escaping steam, and about fifty passengers were somewhere in the wreck. Of course, it was what you might call an 'emergency,' but there's no such word as that in the company's dictionary. I had two orders and knew what to do. The roof of the smoking-car by my nose, and I heard a man crying out from underneath it. After about ten minutes work, I got the stuff all cleared away and reached him. He was very weak and groaning. 'Oh, mister,' he said, 'this timber presses on me so, I can't move. Both my legs are broken below the knee.' 'Think you'll be here long?' I asked him. He said, 'Oh, yes,' he moaned. 'Then I'll need a stopover check, sure,' I said, and I made out a pasteboard and gave it to him. Young man,' he said, 'I'm hardly worth a man's while to go after it—it's such hard work to get anything.' As regards the brakeman, which were so plenty a few years ago, all accounts agree that they have been virtually exterminated—fact which exasperates the Indian tribes against the pale-faced sportsmen, who shoot the animals wantonly, as he fingered his latter watch-chains—I believe in the old saying, that the company has rights which the public is bound to respect and rules which they must conform to."—Life.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, — MICHIGAN.

FURTHER evidence of the prodigious of Dakota soil is found in the person of a Health county man, who has seven fingers on each hand, the three additional digits growing out of each hand, and each being perfect and under control of the muscles.

THE very long catalogue of ills that flesh is heir to, an English doctor has added a new disease which he calls "grass fever," and which he says is developed by the severe strain which boys and girls undergo in competitive examinations. The Social congress, before which the statement was made, has resolved to memorialize the Government to make steps against its extension.

THE September report of the English Commissioners of Inland Revenue shows that in England during the year ending 1st March, the revenue from excise duties on spirits reached £62,236, and was yielded by 24,570 gallons, and that the quantity of spirits distilled from wheat was an increase of 3,667 gallons; thus the net decrease for the United Kingdom was 35,837 gallons. The Commissioners remark: "Time cannot be any doubt that in spite of the spread of temperance principles has already caused a marked diminution in the consumption of intoxicating liquors, and the tendency is still increasing. On the other hand it is remarkable to find in Ireland, spite of a decrease of population, an increased consumption of 245,[illegible] of spirits." The aggregates of the votes upon the several constitutional amendments pending in the late election in Ohio are as follows:

Same majorities for	[illegible]
Majorities against	[illegible]
Majorities in favor of liquor traffic	[illegible]
Majorities against liquor traffic	[illegible]
Majorities in favor of taxation	[illegible]
Majorities against taxation	[illegible]
Majorities in favor of liquor traffic and taxation	[illegible]
Majorities against liquor traffic and taxation	[illegible]
Majorities in favor of liquor traffic and against taxation	[illegible]
Majorities against liquor traffic and in favor of taxation	[illegible]

The total number of votes cast on the prohibition amendment was 367,187, of which 182,667 voters cared sufficient about it to cast a vote against the proposed amendment, and 184,520 who were voted against legislative regulation of the traffic. Of the votes cast for and against it, the prohibitionists secured a majority of 1,853. It was the 210,703 voters who did not express most the question at all who made prohibition. These figures will afford food for many years to come, if properly digested, many of many minds, or to speak.

Judge Sanders, of Ledyard Center, O., died recently, owning $40,000 in land and half the swamp land and brush land in Ashtabula county. He was a bachelor, and his habits were so peculiar that nobody knew much about him except that he was a hard-fisted miser. The strange habits of his life were carried into his dress, which was made of the coarsest and most ill-fitting material, and was patched with pieces of all colors and patterns. He was a regular hermit, and lived in a hut in the woods, and was seldom seen by his neighbors. He was a bachelor, and his nearest relatives are a family of poor people who live in Ohio. The old man was a miser

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STEANG,

CHARLEVOIX, — MICHIGAN.

Forty-Eighth Congress.

The forty-eighth congress met on Monday. The chief interest centered in the organization of the house of representatives, which was completed with the usual ceremonies. The clerk reported 303 members present. Mr. Geddes nominated Mr. Carlisle for speaker, and Mr. Cannon nominated Mr. Keifer. Mr. Carlisle received 121 votes and Mr. Keifer 112. Mr. Carlisle got the votes of 72 southern and southwestern members, 39 northwestern members, and one eastern member. Those represent, with the exception of the latter, the great agricultural constituencies who are taxed by the tariff to pay indirect subsidies to the monopolists of Pennsylvania and New England, who desire that an effort shall be made to remedy that infamous system of oppression, and who elected their members for that express purpose. Only five republicans voted against Keifer. The clerk declared Mr. Carlisle elected, and the new speaker was sworn in by Mr. Kelley: the oldest member. Upon taking the chair Mr. Carlisle said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES: I thank you sincerely for the high honor conferred upon me by the vote just taken. To be chosen from the membership of a body like this to preside over its deliberations is a distinction upon which any citizen may properly congratulate himself, and I assure you your kindness is fully appreciated. At the same time I realize the fact that the position which you have assigned me is one of very great labor and responsibility, and, while profoundly grateful for this manifestation of your confidence, I shall enter into the discharge of its duties with a serious distrust of my capacity to meet in an acceptable manner the requirements of the office. I promise, however, to devote to your service all the zeal and ability with which I am possessed.

Gentlemen, the maintenance of order on the floor is absolutely essential to an intelligent and systematic transaction of the public business, and I earnestly invoke your assistance in the enforcement of the rules adopted to govern our proceedings. The large addition to the membership of the house, resulting from the late apportionment, makes this duty even more difficult than before, and without your cordial co-operation and support I cannot reasonably hope even to discharge the ordinary duties of this office. That you will cheerfully co-operate with me in every proper effort to preserve order and facilitate the business of legislation I have no doubt. But, gentlemen, I shall ask something more than mere co-operation in the discharge of my duty. Assuring you of my earnest desire to be at all times just and impartial, still I cannot expect to avoid mistakes, and shall be compelled, therefore, frequently to rely on your friendly forbearance, gentlemen, on both sides of the house.

I am sure, gentlemen, that all matters of legislation presented to this congress will receive from you such careful consideration as the magnitude of their character and the interests involved require, and that your action upon them will be wise, conservative, and patriotic. Sudden and radical changes in the laws and regulations affecting the commercial and industrial interests of the people ought never to be made unless imperatively demanded by some public emergency, and, in my opinion, under the existing circumstances, such changes would not be favorably received by any considerable number of those who have given serious attention to that subject. [Applause.] Many reforms undoubtedly are necessary, and it will be your duty, after a careful examination of the whole subject in all its bearings, to decide how far they should extend, and when and in what manner they should be made. [Applause.] If there be any who fear your action on this or any other subject will actually be injurious to any interest, or even afford reasonable cause for alarm, I am quite sure they will be agreeably disappointed.

Without further business the house adjourned.

The senate was called to order by president pro tem Edmunds, and after administering the oath to the new senators, Messrs. Beck, Bowen, Coffinburn, Dolph, Ferry, Pike, and Palmer, the senate adjourned.

The president's message was not read until Tuesday, the full text of which we hope to give in a future issue.

The Jackson Patriot, which has for the last year or more done excellent missionary work in the cause of economic freedom, has the following showing how, in the glass industry at least, protection does not protect the glass-workman: "The manufacturers of glass at Pittsburg, Penn., having locked the workmen out of their factories, are importing glass from Europe to fill orders from their customers. They are doing this, and paying about 50 per cent duty on the imported glass, rather than pay the wages to their workmen which they claimed, only a few months ago, the tariff would enable them to pay. While this is going on some 3,000 workmen in Pittsburg alone are lying idle, and the consumers of glass are paying 50 per cent, more than they would have to pay if there was no tariff. The workmen are out of employment and wages, the consumers are paying an exorbitant price for glass, and the manufacturers are making money by importing and selling foreign goods. What a blessed fraud protection is! How charmingly it protects American industry! Idle workmen, manufacturers selling foreign glass at a profit, and the users of window glass compelled to pay 50 per cent more than it is worth—that is the way swindling tariff works!"

A Prophecy Which Failed.

During the campaign of 1880 workingmen were assured that the then prosperous condition of the country was due to our protective tariff. The workingmen were told that a high tariff insured high wages and constant employment, and thousands of them believed it.

They seemed to forget that the severest and most protracted commercial depression in our history occurred between the years of 1873 1879, although we had an extremely high tariff during all those terrible years, when the country was filled with tramps and paupers.

After a short season of activity, business is again depressed, mills, mines and factories are closing everywhere and throwing thousands of men out of employment, and many of those who are fortunate enough to retain their places have to submit to a reduction of their wages.

With the aid of the workingmen's votes the protectionists elected the president and a majority of the house in 1880, and they still have a majority in the senate. The protectionists claim to have the control of the legislation of the country, and, instead of the constant employment and high wages that the workingmen were to have as a reward for retaining the protectionists in power, thousands of them have neither work nor wages, and the number of the unemployed is becoming larger every day.

Falsehood can never endure the test of time, and it has taken a very short time to disprove the protectionist falsehood that a protective tariff insures high wages and constant employment to workingmen.—Evening News.

Speaker Carlisle.

The caucus of democratic members of the house of representatives on Saturday fulfilled the expectations of the country in the selection of John G. Carlisle as its candidate for speaker. The great strength of Mr. Carlisle and of the principles of which he is such an able and conspicuous advocate were shown by the handsome vote by which he was chosen against such a strong candidate as Mr. Randall and as popular a representative as Mr. Cox.

Mr. Carlisle's nomination, which was subsequently made unanimous, is equivalent to an election, and on Monday he will be duly chosen to the important and responsible position of speaker of the house of representatives of the forty-eighth congress—a position which, it is safe to say, he will fill with credit to himself, with honor to the house and country, and to the great satisfaction of the democracy.

Mr. Carlisle is now in his 49th year, having been born in Kentucky, September 5, 1835. He was admitted to the bar in 1858, was a member of the state house of representatives in 1859-61, and a member of the state senate in 1866, and was re-elected in 1869. He was elected lieutenant governor of Kentucky in 1871, serving until 1875. He was successively elected to the forty-fifth, forty-sixth, forty-seventh, and forty-eighth congresses, and has been recognized as one of the ablest members of the house of representatives.—Free Press.

The Spankorship.

The Grand Rapids Democrat congratulates a large majority of the republican party upon the result of the contest for speaker. The politicians of the party will not be pleased, but men who respect honor, official obligations and the national good name, will welcome the contest between a Keifer and a Carlisle. It presents to honest republicans who have been humiliated by the vicious and corrupt courses of their leaders an assurance that men of real worth and dignity of character are coming to the front, with whom they can ally themselves with self-respect and a proper regard for the national honor. The democrats presented three candidates for speaker, and each had a record so clear and honorable that suspicion can find no spot. The speeches of the defeated candidates upon the nomination of Mr. Carlisle are a pledge for harmony of action. They were faultless in taste and excellent in temper. With Carlisle in the chair and such men as Randall, Holman, Cox, Morrison, and other honest and skilled legislators on the floor, the country may, with just confidence expect from the house at Washington this winter proofs of statesmanship. There will be no mistakes made.

So rare an exhibition may reasonably in a large number of voters, a moral sense which has for years been buried under the debauchment of Grantism and Ionsism.

Origin of Names of the Fabrics.

Everything connected with one's business is of importance. Very few drygoods men know the origin of the names of many of the goods they handle. They may seem trivial points, but they are of interest to the man who seeks to be thoroughly familiar with the merchandise in which he deals. For the information of such we give the derivation of the names of the following goods: Damask is from the city of Damascus; satins from Zaytown in China, called from Calicut, a town in India, formerly celebrated for its cotton cloth, and where calico was also printed. Muslin is named from Mosul in Asia. Alpaca, from an animal of Peru, of the llama species, from whose wool the fabric is woven. Buckrams take its name from Bocharas; fustian comes from Fostat, a city of the middle ages, from which the modern Cairo is descended. Taffeta and tabby come from a street in Bagdad, called from Caliphs. Gauze is the name from Gaza; lutes from Bajac; shalloy from Bamietta, and jean from Jean. Dragget is derived from a city in Ireland, Drogheda. Duck comes from Torquin, in Normandy. Blanket is called after Thomas Blanket, a famous clothier connected with the introduction of woolens into England about 1340. Serge derives its name from Nerga, a Spanish name for a peculiar woolen blanket. Diaper is not from Ypres, as is sometimes stated, but from the Greek diasporos, figured. Velvet is from the Italian vellata, soft (Latin, vellus—a hide or pelt). Shawl is the Sanscrit sale, floor, for shawls were first used as carpets and tapestry. Bandanna is from an Indian word, signifying to bind or tie, because they are tied in knots before dyeing. Chintz comes from the Hindoo word chint, the same is the French "cut wool."—Trade Journal.

One Life Saved Thirty Times.

"Sanford" has the reputation of being the greatest life-saver in Harlem. His breast is decorated with innumerable medals. On Sunday Sanford very seldom has money, and on the idea of assuming a life saver took possession of him. He saves very easily, practicing to perform the work efficiently and well. He takes to the Harlem Bridge with him a street gamin, who waits till the draw opens, and then, before the horrified crowd can realize it, tipples from the bridge into the river.

Sanford is on hand, quick as flash the gamin is off, and he plunges, amid solemn silence, down into the river. The street Arabs who assist him in the business is an expert swimmer, and soon his lady leans on the surface. Sanford approaches. The body sinks. Down goes Sanford, and after half a dozen excellent dives the body is brought safely to land and the street gamin is revived. Then the horrified crowd again, somewhat more dressed than the diver, opens his purse for Sanford and magnanimously hands out with ten dollars. Sanford has made hundreds of dollars at the business and wears thirty-seven medals. He has saved one life thirty times.—N. Y. World.

—An acre of sweet corn for feeding to swine will afford a good return in pork fully equal in money value to any one to which the corn could have been applied. They are very fond of the stalks as well as the ears of corn, and will eat all up clean. If given to hogs fed upon corn principally, it serves to give them a relish for their other food, improves their healthfulness and increases their flesh. When hogs have been kept at pasture on clover sweet corn may be used to follow the clover, as they will eat enough of it to make room for more fattening.—N. Y. Herald.

Hayes.

Sleighing once more, and everybody taking advantage of it.

Some of the farmers are busy getting out logs.

Alex. Ross, Esq., is erecting an addition to his barn, to be used for stabling purposes.

Hayes township has another store. This township board meet next Saturday to settle the township affairs.

Benj. Walker died last Saturday, of inflammation of the lungs.

E. H. Burgess's mill dam came very near going out, last Thursday morning. He is now repairing it, and will soon have it in working order.

Hayes township is still attractive to John M. Harris of Charlevoix.

The schools of this township are now in operation, except one. We think they will have a lively time as they are each supplied with a Chase. What will be the result?

Mr. A. H. Struthers' brother-in-law, Mr. Snyder, of Canada, who has been here several weeks, expects to locate in this township.

Bear Creek is found that Hayes shall have some roads anyhow. At the "bee" last Wednesday in the eastern part of the township, there were several men and teams from Bear Creek, and Evangeline. Hayes was represented by Messers. Stauffer and Fish; Mr. Stauffer says, Hayes raised one more man who came to the "bee" but he left disgusted without giving them any assistance. Zeke.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by URBANE BROS., real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Dec. 4, 1883, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

A. H. Upright et al. to Julia E. Meech, lots 29, 30, and 31, of Upright's add to Charlevoix, $1,000.

A. H. Upright et al. to Isabella Wilson, lot 15, of Upright's add to Charlevoix, $100.

A. H. Upright et al. to Henry Cunningham, lot 28, of Upright's add to Charlevoix, $100.

A. H. Upright et al. to W. D. Thompson, lot 16, of Upright's add to Charlevoix, $100.

George Keys to John A. Taylor, 80 acres of land in Andrew Nowland to Albert Nowland, lot 31, of Ironton.

John C. Lelet to John A. Hurd, s e ¼ of s w ¼, section 6, 37m.

Peronnett J. Belknap to Geo. H. Herald, 80 acres, 34m5, 8w7.

Louis A. Green to Frank and Harry Newman, lot 4, block 2, village.

Geo. Rainey to Ellen F. Rainey, lot 4, blk. A, South Arbor.

Curries.

Rabus seemed to fancy that I, as a zoologist, must take an equal interest in every class of animal life, and that therefore, their application to the uses and purpose of curry must be an important subject to me. So, if on Monday the vertebrates were represented by some dishes made of my curry, on Tuesday this was replaced by mollusks, prawns and shrimps, or by small crabs. Wednesday cuttle-fish (sepia or bolgno) would appear, the most highly organized of the mollusca; while on Thursday we could scarcely tell whether some edible mussel or even to baked oysters. On Friday the worthy race of radiata were represented by starfish or echinodermata, the eggs of the sea urchin, or the pedunculate tentacles of a holothuria, (sea-pig.) On Saturday I fully expected to have come down to the zoophytes, and to find medusae or corals, sponges or actinize in my bowl of curry. My cook, however, clinging to an antiquated system, evidently regarded zoophytes as plants, and supplied their place with some winged creature—bats or birds, or sometimes the body bodies of a horned beetle or moth. On Sundays, of course, he had himself out to give me some special treat, and my curry was of the best, containing a fowl or a fat goose, occasionally even a snake, which I at first mistook for an eel. Rabus was evidently convinced of the close affinities of birds with reptiles, and thought it made no difference whether he sent the curried or the more coarse type of sauropsis to table. Happily for my European prejudices, I was gradually initiated into the mongrel mysteries of curry, and commonly knew nothing of its constituents till after I had swallowed it in blind resignation. Besides, the thick sauce in which they were disguised contained such a mixture of spices, with particles of onion, fruit and leaves, that nothing short of anatomical analysis would have revealed the nature of the first elements, and this I carefully avoided.—A Visit to Ceylon, Haeckel.

—The Chinese are so superstitious in regard to death that they seldom mention the word itself, but substitute "having become immortal," or a similar expression.

Hiem, blow your brass,
We've not the slightest fears,
You cannot beat the "Outfitter,"
You blow a thousand years!

For Sale by L. D. BARTHOLOMEW.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meats

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

MISS L. SPAULDING

Fashionable

Milliner and Dressmaker,

Dealer in

Ladies' Furnishing Goods,

Fancy Goods, &c.

HAIR WORK, STAMPING, AND DRESS MAKING DONE IN THE BEST STYLE.

Mrs. M. DePue, Milliner.

NEW GOODS IN ALL LINES.

Two doors south of postoffice.

LIVERY

The undersigned has purchased the livery formerly owned by him, and installed

Geo. Durance, Manager.

There has been added a new stock of

Horses and Carriages

And a cordial invitation is extended to all friends and patrons to call and see him whenever they need anything in that line.

GOOD SADDLE HORSES A SPECIALTY WITH THE STABLE.

J. MILO EATON.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds

Imported and Domestic Perfumery.

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see. We will use you well. Our store is in Barlow's new

Opera Block

Joseph Hyland,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

Boiler Maker

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY

Heavy blacksmithing of all kinds, and repairing of boilers promptly attended to.

THE JOURNAL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH., DEC. 6, 1883.

Local Business Notices.

A new invoice of shelf hardware at L. D. Bartholomew's.

For Sale Cheap.—Dry maple body wood from 16 inches to four feet in length. Apply to H. S. HAMEN.

Everybody in the county must know that Upright, Emery & Co. are ahead on Rubber goods, Felts, Sackings, Oils, Kerseys, Fur Caps, and everything in the line of winter wear.

Those who desire to bring us wood as subscription will confer a favor by bringing it now.

New skates, snow shovels, and cutters at L. D. Bartholomew's.

CHRISTMAS! CHRISTMAS! Christmas! Upright, Emery & Co. are leading the town in Xmas Goods. You full cases to be opened next week. Call early to avoid the rush.

Advertise the town by circulating the Journal when there and envelopes at O. B. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

Don't forget holiday goods at L. D. Bartholomew's.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

300 cords of good dry birch and maple block wood for sale. Good measure guaranteed. Call at the office of

J. MILO EATON.

Three hundred tons of ground feed, coarse and fine meal, corn, oats, bran, and mid dlings, at Upright, Emery & Co.'s warehouse, in their salesroom you will find crackers, lemons, warm mittens, and a complete line of dry goods and groceries.

Buy your paper and envelopes right, at O. B. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

The Charlevoix Rough and Ready Fire Company meet the first and third Thursday evenings of each month, and Upright & Emery's hall.

H. F. BARNES, Secretary.

News Brevities.

More measles.

Local news on eighth page.

Mrs. L. D. Bartholomew expects to return home on Friday.

Mr. H. W. Beach, of Atwood, made us a short call on Tuesday.

The freaman's dance last Thursday evening was a pleasant affair.

The Nellie Booth is out at Washburn's ship yard for the winter.

The Congregational society are to have a Christmas tree and concert.

Bright warm sunshine on Monday, and rain on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Postmaster Gray has not yet call it the "Toledo, Ann Arbor & Charlevoix Railroad."

The pastor of the M. E. church will begin a series of apocalyptic sermons on Sunday morning, Dec. 16th.

A practical sailor with some cash can strike a good thing at Charlevoix. They want a grist mill there.—Evening News.

Master Forest Bartholomew has been very sick with spinal meningitis, but is improving, and will doubtless soon recover.

The school house was crowded last Sunday evening to hear Rev. C. F. VanAuken's discourse on "the unpardonable sin."

Mattie Lewis and Charlie Sue took the Lawrence yesterday, with the intention of attending the normal school at Valparaiso, Ind.

The Lawrence was in yesterday for the last time this season. The Chamblain is expected once more before she lays up for winter.

W. F. Lance writes us from Elsie that there is no snow there. He says work is progressing on the Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad.

The Northwest Farmer for December is out on time, and as usual contains many good things which we hope to use in the future.

Mr. Benj. Walker, an Indian local preacher of some influence, died at his home in Hayes township last Saturday, and was buried on Tuesday.

The church bells are to be rung by standard time hereafter, about 20 minutes slower than our meridian time. Regulate your clocks accordingly.

The Continental Vocalists advertised for to-night, will not appear for reasons beyond the control of the management, but will come at any day you a date later on.

The wrecking tug S. S. Cox, from Milwaukee, is here to remove the wreck of the Parsons at the mouth of the channel. On Wednesday she received some slight repairs at Hyland's boiler works.

John Connor & Co. have a fine display of boots and shoes at their store opposite the Bridge street house. These ladies' fine shoes are from the best manufacturing houses, and can be bought cheap.

The Wright is out for repairs at Washburn's ship yard, for damage received while trying to get through the ice up the Arm. She will receive a partial covering of iron, and will thus be enabled to run later in the season than any other. When she finally lays up for winter she will be thoroughly repaired and fitted up for next year's business.

It has been intimated to the JOURNAL that there are numerous whispers and plannings for the benefit of the children of the M. E. Sunday school. If this be so, the little folks may look out for a grand good time.

The last number of The Veteran contains a 24-page supplement, giving the proceeding of the reunion of the second Michigan infantry at Lansing, Oct. 11th. It contains many matters of interest to old soldier boys.

The subject of discourse at the M. E. church next Sunday morning will be "the heavenly home." In the evening at 6:30 o'clock, "our young men." Text: "Is the young man Absalom safe?" Go and hear for yourself, and then decide.

H. H. Vanneuman returned home from his eastern trip a few days ago, and reports a pleasant visit. Among other things he gives a cheering report of New York politics, and predicts a grand democratic victory in that state in '84.

It is said that the manager of the Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad has promised to give Charlevoix county a personal examination before deciding upon a northern terminus. If he does, we have no doubt that his decision will be in our favor.

Mr. L. G. Evans, of Eastport, has just finished an addition to his house, and now has accommodations for the traveling public which they have not had since the Blakely house burned last winter. This will be a great convenience to those traveling that way, and Mr. E. should be remembered.

Richard P. Nicholls, brother of John Nicholls, of this place, who visited here last summer, and afterward went west for a trip through the Yellowstone park, and other places of interest, returned last week. He will remain here a week or two, and then start for his home in Kingsbridge, Eng.

We wish our subscribers would ask for their JOURNALS when calling for mail. It seems to be the custom in some postoffices not to give out paper mail unless specially called for. Because of this custom some of our patrons have failed to get papers regularly. Ask for your JOURNALS, and if you do not then get them, report to this office.

Detroit's new morning paper, The Times, will endeavor to be "more faithfully and more completely a mirror of the state's every day happenings of the important class, and an exponent of its mines and industries, than its yet exists." Its size on week days will invariably be four pages of seven wide columns each, and on Sundays eight pages, or fifty-six columns, and will be sold for two cents.

An item is going the rounds of the state press that the Chicago sewer is filled up with sand the channel at the entrance to our harbor that the Grand River City of Grand Rapids is aground. Larger boats than the Grand Rapids have since come through without trouble, and there is little doubt but she could also if she had run in the channel instead of at one side. We think the item in question originated in one of the Harbor Springs papers, and was published in the same spirit of exultation that was felt when the Petoskey dock was carried away. Feeling sure is not getting all the good things they want themselves in the way of railroads, they try to make everybody else by trying to injure their neighbors. Such statements may have some temporary effect, but truth will out in the end, and the man or community that seeks to build himself up by pulling down his neighbor will in the end be the sufferer.

Cheap Reading.

To every person who will pay in three dollars in cash in advance for two years subscription to the JOURNAL, we will present one year's subscription to that peer of all weekly papers, the Detroit Weekly Free Press, which we feel confident that lest of ladies' papers, The Household. In view of the fact that next year occurs another great political struggle, and the desire of every true patriot to be fully informed on the vital issues of the hour, we think no better offer than this can be made. It is equivalent to three papers for the price of one,—or rather, the getting of two papers as interest on one year's subscription in advance. There is no better weekly paper published than the Detroit Free Press, and every subscriber to that paper gets free a copy of The Household, devoted, as its name indicates, to matters pertaining to the home and fireside, and is in every respect a paper for the ladies.

Remember, three dollars pays for the JOURNAL two years, and secures the Free Press and Household one year free. Subscribe at once.

Historical Society.

The opaticon parlors of Mr. A. R. Upright's residence were crowded to overflowing at the meeting of the historical society on Tuesday evening. The house was brilliantly illuminated presenting a very attractive appearance from the village. Promptly at the hour the society was called to order by the president John Nicholls. The historical paper of the evening was presented by Mrs. O. D. Wood, subject, "The Battle of Bunker Hill." The paper was written in an easy natural style and was well read.

Following this Mr. Parmenter recited "Paul Revere's Ride" which tended to deepen the impression produced by Mrs. Wood's paper. An intermission of ten minutes was so crowded with sociability that the president found some difficulty in estimating order. Miss Ella Barry then favored the society with a recitation of "Bernardo del Carpio" and Mr. Oscar Upright read the "Prisoner of Chillon." The music was a piano solo by Miss Abbie Bennett, a piano duet by Miss Bennett and Mrs. Wood and a vocal duet by Mrs. Allen and Mrs. Green. The program was closed by singing America, the whole society taking part. When the business order was reached it was so late that a motion to adjourn was unanimously carried. All were highly pleased with the evening's entertainment. The society meet next week in the parlors of the Bridge street house.

Shipments.

We give below a summary of the shipments from this port, as compiled from our weekly report of clearances. It includes only full cargoes, and not any portion of the thousands of tons carried by coast steamers. It will be seen that in the month of November there is one item of 24 packages of fish. This looks small, but it must be remembered that the propellers Lawrence and Champlain carried fresh and salt fish to Chicago all summer, the shipments averaging, it has been stated, 1,000 pounds daily.

The heaviest shipments of hardwood lumber was during the month of September. This includes all lumber cleared prior to October 1st. We shall probably give a more complete classification, if possible. The largest shipment of pine lumber was in June.

An examination of the weekly reports would indicate that W. T. Adams and Sisbaugh Mfg. Co., of Boyne, and Stoepel & Co., of East Jordan, take the lead in shipments of hardwood lumber, and F. J. Meech and John Munro a similar place in pine lumber.

The largest shipments of wood was in May and June, and of bark in July and August.—Gross tuffs of the shipments of bark for the season being in those two months. It was reported in our hearing not long ago, that the drop in the price of bark during the summer was a loss of not less than $10,000 to the bark peelers of this county, most of whom are poor farmers, just commencing, and depending on that product for their mainstay ance until they can make sufficient improvements to enable them to live. This amount judiciously distributed over the county would let up wonderfully on the "tightness of the times," and grease the wheels of business so that matters would move along much easier.

Shipments of pig iron was greatest in June. This is the product of a single firm, and adds very much to the value of the shipments from this port.

For full details see figures below:

ARTICLES.	Hardwood lumber, feet.	Pine lumber, feet.	Shingles.	Wood, cords.	Bark, cords.	Staves.	Pickets.	Posts.	Railroad ties.	Pipe, tons.	Fish, packages.	Pig iron, tons.
March	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
April	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
May	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
June	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
July	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
August	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
September	2,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
October	2,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
November	2,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
Total	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000,000	1,000	1,000	1,000

Serious Accident at Ironton.

On Tuesday noon, Jens Christian Olsen, a Dane 18 years of age, was standing on a log, while out hunting, with a gun resting against his arm, when by some means the gun slipped and was discharged, the charge of buckshot passing through the arm near the elbow, shattering both bones, and making amputation necessary, which operation was performed by Drs. Carlstein, Preston, and Lewis. He was removed to the Bridge street house yesterday, and is now under the care of Dr. Carlstein, who thinks he will recover.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH., HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,800 inhabitants, located on both banks of Pine River, between Round Lake and Lake Michigan. Nearly all branches of business are represented, yet a few others could be profitably added. Any of the various mills for manufacturing hardwood lumber, including handles, wooden bowls, chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons, will find an abundance of first-class lumber only accessible. Among the attractions are two summer resorts, which are annually visited by thousands of people. The climatic advantages are unexcelled, and they who have passed one or more summers at these resorts, recuperating their strength and securing a new lease of life, are most enthusiastic in their praise of the place. Sufferers from hay fever and asthmatic difficulties find here a sure relief. The shores of Pine Lake and Lake Michigan afford an excellent bathing place. The privileges for boating and fishing cannot be excelled by any other locality. In their season, lake trout, black bass, pickerel, perch, and herring abound in the waters adjacent to the village, while the gamy speckled trout, the fisherman's delight, make the cold waters of the Jordan and Boyne rivers, as well as those of several smaller tributaries of Pine Lake, their favorite haunts. No rivers in the lower peninsula are as famous for their choice trout as the Jordan and Boyne. The scenery from any point of view on Pine Lake is one of surpassing loveliness. The surrounding country offers great inducements to progressive young farmers who desire to build homes for their families. There is an abundance of maple, elm, beech, basswood, ash, hemlock, and cedar timber, which, with our facilities for manufacturing and shipping, generally more than pays for clearing the land. Unimproved lands are held at from $7 to $15 per acre, while improved farms average from $15 to $00 in the interior, and from $25 to $100 near Charlevoix. The principal crops are winter wheat, oats, corn, hay, clover, potatoes, and root crops. The summer resorts at Charlevoix furnish an excellent market for all sorts of garden vegetables. All fruits do well, excepting grapes and peaches. The hardier kinds of apples are especially successful and the price for the same is generally higher than the same kind of fruit grown farther south. Charlevoix county is at the northern extremity of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt.

GEO. W. MILLER,

DEALER IN

Clothing

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

Hats and Caps, Trunks and Satchels,

GLOVES MITTENS, ETC.

Buttars' Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

Overcoats!

AND

SUITINGS

Gents' Overcoats.
Youths' Overcoats.
Boys' Overcoats.

Gents' Suits.
Youths' Suits.
Boys' Suits.

I have just received a large assortment of the above goods, bought at reduced rates. I am selling these goods for less than they are actually worth at wholesale. I have a line of Overcoats I am closing out at $2.00. "Big bonanza for the money. Call and examine these goods and judge for yourself.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Nov., 1883.

Turn out Comrades.

At the meeting of Baxter Post No. 119, next Monday evening, Dec. 10, 1883, there will be an annual election of its officers, and every comrade is earnestly requested to be present.

Job Printing

AT THE JOURNAL OFFICE.

BETTER THAN GOLD.

BY FATHER RYAN.

Better than grandeur, better than gold,
Than rank and station a thousand fold,
Is a healthy body and a mind at ease
And simple pleasures that cost but little or nothing.
A heart that has room for another's woes,
With sympathies large enough to enfold
All men as brothers, is better than gold.

Better than gold is a conscience clear,
Though toiling for bread is its lot in life;
Boldly blessed with existence and health,
Unaided by the lucre and name of wealth,
Lovely living and lofty thought
Are more than attainable by poor man's cot,
Are more and nobler by patrician plan
Are the humble traits of a gentleman.

Better than gold is the sweet repose
At the close of toil when the labourer does
Lie down to his humble pallet to rest,
And, with a heart that deems no his shanties deep,
Where he knows no treason, no lurking foes.
The latter sit, the former lie, nothing loth;
A shorter course to the land of dreams.

Better than gold is a thinking mind,
That can see in all things God's work and God
A temper, a teacher, a comfort, a friend
And live without fear of the cold grief of care,
The sneer of the spite and the jeer of the
The shrine of comfort, passing by
The world's great throng with the cold
And yield a pleasure better than gold.

Better than gold is a peaceful home
Where all the blessings of life combine,
The shrine of love, the heaven of life,
Hallowed by mother, or wife, or child,
Hence by mortals the home made is
Or tried with success by heaven's decree,
The blessings that never were bought or sold
And content there are better than gold.

SAVED, OR LOST?

BY LILY M. CURRY.

Had he crucified me, I must still have loved him! I said this over and over to myself, that awful night, as I ran on in the darkness and the rain, skimming leap and hollow alike in my race with death. It came to me to think of it now, or to write it all down as I sit waiting for them to come and take me away to a certain safe retreat, of which they have spoken, where I may, by and by, forget completely the scorching fire of his hurtful eye and the thunder dance of the wonder, which seemed to shake the world from under my feet forever. Shriek? I thought I was past crying out.

And yet, I ran onward in the dark and the rain, leaping and praying aloud to Heaven to give me strength and speed and bring me there in time—in time to rescue the innocent, to take to snatch his soul from the clutch of the demon, Murder!

I felt, as I ran, the sudden conviction that I had long known him unworthy; that my father had rightly warned me—my patient, slow-judging father.

Still, granting this knowledge, there had been no hour past, there would be no hour future, when I could renounce him.

I had felt tenderness for him—for Claude—from the beginning, when he had come to us, a wanderer, and father had more than willingly accepted his offer to work for a home—just to work a little in the greenhouse. For this was father's occupation, to keep a nursery and winter-garden, just up from the village whence he forwarded all to the city, a five-hour's journey.

Claude was truly welcome. He had a bright glance, and always could think of a merry story, laughing himself in wholesome, lovish fashion, and leading us also to laugh. He said he was anxious to settle down and to tramp the country no longer. If his mother had lived, he said, his own mother—if his father had not married a young woman who hated her husband's son, it would never have come thus.

When he said this I went away quickly out of the room. My eyes were blind with sympathy, though my father had not taken a second wife.

In this way Claude had come to us—young, perhaps 20 (and I was 17); comely, cheerful when he had rested and supped—cheerful, with snatches of song or whistled tune, and tales of the city, whither we never went. Not stranger-like, but as son and brother, who had come home.

I would not have him go for anything—anything on earth, I said, as I fell asleep that night. He had brought sunshine and music to our poor abode. He made human; he should and would.

Ah! you would not smile if you knew the dull, dead life I led—the stagnant village life, the barren hills above and about, with little to do but read up few old books or father's weekly paper, and listen longingly to the shriek and hum of the railroad trains that passed on the farther side of the town—passed and repassed on high trestle-work, or along narrow cuts, with a foot's space between the rail and the edge of the embankment, with gulleys and ravines just below. Night after night, to the West and the East; day after day, to the East and the West—so went the through express, stopping only on signal at the village station.

It was early in the spring when Claude had come to us, and now the summer had gone. Father had been busy, as usual, forcing his roses at the "dog-days" with ice, purposely stored the winter previous, that they might bloom again for the holidays—those luscious roses, crimson and golden, for which the city dealers paid us so little!

And I had been happy! Happy with wild throbbings of my heart and wakeful hours at night! Not happy constantly, for there was that which counterbalanced joy. Claude had failed to help with the work, as he had promised, and father was sorely disappointed. Yes, it had come to be the exception when Claude went into the greenhouse instead of sauntering off to the villages and there remaining all day. By-and-by, he spent only the nights at home; still, father was very patient. Perhaps he, too, had grown to love the boy, and felt something of the heartache that I knew at the hour when Claude, on finishing his breakfast, would glance about for his cap.

Were I to live a thousand years I should never forget that slow pang as he rose from the table each morning and went; or the longing, the anxiety for the well-known step at night when too awated him. For many days I rose an hour earlier than usual and worked at what father must surely see, and fancy Claude had done. I hoped this to keep father patient and satisfied.

But the autumn was advancing, and he was extra busy; and one morning, when he remonstrated with Claude, Claude grew very angry. I knew this was wrong; he grew so angry that he packed his few things and went away forever. As he opened the door to go, I thought my heart would burst. I followed him down the path to the gate; I think my face must have shown my suffering.

"Claude, Claude!" I cried, "Are you going away? What shall I do, if you go? How can I live?"

Unwomanly? Perhaps it was. My books would say so, but my heart did not. Besides, why should I pretend? Professor is lying. He turned and looked half startled; then he smiled.

"I guess I'll better go, Jobie"—he always called me Jobie, though my name was Effie—"Effie Dix. A moment later he spoke seriously: "If you've always been my friend, and I hate to be out of them so long, but I can't come here any more. Don't you know my friend's house in the village where we could see each other once in a while?"

That was the way I came to meet him, unknown to my father, day after day, day after day, offtenest at a certain hour toward dusk, by the great tree in the first turn of the road. How little it seemed! I would have gone miles to see his face.

I cannot tell when it was that we first fell into cozy, other's arms, with love words and kisses, that burn in spirit now like blisters, that burn in spirit now upon my brow and lips. Will I ever forget?

As the weeks passed, I lived only for these stolen moments. I went about my work in a foreign way, fearing to hear father speak, as he did more stonally, with regret and disapproval, of Claude. I could not bear my lover condemned or even criticised; it seemed to me I must defend him fiercely at any cost. Yet, father never was unreasonable; he had been stung by an ingratitude for which there was no excuse. This I acknowledged, but, to me, his sins of anylover were not sins.

It was late in October, when I wondered for the first time how Claude would spend the winter, and at what he was working, for I knew he had half a dozen, money.

I spoke of it one evening, with my face resting on his shoulder; spoke carelessly, and sought a sober reply. But he bade me not to worry; he had a way of earning money, he said, just up from the village whence he forwarded all to the city, a five-hour's journey.

Claude was truly religious. He had a bright glance, and always could think of a merry story, laughing himself in wholesome, lovish fashion, and leading us also to laugh. He said he was anxious to settle down and to tramp the country no longer. If his mother had lived, he said, his own mother—if his father had not married a young woman who hated her husband's son, it would never have been thus.

When he said this I went away quickly out of the room. My eyes were blind with sympathy, though my father had not taken a second wife.

In this way Claude had come to us—young, perhaps 20 (and I was 17); comely, cheerful when he had rested and supped—cheerful, with snatches of song or whistled tune, and tales of the city, whither we never went. Not stranger-like, but as son and brother, who had come home.

I would not have him go for anything—anything on earth, I said, as I fell asleep that night. He had brought sunshine and music to our poor abode. He made human; he should and would.

Ah! you would not smile if you knew the dull, dead life I led—the stagnant village life, the barren hills above and about, with little to do but read up few old books or father's weekly paper, and listen longingly to the shriek and hum of the railroad trains that passed on the farther side of the town—passed and repassed on high trestle-work, or along narrow cuts, with a foot's space between the rail and the edge of the embankment, with gulleys and ravines just below. Night after night, to the West and the East; day after day, to the East and the West—so went the through express, stopping only on signal at the village station.

It was early in the spring when Claude had come to us, and now the summer had gone. Father had been busy, as usual, forcing his roses at the "dog-days" with ice, purposely stored the winter previous, that they might bloom again for the holidays—those luscious roses, crimson and golden, for which the city dealers paid us so little!

And I had been happy! Happy with wild throbbings of my heart and wakeful hours at night! Not happy constantly, for there was that which counterbalanced joy. Claude had failed to help with the work, as he had promised, and father was sorely disappointed. Yes, it had come to be the exception when Claude went into the greenhouse instead of sauntering off to the villages and there remaining all day. By-and-by, he spent only the nights at home; still, father was very patient. Perhaps he, too, had grown to love the boy, and felt something of the heartache that I knew at the hour when

If I'm detained longer, I'll write you. Do goodby, for I have to catch the train.

"But," I stammered, "but the train is not due for three hours."

"Well, I have to see the stationmaster and put up the signal."

His impatience cut me cruelly; still I was quiet enough.

"Claude," I said, "please—if you have a pencil and scrap of paper, please write me an address at Jonesville. Then, if you you are too busy to write, I can do so. It—it will help me to know that—" I would not hide the soft tear coming into my breast. I wanted him to know I loved him fondly and forever—down to eternity.

He drew some loose papers from his pocket and scribbled on one, as well as he could in the darkness, his address. "Claude Garrison"—and the town.

He held the card yet; it lay next my heart, it is all I have left.

"Now, good-by," he said, thrusting the other papers carelessly into his hip pocket; and, after one long, last kiss, he was away rapidly, more rapidly than I had ever seen him.

I tried to watch him; but it was almost night, and the rain fell steadily. When at length I, too, turned to leave, the place, with a sight of something he must have dropped from my pocket, lying forgotten at my very feet.

I picked it up and put it into my pocket with the address he had written. I would take it home after him, but that he walked so fast he was now far beyond sight. So I went home, and, entering softly through the rain, which pattered the lea.

I was more uneasy and feverish than ever; but tried to listen patiently while father described a new rose he was growing, as an experiment. Occasionally I comforted myself with a pinching my pocket to feel that the precious address safely hidden there.

Presently father took up his weekly paper, and I carried the tea things into the kitchen, where I lulled for reflection. It occurred to me that the letter he had dropped might be of importance to him while at Jonesville, and I would take it to him at once. I took it out to see. It was a queer letter; I could not find the postmark. I did not like the handwriting; but I opened and read it.

I cannot well describe how strange I felt as I read slowly down the first page and turned the sheet to continue. Such feelings are indescribable. As nearly as I remember, it was, at first, a dull jargon, which seemed to confuse my mind so thoroughly that I needed to read the opening sentence a half dozen times or more ere comprehend.

After this came a strong, cold shudder of vague fear and agony, which lasted many moments; then I, absolute spirit in every nerve and fiber except the heart, which beat with clear regularity, like a calm voice dictating to me.

Now, I knew all; some mysterious veil was removed and I saw with acutest vision.

I knew what my lover was involved in, what, and where, and where he had gone tonight. I knew why he had joined Claude's companions correctly—that they were vagabonds, villains, who had planned to wreck the train—that Claude was their tool, where it could have reached the village.

At the great curve. Oh, God! I could picture the scene. The heavy logs laid close across the track, the swift rush, the crash, the overturning coaches pitching and piling one upon the other—the shrieks, perhaps the flame—the awful doom of the innocent and helpless!

And what madness to think that vengeance would be satisfied with such such deeds. No doubt, no doubt they had made him—Claude—the naive tool, and would manage their own escape in some way, leaving him to the hands of village justice. Ours was a quiet town, but what place would not rouse at the foulest work. Rope, rope, tree-limbs—oh, could I do nothing? "God in Heaven," I moaned, "And me, give me strength!"

I ran to the clock. It was long past 7, and the train should reach the village before 9, if on time. I prayed it might be late, for I had miles and miles to go in the night and the storm. I glanced into the sitting-room; father was asleep in his chair—he often dozed thus through the entire evening. I trusted his sleep would last, or he would think I had gone up to my bed room, if he wakened.

I caught a little packet from the wall and slipped it on; no hat or bonnet, change. We met too often, because he was busy. He was worried too, and irritable, even with me. He said, all Heaven! He said and did cruelties. Twice I watched for him at the old place, shivering in the blinkest wind; he did not come. I only loved him more wildly. Hospice, hospice infinitely dismal—poor place!

Still I waited. Ah! I wonder if I can write of that last night? Hitherto, when I have recalled it, my brain has become as a seething whirlpool, and all I have known has been blackness and the rain beating on my bare head, and the distant thunder of the monster with baird eye and the scorching heat close upon me—and so, do you wonder—I have smiled in shriek and swoon?

It was raining; raining slowly, with a rising wind, when I crept from the house and down the road to the turn, and the great tree, where he was waiting. My heart swelled gratefully that he should have come so far in the rain. But his first words chilled me to the core and through.

"I can't stay but a moment, John. I'm going away tonight, only for a day or two, to Jonesville (twenty miles off).

me on; He would not let me die till I had accomplished this task.

At last I struck the railroad at a road crossing, and thenceforth followed it, running as best I could between the tracks.

I remember the wet cinders cringing under my feet; the rank weeds, unharvested by frost, and the burrs that gathered on my skirts.

I remember feeling that I must lie near the awful spot, where lay the death-line of bee-piled logs.

But, oh, God be thanked if I had come in time!

Just for a second I stopped and tried to push the obstacles from the track. The strength of two men was needed, and I was irresolute.

I opened the lantern and struck a match. The wind blew it out! I struck another and shielded the blaze. The lantern burned brightly, and, now, for now I fancied, began the faintest tremor of the rails. I passed the curve and ran deeply entreated, trembling as I ran, to see the headlight burst from behind another, a lesser curve and weeds, a half mile down.

Was it coming? Could it stop in time? How or.

But, what was this? Another step beside my own, following, overtaking me, a grasp of my arm, a terrible grip that made me moan with pain—a voice that hissed into my very brain:

"How came you here?"

I lifted my lantern and stared face to face with Claude.

Even then, at that awful moment, when all life was at stake, he was the lord—I loved him. At that awful moment when his glance was madness, his face and vengeance commingled.

I had he crucified me, it must still have been the same.

I raised the lantern higher.

"Thank God if I have saved you!" I cried, shrilly.

Then the headlight burst from behind the lower curve and grew a terrible glance.

I started ahead, waving the lantern from side to side and shrieking hoarsely:

"Danger, danger! Stop, for God's sake! Danger, danger!"

How his shriek chore in my numb mouth and tongue! How he held me back! Need he have feared? Could he not trust me?

How I battled to swing the lantern free from his grasp!

I was strong—strong for the moment as a tiger; and, though he tried to hinder me, I found the light and shrieked against the thunder-dance and the red eye that shook and scorched both.

Then—oh, Heaven! I do not know how or why it ended, and I know not lies my madness—if I be truly mad, but he, too, must have been mad, else he had not slipped or fallen, or I shrieked away into the pale of the iron monster, and shrieked and shrieked and kept on shrieking up in the night and whirling down in the night and shrieking forever and evermore.

But they not lifted me up when the dance was ended and the fire died, quiet, three yards from the curve he had wrecked. Death was waiting—but they not lifted me up and bore me to shelter; from which I was at length carried home, I should add he lying there—lying there in silence, face downward, on the wet cinders and the straggling weeds. For why should I rise? Why, tonight I had saved the hundreds of innocents, and snatched his soul from the clutch of the demon murder? Why, indeed, when Claude was lost to me forever?

(From the Burlington Hawkeye).

YOUNG FARMER says the first girl he ever walked with was all his whirled in this.

The cable announces an important news the fact that Sir Frederick Bethel, an official of the House of Commons, has married a Miss Cox in this town, who lives in the United States." Snagsby Chronicle. Gosh darn it! he could be one of Slingsby's boys."

You will find those observes one thing about railway lunch counters. The man who growls the most also eats the most. The fellow who jokes about the indestructible sandwiches, thinks he is in hard luck if he doesn't get away with half a dozen before the gong strikes.

The pastor of a church in New Milford, Ct., has been compelled to resign, because he stole his sermons. Only foolish people, it seems, do a job better ones than he could do it himself. We have heard some parents for whom we gladly would have stolen some sermons, on condition that they never would preach them.—Danbury News.

HUMOR.

(From Carl Pretzel's Weekly.)

HEAD winds—Blowing your nose.

GRASS widows are not always in clover.

A FINISHED artist mixes his colors with brains.

A COOL proceeding—An ice wagon making its rounds.

IF brevity is the soul of wit, then is a good deal of fun in a dude's coat tail.

THE good time coming becomes another, as the dog-tired Captain said to the bridge tender.

"WHY are you so distant?" said a tramp to the bankbook in the restaurant window.

"MAN wants but little here below," but every publisher wants his full subscription price.

ANY young man who aspires to be a humorist is advised to drink sarsaparilla. It is good for his humor.

"WHAT grows up must grow down," said a dear father as he mournfully observed his young hopeful struggling with a delicate insolence.

A YOUNG lady doesn't lack much of making a gun out of herself when she powders her face, sets her cap, goes to a ball and snaps at the dudes.

(From the Norristown Herald.)

FANS have existed for at least 3,000 years, or representations of those winders, which, of course, have been discovered on the tombs of Thebes. The friends of the deceased evidently knew in which direction the spirit would fan that far it will was interred with the remains.

A TRANSCRIPT girl has big gray eyes, makes them appear blue and looks velvet a hot fired with dark blue velvet a hot fired. Long fringe of seige on which has been dropped a little cologne." A Tennessee man who has gray eyes can make them appear black and blue by simply calling Singger Sullivan a liar and a scoundrel.

THE editor wrote "Honey Kate Field is on her travels through the exchanges once more," and it came out in the paper "Honey Kate," etc. The editor is paying 10 cents apiece for all the copies of that issue, for the purpose of destroying them, and if the entire edition cannot be secured, he says he will go to Alaska until the affair "blows over."

WHEN a young man becomes impatient waiting half an hour for his girl, who left the room with the remark that she would "be ready in two minutes," he should not manifest his impatience by saying, "Why, indeed, when Claude was lost to me forever?

A HUMAN FIRE.

The Phenomenon of a Burning Mine Repeated in the Physical System.

A few years ago one of the most important coal mines in Pennsylvania caught fire. It started slowly, but soon obtained such headway that it spread through the greater portion of the entire mine. To flood it with water would extinguish the fire but would high ruin the mine; and still the flames continued to increase. At that junctura a young man stepped forward and suggested that all the entrances and vent holes of the mine be covered and secured, thus shutting off the supply of air. His advice was followed and the flames were finally extinguished.

To compare the condition of this mine with many phases of the human system is most natural and appropriate. "Fire in the blood" is a common expression. It is a most serious one. How it originates it may be impossible to tell, but it is the cause and fuel with an increasing fury, the one who feels it often only painfully knows. The blood is the life, it is designed by nature to purify, strengthen and sustain the system. It is too often made the channel through which poison and death are transmitted. Poisonous acids coming through the liver and stomach, humors and germs a live just as real as the one which extinguished the mine. They burn and irritate, causing the brain to become weak and the nerves unstrung; they carry pains to the muscles and leave agonies in the joints; they develop carbuncles instead of strength; they decorate the very portions of the body that should be most free from blemish; they so impoverish the blood in its most humble purpose, that it will not supply the demands of people who have been the victims of rheumatism, neuralgia, or any form of blood disease, to realize what a fearful amount of suffering they have endured. When they are dependent on a physician to relieve them, they are as prey to rheumatism; when in the house they are subjected to rheumatism and lumbago; when in the tissues covering the nerves, scattered over the face, head and nerves generally, or in glands. In every case they are painful; in most instances, dangerous. Inflammatory rheumatism is likely to locate in the joints, causing swelling, inflammation and pain, and may be followed by a fatal termination. Rheumatism is likely to locate in the muscles, causing pain and lameness. This and only, be done by guarding the portals of the blood, the kidneys and liver, and as a basis for over this is found for accomplishing this purpose an equal Warner's Safe Remedy. It acts directly upon the seat of the disease, it invigorates the liver by controlling the supply and removing the cause. Nature's great purifier, it is, in fact, the "Ship of Health." Its effects are wonderful and lasting. Its cures are numerous. Its testimonials are from people who have suffered long and severely, and who have tried almost every remedy. Dr. Robert A. Gunn, Dean of the United States Medical College, New York, and ex-President of the Medical Society of the State of New York, says: "I have found that the Warner's Safe Remedy possesses the most marked and well authenticated curative properties." Dr. Gunn's testimonial is only one of hundreds of the most eminent physicians, and the fact that the Warner's Safe Remedy is prescribed by the physicians of the country, is the best evidence of its value.

News Brevities.

The new Episcopal church at Elk Rapids is to be completed and paid for this winter.

J. A. Bacon was again on our streets last Saturday, the first since his recent severe illness.

Mr. Rueland Williams, of Ivanhoe, remembered the JOURNAL last week when in town. Come again, when we have more time to sit down and chat.

A. E. Martin arrived from Charlotte one day last week and is now extending business as a member of the firm of Norton, Kent & Martin attorneys.—Statesman.

"The JOURNAL, of Charlevoix, has in progress several maps and illustrations of that growing town. Going to run an illustrated paper, Strange?"—Elk Rapids Progress. Just wait a little while and see what we can do.

"The Swiss Bell Ringers appeared at Gray's hall Saturday night, and were greeted by a full house. The show was above the average. All had a hearty laugh, and went away feeling benefited for having attended."—Newaygo Tribune.

One of our Canada subscribers writes that he does not get the JOURNAL oftener than once in two or three weeks. There must be "lake" in the mail service somewhere, and the papers lose on the way, for they are mailed regularly.

We neglected to announce the receipt last week of a handsome card from the office of the Elk Rapids Progress, showing late additions of typographic novelties to that office. The workmanship on that card will compare with the best done anywhere.

Mr. John Crothers, of this place, contemplates moving to Charlevoix county, soon. In that event Kalkaska will lose a good citizen, and Charlevoix county will gain one, but we wish John abundance of success wherever he may locate.—Kalkaska Leader.

The "Continentals" concert in the M. E. church in this city was really a rare treat, and was worthy of the good patronage it received. The sweet melodies that came forth from those old songs seemed to charm the hearer, and the rendition of the "Mocking Bird," on the violin, was the best we ever heard. Should they ever come this way again they are sure of a full house.—Ingham County Democrat.

"Men are employed to work in the lumber woods at Alpena for $12, $15, and $20 per month, caused by the large number of Canadians who yearly go to that town in search of employment." This from an organ that favors protection to the manufacturers and ruinous competition to the laborers, is on a par with protection arguments generally. The consumer (the laborer) is always the one to foot the bill.

From our old friend Chas. S. Cleveland, formerly of Lansing, now of Grand Rapids, Dakota, we have received a handsome card announcing his marriage, the lady being Miss Julia Windhauer, of Dewitt, Mich. Chas. went west alone and established the Grand Rapids Journal, which has every appearance of being a successful newspaper. he is therefore well prepared to take a partner to share in his large and increasing business. May the honeymoon last for ever.

"Trust in providence, and keep your powder dry," was an old revolutionary maxim. Look to your insurance, guard well your heating apparatus, would seem to apply equally well to our citizens. We have to offer safe guard against a disastrous fire that is liable at any hour to wipe out a large portion of our town, and those who neglect their insurance will be the ones to suffer the most when such an emergency occurs. J. Milo Eaton represents several reliable companies, and will be pleased to give any further information desired.

An exchange lies the following concerning the proposed new morning paper in Detroit. The Detroit Times will be printed on a Hoe four cylinder press of the capacity of 18,000 four page papers an hour. This paper will be about the size of the New York Sun and will be printed every day in the year and its telegraphic and news service will be more complete, it is claimed, than any Detroit paper. It will be independent in politics. "Michigan comes first and the rest of the world second," and the Michigan news will be better than any other paper in the metropolis of the state.

The report last week that W. T. Addis had made an assignment was received with doubt by all of our citizens, and great was the satisfaction of all when Mr. Addis returned from Grand Rapids Friday evening, and in person contradicted the rumor. Mr. Addis is heavily interested in the lumber business at Hot Springs and gives employment to a large number of men. He is not only honest and upright in every respect but industrious, and we have often heard it said that none of his employes work and so hard this year round as he himself; and when we take into consideration the fact that he superintends his vast interests personally we are confident that all will join us in rejoicing over the falsity of the report of his failure, as we like to see such men prosper. Mr. Addis deserves prosperity, and we earnestly wish him such.—Statesman.

Health in Michigan.

For the week ending Nov. 24, 1883, the reports to the state board of health indicate that erysipelas increased, and that inflammation of the brain, diarrhea, and remittent fever decreased in areas of prevalence.

At the state capital, the prevailing winds, during the week ending Nov. 24, were southwest; and, compared with the preceding week, the temperature was considerably higher, the absolute, and the relative humidity considerably more and the day and the night ozone, less.

Including reports by regular observers and others diphtheria was reported present during the week ending Nov. 24, and since at 16 places, namely, Ann Arbor, Detroit, East Saginaw, Grand Rapids, Holly, Kalamazoo, Lansing, Linden, Monroe, Niles, Newark, Pontiac, Pollston, Saginaw, Thetford, Ypsilanti; scarlet fever at 15 places, Clifford, Detroit, East Saginaw, Eagle, Forest, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo, Lansing, Lowell, Monroe, Manistee, Muskegon, Pierson Salem, Whitehall; measles at 6 places, Adrian, Cedar Springs, Charlevoix, Hillsdale, Monroe, Pontiac.

Pilfered Paragraphs.

It's a lawyer's business to defent the law. There are almost a hundred thousand lawyers in America, and crime is greater than before.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and insure up the system you will find Paracelsus's Condition Powders are verified. Full pounds at cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 8-50

The three reasons which a good woman presented for objecting to a preacher were striking ones. She said that, in the first place, he read his sermon; in the second, he did not read it well, and in the third place, it was not worth reading.

"If I had but $1,000 to invest in business," was thought, "I would put every cent into advertising." He who attempts to do business in this day and age of the world without advertising, is he who "sows in the wind while he wastes in the bung." Never pull your advertising signboard down, until you desire to part company with trade.

The greatest pain killer yet found for Cramps, Colic, Stitch in side or back, Neuralgia, Headaches, Sprains, Bruises, &c., is Dunn's Jamaica Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure. Beware of imitations. Insist on having Dunn's. For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, as a stomachic, Bitters, diarrhea, dysentery, heartburn, sore stomach, &c., it is unequalled. Warranted to give relief. Use both internally and externally. Warranted to cure. Try it. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

A farmer's daughter commenced in the spring with sixty hens, common breeds, and two cockin cocks, and from these raised 250 chickens. During the season she sold eggs to the value of $60, and from September to January she fattened and sold the pullets at fowls for $200, making the total of sales $260. About two hundred dollars were expended in caring for the hens.

Millions of persons die annually who might be saved if attention was given to the first ills of life. Coughs, Colds, sore Throat, &c., are easily cured by using Brandreth's Cough Balsam, which removes the thickling in the throat and Bronchial tubes the inflamed membranes. Immediate relief will be found in Croup, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, &c., and even in chronic cases and in cases of consumption great relief is received. For incipient consumption it works like a charm. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

The Drummond Light is so called because it was invented by Captain Thomas Drummond, a noted Scottish engineer. It is an intense oxygen light of great power, produced by throwing the oxygen-hydrogen blowpipe flame upon a pencil of lime, which is thus raised to a very high incandescence. Other substances are also used instead of the lime, such as zirconia, magnesia or metallic magnesium. It is not known ever to have been used on a locomotive headlight, and probably could not be, owing to the cumbrous appliances needed to produce the oxygen gas flame.

Are your children peevish and unhappy? Do they have abdominal disorders and cause food constantly? Beware of worms. Very few children escape their ravages. Nevolin can be happy or well while suffering with worms. They sap the very life by preventing the digestion and assimilation of food. There is a sure remedy. It is called Paracelsus's Nevolin Worm Cookies. They are entirely harmless, but will quickly dislodge the worms and pass them off through the bowels. Buy to-day. Price 25 cts per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Enrich the blood. Hamilton's German Bitters are highly recommended for diseases requiring a certain and efficient tonic. Especially indigestion, dyspepsia, want of appetite, loss of strength, lack of energy, &c. They enrich the blood, strengthen the muscles, and give new life to the nerves. They are like a charm to the digestive organs, remove all dyspeptic symptoms, and whenever the stomach is weak or there is a general loss of physical vigor, these bitters are just what you need. Only 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

He who is in a hurry. We never knew a man who was always in a hurry that wasn't always behind hand. They are generally the most idle men in the world, never forbearing nothing at all to pass. Hurry, skurry, bluster—what does it all amount to. Not a straw. If you want to accomplish anything or is should be done, you must go about it really, moderately, faithfully, heartily. Are great works of great men done in a hurry? Not at all. They are the product of time and patience, the result of slow, solid deed-repeated. Nothing ought to be done in a hurry. It is contrary to nature, reason, right, justice and common sense. Your man of hurry is no sort of character at all. Always in confusion, loose at every joint, unhinged and unjointed, blundering and coming here and there, but ah ending in nothing.

$1 A YEAR. $1

ONE DOLLAR. ONE DOLLAR.

$1 A YEAR. $1

TWO PIPERS FOR THE PRICE OF ONE

THE WEEKLY

Detroit Free Press

AND

THE HOUSEHOLD

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

Ten Large Pages of News and Reading Matter.

The Greatest of Dollar Weeklies.

Two Copies Sent to Separate Addresses for Two Dollars.

Specimen Copies Free. Address FREE PRESS CO., Detroit, Mich.

$1 A YEAR. $1

ONE DOLLAR. ONE DOLLAR.

$1 A YEAR. $1

CHICAGO WEEKLY HERALD

The Largest, Best, and Most Complete Newspaper ever sent

One Year for $1.00.

EIGHT LARGE PAGES,

Containing the News of the Day, Agricultural and other Matter interesting to the farmer and his family, complete Market Reports, Stories, Sketches, etc. Sample copies free. Address

CHICAGO WEEKLY HERALD,
Chicago, Ill.

If you want a daily paper try

The Chicago Herald,

An enterprising, fearless, and reliable Chicago daily that has been a great success because of its excellence in every particular. It presents all the news every day on four large pages and at a price that permits its being taken by everybody. For sale by all newsdealers. Send on trial by mail, postage paid, six days each week, for TWENTY CENTS FOR ONE DOLLAR. Address

THE CHICAGO HERALD,
120 and 122 Fifth ave., Chicago, Ill.
JAMES W. SCOTT, Publisher. 17

PIMPLES.

I will send (free) the recipe for a simple cosmetic that will remove tan, pimples, freckles, and leave the skin smooth, white and beautiful; also instructions for producing a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, in footing 2 3c. stamp, BEN. VANDER & CO., 42 Barclay St., N. Y.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c. Parties wishing the prescription, will please address, Rev. E. A. Wilson, 194 Penn St., Williamsburg, N. Y.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

EVERYTHING

In the line of

Furniture

AND

Undertakers' Goods

Can be found at the old reliable house of

H. C. Cooper,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

COME AND SEE US BEFORE BUYING.

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY GONE YEARS.

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING,

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US.

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 22. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1883. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

Is published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

Office over H. Smith's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Business Directory.

ATTORNEYS.

FRED STRANG & LUCIEN, Attorneys at Law, Office in Holmes Block, Charlevoix, Mich. F. G. STRANG. C. C. S. SHIREL.

ROSS & AUBREY, Attorneys at Law, East Jordan, Mich. 22

FREDW. WAYNE, Attorney and Counselor, at Law, Office in Wayne's property adjoining Depot, Petoskey.

H. L. JERSEY, Attorney and Counselor at Law, office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

J. M. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

VORIS & KEAT, Attorneys at Law. Office opposite C. S. Hotel, Boyne, Mich.

ISAAC P. WINTER, Attorney and Solicitor, and U. S. Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX. Capital $50,000. Savings department. Deposits received on time or on demand. Interest allowed on time deposits. Collections given careful attention. Loans on first mortgages. Foreign and domestic exchange. BENANDER & BROWN.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Services every Sabbath at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sabbath school at 12 m. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7:30. By-school hours. C. F. VANATTA, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sabbath services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sabbath school at close of morning service. Prayer and praise meeting Thursday evening at 7. REV. ELIJAH J. HENNIGER, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOSE AND READY FIRE COMPANY meet the first and third Thursdays of each month. H. F. BURRIS, Secretary.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. A. CARLSTEN, M. D., Office at the Ingleside.

L. HOIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office in Lewis Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. M. PENTON, M. D., Surgeon and Homœopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HENRY S. BARNETT, Notary Public. Real Estate Loans, and Insurance Agt., Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

G. A. R. Baxter Post No. 195, meets second and fourth Tuesday in each month, at Odd Fellows' hall.

F. & A. M.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 347, meets every Saturday on or before full moon.

I. O. O. F.—Round Lake Lodge No. 295, meets every Wednesday evening, in their hall.

I. O. O. F.—Blue Bines No. 157, meet Saturday on or before full moon in Odd Fellows' hall.

MASONIC.—Regular communication of Lodge meets Tuesday on or before full moon. Hall over Post Office.

A. BUTMAN, President. A. R. CURRIER, Cashier.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

A general banking business transacted. Money loaned on approved paper at reasonable rates. Interest allowed on time deposits. Collections given careful attention and remittances made promptly.

A. R. CURRIER, Cashier.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Trade promptly W. S. JOHNSON,
Opp. Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations excellent. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only simple rates by business.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public. Headquarters for the Petoskey and Mackinaw Stages.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CRAWLES, Proprietor.

Boyne City, Michigan.

Rooms thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few first-class sewing machines for sale at ten dollars each. Call and see them and learn price.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. S. WAIT.

FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

GO TO

Dr. G. W. CROUTER'S DRUG STORE.

Santa Claus' Headquarters.

An Immense Line to Choose From.

C. B. BELLINGER

carries the largest and finest stock of

JEWELRY,

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and cutlery ever in Charlevoix county. April 1st the celebrated ROCKFORD WATCH the best time piece ever made. 11

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

at his store near the bridge.

All kinds of fresh fruit and vegetables in their season. Nuts, candies, pop, ginger ale, etc., always on hand. Call and see me. West side bridge St.

ROBERT GRUEN,

Boyne Falls, Mich.,

Watch-maker

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry Repaired. 17

John Nicholls

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades, WAGON TONGUES, Shingles, Lath, &c.

Lumber Sawed & Bills Filled TO ORDER.

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card to go into effect October, 1883.

STATIONS.	No. 1. Ex.	No. 3. Ex.	No. 7. Mixed.
Grand Rapids ... lv	.....	7:00am	.....
Kent City ...	.....	7:20	.....
Sparta ...	8:05am	7:40	.....
Rockford ...	8:20	11:00	10:30
Cedar Springs ...	8:35	11:15	10:45
Pine Grove ...	8:45	11:25	11:00
Paris Way Side ...	8:50	11:30	.....
Paris ...	8:55	11:35	8:35am
Kentwillville ...	9:03	11:39	9:45
Gaines ...	9:11	11:47	10:00
Vicksburg ...	9:17	11:51	12:10pm
Fenwick ...	9:25	11:57	12:20
Lakeside ...	9:30	12:00	2:30
Grand Rapids ... ar	9:40	12:10	2:50
Grand Rapids ... lv	2:45pm	5:00	7:00am
D. G. H. & M. cross	7:05	10:37	5:30
Ionia (City) ...	7:17	10:52	5:45
Big Rapids ...	10:11	12:10pm	7:52
Reed City ...	10:42	1:40	8:20
Cadillac ...	11:15pm	2:01	8:52
Traverse City ...	1:40	4:00	10:15
Kalkaska ...	.....	4:45	12:30am
Rapid Creek ...	.....	5:23	1:32
Boyne Falls ...	.....	6:20	2:54
Boyne City ... ar	.....	6:40	3:15
Boyne City ... lv	.....	7:00	5:30
Mackinaw City ...	.....	8:15	6:50
Petoskey ...	.....	7:50pm	6:20
Marquette ...	.....	7:00am	5:50pm
Negaunee ...	.....	8:12	7:16

STATIONS.	No. 2. Ex.	No. 4. Ex.	No. 6. Mixed.
Negaunee ... lv	.....	5:10pm	7:20am
Marquette ...	.....	6:00	8:21
St. Ignace ...	.....	5:00pm	6:15pm
Mackinaw City ...	.....	6:30	8:00
Harbor Springs ...	.....	8:30	.....
Petoskey ...	.....	7:00	6:21am
Boyne Falls ...	.....	9:48	7:55
Mancelona ...	.....	9:58	8:08
Alba ...	.....	10:05	8:20
Traverse City ...	.....	1:25	.....
Cadillac ... lv	.....	4:00pm	11:05
Cadillac ... lv	4:00pm	11:05	6:30
Reed City ...	5:13	12:20am	7:38
Big Rapids ...	5:45	1:00	8:10
Ionia (City) ...	6:17	2:05	9:12
D. G. H. & M. cross	6:32	2:20	9:27
Grand Rapids ... ar	8:20	4:12	10:55
Grand Rapids ... lv	.....	7:00am	1:00pm
Kalamazoo ... ar	.....	9:40	3:32
Kalamazoo ... lv	9:05	7:00	2:32
Richland ...	9:25	7:20	2:52
Allegan ...	10:25	8:14	4:00
Otsego ...	11:46	9:35	5:20
Fort Wayne ... lv	1:00pm	11:25	7:15
Toledo ... ar	4:05	6:05am	.....
Chicago ... ar	7:35	9:35	.....
Whitehall ...	3:56	8:41	3:22
Muskegon ...	4:45	9:25	4:10
Cincinnati ...	7:35pm	1:30am	7:30am

A. H. LEET, Gen. Pass. Agt.
Grand Rapids, Mich.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will for the sake of suffering humanity, send free to all who need it, the receipt and directions for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. This celebrated remedy is to be obtained by the advertiser's experience, so he is enabled to offer it free to the public. JOHN B. HODGE, 42 Cedar St., New York.

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

JOHN GRIFFIN CARLISLE

SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A Statesman and Parliamentarian—Elevated by his Party from the Lower House of the Kentucky Legislature to the Illustrious Office of the Forty-Eighth Congress.

Hon. John G. Carlisle, representing the sixth district of Kentucky in the present congress, is now 48 years of age, seven years of which he has served in congress with increased distinction each term. Soon after entering upon his first term in 1876, it was conceded by the older members of the house that Mr. Carlisle was destined to become a central figure in national politics, and time has verified the wisdom of their prophecy by his elevation to the speakership of the body in which he has so brilliantly figured.

Mr. Carlisle was born Sept. 5, 1835, in Kenton county, Ky. His early days were spent in securing an education, such as the country schools of those days afforded, at the same time supporting himself by his own labor. An opportunity was presented and young Carlisle began the study of law in Covington. At the end of two years he was admitted to the bar, in 1858, and so rapid was his rise in his profession, and so great his popularity with the public, that he was elected a member of the lower house of the Kentucky legislature in 1864, a state senator in 1866, and again in 1869, lieutenant governor in 1871, serving until September, 1875.

Mr. Carlisle was then relieved from the government ownership by his election to the forty-fifth and forty-sixth congresses. He was returned to the forty-seventh congress, in which he became a conspicuous figure, and now he is speaker of the forty-eighth.

Personally Mr. Carlisle is quite dignified, yet very courteous in manner, and impresses one with the opinion that he is a character of more than ordinary ability, by nature and that a brilliant leader and conscientious politician. The country at large will anticipate his career as speaker with considerable interest.

The contest from which Mr. Carlisle has just so successfully emerged, is a victory that brings him into formidable prominence as an excellent probability on the presidential ticket of 1884. Within an hour after his selection by the caucus for the speakership there were not a few emphatic in their opinions that the present honor was only a step to the presidency of the senate in 1885. In other words, it is claimed that Carlisle will be the democratic nominee for vice president next year in combination with some northern man for the presidency, thus uniting the two great sections of the party north and south. The northern gentleman to complete the ticket is not named.

Press Comments.

The democratic party is not the party of the cigarette. It is the party of the people. It inclinates no descent upon a united rights. It proposes a distinct measure of reform. In electing Mr. Carlisle it repudiates the ostrich policy and plants itself upon the stiff fighting ground of its antecedents and its convictions. We have now a reverse reform speaker. Presently we shall have a reverse reform committee of ways and means. A little later we shall have a reverse reform bill. On that as an issue party lines will be drawn.—[Louisville Courier-Journal, dem.

The election of Mr. Carlisle to the speakership of the house of representatives, and the overwhelming triumph of the free trade and bourbon elements of the democratic party over its more conservative membership, is a timely warning to the country, and it is all that republicans could desire.—[Minneapolis Tribune, rep.

The nomination of Mr. Carlisle for speaker is a grand victory for the people in the struggle for low taxation by and through a tariff for revenue only. It gives new health and strength and hope to the democratic party. No longer can it be said that the democracy have no principles which they dare to avow or practice.—[Charleston News and Courier, dem.

Mr. Carlisle's selection is a recognition of the fact that disguises are useless as well as unnatural. If a party is in any respect fit for public confidence, it must have convictions and aims which it is not ashamed or afraid to avow. We may oppose it to the death, as northern people did the sincerity and frankness of rebellion, but can nevertheless respect it the more for being sincere and frank.—[N. Y. Tribune.

The position of the democratic party before the country, and the outlook for next year, could not be improved. So far we have made no promises that have not been honestly and faithfully fulfilled, at the same time keeping ever in mind the highest and best demands of the people. It now remains for us to continue this work during the coming months of national legislation, and victory is certain.—[Wheeling Register, dem.

The accession of Mr. Carlisle will make a very great change in the politics of the country. The political trimmers who have so long ruled the democratic party, and dragged it from one defeat to another, have at last been overthrown. For the first time in many years—no, for the second time—the party stands for something of its own, for reform of abuses, and for the rights of the people against monopolists of all kinds.—[N. Y. Herald, ind.

Mr. Carlisle will so construct the tariff committee of the house as to obtain from it a definite democratic tariff policy. When it has spoken nothing will be left to conjecture. The country will know what the democratic party means, and just so far as it is in accord with the sentiment of the country to that extent it will be supported. The election of Mr. Carlisle will mean courage and honesty—qualities which always command respect.—[Washington Post, dem.

A Good Record for Farmers.

There is a general discontent among farmers' sons. They dislike the plodding work of the farm, and long for the larger life of the city, for the quicker returns and the prospective wealth promised in manufacture and commerce. But they forget that there are always "castles in Spain," and that in business only the few draw prizes, while the many draw blanks. They overlook the fact that a large majority of business men fail, while every farmer who uses his brains as well as his hands earns a comfortable living.

A fact told by the late Dr. Chadbourne, President of the Agricultural College at Amherst, Mass., is also worth considering by the sons of farmers. He was an enthusiast in advocating the value of brain and knowledge to the farmer, and insisting that farming communities were freer from vicious tendencies than cities.

In one of his visits, as a Commissioner of Prisons, to the Reform School at Westboro, he asked the Superintendent how many of the boys came from farmer families. To his great delight the answer corresponded to his own convictions. After careful investigation, the Superintendent found that not a single boy in the whole company had come from a farm, or was the son of a farmer.

This is a good record for farmers, and a good reason why boys should hold to the farm. Agricultural life is free from the temptations common to city homes.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THE NATION.

Annual Message of President Arthur.

The Questions of Finance, Revenue and Taxation Discussed.

Postal Telegraphy Mildly Approved and Polygamy Sharply Condemned.

A Comprehensive Review of Our Foreign and Domestic Relations.

To the Congress of the United States:

At the threshold of a year of reflection I congratulate you upon the usual blessings of the abundant harvests and the health with which our country has been visited.

Foreign Relations.

Our relations with other nations continue to be on a friendly footing. With the Argentine Republic, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Denmark, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, Turkey and Venezuela we continue to be received with cordiality and treated with consideration, while the new lines of telegraphic communication with Central America and Brazil permitted the appointment and reception of ministers of friendship from the governments of those countries. Diplomatic relations with Bolivia have been perfected by the interchange of similar tokens of friendship with Servia and Montenegro, and intercourse with Roumania, thus extending our intercourse with the Danubian countries, while our Eastern relations have been placed upon a wider basis by treaties with Corea and Madagascar.

The treaties concluded every session with Mexico, a protocol of exposition and a supplementary treaty of extradition with Spain, and a convention extending the duration of the Franco-American Claims Commission, have also been proclaimed.

The Fisheries Industry.

Notice of the construction of the fisheries articles of the Treaty of Washington was duly given to the British Government. The provisions and exemptions of the British Government under the treaty for the free admission of the fishery products of the United States will accordingly close on July 1, 1885. The fisheries question, which for a numerous class of our citizens on the Northern coasts, both on the the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, was worthy of the fourteen years of Congress. Whenever brought into competition with the interests of other countries, our fishermen have asked only equal consideration for their fishing appliances and equal opportunities, have undertaken no monopolies, but have asserted that Congress owed it to a considerable class of citizens to see that their rights in the fisheries and the usage of fishing vessels, fishing gear and fishing conditions, the richly-stocked fishing waters and sealing grounds of British North America.

Foreign Immigration.

The question has arisen touching deportation to the United States from the British provinces of a criminal or convicted alien, or persons unable there to gain a living, and capable of exciting the community here. Such of these persons as will under the proper laws, accredited by the proper officers of the Dominion, to the ports of entry of our country, will be by the Majesty's Government instructed that they are not to be forwarded hither. Efforts have been made, however, in many cases, persons ineffectual, and especially in certain cases of paupers, sent from the Dominion, to land in our country through Canada. That a revision of our legislation upon this subject may be deemed advisable.

Chinese Treaty.

Correspondence relative to the Chinese Treaty has been continued, and will be laid before Congress.

The American Hog in Europe.

The prohibition of France against the importation of prepared swine produced from the Western States of the United States, which has been in force for some time, has been extended to those of the country in the Mississippi Valley. Germany has prohibited the importation of pork and sausage and Canada followed in the footsteps of the mother country.

Egypt.

The Government of the Khedivine proposes that the authority of the mixed judicial tribunals in Egypt be extended so as to cover offences of the United States accused of crime, who are now beyond the reach of any court. Negotiations are now in progress to accept the change, but intimation has been given that it will be necessary to obtain the consent of the powers to a convention so proposed to revise the whole subject.

Our Mexican Boundary.

At the time in our national history has there been more amicable need of close and kindly relations with a neighboring state than now exists with regard to Mexico. The resolution of her capital and enterprise into that country, the ease with which her debt is being adjusted and the great material advances which need at the hands of her own people, and the security of commerce and industries of the Mexican Government, and the hospitable reception of our commerce. The rights of our citizens in Mexico have been the subject of remonstrance and protests. There has been less cause of complaint on the part of Mexico of acts of our citizens than of those in Mexico, and all cause of complaint should cease if we can secure for our citizens in Mexico and all other foreigners the United States and Mexico adopt a treaty by which the boundary shall be fixed.

The Congress of Rome.

A convention was signed with Mexico on July 13, 1882, providing for the relocating of the cones of Bravo. Well Mexico, Arizona and Texas, the cones in question have awaited some time the action of the Congress of the United States, to whose have awards were made by the late American and Mexican Claims Commission. That convention with regard the consent of the Senate. Meanwhile, the cones, the fruit of the joint awards, which have taken place, the commission necessary, the Executive has directed the payment of payments of the distributive quota received from Mexico.

Central America.

Our geographical proximity to Central America and our political and commercial relations with the States of that country justify, in my judgment, such a special mission of our diplomatic corps as will place at each capital a consul-general.

South America.

The contest between Bolivia and Chili and Peru has passed from the stage of strategic beginnings and maneuvers in which the Consuls of the Government has been exercised. The demands of Chili for cession of territory and the payment of indemnity were accepted by the party of external legislation, to the extent of the cession of Tarapaca, and Chili is governed in conformity with the terms of the protocol signed at the City of Lima, and has commenced negotiations with Bolivia for the conclusion of this treaty. Meanwhile, the President of Peru, Señor Calderon, the President of Peru, has been assassinated at Lima, which has been located by Gen. Iglesias, the Minister of Peru, assumed to be elected on the 10th of January, and to meet at Lima on the 1st of March, to form a new Congress, a provisional government of Gen. Iglesias, as well under the proper laws, accredited by the proper officers of the Dominion and Europe. When the will of the Peruvian people shall be ascertained, it will be my duty to recognize the government approved by them.

Chinese Indemnity.

This Government is now, representatives of this Government attended at Canton the centennial celebration of the birth of Dr. Illinois Bunsen. At the same time the inauguration of the statue of Washington in the presence of the Viceroy of the Canton Provinces, and the Governor of the Province.

Congress, at the last session, authorized the Executive to remove to the Canton Government a reopening of the awards of the mixed commission of Chinese, the indemnity from this country of the Government of China, the money paid in liquidation for certain of the awards of the commission. This Government holds that the money so paid was in error and that the Government continues to make the payments specified in the convention of 1858.

There is ground for believing that the dispute between Great Britain and Russia, growing out of Venardale to France will shortly be satisfactorily settled. The French fleet in the Pacific has been ordered to Tonkin, and the Government has not as it involves a consulting of the annual report of the Secretary of the Navigation, and the Secretary of the Navy, to the consideration of the Congress.

Sandwich Islands.

At the recent coronation of His Majesty King Kalakaua, the Government was represented by a special mission, and international hospitalities and by the formal visit of a naval vessel.

The question of terminating or modifying the existing reciprocity treaty with Hawaii is now before Congress. I am convinced that the changes of some and frauds under that treaty have been greatly exaggerated. I renew the recommendation of my predecessor that the treaty be modified whenever it can be done without injuring the legitimate trade between the two countries. I am not disposed to favor the entire abrogation of any treaty which has conferred good will between the two countries and contributed to the prosperity of Hawaii in the family of nations.

Eastern Nations.

In pursuance of the policy declared in this Government of extending intercourse with the Eastern nations, legations have been established at the capitals of Persia, Siam and Corea. It is probable that permanent missions of these countries will be maintained in the United States. A special embassy from Siam is now on its way hither. Treaty relations with Corea are expected to be exchanged at Seoul on the 19th of May next, when the treaty ratified by the Corean Government and signed from the King of Tuikoloan have visited this country on the occasion of the exchange of ratifications.

Peace, as yet, unannounced with the Government of Tonkin, has not yet been attained to the satisfaction of the United States, but the hostilities between the French and the Tonkinese have not been of a character to interrupt our commerce with the ports of the country, and we have no reason to believe that the rights of our citizens will be disturbed in the event of a satisfactory ending of the war. We have in this, we have in the interest of our commerce and to secure the rights of our citizens, to make provision for conquering the navigation of the Tonkin Bay.

The Congress of Rome.

A convention was signed with Mexico on July 13, 1882, providing for the relocating of the cones of Bravo. Well Mexico, Arizona and Texas, the cones in question have awaited some time the action of the Congress of the United States, to whose have awards were made by the late American and Mexican Claims Commission. That convention with regard the consent of the Senate. Meanwhile, the cones, the fruit of the joint awards, which have taken place, the commission necessary, the Executive has directed the payment of payments of the distributive quota received from Mexico.

Restrictions of Commerce.

I have alluded in my previous message to the vexatious and vexatious restrictions suffered to our trade in the markets of our great National rather for the French United States. A heavy export duty upon that product, imposed by the Government of Brazil, is levied upon its delivery ports by restrictions as to storage and other burdens. Our flour has always provided by reciprocity treaties, which Mexico and now awaiting the action of the Congress of the United States, which with the Government of Mexico establishes our relations with the Government of Mexico, for example, the Mexican Government has agreed to admit our flour, surpassed by apple to Spanish vessels and surpassed from the port of Spain, under just and equitable conditions, and equitable provisions for the treatment of our vessels and seamen.

The Congress of Rome, the Congress of the Congress of the Congress of

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

A Washington Sensation

It was intimated several days ago that there would soon be a sensation in Washington, and it has come. Secretary Teller and Senator Dawes are in trouble, and matters look rather dark for the gentlemen. Last year congress appropriated $300,000 to pay certain claims of the Cherokee Indians. Ex-congressman W. A. Phillips, of Kansas, as disbursing agent, was found to be short some $22,500, and on being pressed by a lawyer for the Indians, admitted that he had divided it between two high officials in Washington—that it was necessary to do this to obtain possession of the appropriation, and finally confessed that those two officials were Secretary Teller and Senator Dawes.

Notes and News.

Speaker Carlisle is receiving advice at the rate of 300 letters a day.

The president's message, and reports of departments, will be found on the second and third pages of this paper.

State press comments on the new Detroit Times is not favorable to the typographical appearance of that sheet. We have not yet seen a copy of it.

John B. Clark clerk of the house of representatives, says for the thirty-five positions in the house as clerks, etc. there are above four hundred applicants.

No. 11 of The Michigan Tradesman published at Grand Rapids, is our latest exchange. It is a neat well printed six-column folio, and is devoted, as its name indicates, to the trade interests of Michigan. Wholesale prices at Grand Rapids are given quite full. There is also some news concerning failures and changes of firms.

The five years of America's greatest industrial depression—from 1873 to 1878—coincided with the five years of our very highest tariff. In 1877 there were more strikes, more riots, more men out of employment, more communistic murders, more militia calls, than in all the fifteen years covered by the low tariff of 1846.—Chicago Tribune.

The shortest length of day will be reached on December 18, when the time between sunrise and sunset will be 9 hours and 5 minutes. On the 19th it will be 9 hours and 6 minutes, and on the 20th, 9 hours and 5 minutes again, and thus alternating daily till the 28th, when it will be 9 hours and 7 minutes and retrograde no more. This apparent eccentricity in length of day arises from the variations in the time of sunrise and sunset.

An editor having worked on a weekly newspaper a year or two thought himself qualified to take charge of a daily. He tried it three days. Nature could endure it no longer, and on the fourth he editorially grouned that "the responsibility of such a position involves many a head ache, many an hour of patient, painstaking, thoughtful application, when both body and mind are worn out and need rest." Then he went back to his weekly newspaper and was a happy man once more.

The estimates submitted by the chief of engineers, of what he thinks can be profitably expended on Michigan's rivers and harbors during the next fiscal year foot up $2,044,000, and include the following for the northern and western portion of the state: Charlevoix $40,000, Cheboygan $26,000, Frankfort $50,000, Ludington $40,000, Manistee $50,000, Muskegan $10,000, Pentwater $40,000, Saugatuck $12,000, South Haven $30,000, White River $50,000, Hay Lake, channel of Sault Ste Marie river, $500,000.

From the National Capital.

Notes and Interviews by a Journal Correspondent.

The speakership contest was one of the most noted of its kind. It was bravado on the Randall side and confidence among Carlisle's army. The first ballot of the caucus nominating Mr. Carlisle for speaker with 106 votes, against 52 for Randall and 30 for Cox was a revelation of the truth that the Kentucky statesman knew just what he was talking about before the caucus assembled.

It is now said that Mr. Randall had the chairmanship of every committee pledged for the promise of supporters, while Mr. Carlisle refused to touch that patronage until after he had been elected speaker. This honest course gained for him no less than thirteen votes, that, otherwise would have been cast for Randall or Cox.

Ex-congressman John B. Clark of Mo. secured the clerkship on the second ballot, John P. Leedom, of Ohio, sergeant at arms by acclamation, J. G. Wintersmith, of Texas, doorkeeper, L. Dalton, of Indiana, postmaster, and Rev. John S. Lindsay, of Georgetown, the chaplaincy.

Generals Sherm and Rosecrans never forget the soldier, and at their instance the caucus did a magnanimous thing in voting to retain the thirteen disabled union soldiers now under the employ of the doorkeeper. On the whole the caucus was one of the most harmonious that ever assembled in the Capital.

MR. CARLISLE'S VIEWS ON TARIFF.

Your correspondent sought an interview with the new speaker and found him willing to frankly express himself on subjects for future legislation.

"Mr. Carlisle, do you consider your selection for speakership an endorsement by the democratic party of your reformatory views on the tariff."

"Most emphatically, yes. I was the only candidate for the honor representing my party's policy on tariff. Messrs. Randall and Cox both holding views inconsistent with our position on the purposes of a tariff."

"Do you mean 'tariff for revenue only?'"

"That is the constituent principle, to be regulated, however, so as to protect our home industries without fostering monopolies. For instance, we should have a high tariff on manufactured products coming in competition with home industries, with a low tariff on raw materials not attainable in our own country."

"Do you anticipate any attempt in the present congress to revise the existing laws on this subject?"

"I have will probably be no effort of the kind until a change in the political complexion of the senate occurs. I believe, however, that the question will be approached sooner or later intelligently and for the best interests of the country at large."

ECHOES FROM THE CAUCUS.

"You had quite a walk over in the caucus, Mr. Carlisle?"

"Just what I knew would take place, sir. Mr. Randall's argument for supporters was based on so-called 'business interests.' Heavy Pennsylvania capitalists and high protection men came down here and said to their representatives: 'You must vote for Randall or the mercantile interests of the country will suffer. Our workingmen, and we as the employers expect you to do it.' It was the threat of the ballot box that holds the votes that the workingmen caste to elect a congressman, and it worked very nicely with about fifty members, but over one hundred of my supporters and thirty of Mr. Cox's thought differently and the result is what has been a certainty for several days."

"In courtesy to your antagonists will you place Mr. Randall and Mr. Cox on the most important committees?"

"I have not given the subject of committee organization much thought, but my distinguished competitors will receive due recognition in that matter. In my canvas for speakership I refrained from making any promises and I shall reorganize the committees with material that will inure to the good of the country without partisan bendids."

"What have you to say about the sectional cry that was raised against you during the canvass?"

"Nothing more than the day is past when such tactics in politics will aid the cause of any faction springing it. The war is over and the public are satisfied that Mason and Dixie's line has long been obliterated."

GENERAL ROSECRANS AND ONE WIFE.

General Rosecrans is a great talker and card writer for the press, consequently I had but little trouble to bring forth a stream. The general has only one wife himself to whom, I understand he is thoroughly devoted, almost worshiping the very ground she walks upon, and he is therefore, very naturally, decidedly opposed to polygamy and its votaries, and insists upon their complete extirpation from the face of the United States.

The public have, no doubt, read his proposed amendment to the constitution which he will introduce this session. The subject was being discussed by a half dozen congressmen at the Ebbitt the other day when a member from California remarked that "I have heard that the general's wife had a hand in that bill, and I shouldn't wonder, because he is always willing to do almost anything for his wife."

WHAT CONGRESS WILL DO.

Reverting to the general's talk with me I asked him whether he thought this session of congress would be marked by any revolutionary legislation?

"Yes—well—no, not what you would call a radical revolution, but there will be made some important changes in tariff, reduction on wool and whiskey, inquiries if not legislation on growing monopolies, further reduction of postage, and a great agitation on the civil rights question."

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

is not an extraordinary document this year. The reports of the departmental heads were all submitted to him, and their various suggestions are reiterated and recommended by the executive. The president has been very cautious this year in preventing the surreptitious extraction of the message by some ambitious and dishonest scribe. An attache of the executive mansion said recently that he had been offered one thousand dollars if he would secure an advance copy. I suggested to him that it would be an admirable lesson to such disreputable journalists to have delivered a message purporting to be the president's and have pocketed the thousand dollars!

"You are right. I'll be prepared for them next year. Sorry I didn't think of it in time, I'd have scooped his money this year?"

SECRETARY TELLER AND COMMISSIONER DUDLEY

are building a warm fire under a host of pension attorneys who have been defrauding their clients with all the sang froid of professional pick-pockets. I called on General Dudley to ascertain whether there have been any new developments in the collection of evidence against several prominent attorneys.

"Yes, indeed. We have sufficient data and witnesses to cause the indictment by the grand jury of at least a dozen well known firms. The only thing we now fear is that those who are guilty will flee from justice before we can secure the operation of the law. But I am determined that every rascal of them shall either pay the penalty of their swindling, in punishment, to the full extent of the statute, or by voluntary exile." The soldier, the widow and the orphan must be protected from these sharks, and I will soon cheerfully furnish you a list of the firms and individuals who have been feeding on the poor pensioner. Call again in a few weeks and we will give you some information that will be worth publication in every paper."

At this moment an old gray headed soldier was admitted, and told a pitiful story of how, for five years he had had an application for a pension pending before the office, through a Washington firm, and each year they had required the payment of five dollars to keep the application "alive." An examination of the files and records revealed the fact that his case had been rejected for three and a half years past. This is only a specimen of a thousand or more such swindles as are conducted by over fifty firms.

EX-SPEAKER KEIFER'S OPINION OF CARLISLE.

"What do you think of Mr. Carlisle, the new speaker? and what effect will his election have on the democratic party?"

"He will make a conscientious presiding officer and is intuitively rapid in grasping parliamentary problems. I think his election over Randall and Cox means that the southern members are going to run this session and the democratic party to suit themselves. The northern members and democracy must acquiesce, as they are in the minority and powerless to dictate any policy or measure against the wishes of their allies. I am now satisfied that the southern wing of the democracy will name their presidential ticket in 1884, in the face of all opposition from Tilden and all other northern aspirants."

Carlisle Comments.

New York World: This result will be at once honorable and serviceable to the beyond doubt have been attributed to influences at war with genuine democratic principles. Mr. Carlisle's canvass has been simply an appeal to democratic sincerity. He is not elected as a free-trader or an extreme protectionist.

New York Tribune: We are glad of it. The democratic party has no excuse for existence if it is not for free-trade, and unless it goes into the national canvas of 1884 on a free-trade platform it will be trying to ride two horses at once.

New York Times: The nomination of Mr Carlisle shows that there is more life in the democratic party than had been generally supposed and of a healthier sort, which is a matter for congratulation all around. Mr. Carlisle is by far the best representative among the candidates for the nomination of those democrats who have convictions and conscience, and it is a good thing for the country that they are found to be in the majority.

Detroit Free Press: The great strength of Mr. Carlisle and of the principles of which he is such an able and conspicuous advocate was shown by the handsome vote by which he was chosen against such a strong candidate as Mr. Randall and as popular a representative as Mr. Cox.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.; HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,800 inhabitants, located on both banks of Pine River, between Round Lake and Lake Michigan. Nearly all branches of business are represented, yet a few others could be profitably added. Any of the various mills for manufacturing hardwood lumber, including handles, wooden bowls, chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons, will find an abundance of first-class timber easily accessible. Among the attractions are two summer resorts, which are annually visited by thousands of people. The climatic advantages are unexcelled, and they who have passed one or more summers at these resorts, recuperating their strength and securing a new lease of life, are most enthusiastic in their praise of the place. Sufferers from any fever and asthmatic difficulties find here a sure relief. The shores of Pine Lake and Lake Michigan afford an excellent bathing place. The privileges for boating and fishing cannot be excelled by any other locality. In their season, lake trout, black bass, pickerel, perch, and herring abound in the waters adjacent to the village, while the game speckled trout, the fisherman's delight, make the cold waters of the Jordan and Boyne rivers, as well as those of several smaller tributaries of Pine Lake, their favorite haunts. No rivers in the lower peninsula are as famous for their choice trout as the Jordan and Boyne. The scenery from any point of view on Pine Lake is one surpassing loveliness. The surrounding country offers great inducements to progressive young farmers who desire to build homes for their families. There is an abundance of maple, elm, beech, basswood, and hemlock, and cedar timber, which with our facilities for manufacturing and shipping, generally more than pays for clearing the land. Unimproved lands are held at from $1 to $15 per acre, while improved farms average from $15 to $60 in the interior, and from $25 to $100 near Charlevoix. The principal crops are winter wheat, oats, corn, hay, clover, potatoes, and root crops. The summer resorts at Charlevoix furnish an excellent market for all sorts of garden vegetables. All fruits do well, excepting grapes and peaches. The hardier kinds of apples are especially successful and the price for the same is generally higher than the same kind of fruit grown farther south. Charlevoix county is at the northern extremity of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt.

GEO. W. MILLER,

DEALER IN

Clothing

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

Hats and Caps, Trunks and Satchels,

GLOVES MITTENS, ETC.

Buttars' Block, Charlevoix, Mich

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

Overcoats!

AND

SUITINGS

Gents' Overcoats.

Youths' Overcoats.

Boys' Overcoats

Gents' Suits.

Youths' Suits.

Boys' Suits

I have just received a large assortment of the above goods, bought at reduced rates. I am selling these goods for less than they are actually worth at wholesale. I have a line of Overcoats I am closing out at $2.00. Big bonanza for the money. Call and examine these goods and judge for yourself.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Nov., 1883.

Get Your Job Printing at the Journal Office.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 19, 1883.

Local Business Notices.

Elsewhere will be seen a card of Dickie from Mills & Carrott, of Boyne City, to the Hartford and Sun Insurance Companies, for the prompt adjustment of their claims for loss by the recent fire. These companies are old and reliable, and are represented by J. MILO EATON, the most experienced insurance agent in the county. Give him a call if you want insurance that will be met promptly in case of loss.

Buy your wife a handsome and durable French Kid Shoe for a Christmas present, now in plenty. Sold by D. Sherwood & Co.

All the Latest Styles in Ladies' Shoes and Slippers, D.V., the Cheap Food and Shoe Man. Next to Bridge Street House.

$25 REWARD for the return of Bob stolen from my stock, and conviction of the thief. L. ed. BARTHOLOMEW.

Cloaks and Dolmans—special sale for December. Don't miss this bargain at D. SHER.

Clothing AT COST, to close it out and make room for other goods.

TUTHILL, EMERY & CO.

For fresh and cheap Groceries, go to Byron Sier's. F. S.—Candies and Nuts for Xmas.

Kerosene Oil at L. D. Bartholomew's.

Picture Frames, handsome patterns on hand, any size made to order. Prices to suit the times. O. L. WHEAT.

Boots and Shoes are selling like hot cakes at D. Sher.

Nuts! Nuts! Nuts!!! Buy your nuts for Christmas, of Upright, Emery & Co.

For Sale Cheap.—Dry maple body wood from 16 inches to four feet in length. Apply to EL S. HARMON.

D. Sherwood & Co. have an assortment of Slippers which can't be beat. Just the thing for a Christmas present.

Candies, Nuts, and Toys, just the thing for Christmas. A fine assortment at O. I. Wheat's.

Everybody in the county must know that Upright, Emery & Co. are selling dry goods, Felts, Mackinaw coats, Kersaws, Fort jeans, and everything in the line of winter wear.

Clas. Ely, the cheap Boot and Shoe man, is home to stay for the winter. Prices low. Come and see. Next to Bridge street house.

Those who desire to bring in wood on subscription will confer a favor by bringing it now.

A large assortment of men's heavy boots and rubbers for winter wear, at D. Sherwood & Co.'s.

For Sale.—Two or three good horses for sale cheap for cash or good security. J. MILO EATON.

Christmas candies, a big stock to select from. TUTHILL, EMERY & CO.

Advertise this town by circulating the local news. Paper and envelopes sold at L. D. Wheat & Co.'s drug store.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

200 cords of good dry birch and maple block wood for sale. Good measure guaranteed. Call at the office of J. MILO EATON.

A large stock of Boots, Shoes, and Rubbers, at the CHEAP Boot and Shoe House. CHAS. ELY.

Storm-King Weather-Strip, at L. D. Bartholomew's.

Three hundred tons of ground feed, oats and fine meal, corn, oats, bran, and mid-dlings, at Upright, Emery & Co.'s warehouse. In their salesroom you will find crockery, tinware, wooden ware, and a complete line of dry goods and groceries.

Men's Heavy Rubbers, $1.15—a big stock. Blackfoot Socks $1.75. AT ELY'S.

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at D. D. Wheat & Co.'s drug store.

News Brevities.

R. See has new locals this week.

Go and see Ben. Butler, at Dr. Crouter's.

Thermometer at 44° at 7 o'clock this morning.

L. D. Bartholomew has new locals in this paper.

The dog Bob Stevenson is out at Campbell's yard.

Read Upright Emery & Co's new locals in this paper.

A. E. Martin and wife, of Boyne, were in town last Friday.

J. E. Clow, of Eargesse, called at the JOURNAL office last Saturday.

J. Milo Eaton advertises two or three good horses for sale cheap.

Dr. Crouter has a fine display of toys and other goods for the holidays.

Some of the finest picture frames in town can be found at O. I. Wheat's.

The band boys announce a grand masquerade ball for New Years eve.

The history of the Grand Traverse region has been commenced in the Herald.

Upright Emery & Co. have a fine display of cups and saucers in their show window.

The opera house furnace has been overhauled and repaired, and now works to satisfaction.

There seems to be a growing interest in religious services here, both church and school house being filled at morning and evening service.

Miss Jessie Stowell is teaching school in Charlevoix county.—Eaton Rapids Times.

Rev. C. F. VanAnken's subject next Sunday evening at the school house will be "The tongue."

Our readers will not fail to read the new advertisement of Miss L. Spaulding in this paper.

There was a lively runaway between here and Norwood last Wednesday evening, but nobody hurt.

Don't fail to look over O. R. Weed & Co's fine display of toilet cases. It beats anything in this region.

Thirteen persons were elected to membership in the Congregational church at their meeting on Tuesday evening.

Rev. C. F. VanAnken went to attend the Cheboygan conference on Monday last. He expects to return to-morrow.

The business card of Messrs. Fogg & Aldrich, attorneys, East Jordan, may be found in our business directory on the first page.

The M. E. Sunday school is preparing for an old time Christmas tree, and it is safe to predict a pleasant time for the little folks.

Remember the apocalyptic sermons at the M. E. church beginning with morning service next Sunday. The pastor expects to make them very interesting.

There will be an adjourned meeting of the Congregational society on Monday evening, Jan. 7th. The report of the trustees and the treasurer will then be read.

John Munro, of South Arm, made an assignment last week, liabilities $20,000, assets $5,000. It is said that the loss falls heavily on several Charlevoix capitalists.

Walter Manor, of Ironton has his hands full, having a force of 80 to 100 Indians under his charge, chopping wood. The iron company have nearly 200 men cutting wood.

Clas. Ely, the cheap boot and shoe man, favors the JOURNAL this week with locals of interest, and an inspection of his stock will convince anyone that he means what he says.

Last Friday afternoon, 7th, the Charlevoix iron works run out 2,200 pounds of iron in 28 minutes. This is considered very quick work for an institution the size of this one.

L. D. Conner advertises this week a fine line of boots and shoes. An examination of the stock and prices will convince the most skeptical that they are all that is represented.

The tug S. S. Cox, which has been at work removing the wreck of the Parsons, has nearly completed the job. There is yet one piece, so rotten that a piece breaks off every time they hitch on to it.

D. Sherwood & Co. favor the JOURNAL this week with business locals. They have on exhibition a fine line of slippers suitable for Christmas presents, as well as a full line of heavy goods for men's wear.

Don't fail to read the business locals of O. I. Wheat in this paper. Mr. Wheat has a fine stock of nuts and candies, and to his picture frames—his reputation as a thorough mechanic, will insure first-class work.

The propeller Champlain left this port this morning on her way up. This we understand is her last trip for the season. She was first vessel in this port last spring, April 26th, and has made a trip every week during the season.

Sermons from the apocalypse begin next Sunday morning at the M. E. Church. At the evening service a practical sermon. All who can are invited to join in these services. Happy are those if their shalt hear and lay it to heart.

Our readers will not fail to notice the announcement in our advertising columns, that the fire department will give another of their excellent entertainments at Lewis Hall on Monday evening, Dec. 24th. The tickets are put down to 75 cents, and a good time may be expected.

The Toledo, Ann Arbor and Northern Michigan railroad, traversing the state from the southeast to the northwest, affording direct communication with the whole length of Michigan, and giving an eastern outlet, would be one of the very best roads conceivable for Isabella, Clare, Roscommon, Kalkaska, Antrim and Charlevoix counties. We know nothing about the amount of money that can be raised along this route, (that question is left for the people to decide), but we do know that the business offering cannot be surpassed.—Kalkaskian.

G. A. R. Election of Officers.

The following officers for Baxter Post No. 119, G. A. R., were elected on Monday evening for the ensuing year:

C—E. H. Green.
S. V. C.—D. Hinchaugh.
J. V. C.—Wm. Ramsay.
Adj.—Frank Shanklat.
Surg.—D. C. Chamberlain.
Chap.—C. H. Gloss.
Q. M.—M. J. Stockman.
O. D.—J. A. Carbstein.
O. G.—H. Swanson.
S. M.—H. Newman.
Q. M. S.—L. Whitmyer.
Representative—Byron See.
Alternate—D. Flannigan.

Historical Society.

This society met at the parlors of the Bridge street house on Tuesday evening, the opening exercise being music by the ladies' band.

The historical reading for the evening was "The Revolution in Canada" by Oscar Upright.

Miss Aggie Miller gave a vocal solo entitled "Strangers Yet," which was heartily encored, and followed by another entitled "O fair Dove, O fond Dove."

After an intermission of a few minutes the ladies' band again favored the society with music.

H. Lee Hiblings gave a select reading from the works of Edgar A. Poe, followed by a vocal solo by Mrs. Kingsbury. Mrs. J. A. Carbstein recited "The Widow Bedd," followed by a storm of applause.

Prof. Rice and Miss Aggie Miller gave a violin and organ duet, followed by a select reading by Dr. Preston from the columns of a local newspaper, wherein the proceedings of this meeting were vividly portrayed.

The next meeting will be held at the parlors of Mrs. N. Ainslie.

It was voted to spend $50 in the purchase of books to add to the society's library.

Hayes.

Pleasant winter weather.

The saw mill men of this township are preparing their mills with logs.

Mr. Ross has his barn enclosed. Alex. Ross, of Charlevoix, is assisting him in doing the carpenter work.

Chas. Liddle, of Elk Rapids, has arrived here. His wife has been here several months. He has rented, and is now occupying Mr. Cross' farm.

A. W. Clow attended the M. E. Quarterly meeting at Clarion last Saturday and Sunday.

Now that Hayes has three stores, and two post offices within its boundaries we expect some ambitious citizen will apply to the legislature for an incorporation.

Willis D. Colby, oldest son of Mr. Colby of Charlevoix township is staying with Eugene Ross, and attending school at Lakeview.

Rumor reports that some of the young folks of this vicinity expect to celebrate the holidays by getting married.

Mr. A. Norman is cutting the pine timber on his farm. He has made a road "across lots" which will make it convenient for him to reach the mill. ZEKE.

Eggs and Poultry.

In these days of high prices scarcity of eggs and poultry there is a small fortune awaiting some one who will establish in Charlevoix an institution for the propagation of this kind of produce. That there is an immense profit in eggs is attested by the experience of almost every person who engages in producing them, and that the profit from them can be made as great here in Charlevoix as anywhere, we also believe to be true. There is also a lack of poultry for table use, as our home demand especially during the resort season and with our facilities for fall shipments late in the close of navigation, a good trade with Chicago or Milwaukee might be created. Incubators for hatching can be obtained at low prices, which facilitate the early and profitable raising of chicks. We shall probably refer to this subject again soon.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by UPHAM'S Real Estate Dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Dec. 4, 1883, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Joseph Shay to S. L. Tate, e ½ of n w ¼, 36-36-6 $300.

W. H. Thompson to John Stewart, n ½ of n ½, 32-34-8 $400.

John W. Lester to J. G. Peterson et al., s w ¼ of s w ¼, 12-33-8, $200.

A. E. Upright to John Griffin, lots 100 and 102, Upright's Add. to Charlevoix, $300.

Geo. Lange to Andy Jones, lots 52 and 53, Scott's Add. to Charlevoix, $200.

Geo. Lange to Moell Lange, s ½ of s w ¼ 18-33-8, $1200.

John A. Cooper to F. W. Cooper, n w ¼, 24-33-8, $200.

John F. Mason et al. to C. L. Loveday, lot 7, Mason's Add. to Boyne City, $1,000.

Wm. Mitchell to Geo. W. Fish, e ½ of s ½ of n ½, 14-32-7, $600.

Egbert Carpenter et al. to Daniel D. Fisher, n ½ of n w ¼, 27-33-8, $120.

Joseph Moore to A. E. Upright, n e ¼ of n w ¼, 2-33-8, $200.

A. E. Upright to Jane Moore, s ½ lot 4, blk. 11, Charlevoix, $200.

John S. Hurst to Daniel S. Way, lot 1, blk 3, Brown's Add. to Charlevoix, $200.

Church Election.

At the meeting of the congregational society on Tuesday evening the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Treas.—C. J. Grier.
Clerk—R. W. Kane.
Trustees—B. Suffield and E. M. Clark.
Ushers—Dan Chambers and Gardner Brown.

Important to Travelers.

Mr. L. G. Evans, of Eastport, has just finished an addition to his house, and now has accommodations for the traveling public which they have not had since the Blakely house burned last winter. This will be a great convenience to those traveling that way, and Mr. E. should be remembered.

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

AT COST!

All kinds of

Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.

They have no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY,

And Satisfaction Guaranteed.

L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House

CHARLEVOIX.

Card of Thanks.

On Dec. 5th and 6th, the gentlemanly adjusters, G. W. Chandler, of the Hartford, and H. F. Connell, of the Sun fire insurance companies, came to Boyne City to adjust the loss of the undersigned, and we express our sincere thanks for the prompt and just settlement of these companies, and would advise all who want to get their property insured to insure in these companies.

MILLS & CARROLL.

Grand Christmas Ball

AT Lewis' Hall,

TO BE GIVEN BY THE CHARLEVOIX FIRE DEPARTMENT,

On Monday Evening,

Dec. 24, 1883

Music by the Charlevoix Orchestra.

FLOOR MANAGERS,—A. E. Colgrove, A. McNeil, A. J. McLeod.

Bill 75 Cents.

Tickets for sale at O. R. Weed & Co.'s and Dr. Crouter's drug stores.

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

On weather be cannot depend,
'Tis safest to make changes,
But sure he may, if he will send
For UMBRAND Stoves and Ranges.

For Sale by L. D. BARTHOLOMEW.

READ THIS.

To every person who will pay us three dollars in cash in advance for two years' subscription to the JOURNAL, we will present one year's subscription to that peer of all weekly papers, the Detroit Weekly Free Press, which also includes that best of ladies' papers, The Household. In view of the fact that next year occurs another great political struggle, and the desire of every true patriot to be fully informed on the vital issues of the hour, we think no better offer than this can be made. It is equivalent to three papers for the price of one,—or rather, the getting of two papers as interest on one year's subscription in advance. There is no better weekly paper published than the Detroit Free Press, and every subscriber to that paper gets free a copy of The Household, devoted, as its name indicates, to matters pertaining to the home and fireside, and is in every respect a paper for the ladies.

Remember, three dollars pays for the JOURNAL two years, and secures the Free Press and Household one year free. Subscribe now. Sample copies may be seen at the JOURNAL office.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand at his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

O. R. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds,

Imported and Domestic Perfumery,

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists day and night from pure drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Bartholomew's new

Opera Block

Joseph Hyland,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Heavy blacksmithing of all kinds, and Repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

Job Printing

AT THE JOURNAL OFFICE.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. Parties wishing the prescription, will please address, Rev. E. A. WILSON, 194 Penn. St., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

PIMPLES.

I will mail (Free) the recipe for a simple vegetable balm that will remove TAN, PIMPLES, FLESH and BLOTCHES, leaving the skin soft, clear and beautiful, and will also send, in reply to a business letter, a valuable receipt of little cost for a full head of smooth hair. Address, inclosing 3c. stamp, DEO. VANDELF & CO., 12 Barclay St., N. Y.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

It is related of a minister now residing in Castleton, Vt., that he has preached fifty years on a salary running from $250 to $1,000; that forty years ago he was getting $300, had a wife and four children, and lived in a house without a carpet or a stove, and that now he has retired, and has 250 yards of carpeting and four stoves and five sons, and that the sons are scattered through the country all doing well.

HIRAM HILDEBRAND, of Manawa, Wis., recently started to lock up his cows, carrying his baby and taking his gun to kill a few partridges. While waiting at the gate for his wife, the child on his arm, the gun on the ground, his little dog jumped on the lock of the gun and the weapon went off. Five buckshot went through both hands, and one shot struck the baby on the side and came out at the top of the shoulder.

EIGHTY THOUSAND children in the North of England form the "Dickey Bird society." They are pledged to protect birds, never to destroy a nest and to feed birds in winter. It would not be a bad organization for this country. In countless voice and plumage our American birds of the woods and fields are equal to any in the world. It was a sorry piece of work to import such useless vagrants as English sparrows to take their places.

A PARTY of hunters having returned to Sioux City after an unsuccessful search for buffaloes in Montana, the Sioux City Journal sums up the recent experiences of sportsmen there, and adds that there is no herd of buffalo of any considerable size south of the British line. While the hunters were in the Judith Basin a pall of smoke settled over the country, and so dense was it that it was impossible to see objects 200 yards away. The party ascertained that it was from prairie fires set by the Indians to deter the buffalo from moving southward, as they do on the approach of winter.

TO PERPETUATE the memory of the ravages caused by the German shells in the large green-houses of the Natural History museum in Paris, which were unrivalled in the whole world, the following inscription has been engraved on one of the walls of the building: "The Jardin des Plantes Medicinales, founded at Paris in 1626 by an edict of the King, which became the Natural History museum in 1794, was bombarded under the reign of William I., King of Prussia, Count Bismarck, Chancellor, by the Prussian army in the night of Jan. 9, 1871. Until then it had been respected by all parties and all national and foreign powers."

AN organ which has just been built in Germany is believed to be the largest in existence. It counts 174 registers and is worked automatically by an Otto gas motor of four-horse power. Its height is twenty metres, its width eleven, and its depth ten. Its largest wooden pipe is ten metres long and of a cubical capacity of 2,000 litres. The instrument is to be set up in the Cathedral of Riga. For the St. Stephen's Cathedral of Vienna the same builders are soon to construct a still larger organ. The well-known organs of Boston, Ulm and St. Petersburg were built by the same men.

A GLASGOW Professor has advanced the theory that there is a magnetic sense, distinct from the other senses, resident in every person and that through it we acquire of affinities and antagonisms that cannot be otherwise accounted for. We often conceive a dislike for a person entirely without a reason that we can assign to ourselves, when everything would seem to warrant a different feeling, and this peculiar instinct the Professor thinks to be the operation of a definite sense, which is quite as effective and true as the sense of sight or hearing, and is often more reliable than the deductions of reason. Perhaps this seventh sense might be cultivated to good service.

YOKOHAMA (Japan) letter: The Japanese Government forbids stock speculating, and the authorities recently determined to arrest at the same moment all offenders on the stock exchanges at Osaki, Yokohama and Kobe, as well as on the two exchanges at Tokio and some other important centers. The police received their orders only on the morning of the day fixed, and in strong force, all wearing some sort of disguise, proceeded to the vicinity of the exchanges and mingled with the crowd, so as to escape observation. At a little after 11 o'clock all was in readiness, a sign was given, and before the amazed spectators could make out what was going on, the exchanges were in possession of the police, the doors locked and the prisoners secured. All the books, papers, etc., were then taken possession of, and the police's whole haul removed to the Central police station. Over 700 dollaymonts were put in prison, the offense with which they were charged being "speculating in margins."

A NEW ORLEANS newspaper recently made a tabulated statement comparing the tax assessment in several Southern States for the years 1870 and 1883 as follows:

STATES.	Assessment 1870.	Ratio of Assessment to Ex.	Assessment 1879.	Ratio of Assessment to Ex.
Alabama	$ 16,626,111	5%	$ 36,585,787	5%
Arkansas	13,000,000	7	26,872,541	4%
Georgia	33,000,000	5	75,171,000	4
Louisiana	20,000,000	5	105,000,000	5
Mississippi	16,000,000	5	125,000,000	5
Tennessee	32,000,000	5	232,000,000	5
Texas	30,000,000	5	300,000,000	5
Totals	$ 161,626,111	5½	$ 901,622,128	5

It appears from this that the value of taxable property in eight Southern States has increased nearly $500,000,000 within four years. In the same States the railroad mileage has increased from 11,634 to 17,801 miles within the same period, the value of the agricultural products has grown from $383,000,000 in 1879 to $567,000,000 in 1883, an increase of $160,000,000.

THROUGHOUT England and Wales there are 544 banks, which, at the close of November, 1882, had 1,172,107 accounts remaining open. There was then owing to the depositors nearly £95,000,000. Scotland has fifty-three banks, which had 303,231 accounts open in November, with an amount of £7,000,000 owing to depositors. The number of accounts and the amount deposited, when compared with the number of banks, were considerably larger than in the southern part of the kingdom. In Ireland the accounts and money are still smaller, in proportion, for, while she had thirty-one banks, she had only 52,101 accounts, with £3,082,413 due to depositors. For last year alone, however, the average amount of receipts from depositors was largest in Ireland, reaching £6 1s 1d. In England and Wales the average was £1 8s, and in Scotland £3 4s 10d. In England and Wales the average amount of payments to depositors £8 1s 6d, in Scotland it was £5 18s 7d, and in Ireland £7 8s 7d. The rate of interest paid to depositors averaged in England £2 11s 6d, in Scotland, £2 14s 1d, and in Ireland £2 13s 2d.

"THE Twentieth Century, an organ for the development of natural views on the world and life," is the title of a periodical which is to be shortly published in Vienna. The prospectus promises "to make the new paper a supplement and counteracter of the daily press, to establish vegetarianism as the practical religion, and to make it of cosmopolitan importance." Revolutionary ideas, which can hardly be believed to have sprung up under the gentle influence of cauliflower and radishes, are energetically expressed in the prospectus, in which appears the following passage: "We have succeeded in gaining a footing in non-vegetarian circles. At the same time we have made many bitter enemies, and this is just what we are proud of. It is our endeavor to shake all parties out of their sleepiness and scornful indifference. They must learn that vegetarians are neither sentimentalists nor blockheads. They must perceive that vegetarianism is an almighty, all-including idea. They must be our enthusiastic friends or our furious, passionate enemies. We are determined to fight against demoralizing influences; pathos, eloquence, fun, satire, irony and correcting sarcasm will all alike be welcome in the columns of the Twentieth Century. We have made it our aim to assist in introducing vegetarianism, the universal power, for its whole nature justifies it in taking such a place. Aphrodite-Urania's flaming dentic crown, that of beauty and truth, floats above vegetarianism."

AN English clergyman writes that there are 4,000 unemployed clergymen in the Church of England, many of whom are both able and willing to work, but who cannot find anything to do.

LORD BACON considered early gray hair no sign of physical decay.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

Perverseness.

Dear Polly, these are lawful days!
Your feet can choose their own sweet ways;
You have no care of anything,
Flies with a sunbeam on the wing,
Free as the birds that sing
To find a free-hearted sister.

But this I tell you, Polly dear,
One thing in life you need not hear:
Do what you will, or where you go,
Be sure to work for what she wants,
And learn to be a good housekeeper
To beat a poor Lancashire!

The little leaf is not so spry,
As it may seem to Indian eyes;
Ah! Polly, Polly, don't you sigh,
Wings are for willing hands,
To bind the harvest home!
You need your four-footed friend,

Your patience may have long to wait,
Whether in little things or great,
Ere Dolly's wrong ways will win him,
Nor course to these ends will lead
Who hands the hay-loaded wagon
Will mind the hay-loaded wagon.
Sarah Doan Jewett, in St. Nicholas.

Dolly's Broken Nose.

Such a doll as little Pinky Fairweather had given her on her birthday, hardly anybody ever saw! It was a baby doll, and wore long clothes. Her mat was a lace cap, with crimson little blue satin ribbons run through it. It had a white merino blanket all bound around with blue, to match, and over so many things. Then it had a bassinet to sleep in, instead of a common cradle. When she laid it down it would shut its large blue eyes, just like the sleepiest baby in the world.

Every day when Pinky went out to walk she carried Dolly. Sometimes she drew her in a tiny carriage. The carriage had a horse line, with white stars on it. Pinky's aunt said it was the prettiest doll's blanket ever seen. But Pinky liked best to carry Dolly in her arms. She thought her long white robe and crimson cloak made her look just like a real baby, and she herself like a real little mother. Sometimes she would overhear another little girl say in the street:

"Oh, mamma, see what a beautiful dolly!"

Then Pinky was very proud indeed. She always walked an extra block after that, in hopes of hearing it again. Perhaps Pinky was too proud. Perhaps she forgot about the hundreds of poor little girls who have no dolls at all, not even a rag-baby. I don't know. But this is what happened. The doll fell out of her lap one day, and broke its nose. Pinky shed copious of tears, and ran off to her aunt for comfort.

"Never mind," said aunty; and she sent for some strong cement. Then she put dolly's nose in the oven, and heated it very hot. After this the cement was rubbed on, and the nose became clear as a new one. Dolly was better than ever. Pinky thought so, and she laid Dolly away in the sun to dry.

"Don't you move the heatest bit," said Pinky to her. "If you do, you nose will never grow on is the world."

Dolly seemed to understand, and kept quite still, although the hot sun streamed full into her poor little face. After a long time aunty took her up, and painted over the crack, but it always looked like a scar. Then Pinky sometimes heard another little girl say: "What a pity that beautiful doll got its nose broken!" But it served Pinky Fairweather right, she was too proud."—Our Little Ones.

Trouble.

It began just where all trouble does, down in the bottom of a wicked heart. Then weak people, and thoughtless people, and people hoping it may do good, Col. Burr was the man who began the trouble. What he wanted was to be President of the United States. He tried hard and received the same number of votes that Jefferson did. But Congress decided in favor of Jefferson, and made Col. Burr Vice-President. A disappointed man was Col. Burr. And instead of trying to recover from it, he tried to nurse his wrath, and make it grow stronger. Of course, he succeeded.

Gen. Hamilton was a man who had a great deal of influence; he did not believe that Col. Burr would make a good President, and said so. Then Col. Burr called him his enemy. I'll tell you what sort of an enemy he had been. One morning the Colonel came to him in great trouble. He owed $10,000; and unless he could raise the money he must go to prison. Before the date that the money was to be paid, Gen. Hamilton had it ready for him. But Col. Burr had forgotten all that. Finding that he must give up the idea of being President, he thought the next best thing was to be Governor of New York. So he worked hard for that.

One day there was a dinner party of gentlemen, among whom was Gen. Hamilton. The talk was about Col. Burr. Gen. Hamilton was asked what he thought of the Colonel. "Why," said he, "I don't think he is the one to please for Governor. In some respects I am afraid he is a dangerous man."

Don't you know some boys and girls who are always heedlessly repeating what people say, without stopping to think whether it will make trouble? There are a few such men, or used to be, and one of the guests at that dinner party went home and wrote to a friend just what Gen. Hamilton had said. What do you suppose the friend did? Published the letter in a newspaper. He could not have been simply thoughtless; he must have known that it would make trouble; and he must have known that it was a mean thing to do. Oh, what an angry man was Col. Burr. He said Gen. Hamilton must take back what he had said. But how was a man to take back his opinion that another would not make a good Governor when he still thought so? However he offered an apology which the angry man would not accept, and proceeded to prove that he was not fit to be Governor, by showing that he could not govern himself.

In those days duels were very common affairs. If two men became angry, what did they do but shoot pistols at one another, each trying to kill the other? Col. Burr sent a challenge to Gen. Hamilton. That is, an invitation, in our language, to meet him in a duel. There is a spot on the Hudson river called Weehawken, and on that spot one morning at sunrise these two men met. Both went to fire together when the word of command was given. But it is said that Gen. Hamilton did not fire at all.

As they bore him wounded and dying from the place, he said: "I had no ill-will toward Burr; I did not intend to fire."

I don't know that there was ever greater excitement in New York than when the news of the duel spread among the people. Col. Burr seemed to be the only calm man in the city; he went home to breakfast as though nothing had happened. But he did not stay calm very long. He expected to be praised as a brave man; instead, he awoke to find himself called a murderer. All over the North the people were ablaze with indignation. He was obliged to escape in the night, and run for his life. However, this is one of the many stories which prove that God can make good come out of evil.

From that time duels ceased to be the fashion. A few angry men still fought them, but they knew that they would be disgraced in the eyes of all upright and respectable people by doing so. Ministers preached against duelling as a sin; editors wrote against it; people everywhere talked against it; and at last it became a crime. Sometimes when angry men could get up to settle their quarrels in this way. It was in June, 1801, when Gen. Hamilton was killed. Not quite eighty years ago.

If any insane couple should undertake to fight a duel in these days, what would be thought of them?—The Penny.

Healthy Women.

A writer, in urging the necessity for more attention to physical culture, notes as a favorable sign the fact that "the pale interesting" type of beauty is fast losing its popularity, and that men of position and influence are declaring for the healthy standard of womanly beauty, such as was ever recognized by Greece and Rome. This is certainly an important and happy change in public taste, and already the effects of it are to be detected in an increased condition of feminine health; for it will hardly be denied that on an average the women of to-day are physically superior to what they were a few years ago, when tight lacing and similar destroying customs prevailed.

Young women take more exercise than they formerly did. They ride and walk more and more in the open air. They have not the insane dread of the sun's rays which they once had. But there is much room for improvement yet. Many diseases are still prevalent over by invalid wives and mothers, who furnish a constant spectacle of sadness and misery to their family and friends, and are a subject of unlimited expense to their husbands. But such homes the greatest of all blessings that could be hoped for would be the health of the mistress—a blessing, too, that may require very different treatment and diet.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

MANY useful inventions have been at first mere toys. Edison is sometimes reproached with having invented in the phenagraph a scientific toy. Prof. Lankester said in his Presidential address to the British association that "the microscope, which was a drawing-room toy 100 years ago, has in the hands of devoted and gifted students of nature, been the means of giving us knowledge which, on the one hand, has saved thousands of surgical patients from terrible pain and death, and, on the other hand, has laid the foundation of that new philosophy with which the name of Darwin will forever be associated."

The Mysterious Author of "Rutledge."

A popular novel by a Southern writer, published by T. C. Derby, was "Rutledge," which made a stir equaled by few novels to-day. This novel also met with a relish when it first came North, and was rejected by Messrs. Harper. The story is a strange one, the name of the heroine never being mentioned in it. A mode of the author, Mr. Weeks, brought the manuscript to Mr. Derby and said that the author did not wish to be known. Mr. Derby replied that he never published a book without knowing who wrote it, and that he must decline the manuscript on such terms. Mr. Weeks then offered to publish it at his own expense if Mr. Derby would put his imprint on it. This he declined to do also. So a meeting was arranged, and Mr. Derby met Miss Miriam Coles, the sister of the day was: "Who is the author of 'Rutledge?'" and everybody was anxious to hear the answer. Mr. Derby, who has a keen appreciation of the humorous, got the editors of the Daily Pale to announce that in a certain number they would publish a portrait of the author of "Rutledge." Expectation was on tiptoe. The number appeared, and there stood the peaceful figure of a lady outlined against the page; last also, the face was covered with a veil.—Exchange.

THE best paid State office in Ohio is said to be the Private Secretaryship to the Governor. The salary is only $600, but the fees make it worth about $8,000.

CURIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC.

THE oldest midwife in Paris has been in practice since 1815, and during sixty-eight years in Japan; even in the two commercial quarters of the large town—based every house has its garter, and with its tiny dwarf shrubs, these dwarf shrubs and trees probably are their origin to the narrow limits of space and their production is carried on to such a ridiculous degree that a dwarf pine tree, the latter in full bloom, covering and thriving. The price paid for this bahumed curiosity was $1,000. The method of dwarfing trees is by checking the circulation of the sap, cramping the extension of the branches, chilling the roots in flat earthen pots, which are kept constantly cool and wet. Many dwarf plants have edged or variegated leaves, and the production of such varieties, both dwarfed and in the natural size, is a remarkable with Japanese gardeners. In the portions of the garden immediately adjoining the house, no tree or shrub is allowed to retain its natural size, either one-seen fans, strips in full oval, round tables, cumbrelas, large conveys and other, recumbent wh. A neat, street-like turf covers the ground, and the clean gravel paths are lined with gay shrubs, dwarf trees and flower vases. From the artificial nature the mossy little rocks to which the lichen and every conceivable shape and. Such specks require too much attention to admit of wide extension, and so they generally occupy but comparatively small spaces in front of the house. Rich, proud people have these green benders, where nature's rules are reversed, the sun's natural culture and the usage of "good sense" beyond. Without they's live, the larger part of the garden, where space is left more to herself. Japanese gardens look most beautiful toward the end of autumn, when the foliage of the maples becomes bright, purple hue, and the many leaved and very trees are dotted in dark purple tints. About the time, too, the winter chrysanthemums blossom; it is the favorite flower of the Japanese, who possess countless varieties of it. The size and splendor of some of these blooms are often merely a Jonquilles, or Gardener's Chronicle.

Sensation in Plants.

M. Figuier believes that a plant has sensations of the character of pain, and, for instance, he says, affects it equally by a sharp knife and a blunt one, and, since under a sudden or violent expression of temperature. An animal, deprived of its heart, he says, ceases to suffer, for its nervous system, or the heart is excessive, is blown up in the heart, small, fold themselves together and wither; when the cold, the plant remains straight, and the plant remains straight and undisturbed appears. Dr. Dragon, who has made a study of the plants, for which they are watered and fed, and through the same means of satisfaction. The sensitive seemed to be the finger, or only which is carried in the hand, and dig the petals and contraries itself. Indeed, Hydrodinamic and Electric Sensitive, and

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 13, 1883.

PITH AND POINT.

—Texas is a great State for ants. Sullivan ought to go there. Doesn't the Scripture say, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard?"—Exchange.

—Somebody out West is trying to find out how many mules there are in the country. We give it up. It's a question of mule-implication.—Boston Star.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Pacendorfer's Condition Powders unsurpassed. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. H. Wood & Co. 3-3

—Brown, being invited to assist at his friend Robinson's wedding, said he couldn't give the bride away, but he could give the groom dead away if occasion required.—Chicago Times.

—Those who have lost their money in Chicago lard can feelingly say that their fortune has grown "small by degrees and beautifully less."—Pittsburgh Telegraph.

—"Yes," says Mrs. Parvenu, "we have taken a shanty at Newport on Maria's account—she's twenty-six, you know, and we will entertain in as hospital style as any of the others."—N. Y. Graphic.

The greatest pain-killer yet found for Cramps, Colic, Stitch in side or back, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Sprains, Bruises, &c., is Hamilton's Jamaica Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure. Bound on with hot wet cloths, it never fails to cure. For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, sick headache, flatulence, diarrhea, dysentery, heartburn, sour stomach, &c., it is unequalled. Warranted vegetable. Unbolts internally and externally. Visit cabinet in one. Try it. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by O. H. Wood & Co.

—Harper's Bazar is authority for the dictum that a widow should be married in a bonnet. In our opinion this idea is wrong. By the time the widow has selected the style of bonnet in which she wishes to appear at the ceremony the groom will have lost patience and gone elsewhere for a wife. The last thing for a widow to be married in is a hurry. Unless she has money. This she can take her time.—Rochester (N. Y.) Post-Express.

Millions of persons die annually who might be saved if attention was given to the little ills of life. Coughs, Colds, sore Throat, &c., are easily cured by using Hamilton's Cough Balsam, which removes the tickling in the throat and tightness across the inflamed membranes. Immediate relief will be found in Croup, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, &c., and even in chronic cases and last stage of consumption great relief is experienced. For incipient consumption it works like a charm. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. H. Wood & Co.

—Mrs. Lovebirds (from her window, to new hired servant, who is at work in the garden): "What are you doing in the petunia bed, Norah?" "Sthuck I'm pullin up all the wild carrots, 'an 'an' I'll have it all wed in a minuh, 'an.'" "Are you sure that you know the weeds 'from the young plants?" "Faith, I am, 'am. They smell just like tame carrots, 'an' an' I smells every wan soon's I pulls it up, 'an.'"—Harper's Bazar.

Are your children peevish and sickened? Do they have abnormal appetites and crave food constantly? Beware of worms. Very few children escape their ravages. No child can be happy or well while suffering with worms. They sap the very life by preventing the digestion and assimilation of food. There is a remedy. It is called Parsons's Vermifuge Worm Candies. They are perfectly harmless, but will quickly dislodge the worm and pass them out through the bowels. Buy no other. Price 25 cts per box. Sold by O. H. Wood & Co.

A PHILADELPHIA undertaker advertises for bearded men to assist him in his business. Being questioned by a representative of the Press, he said that he found that the public, especially the bereaved public, had more confidence in bearded men, had more respect for them. There was a solemn dignity about them that comported admirably with everything pertaining to funerals.

Enrich the blood. Hamilton's German Bitters are highly recommended for all diseases requiring a certain and efficient tonic. Especially indigestion, dyspepsia, want of appetite, loss of strength, lack of energy, &c. They enrich the blood, strengthen the muscles, and give new life to the nerves. They act like a charm in the digestive organs, remove all dyspeptic symptoms, and whatever the stomach is weak or there is a general loss of physical vigor, these bitters are just what you need. Only 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. H. Wood & Co.

—Johnny had come home from school several times within a month with ugly bruises on his face and body received in fights with his schoolmates, and on the last occasion his mother threatened him with severe punishment if he ever engaged in a fight again. Only a few days after the small chap appeared with a black eye, and, scored by the stern maternal greeting, "Well, ma?" he departed from his usual truthful ways, and stammered: "I fell down and hit my head on a stone." "And which got the worst of it?" asked big brother. "Oh, the other fellow, you bet," answered Johnny briskly. "He's gone home with two black eyes."—Harper's Bazar.

Cheap Reading.

To every person who will pay us three dollars in cash in advance for two years' subscription to the Journal, we will present one year's subscription to that peer of all weekly papers, the Detroit Weekly Free Press, which also includes that best of ladies' papers, The Household. In view of the fact that next year occurs another great political struggle, and the desire of every true patriot to be fully informed on the vital issues of the hour, we think no better offer than this can be made. It is equivalent to three papers for the price of one,—or rather, the getting of two papers at interest on one year's subscription in advance. There is no better weekly paper published than the Detroit Free Press, and every subscriber to that paper gets free a copy of The Household, devoted, as its name indicates, to matters pertaining to the home and fireside, and is in every respect a paper for the ladies.

Remember, three dollars pays for the JOURNAL two years, and secures the Free Press and Household one year free. Subscribe now.

IN YE OLDEN TIME.

The New England Meeting-House of the Forefathers, and its influence on generations.

An Eastern publication not long ago printed a most delightful article from the pen of President Porter, its subject being the "New England Meeting-House," which the author considers to be the symbol of much that is characteristic of New England life, as it has been the rallying point for nearly everything distinctive in the New England communities. Out of the church grew the town, or, rather, the town was evolved or developed along with the church. The church was the germ and the meeting-house the center of the self-governed commonwealth. The name "meeting-house" is significant. The edifice was used for religious and civic transactions, and, to the early New Englander both were equally solemn and sacred. There was no warrant in scripture for calling an edifice a church.

President Porter gives an extremely interesting account of the way in which the original structures were built, and of the gradual variations of the original type as years went on. The erection of the Old South Church in 1729-30 was the most important advance in the evolution of the New England meeting-house, and became the typical model of all such places of worship for nearly a century. Among the best of the edifices of this type which survive are the sanctuaries in Farmington and Westfield. (The latter has just now lost many of its quaint features by "restoration.")

With the present century and its advance in wealth and culture, the meeting-house began to assume a form more like that of London church architecture, and of this sort of work we have admirable specimens in Park Street Church, Boston, the Center and North churches in New Haven, and those in Guilford, Springfield, and elsewhere.

The first steeple in Connecticut was erected in Guilford in 1726.

The interior of the meeting-houses was bare and unattractive. Pews were of slow growth. There were no means of lighting them until singing schools made it necessary to introduce candles and rude chandeliers. Night meetings in these sanctuaries were not approved. There were no stoves for a long time, and at first no foot-stoves. The New England meeting-house was not artifically warmed until from 1810 to 1820. President Porter remembers such scenes as, he says, "makes us shiver as we think of them. Of a cold winter morning the breath of the worshipers not unfrequently would seem like smoke from an hundred furnaces as it came in contact with the frosty atmosphere." These severities were mitigated by the free hospitality of the houses near the meeting-house. Enormous kitchen fires were kept blazing, around which scores of people gathered to thaw themselves out and eat their luncheons. At summer noons the farmers would gather in knots here and there, and the women would get together in groups, and they had a very cozy and gossipy time of it.

In some families there was a Sabbath-day house erected near the sanctuary, with ample fireplaces for the comfort of worshipers.

The meeting-house usually was the central building in the village, as being the most important. It stood within or fronting the "green." Rouse radiated from it. It was not until a later date that the sanctuary was placed upon the high hill, where it could be seen afar, and so that several of these meeting-houses were within range of vision, guarding, like sentinels, the hill country. President Porter gives a faithful and charming description of the spiritual churches that had their homes in these plain meeting-houses. They at first had no written creed, though their views of truth lacked neither definiteness nor positiveness. Their pastors were settled for life, and when meeting-house was built and pastor settled, "a golden candlestick was set up" in that place.

The meeting-house must needs be "seated"—places assigned to each member of the community. In New Haven's first meeting-house the sexes were separated, and the seating was according to rank and dignity. The doctrine of equality in place, station and honor in church and State was no part of the Puritan creed. In the first generations attendance on worship was enforced. There was then compulsory public worship as now we have compulsory education of children. Until the year 1818, in Connecticut, and till some years later in Massachusetts, every citizen was compelled to support some religious organization by a tax on his estate. Thus was formed the excellent habit of regular attendance at the sanctuary on the Lord's day. A graphic picture is given of the gathering of a country congregation from a widespread township on a pleasant Sunday morning. What a variety of vehicles, of horses, of dress, of pace, of demeanor! Then the meetings, with various gossip, with secret "swappings," with care of expecting horses, with stealthy glances and flirtations of young folks, and no end of news exchanging.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 75 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Democrat, By mail, $5.00 per year in advance, or 10c per week.

Weekly Democrat, $1.50 per year; 75 cents for six months; 50 cents for three months—invariably in advance. Address,

THE DEMOCRAT,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

$1 A YEAR. $1

ONE DOLLAR. ONE DOLLAR.

$1 A YEAR. $1

TWO PAPERS FOR THE PRICE OF ONE

THE WEEKLY Detroit Free Press

AND

THE HOUSEHOLD

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

Ten Large Pages of News and Reading Matter.

Two Large Pages of Choice Literature, Poetry, Miscellany, Fashions, Household Matters, Agriculture, Science, Sunday Reading, Temperance Matter, Sabbath Reading, Miscellaneous Selections, Humorous Sketches, Etc., Etc.

FREE PRESS CO., Detroit, Mich.

$1 A YEAR. $1

ONE DOLLAR. ONE DOLLAR.

$1 A YEAR. $1

CHICAGO WEEKLY HERALD

The Largest, Best, and Most Complete Newspaper ever sent

One Year for $1.00.

EIGHT LARGE PAGES,

Containing the News of the Day, Agricultural and other matter interesting to the farmer and his family, complete Market Reports, Stories, Sketches, etc. Sample copies free. Address

CHICAGO WEEKLY HERALD,
Chicago, Ill.

If you want a daily paper try

The Chicago Herald,

An enterprising, fearless, and reliable Chicago daily that has been a great success because of its excellence in every particular. It presents all the news every day on four large pages and at a price that permits its being taken by everybody. For sale by all newsdealers. Send on trial by mail, postage paid, six days each week, for TWO MONTHS FOR ONE DOLLAR. Address

THE CHICAGO HERALD,
130 and 132 Fifth ave., Chicago, Ill.
JAMES W. SCOTT, Publisher.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 23. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1883. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

is published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

Office over T. D. Smith's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Business Directory.

ATTORNEYS.

CHURCHILL & GRIER, Attorneys at Law. Office in Holmes' Block, Charlevoix, Mich. A. D. CHURCHILL. A. J. GRIER.

PAGE & ALDRICH, Attorneys at Law, East Jordan, Mich.

REED W. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Business promptly attended to. MONEY TO LOAN.

H. L. JESSEY, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

J. A. CRANE, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

NORTON & KEAT, Attorneys at Law. Office Simmons' N. Block, Boyne City, Mich.

ISAAC P. WINNER, Attorney and Solicitor, U. S. Patent Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX, Capital $50,000. Transacts a general banking business. Money to loan on approved security. Interest allowed on time deposits. Sight drafts and collections made on favorable terms. Exchange on Eastern cities for sale. BROWNSLOW & BROWN.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. Sunday services at 10:30 A. M. and 7 P. M. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7 o'clock. Seats free. A. J. T. DOWNING, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10:30 A. M. and 7 P. M. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer and praise meeting Thursday evening at 7. J. T. HOUSTON, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOPE AND READY FIRE COMPANY meet the first and third Thursday evenings of each month at the town hall. A. F. BRUNS, Secretary.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. A. CHRISTIN, M. D. Office at his residence.

L. LEWIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office in Lewis' Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. W. FENTON, M. D., Surgeon and Homœopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HORACE S. HARSHA, Notary Public, Real Estate Loan Agent, Charlevoix, Mich.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

A. A. E. Charlevoix Post No. 101, meets second Monday in each month, at odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F. Charlevoix Lodge No. 362, meets every Tuesday evening, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. G. T.—Sound Lake Lodge No. 592, meets every Wednesday evening, in their hall.

K. O. T. M.—Charlevoix Tent No. 167, meets on or before full moon in Odd Fellows' hall.

MAYNARD, Charlevoix Lodge No. 262, meets every one of before full moon. Hall over Stratton's.

A. E. TERRILL,
Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,
CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

Approved banking business transacted. Money to loan on approved security. Collections promptly made. Interest allowed on time deposits. Drafts and remittances made promptly.

A. E. TERRILL, Cashier.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

EVERYTHING

In the line of

Furniture

AND

Undertakers' Goods

Can be found at the old reliable house of

H. C. Cooper,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

COME AND SEE US BEFORE BUYING.

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS.

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING,

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US.

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

GO TO

Dr. G. W. CROUTER'S DRUG STORE.

Santa Claus' Headquarters.

An Immense Line to Choose From.

SENATOR ANTHONY

OF RHODE ISLAND,

THE PROBABLE SUCCESSOR OF SENATOR EDMUNDS AS PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Upon the accession of vice president Arthur to the presidency in September, 1881, the senate at its next session elected as its president pro tem. David Davis, of Illinois, whose term of office as senator expired on the 3d of March, 1883. Just before the expiration of his term Mr. Davis resigned the presidency of the senate, and Geo. E. Edmunds, senator from Vermont, was elected as his successor. Mr. Edmunds' senatorial term not expiring until 1887. This procedure was necessary in order that the presidency of the senate should not be vacant during the interim between the forty seventh and forty-eighth congresses. Had Mr. Davis not resigned the expiration of his senatorial term would have left the country without a legal successor to President Arthur, because the latter had died before the senate of the forty-eighth congress had elected a presiding officer pro tem. Mr. Edmunds therefore was practically made vice president of the United States, and will remain such until the present senate elects a successor.

It is now well known in official circles that Senator Edmunds does not wish to continue in his present position as presiding officer of the senate, it being his desire to accompany his family to the Bermudas for the health of his wife. The republican majority have therefore indicated a disposition to choose the subject of our illustration, Mr. Edmunds's successor, and this event seemed only to await the recovery of Senator Anthony from his late illness and his appearance upon the floor of the senate.

SENATOR ANTHONY'S RECORD.

Henry B. Anthony, of Providence, Rhode Island, was born in Coventry that state, April 1st, 1815, of Quaker ancestry. He graduated at Brown university in 1833, and in 1838 he assumed the editorial charge of the Providence Journal, which he retained until called to a seat in the United States senate. He was elected governor of his native state in 1849, he was re elected in 1850, and thereafter declined to accept the candidacy for another term.

He was elected to the United States senate as a union republican, to succeed Philip Allen, democrat, and took his seat in 1859, his term expiring in 1865. During this term he served as chairman of the committee on printing. Mr. Anthony has been returned as his own successor each expiring term ever since, his present term ending March 3, 1889. He was elected president of the senate pro tem March 23, 1869, and was re-elected March 10, 1871.

Senator Anthony was a member of the national committee, appointed to accompany the remains of president Lincoln to Illinois, and was one of the senators designated by the senate to attend the funeral of General Scott, in 1866, and was also a delegate to the Philadelphia loyalists convention, held in that year. He is one of the most popular members of the senate, and his elevation to its presidency a third time is at present strongly indicated.

Protection From Poverty.

Iron mills and manufacturing establishments of various kinds are shutting down in different sections of the country, and large numbers of men are thrown out of employment. There are various estimates as to the number, some of which place it as high as fifteen thousand in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. With each announcement of the suspension of a mill there comes a wail from the manufacturers and their organs for more "protection." Accompanying this wail is a denunciation of those who ask for a revision of the blighting tariff laws. There is no doubt that certain branches of the iron industry are depressed, and as little doubt that the huge establishments engaged in the manufacture of steel rails could do business at a fair profit should they choose to do so.

The cause of depression is overproduction. The markets are glutted and business of all kinds is dull. Manufacturing has been pushed to extremes by the stimulus of high duties on imports, which, in many cases, have been prohibitory. The latest argument made by David A. Wells on this point at the free trade meeting in New York not long ago was so clear and plain as to be convincing to most men, at least who will examine it fairly. We have a limited market, because our manufactured articles do not go beyond our own borders. The restrictions imposed upon trade operate to shut us out of foreign markets. The president in his message made a complaint—it might be called a whine—about barriers to trade in Germany, France, Australia, and Brazil. If we close our ports against their commerce, what can we naturally expect from them but retaliation?

It may be said that we could not export in any event because we cannot compete. It is true we cannot compete under the present tariff code, because of the resultant great increase to cost of production. Besides, we cannot sell because we refuse to buy. True, we have a continent and fifty-six millions of people for a market, but the proof of over-production is shown by the stagnation in business, there is no stringency in the money market to cause this.

The manufacturers, with all of the alleged advantages offered by the alleged tariff laws, shut down their mills and turn their men adrift. Where is the protection to the laboring man? He will not be interested in the discussion of abstract questions of political economy while his family are without fire and without food in midwinter. The professions of benevolence so frequently made on his account by his tariff baron employers will fall on unheeding ears, or fall only to awaken bitter scorn.

Will the outlook of the unemployed operative be made more cheerful by the thought that there are about two thousand articles in our tariff schedules, and that whatever he may require from among these to shelter or clothe or feed him, or in any way add to the meager comforts of himself and family, must cost him from 30 to 100 per cent more because they are "protected" by a monstrous tariff tax? It is a dreary look ahead for him. Without work, without money, and the rigors of winter at hand, he sees only the destitution which robs life of its worth, and makes of it an exhausting struggle for a wretched existence. This is the dark outlook to-day of thousands on thousands of workmen in iron, steel, and other yet "protected" industries. And yet it is pretended by the tariff monopolists that "protection" benefits the workingman!

—Grand Rapids Democrat.

The tariff on salt is not a very heavy one but it is just heavy enough to secure the monopoly of the great salt combination. It is 8 cents per 100 pounds in bulk, and 12 cents in packages. Mr. Horr gets into a state of mild insanity when any one suggests a reduction of it, but there is really not the slightest occasion for his excitement. Michigan salt could easily get along without help, and the farmers and meat packers would save just so much in their business. Meat packing in Detroit is as important an industry as salt making in Saginaw. Why should the meat packers be compelled to pay a tax of 8 cents on a cask, or a mill, for the support of Mr. Horr's constituents? The fishermen of New England get a rebate for salt used in preserving fish. Why should our packers and farmers get a rebate for salt used in preserving meat, and why should not every citizen get a rebate for salt used in preserving his own flesh and blood? In a word why should any one pay a penny of tax to the salt monopolists?—Evening News.

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at O. H. Wood & Co's drug store.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX, Capital $50,000. Transacts a general banking business. Money to loan on approved security. Interest allowed on time deposits. Sight drafts and collections made on favorable terms. Exchange on Eastern cities for sale. BROWNSLOW & BROWN.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Prices reasonable. W. S. JOHNSON,
Opposite R. R. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is entirely healthy, and its present reputation excellent. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only simple rooms for travelers.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, - Michigan.

Only a few convenience for the traveling public. Headquarters for the Pelosky and Eli Smith Stages.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILES, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

Home thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at ten dollars each. All new and have four drawers.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. S. HAY.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, county of Charlevoix, ss.—In the matter of the estate of Joel Stone, late of Charlevoix, deceased, notice is hereby given, that in pursuance of an order granted by the judge of probate, a hearing will be held at the house of Louis Seif, in the county of Charlevoix, in said state, on Saturday, the twenty-second day of December, A. D. 1883, at one o'clock in the afternoon, of said day, for the purpose of examining and allowing the final account of said deceased, therein, and for the purpose of assigning and distributing the residue of said deceased, therein, the following described real estate, to wit: The south half of the northwest quarter of the north half of the southwest quarter, and the east half of the southeast quarter, except ten acres in the southeast corner of said described land, forty acres in all.

HOLDEN WILLIS,
Administrator.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, county of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the probate court for the county of Charlevoix, held at the probate office in the village of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of December, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three. Present, Reuben Mc Donald, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of SHAWWAWKEPENAYSE, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Mary Ann Shawwawkepenayse, praying that a certain instrument in writing filed in the probate office in the village of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of December, A. D. 1883, and purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, may be examined and allowed, and that the administration of said estate be granted to the petitioner, or some other suitable person, and it appearing to be for the benefit of the persons concerned that the petition should not be granted, and it appearing that the time for proving said will and for the person last named in said petition to act as executor thereof, and for all persons interested in said matter to appear and be heard upon the petition, should not be granted, and it appears that notice of this order has been published in The Journal, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county of Charlevoix for four successive weeks previous to this time.

It is ordered that the petition, duly verified, be heard at the house of Louis Seif, in the village of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of January, A. D. 1884, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day, for the hearing of said petition, and that the said executor therein named be and appear at the time and place aforesaid, and all other persons interested in said estate may then and there appear and show cause why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted, and it is further ordered that said executor give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in The Journal, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county of Charlevoix for three successive weeks previous to said time of hearing.

A true copy. JAYNES & STRAW,
Judge of Probate. Attorneys.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed by Peter Stimpson, Mary Stimpson, his wife, of the town of Eveline, Charlevoix county, Mich., to Lucius Lyon, of Detroit, Michigan, mortgagee, bearing date the twelfth day of January, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 16th day of October, A. D. 1882, at 5 o'clock, in the afternoon, in liber "S" of mortgages, on page 1, by which default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and the sum of $1,000 principal, and $100 of said mortgage, and the interest thereon, being now due and payable, and the said mortgage being a first lien on the following described premises, to wit: The south half of the southeast quarter of section twenty-two, in township thirty-four north, range seven west, containing twenty acres of land according to the United States survey.

Dated November 14, A. D. 1883.

E. M. CLARK,
Assignee of mortgagee.

CHURCHILL & GRIER,
Attorneys for assignee of mortgagee. 19-26

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY

has now joined the Ladies' and Children's

Furnishing Goods,

Lately owned by Fisher & Inwood, and will be pleased to retain all the old customers, and gain as many more as possible. Call and see my stock.

LIVERY.

The undersigned has purchased the livery formerly owned by him, and installed

Geo. Durance, Manager.

There has been added a new stock of

Horses and Carriages

And a special invitation is extended to all old friends and patrons to call and see what wheels over they need anything in that line.

GOOD SADDLE HORSES A SPECIALTY WITH THIS STABLE.

J. MILO EATON.

C. R. BELLINGER

carries the largest and finest stock of

JEWELRY

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Spectacles ever shown in Charlevoix county. Just see the celebrated ROCKFORD WATCH. The best time piece after watch. 11

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

at his store near the bridge.

All kinds of fresh and seasonable vegetables in the season. Nuts, candies, pop, ginger ale, etc., always on hand. Call and see. West side Bridge St.

ROBERT GRUEN,

Boyne Falls, Mich.,

Watch-maker

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry Repaired. 17

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card to take effect October, 1883.

GOING NORTH.

STATIONS.	No. 1. Mixed.	No. 3. Mixed.	No. 5. Pass.	No. 7. Pass.
Grand Rapids	7 00am	11 00am	2 00pm	.....
Ionia	7 45	11 45	2 45	.....
Lyons	7 55	11 55	2 55	.....
Muir	8 05	12 05pm	3 05	.....
Smith's Crossing	8 15	12 15	3 15	9 35am
Ionia Junction	8 20	12 20	3 20	9 45
Lake Odessa	8 34	12 34	3 34	10 00
Clarksville	8 40	12 40	3 40	10 10
Vermontville	8 50	12 50	3 50	10 20
Charlotte	9 00	1 00	4 00	10 35
Eaton Rapids	9 15	1 15	4 15	10 50
Dimondale	9 25	1 25	4 25	11 00
Lansing	9 35	1 35	4 35	11 10
Delhi	9 45	1 45	4 45	11 20
Mason	9 50	1 50	4 50	11 25
Williamston	10 00	2 00	5 00	11 35
Stockbridge	10 20	2 20	5 20	11 55
Gregory	10 30	2 30	5 30	12 05am
Howell	10 45	2 45	5 45	12 20
Howell	11 00	3 00	6 00	12 35
Brighton	11 35	3 35	6 35	1 10
Milford	11 45	3 45	6 45	1 20
Wixom	11 55	3 55	6 55	1 30
Walled Lake	12 05pm	4 05	7 05	1 40
Novi	12 15	4 15	7 15	1 50
Wayne Junction	12 30	4 30	7 30	2 05
Wayne	12 40	4 40	7 40	2 15
Junction	12 45	4 45	7 45	2 20
Detroit	1 00	5 00	8 00	2 35

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No. 2. Mixed.	No. 4. Mixed.	No. 6. Pass.	No. 8. Pass.
Detroit	.....	.....	3 15pm	7 25am
Junction	.....	.....	3 30	7 40
Wayne	.....	.....	3 40pm	8 15pm
Wayne Junction	.....	.....	3 45	8 25
Novi	.....	.....	4 00	8 40
Walled Lake	.....	.....	4 10	8 50
Wixom	.....	.....	4 20	9 00
Milford	.....	.....	4 30	9 10
Brighton	.....	.....	4 40	9 20
Howell	.....	.....	5 15	9 55
Howell	.....	.....	5 30	10 10
Gregory	.....	.....	5 45	10 25
Stockbridge	.....	.....	5 55	10 35
Williamston	.....	.....	6 05	10 45
Mason	.....	.....	6 15	10 55
Delhi	.....	.....	6 20	11 00
Lansing	.....	.....	6 30	11 10
Dimondale	.....	.....	6 40	11 20
Eaton Rapids	.....	.....	6 50	11 30
Charlotte	6 00am	1 00pm	7 05	11 45
Vermontville	6 15	1 15	7 20	12 00
Clarksville	6 25	1 25	7 30	12 10
Lake Odessa	6 35	1 35	7 40	12 20
Ionia Junction	6 50	1 50	7 55	12 35
Smith's Crossing	6 55	1 55	8 00	12 40
Muir	7 05	2 05	8 10	12 50
Lyons	7 15	2 15	8 20	1 00
Ionia	7 25	2 25	8 30	1 10
Grand Rapids	7 55	2 55	9 00	1 40

A. E. LEET, Gen. Pass. Agt.,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A YOUNG MAN who suffered for years from Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, &c., and all the effects of partial Independence, will for the sake of suffering humanity, send free to all who need it the receipt and direction for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Suffer-ers wishing to profit by the advertiser's experience can do so by addressing in perfect confidence, JOHN B. OGDEN, 42 Cedar St., New York.

HALL'S

Catarrh Cure

Is Recommended by Physicians!

$100 REWARD FOR A CASE WE ACCEPT AS GENUINE AND FAILS TO CURE.

We manufacture and sell it with a positive guarantee that it will cure any case of catarrh, no matter how aggravated, long standing or obstinate. It is a liquid, easy of application, and is taken internally, acting upon the blood. If you will address with stamp, we will send you a sample free, and accept no imitation or substitute. If the druggist you deal with does not keep it, we will forward the medicine to any address, prepaid, on receipt of price, $1 per bottle.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

Dr. CROUTER, Agt., Charlevoix. 23

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

A FIRM in London, England, advertise that they want American honey in large lots, and will pay an advance of 5c per pound over the New York market for prime fancy comb honey.

ENGLAND has this year 2,660,000 acres under wheat, while America has nearly 40,000,000 devoted to the same cereal. Great Britain has 6,000,000 head of cattle, America has 30,000,000.

PROF. KEDZIE, of the Michigan Agricultural college, is making a series of experiments to show that growing plants in a close room are not injurious to human life. He says the notion that it is unhealthy to sleep in a room containing plants is sheer nonsense. The plants may not injure one, but it would occur to some, perhaps, that a close room is not conducive to the health of either animal or plant life.

A SORRY lord of high degree is the Lincoln Mandeville, but he went down to a prize-fight at Flushing and acted in the capacity of impromptu bottle holder to one of the knockers, and had his pocket picked of an expensive hair, loan watch for his pains. A paper of his country says: "Lord Mandeville should be ashamed of himself, and his loss should teach him to choose better associates." Let him ask Boston if there is a better associate than a pugilist.

DANIEL SHAW, of Troy, N. Y., was a most unfortunate man. When a boy he had his skull cracked by a kick of a mule. Subsequently he had a frightful experience with a circular saw. He was struck by three trains, and had an eye knocked out. Three well aimed balls on him. He had fits, and during an attack fell on a red-hot stove. Four times he was bitten by mad dogs. A coal wagon ran over him and crushed his legs. He had a fit on a railway track, and an incoming train finished him.

IT is economical for gamblers to leave any considerable sum of money to their families when they die that an exception is remarkable. Henry Helm, familiar to the fraternity of Syracuse, N. Y., as "Dutch Hank," has been a gambler thirty years, and when he died the other day it was found that his fortune amounted to nearly $200,000. He left the entire property to his wife. If any young man can seek encouragement from this source he need but hasten to buy a rope and test the elastic properties of his neck.

THE cotton crop of the South last year amounted to 7,886,000 bales—enough to supply the demands of the chief portions of the civilized world. In addition above were produced 2,500,000 tons of surplus cotton seed, which might have been transformed into 105,000,000 gallons of oil, 1,500,000 tons of oil cake, and 800,000 tons of paper. To what enormous extent this crop may ultimately be increased can scarcely be foreseen. Cotton is no longer king, but it remains, nevertheless, one of the chief commercial pillars of the country.

A FAMILY in De Soto, Ill., has a pet coon which was caught before its eyes were yet open to the light of day. An old cat took charge of and cared for it as if the animal were one of its own little ones. Now the coon takes care of itself, although the cat continues to feed it with manse and rat dainties. The children in the home have taught the coon any number of little tricks, such as begging for a biscuit, and putting its paws about one's neck. Her couch at night is on the dining-room lounge, and she shares that with the dog, who allows none of his kind to approach or mauger her, and is almost as fond of her as the cat.

A LIVELY scene occurred in a church's office at Westfield, Mass. A young man who had taken other 2's have teeth extracted, after the operation was over became temporarily crazed from the effects of the drug, and, under the impression that he was a Western hero, made a hot attack on the dentist and physician in attendance. One he jammed up into a corner and shook him until his teeth rattled, and the other he dragged around the floor in his effort to throw him out of the window. Other occupants of the building rushed in, lost were quickly put to flight by the etherized man, and one of them was chased around the halls and into the square. The patient was finally secured by the dentist, and knew nothing of what had occurred when the effect of the ether passed off a few minutes later.

A CATTLE-OWNER of Montana was in Winnipeg, Manitoba, a short time ago. He engaged a room at a hotel and went out for the evening. During his absence an English cobbleman came to the hotel, and, no room being vacant, the clerk gave him that of the Montana man, who, being only a "common person," could not be supposed to object to such a proceeding. But that was just what he did. When he heard of it, and before five minutes had passed, the poor Englishman was running wildly out of the room, crying "Murder!" There was no murder, however, but the Englishman had to take a cot in the hall, the Montana man got his room, and the clerk was very careful afterward not to try experiments with "common persons" from Montana.

WASHINGTON letter: The spiders had become so bad under the eaves of the White House that it became necessary to bring out a fire engine to wash them down. The deluge of water caused a veritable shower of spiders to the stone floor below, and very soon at least 1,000,000 of them were crawling about in every direction—small, middling and large, of every shape and line known to the species. About 3 o'clock the thoroughly-drilled insects began crawling up the large pillars toward the roof in such numbers that the pillars looked as though they had been painted black. The predominating variety, which has been christened the "President's spider," because it has inhabited the old portico ever since its erection in large numbers, has a round, plump body, six legs, two formidable feelers, and is of a mixed gray and yellow line. Thousands of wasps visit the locality during wasp season and carry off large numbers of the Presidential spiders and stow them away for winter rations.

MR. LELAND, of the Leland house, Chicago, doesn't believe what he sees in the papers about the effect of the recent Supreme court decision on the rights of the colored man under the Fourteenth amendment. He had occasion to eject Samuel Henry from his hotel, the other day, and had him arraigned before a Justice of the Peace for disorderly conduct. Henry had a colored brother as his attorney, who proceeded to crossexamine Leland: "Did you tell this boy to come down and get his pay and you have him arrested when he came down stairs?" he asked. "He pushed me," said Mr. Leland. "See heah; you are not answering my question," said the attorney. "You will please confine yourself to remarks in answering what I ask you, sah." The bold proprietor turned to the Justice. "You will have to answer the gentleman's questions," said the Justice. Mr. Leland was then subjected to a severe cross-examination. At each attempt to evade a question he was whipped into line by the despised colored man. After which Samuel Henry was fined $1 and costs.

ON a recent morning, in Cincinnati, a band of colored persons marched to the water's edge on the Ohio, just below the Newport and Cincinnati railway bridge and directly opposite Sausage row, where the vilest negro dens and dance houses. They had come to take part in the ceremony of baptizing by immersion a newly-converted sister. The weather was very cool, and the early morning, when few people were stirring, was chosen to escape interruption. After a song and a prayer, the genteel minister and the candidate—a coal-black, stout young girl—waded slowly into the chilly darkness. The girl shivered at first; but, exhorted by the minister, she followed him until he halted where the water was waist deep. Suddenly she made the Kentucky shore echo these words: "Lord—mass, I can't stan' dis; bound to go!" But remember the Lord—she's gone mad, dear sister, and don't turn back to the wicked world," said the minister. "But I mean yes; dis time I know it will," the girl replied. She made one desperate effort to escape, but the parson held on, saying, as he struggled with his obstinate convert: "Yo' head ram' go under." In the effort to duck the girl's head both went under beyond their depth. They soon rose to the surface and floated down stream, shouting for help. Boats were at hand and they were rescued in the usual way. Now the colored theologians are discussing whether or not this was a Christian baptism.

FARM NOTES.

TOMPKINS are a valuable as well as cheap food for milch cows.

HARDINESS is a very desirable quality in fruit-trees in this country of long and severe winters.

ANNA SCOTT, a Vermont farmer, has a cow that has made nearly 600 pounds of butter in a year.

ONE of the best methods of destroying the cut-worm is by fall ploughing. This turns up the sluggish worms from their winter quarters and either kills them by exposure or furnishes food for the chickens or other birds.

BEEKEEPERS all over the country are coming to recognize the value of the Italian bee. Mr. A. I. Root, editor of the A. B. C. of Bee Culture, in Ohio, says that bees will leave everything else if they know that the honey is light as white-clover honey, and also a decidedly better taste and flavor.

MULBERRY fruit-trees has come to be regarded by many fruit-growers as indispensable to the successful production of fruit. It prevents to a great degree the cracking of fruit, and causes those varieties which are frequently spotted and defaced to become clear and covered with a rich, attractive bloom.

LAURENTIEN, the French scientist, declares that the best way of storing wheat, retaining the seed-germinating and food-making principles in their perfection, is by thoroughly dry and clean the grain, packing the production in dry sand, make layers of the grain each other. Care should also be taken to preserve an even temperature, as possible in the granary and to keep the wheat is stored there.

AN extraordinary yield of butter was obtained from an English-bred Jersey cow owned by a farmer in Hamilton county, Ontario. A carefully conducted test of ninety-three days' duration resulted in a yield of 295 pounds 10½ ounces of unsalted butter, which, when ready for market, weighed 340 pounds 11 ounces. Four and five quarts of ground oats constituted her daily food during the trial.

GRAPES may be preserved for winter use by packing them in boxes with alternate layers of paper. Another method is to pack them in clean, dry earthen jars in layers a hands deep, with dry sifted paper placed between. When the jar is filled, a double sheet is placed over the top layer and the lid put on. Strong, unbleached muslin is then placed over the lid to exclude the air; when the preserving has dried and hardened, the jars are buried on a dry knoll deep enough to preserve from frost.

PROF. STILLEMAN, of the New York Experiment station, giving advice to farmers about saving manure, says: "It is a well-known fact that even will may be lost by stalling

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

Chairman Sabin's Convict Laborers.

In the call for the republican national convention "all voters who are in favor of elevating and dignifying American labor" are invited to send delegates from each state. The committee which promulgated this call then elected one Sabin, of Minnesota, its chairman, the highest merely party office within the gift of the organization. As such chairman Mr. Sabin will next year, during the campaign, be the head and front of the republican party. His will be the directing hand in all matters of party policy. He will levy assessments and disburse them, send speakers here and there, issue proclamations and in a general way map out the policy of the organization. Having been selected for so conspicuous a place, it is legitimate to inquire into Mr. Sabin's antecedents. Who is he, and what is he?

The mechanics and toilers, who are invited to unite under his leadership for the purpose of "elevating and dignifying American labor," will be glad to know that he is a state prison contractor, who has grown enormously wealthy on convict labor. His millions have been amassed at the expense of the free and honest laboring men of the United States, whom he now wishes to "elevate and dignify," and but for the fact that he had those millions he would not have been selected for his present position. By putting his convict labor in competition with honest labor, he has decreased the demand for the latter, reduced the wages paid for it, and put millions in his own purse. Is it not possible that the republican committeemen have made a very large sized blunder by selecting him for this place? They may have occasion to regret the choice they have made.

Notes and News.

The two servants of the family of Jacob Crouch, of Jackson, have been arrested for the murder, and the day of trial set for Jan. 8.

Vanderbilt has combined with several other capitalists to control the coke product of the country for the purpose of manufacturing steel. He is about to engage in an "infant industry" and demands protection. The effrontery of the scheme ought to bring the blush to even the cheek of a Pennsylvania tariff man.

It was announced in Pittsburg last Thursday evening that all coal miners on the Monongahela river will suspend operations this week for an indefinite time, owing to unseasonable weather, overstocked markets and low prices. The suspension will throw out of work over 6,000 men, who are much depressed at the prospect. Great suffering will result.

The contest for 1884 will be on the tariff question. The election of Cleveland practically commits the democracy, and the call of the national republican committee is unmistakably for protection. This will split the parties as they never have been, for there are protection democrats as well as free trade republicans, and no party whip can drive them all into line at the polls in the same order as in the past. There are more doubtful states than have been counted. It will be a contest between the manufactures who wants protection and higher prices and the consumer who wants the lowest prices. It will divide the continent diagonally, and array the east and north against the west and south, and may engender more bitter warfare than any political contest ever experienced in this country.

The talk of secretary Folger's retirement from the treasury portfolio is again revived. This time it comes with all the assurance of a settled fact. Mr. Folger has little of the politician in his makeup, and does not understand how to use the patronage of his department to serve political ends and ambitions. He has been a dead weight on the administration so far as this is concerned, and it is freely admitted by Mr. Arthur's friends that the president desires a change, he wishes to secure someone who can aid him in casting a political horoscope. Representative Skinner, of New York, states that he thinks that Richard Crowley, a politician after the president's own heart, will be appointed Judge Folger's successor before the first of January. Crowley is at present a member of the kitchen cabinet, and frequently goes with the president on fishing excursions.

The republican national committee met in Washington this week and elected Senator Sabin, of Minnesota, chairman and ex senator Clayton of Arkansas, secretary vice Dorsey, resigned. Clayton is a carpet-bagger, and fully as unscrupulous as the great star route thief. Quite a clothes-wringer over the selection of the place for holding the next national convention. Delegations were present from Chicago, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Philadelphia and Saratoga, and earnestly urged the claims of their respective cities. Mr. Judson of New York, said, should the convention be located at Saratoga, not only the empire state would be carried, but would "furnish means to carry all the doubtful states." Ex Senator Platt of that state also declared that if Saratoga was selected it "would go a good way towards helping the party to raise money for carrying on the campaign in 1884." Thus it will be seen that "soap" is still regarded by the stalwart bosses as the principal agency to be used in winning republican victories. After several ballots Chicago was finally selected as the place for holding the convention, and June 3 was fixed for the date. The outcome of the contest in the committee is regarded as a triumph for the Logan and Blaine factions and a sore defeat for Arthur's friends.

From the National Capital.

Notes and Interviews by a Journal Correspondent.

Senators Mahone and Riddleberger's attitude toward the republican majority of the senate has caused a delay in the re-organization of the upper house of congress that promises to assume a knotty deadlock between these two Virginia senators and the thirty-eight republicans. Riddleberger will act with Mahone in what, over course the latter will take, which practically gives them the "balance of power." Mahone is determined that Gorham, the administration's candidate for secretary of the senate, shall be elected to that position, and if the republican caucus will not eventually select Mr. Gorham, then the nominee of the democratic minority will receive the Virginia senator's votes, and a sufficient number of the republicans to elect him.

Gorham is very unpopular, as I discovered by interviews with the republican senators, fourteen of the thirty-eight declaring it their preference to have the position of secretary filled by almost anyone other than Gorham. Still the President and his cabinet are espousing the cause of the latter, and it remains to be seen what weight this official influence will have upon the voters of the fourteen kicking senators. The contest will not be precipitated probably until after the first of January, when an exciting caucus will no doubt occur. The democratic side are viewing the situation complacently and express themselves confident of controlling the secretaryship at least, in the reorganization.

THE PRESIDENCY OF THE SENATE.

I called on Senator Sherman and asked him who he thought would succeed Mr. Edmunds as President pro tem.

"There is a unanimous feeling among the senate to place Mr. Anthony in the chair which Mr. Edmunds shall resign, as he now declares his intention of doing."

"Your name has been mentioned, Mr Sherman, in connection with the house. Would you accept it if tendered?"

"I would much prefer to remain on the floor. While I appreciate the honor of the compliment, and June 3 was fixed for the date. The outcome of the contest in the committee is regarded as a triumph for the Logan and Blaine factions and a sore defeat for Arthur's friends.

I met the General, Tuesday, in the lobby of the senate and in answer to an inquiry as to what he thought of his prospects he said:

"I believe congress will do its duty to me sooner or later. But for personal antagonism to the numerous bills I had have been introduced in my behalf I would long ago have been restored and restored to the army. General Logan has been my hardest enemy, but time, I think, will wear out his prejudice. General Grant will soon be in Washington to urge my cause personally, and I am now in great hopes that my happiest hour will be soon realized."

COLUMBIA SUFFERAGE.

For thirteen years the permanent citizens of the District of Columbia have not had a vote. The constitution declares that every citizen of the United States shall have the right of suffrage, but over 25,000 eligible voters of this district have been practically disfranchised for over a decade under the present systems of our district government. An effort will be made and is now in progress to have the present congress restore to us a local government. A district committee has been organized to petition the legislature to pass a law to that end, and if public clamor will have any effect we shall soon have the additional excitement of "ward politics" in our midst.

RUMORS OF DUDLEY'S RETIREMENT

have been floating around the past week. A strong effort has been made by the disgruntled pension attorneys and their friends to induce Secretary Teller to remove Mr. Dudley as commissioner of pensions, but Teller says "not while I am here as secretary of the interior." Mr. Dudley says he will not resign, so the pension attorneys will have to be satisfied with his company.

SOUTHERN WAR CLAIMS.

I learned during the week that there are sixty Maryland and Missouri war claims ready to be introduced at the first opportunity. These bills claim damages to the aggregate of $35,000,000.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer one thousand for any case of Catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by druggists.

$1 A YEAR. $1

ONE DOLLAR. ONE DOLLAR.

$1 A YEAR. $1

TWO PAPERS FOR THE PRICE OF ONE.

THE WEEKLY Detroit Free Press

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Ten Large Pages of Solid Reading Matter. The Greatest of Dollar Weeklies.

Address, FREE PRESS CO. Detroit, Mich.

$1 A YEAR. $1

ONE DOLLAR. ONE DOLLAR.

$1 A YEAR. $1

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been restored to perfect health by a simple remedy, after suffering several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Rheumatism, &c. Parties wishing the prescription will please address, Rev. EDWARD A. WILSON, 196 Penn St., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

PIMPLES.

I will mail (free) the recipe for a simple vegetable balm that will remove tan, pimples, freckles and blotches, leaving the skin soft, clear and beautiful; also directions for producing a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, Ladybird, Box 3, Station D, New York City, N. Y.

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

AT COST

All kinds of

Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Ever brought to Charlevoix.

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoe

They have no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY.

And Satisfaction Guaranteed.

L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House

CHARLEVOIX

GEO. W. MILLER,

DEALER IN

Clothing

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

Hats and Caps, Trunks and Satchels,

GLOVES MITTENS, ETC.

Buttars' Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

Overcoats

AND

SUITINGS

Gents' Overcoats.

Youths' Overcoats.

Boys' Overcoats

Gents' Suits.

Youths' Suits.

Boys' Suits

I have just received a large assortment of the above goods, bought at lowest rates. I am selling these goods for less than they are actually worth at wholesale. I have a line of Overcoats I am closing out at $5 each. Every one is a bargain for the money. Call and examine these goods and judge for yourself.

E. M. Clark

Charlevoix, Nov., 1883.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand at his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

Joseph Hyland,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Heavy blacksmithing of all kinds, and Repairing of boilers promptly attended to.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meats

Fresh and Salt Fish.

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

O. B. WEED & CO.,

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds

Imported and Domestic Perfumery.

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see. We will use you well. Our store is in Bachelor's new brick

Opera Block

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 20, 1883.

Local Business Notices.

TAX RECEIPTS at this office.

HOUSE TO RENT.—On the corner near O. D. Wood's. Inquire at the store. W. J. BRADLEY.

Cutters at cost at L. D. Bartholomew's.

FOR SALE.—A second-hand portable saw mill, with engine and boiler complete, for sale cheap. Call soon. J. MILO BATES.

Buy your wife a handsome and durable French Kid Shoe for a Christmas present. Sure to please. Sold by D. Sherwood & Co.

All the Latest Styles in Ladies' Shoes and Slippers. ELY, the Cheap Boot and Shoe Man. Next to Bridge Street House.

Cloaks and Dolmans—special sale for December. Don't miss the bargains at R. Rose.

Clothing AT COST, to close it out and make room for other goods.

CHARLOE, EMERY & CO.

For fresh and cheap Groceries, go to Byron Saw's. F. S. Candies and Nuts for Xmas.

Picture Frames, handsome patterns on hand, any size made to order. Prices lower than the lowest. O. L. WARRAY.

Boots and Shoes are selling like hot cakes at R. Rose's.

Nuts! Nuts!! Nuts!!! Buy your nuts for Christmas, of Lyright, Emery & Co.

For Sale Cheap. Dry maple lumber, wood from 16 inches in near feet in length. Apply to H. S. HYMAN.

D. Sherwood & Co. have an assortment of Slippers which can't be beat. Just the thing for a Christmas present.

Candies, Nuts, and Toys, just the thing for Christmas. A fine assortment at O. L. Wood's.

Everybody in the county must know that Lyright, Emery & Co. are ahead on Holiday goods, Felts, Marshmallows, Icicles, Fur Caps, and everything in the line of winter wear.

Chas. Ely, the cheap Boot and Shoe Man, is bound to hard the trade. Prices not come and see. Next to Bridge street House.

A large assortment of men's heavy boots and rubbers for winter wear, at D. Sherwood & Co.'s.

For Sale. Two or three good horses for sale cheap for cash or good security. J. MILO BATES.

Christmas candies, a big stock to select from. LYRIGHT, EMERY & CO.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

200 cords of good dry birch and maple block wood for sale, cord measure guaranteed. Call at the store of J. MILO BATES.

A large stock of Boots, Shoes, and Rubbers, at the CHEAP Boot and Shoe Store. CHAS. ELY.

Three hundred tons of ground feed, coarse and fine, wheat middlings, and all things at Lyright, Emery & Co.'s warehouse in their occupancy. Also all kind of crackers, tea, wooden ware, and a complete line of dry goods and groceries.

Men's Heavy Rubbers, $1.15 a pair, large stock. Marshmallow Weeks $1.25. ELY, the Cheap Boot and Shoe Man.

News Brevities.

Local news on eighth page.

The man who supports his home paper is a good citizen.

Patronize home industry. That is the way to build up a town.

Ed. Parmelee of the Seafoard, has gone home to spend the holidays.

Several of our subscribers have promised to bring us wood. We need it now.

The G. R. & I. railroad company is soliciting a route for the branch which will run to Boyne City.

Manufacturing enterprizes build up a town; the more of them we have the greater will be the growth.

The M. E. Sunday School will have an old time Christmas tree and good time on Christmas eve, Dec. 24th.

The Good Templars are to hold an anniversary entertainment at the opera house Jan. 4th; program to be announced hereafter.

Will Rogers, of East Jordan, gave the JOURNAL a call on Tuesday. He reports the Arm entirely frozen over down as far as Ironton.

"I can tell a live town in a minute," said a man the other day, "whenever you show me its newspapers well patronized by its business men."

The fire department will hereafter meet at Dan Way's old stand, which we understand is to be occupied as a Town Hall until next September.

Editor Sprague and some of the northern papers are bound that our railroad shall go to Charlevoix or some other town than Frankfort.—Express.

Some people grumble lustily at some item in the paper, when at the same time they know it has for a week been the subject of general gossip all over town.

There isn't much said about the life-saving service, but its work entitles it to the highest praise and admiration. During the last fiscal year it rescued over 4,256 lives imperiled in storms and on the sea coasts and lakes, including nineteen persons who were beyond reach of ordinary human aid, and the property saved by its efforts during the same period amounts to more than $6,000,000.—Ex.

At a fire in Rockford Sunday morning, E. B. Lapham, our former popular landlord, lost a hotel building valued at $3,000, with no insurance.

Old fruit growers, on general principles, predict that the fruit crop of next year will be enormous. They say it has been short for the three years past and it is bound to average itself up.

The meeting of the historical society at Mr. Ainslie's was well attended considering the storm. An extended report is omitted for lack of time. The next meeting will be held on Jan. 8th, place to be announced hereafter.

The Herald says that the change of the chair cars from Petoskey to Traverse City is proving to be a profitable change for the company. The coaches are well filled every day, on both outgoing and incoming trains.

Stevens post No. 66, G. A. R., of East Jordan, is to give a ball at the Bullert house on New Year's night, and promise a good time. Because of the misfortune to the Enterprise office, the JOURNAL printed the cards of invitation this week. The announcement will also be found in our advertising columns. We wish the boys success.

If newspaper talk would build railroads the Toledo and Ann Arbor road would long ago have been completed to at least half a dozen different outlets on Lake Michigan from Manistee north to Charlevoix. Traverse City newspapers have made no effort to secure this road, but it is not unlikely the company will be glad to compromise the matter by making this place the northern terminus. G. T. Herald.

Newspaper Notes.

At this season there seems to be a great strife among certain papers to get out extra large editions with supplements filled with holiday announcements, and two received this week show to what extent northern Michigan can go. The Petoskey Democrat issued a double sheet, containing 27 columns of advertising, and the Grand Traverse Herald 24 pages, containing 37 columns of advertisements and 45 of reading matter. One whole page was devoted to a review of the display of goods in Traverse City, and nearly a half page to a list of building operations, similar to that in the JOURNAL some weeks since. The aggregate cost of building operations, including $100,000 on the new asylum, footed up nearly $250,000. The Herald is a live paper, and evidently has a very complete printing office.

The Inland Tribune, "an operative journal conducted by workmen," is devoted to the interests of the craft, and the December number just at hand is model of excellence in editorial quality and mechanical finish. It deals with every day matters in a practical manner, and deserves a support from the printers of the west and northwest which will guarantee its position in the front rank of typographical publications in this country. The price, $1.00 per year, places it within the reach of every jour. and apprentice in the land.

The Detroit Evening Journal has commenced the expending process by cutting down all large display heads, and otherwise adding to the quantity of reading matter. It claims a bona fide circulation of 13,000 copies daily.

More About Eggs.

Eggs always bring a good price during the cold weather. But lack of pure and fresh water greatly interferes with the production in winter. Eggs contain a large amount of water and unless there is a constant supply of it fowls will not lay. Many poultry keepers are very neglectful in the matter of providing water for fowls when in confinement and especially during the winter. As a consequence they obtain but few eggs.

The poultry breeders of Hammonton, N. J., have endeavored to settle the vexed question as to which breed of poultry is the best for general purposes. The Brahmas, Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Leghorns, Langshans and Houdrics were experimented with, not only for egg production but for market purposes. The Houdrics and Wyandottes were too late in the trial, but the verdict of the majority of the breeders is in favor of the Langshans, which grow to a large size, lay very early and moult late in the season, rarely sit, and stand the climate well. The chicks of that breed grow very fast, are compact and realize the highest market prices.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Our readers will not fail to observe the large holiday announcement on this page. These gentlemen have a large and well selected stock of the best goods, tastefully arranged on both sides of their salesroom. On the left near the entrance is the finest display of toilet cases, albums, fancy frames, etc., in town. These goods are rich in finish and are selling well. They opened a large stock of handsome dolls, and they too are fast disappearing. On the news counter may be found standard works in literature suitable for holiday presents. There is an endless variety of goods suitable for children and young people, which must be seen to be appreciated.

1883 1883

CHRISTMAS NOTICE.

Here we are Again.

O. B. Weed & Co.

PREVIOUS EFFORTS ECLIPSED.

Holiday Goods

Without Limit.

EVERYTHING!

EVERYTHING.

Our Mammoth Stock of Holiday Goods marks a New Era in the History of Charlevoix County.

Presents and Prices to Suit Everybody.

COME EARLY and Make your Selection.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the JOURNAL by Traverse Bays real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Dec. 18, 1883, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Leonard Cramer to Marietta Cramer, e ½ of ne ¼ of s ½ of se ¼ sec. 34, $1,800.

Wm. Bennett to T. S. Johnson, ne ¼ of sw ¼ of se ¼ sec. 4, $400.

W. V. Park, north to W. B. Jenkins, lot 3 and n ½ of lot 4 sec. 3, $800.

Chas. Hodges to Leroy Babcock, 2 acres, $350.

Alfred P. Mason to Chas. Lamprecht, lot 25, Mason's add. to Boyne City, $300.

Sidney Dooley to F. W. Shepard, s ½ sw ¼ sec. 1, $200.

M. Magee to M. Magee, s ½ of s ½ sw ¼ sec. 3, $300.

M. Magee to Royal Magee, s ½ of s ½ sw ¼ sec. 3, $300.

Wm. Wetherbee to James Pearson, s ½ of s ½ sw ¼ sec. 3, $300.

Isaac L. Dean to John A. Newville, n w ¼ of s ½ sw ¼ sec. 10, $300.

Daniel Scheller to Reynolds & Brown, e ½ of s ½ sw ¼ sec. 35, $300.

Hayes.

Old Boreas on the rampage.

Every body anticipating a merry Christmas.

Snow once more, and the small boy with his sled rejoiceth.

A number of our citizens on the sick list, some very sick.

A boy arrived at John Raymond's last week. John is happy.

Mr. Barratt died last Friday. He had been sick nearly a year with consumption. Buried last Monday.

One of John Newcomb's little children died of diphtheria last Sunday.

Joseph Steetzman, a former Hayesite but now of Bellair, Antrim county, made Hayes a flying visit last week. He reports things lively in his section.

Mr. Truman Case has taken up his fishing nets, and quit the business for this season. He has had good success. J. ZERE.

South Arm.

Weather pleasant and mild.

Lumbermen are looking sober.

Mr. Rush, of Marion, has been through this township buying cattle for beef.

Willie Bisnet is reported to be better. His disease is consumption.

Mr. D. Parks contemplates building a stone near Davis' mill in the fu ture, if circumstances will permit.

Mr. Davis' store looks very desolate since the recent assignment.

D. Monroe has sold his farm for $1,150. He is now driving cows for H. B. Chapman at Bay Springs.

Mr. J. Rose has moved to South Arm. He has rented his farm to Mr. Carson.

F. L. Church is teaching the intermediate school. Spelling school every Tuesday evening and every thing seems to be in a flourishing condition.

Mr. Geo. Allen's school is quite small on account of sickness in the neighborhood.

Excuse our error in last items. Mrs. Julia Cole is teaching the Isenmott school instead of Miss Scofield.

Mr. Geo. W. Jones, of Boyne Valley, is canvassing this section of the county for a new book entitled "The Western Empire."

Munson's logging camp has cut 2,000,000 ft. of logs which are now on skids.

Measles broke out in the camp recently. Nearly all the men had them.

Mr. Lyons, of East Jordan, and Mrs. Marin A. Baker, of South Arm, were married at Mr. H. B. Stebbins's on Dec. 5th. Mr. and Mrs. Lyons are living on Mrs. L's farm in this township where they expect to spend the winter. F. A. N.

Christmas Tree.

The Congregational society and Sunday school will have a Christmas tree at the opera house on Monday evening, 24th. In connection with the tree there will be a concert and praise service. All interested are invited to be present and assist in making this a successful as well as enjoyable occasion.

Important to Travelers.

Mr. A. G. Evans, of Eastport, has just finished an addition to his house, and now has accommodations for the traveling public which they have not had since the Blakely house burned last winter. This will be a great convenience to those traveling that way, and Mr. E. should be remembered.

Christmas Sermon.

At the M. E. church next Sunday morning, the holiday will be observed in a manner that will be pleasing and profitable to all, young and old. At the evening service the interest will be continued in the sermon expected on the occasion. Can you, will you come?

Christmas Services.

At the school house Sunday morning Rev. C. F. Van Arken will give a Christmas sermon, and in the evening a talk on Christmas customs to which the young people are invited. Additional seats are to be provided.

Christmas Meat.

If you want to see a fine display of meat go to A. J. McLeod's market on Christmas eve. He expects to make the best show ever in Charlevoix.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year who hail Catarrh Cure, that disease has been so long and said could not be cured. 50 cents a bottle. Sold by druggists.

Grand New-Year Ball

AT THE HILBERT HOUSE, EAST JORDAN, ON

NEW YEAR'S NIGHT

FOR THE BENEFIT OF STEVENS POST NO. 66, G. A. R.

ALL ARE RESPECTFULLY INVITED TO COME.

FLOOR MANAGERS:

JAMES SHEAR. HOWARD WEIKEL.

Good Music in Attendance.

BILL TO DANCE 50 CENTS; WITH SUPPER, $1.50.

Grand Christmas Ball

At Lewis' Hall,

TO BE GIVEN BY THE CHARLEVOIX FIRE DEPARTMENT,

On Monday Evening,

Dec. 24, 1883

Music by the Charlevoix Orchestra.

FLOOR MANAGERS:—A. E. Colgrove, A. McNeil, A. J. McLeod.

Bill 75 Cents.

Tickets for sale at O. B. Weed & Co's. and Dr. Crosier's drug stores.

John Nicholls

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Our Blades, WAGON TONGUES, Shingles, Lath, &c.

Lumber Sawed & Bills Filled TO ORDER.

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

STANDARD TIME.

Hitherto There Have Been Fifty-three Kinds of Time Now There Will Be but Five—How the American Continent Is Arranged in Divisions.

FROM the Chicago Tribune.

We present herewith a map explaining the standard time by which was adopted at Saint Louis, Oct. 13, in the railroads of the North American continent, and in connection therewith are published tables showing the difference between the new time and the former local time of the leading cities of the country. A change somewhat similar to that which is now effected in America was brought about in England so long ago as Jan. 11, 1848, and a reform could no longer be delayed in this country owing to the complications arising under the old dispensation. It may be not generally known that the railroads of this country have been conducted for 15 years under fifty-three different kinds of time, the difference between the times being very slight in some instances, but enough to make people miss trains repeatedly, besides causing other inconveniences.

FIVE GRAND DIVISIONS.

The fifty-three kinds of time were represented on the old railroad maps by an almost endless array of colors which were uniform in ordinary directions. Under the new system there are five divisions of the North American continent. Intercolonial, embracing Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, eastern, taking in the New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, and the States south of Pennsylvania; central, including Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, and the States north and south of them; Mountain, comprising the roads west of the Missouri river in the mountains; and Pacific, taking in the time on the Pacific coast.

THE TWO COLORS.

The five colors cannot be given in the map herewith presented, but the divisions are marked by shades, and the change will be comprehended at a glance when four lots are presented. The 15° in which the earth revolves in one hour, and the 24 hours in the four equal parts, represent hours, and for convenience the earth from east to west is divided into 360 parts, called degrees or longitude. The surface of the earth, however, travels as many degrees in one hour as twenty-four is contained times in 360, or fifteen. From this it is seen that there is a difference of one-hour natural time between each succeeding fifteen degrees of longitude.

How Did It Happen?

If truth were not stranger than fiction, the following incident might seem the most improbable of all improbable stories. Yet, it is true, every word of it, and the "eye-witness" referred to is the father of the gentleman who sends us the singular narrative.

"One Saturday night in 1872, I was on a ferry-boat crossing from Brooklyn to New York.

"The boat was crowded, and as usual as it was in the dark there was the usual struggle to see who could get off first. As I was hurried on by those behind me, I was, twisted about the central button of a man in front of me, a gold watch-chain, and dangling at the end of it a handsome gold watch.

"Before I had time to call the man's attention to it, the crowd separated us and I lost sight of him.

"But the incident made a strong impression on me, and I wondered and puzzled as to how that watch got on that button. Several years after, business called me again to New York, where I met Mr. S——, who took me home with him to dinner, and introduced me to his brother.

"After the meal was over, the conversation turned upon the curious tricks which a noted pickpocket was performing in the city. Immediately the incident of the watch occurred to me, and I was about to mention it when my host said:

"'That reminds me of a remarkable thing which once happened to me, and which I have never been able to explain. I was coming over from Brooklyn one night, in the winter of '72, and my brother George here was on the same boat with me, though I didn't know it. There was a great crowd and much pushing in getting off the boat.

"'When I reached home, and was about to throw off my coat, my wife exclaimed: "Why, what is that on your coat-tail?" I took of the coat, and there, twisted around one of the buttons, was a watch-chain with a gold watch at the end of it. You can imagine our surprise when we recognized the watch as my brother George's! When he came in, a little later, that gentleman did not know of his loss, and when told of it could hardly be convinced of the facts. We waited a few days, thinking perhaps you have smiled incredulously at this story. What do you think of it?'

"'Think of it? I answered, 'why, I saw it at the time!' and then I related to my astonished hearers what I had seen and worked out at so many years.

"'But what is your explanation of it?' asked my host.

"'He stole his load. 'Who knows? My own theory is that my brother and I passed up to the boat together. In the crush, I was crowded up against him and in some inexplicable way the chain was wound so firmly about the button of his coat that he took it from the pocket. But in what way, I have never been able to satisfy myself. It will always remain a mystery to me.'

"'It has been a mystery to me, also, ever since.'—Youth's Companion.

Flying Fish.

The theory I have suggested is that neither fish nor fowl, but a combined boiling of meat. If that is correct, it is evident that the fish should be completely immersed in a bath of melted fat, and that the turning over demanded by the common cooking process is unnecessary. Well-educated cooks understand this, and use a deeper vessel than our common frying-pan, charge this with a quantity of fat sufficient to cover the fish, which is placed upon a wire support, or fringe-basket, and left in the hot fat until the fragrance of its savoriness, or of the tear or bread crumbs with which it is coated indicates the sufficiency of the cooking. At first sight this appears extravagant, as contrasted with the practice of greasing the bottom of the pan with a little dab of fat; but any housewife who has tried the frying of apples, herrings, etc., the method of inductive research, described by Lord Bacon, may prove the contrary. This method, to which we are indebted for all the triumphs of modern science, is nothing more or less than the systematic application of commonsense and minute measurement to practical questions. In this case it may be applied simply by frying a weighed quantity of fat used as a bath; then weighing the fat that remains and subtracting the latter weight from the first, to determine the quantity consumed. If the frying be properly performed, and this quantity compared with that which is consumed by the method of merely greasing the pan bottom, the bath frying will be proved to be the more economical, as well as the more efficient.—H. M. Williams, in the Popular Science Monthly.

Stage Immortality.

The people must have amusement, and if denied a healthy, innocent, honest growth, they take what they can get from other sources. Mind you, I don't mean to say that French plays performed in France are immoral. They are only such when presented to us. This sounds strange, but it is true, all the same. Woes growing out of evils peculiar to a community make material for literature either in novels or the drama. Their exhibit has a tendency to correct the ill. On this account we consider Lady Macbeth, a murderess, highly proper to look upon, while Lucrezia Borgia, an adulteress, is regarded with horror. And why? Murder is our crime, adultery that of France.—Dana Piatt.

THE highest peak in Nevada is Mount Jefferson Davis, its altitude being 13,075 feet.

THE RUSSIAN MONKS.

A Convent Which Possesses a Costly Inclosure of Human Ashes.

According to tradition the Apostle Andrew visited the place where the city of Kieff now stands, on the high shore of the Dnieper, and, creeting a cross there, said: "In this country there shall shine a great Christian state." Ten centuries later Vladimir, the great Prince of Rivsia, baptized his people in Kieff, and shortly afterward, perhaps on the spot trodden by St. Andrew, the first Russian convent was founded. The monks dug their cells in the ground, and thus the famous catacombs were made. I have visited these catacombs. While my monkish guide, with a taper in his hand, led the way and pointed out the last resting place of this or that saint, I wondered at the gigantic work performed by Russian monks centuries ago. To dig an underground cell, to spend a whole lifetime in it, to die and be buried there—what a faith must those austere men have possessed. Dark and narrow were the cells they lived in, but they spread the light of Christian faith far and wide in Russia. Prayer was their special vocation, but they also worked hard. They destroyed the pagan temples and built Christian churches in their stead. Their academy was for centuries the only institution where theology, philosophy, and the sciences were taught. In the catacombs the monks mortified their flesh, prayed to God that He would forgive their sins and also the sins of the world at large, wrote chronicles, painted holy images, prepared vegetable medicines, and buried the martyrs who perished at the hands of Tartar khans, Russian Princes, or pagan mobs.

Centuries have passed, and what do we see in these catacombs? The holy relics and any bones of those old monks are exposed to the sight of curious people. The monks no longer live there. They go there only for the purpose of trade. Large metallic plates are put up at the grave of each of the fifty canonized saints, and every day the monks obtain piles of money from the pious pilgrims who come there from all the Russias. They sell the tears of St. Theophit, the weeper, the oil that runs from the grave of St. John of Maxy Sadlenga, and drugs from the grave of St. Agapit, the Physician. In this manner the Kieff convent has gathered many millions of rubles, and besides it owns baskets of precious stones. During the Crimean war, the Czar Nicholas borrowed from the Kieff convent 2,000,000 rubles upon a note in his own handwriting. Nicholas never paid the money back. Once when the late Czar Alexander visited Kieff the prior seized the opportunity to remind him of this debt to the convent, showing him Nicholas' note. Alexander died tears, kissed his father's autograph, and said:

"Truly, holy father, it is my beloved father's handwriting. Oh, what a treasure you have! Keep it in the sanctuary, and guard it better than your own eyes."

With that he returned the note to the prior. It is the earliest autograph in existence.—St. Petersburg Cor. New York Sun.

The Thermometer as a Remedial Agent.

Being called to prescribe for a patient living in the hills above Keyport, who had long been afflicted with epilepsy, and whose mind was now somewhat impaired, I noticed a remarkable pallor of countenance, and that the surface of the body was very cold to the touch, so produced a clinical thermometer to ascertain the temperature. The young man evidently looked upon it as a part of the treatment, and, further impressed by his admiring awe of her relatives, closed his lips upon it with as pious a care as though it had been Truddi's prayer-book, and so speedily seemed oblivious of all earthly things. So wrapt was he that when I went to withdraw the thermometer, he gave a start like one rudely awaked. "How did it affect you?" inquired I. "Very well indeed," he replied; "I think it has made me feel much better." And then, raising his hand with a air of benediction, he added: "It had such a quieting influence." An hour afterward I visited a young domestic in another family, who was convalescing from a mild attack of typhoid fever, where the temperature had ranged from 100 to 102 degrees for several days. While here I related the above incident to her employer, who laughed heartily; but the girl, with a look of scornful superiority, cried out: "Pooh! he mustn't ever have seen one before! Why, I have had two at a time in my mouth, and I thought nothing of it." "Why was that?" asked I. "When I was on Randall's island." "Yes, but why? What were you used for?" "Because—because," blurted she, in confusion, "my fever was so high they couldn't tell it with one!"—Medical Record.

Without Price.

When Rosamond Price, the English economist, was in Washington several years since he dined with Secretary Robeson, when President and Mrs. Grant were present, and proposed, much to his hosts's chagrin, that each one should write down his or her ideas about heaven, which he intended to compare, and, he thought, how they differed, prove that there was no such place. The situation was becoming alarming, especially to the ladies, and the hostess was about to give the signal to leave the table, when Mr. Robeson, out of patience, arose and thus addressed the Professor: "I have an idea of heaven, and have written it down. Heaven is a place without money and without price."

Reducing the Blemishes.

A sallow complexioned old lady, accompanied by a remarkably unprepossessing daughter, walked into an Austin photograph gallery.

"Do you the photograff man?" she inquired, wiping her spectacles, and carefully adjusting them to the various spurs, digs, angles and sinuosities of her Grandmian nose.

"Yes, um'am," replied the artist in plate glass and chemicals. "can I do anything for you?"

"No, I'm too far over the bay to waste any mechanical genius on me. It's my daughter, Parthiny, here, that I wants tuk."

"All right, madam, will you"—

"Can't yer soften down her complexion a little, an' tone up her nose what was broke fallin' out a winder?"

"I think so," replied the artist.

"An' kin yer wipe off them freckles?"

"Oh, yes."

"I've seen photograffs of dead coffins of our relations, an' I've allers noticed that the pieters flattered 'em clean out of sight. I have enough about the life to recognize that you've got the whole thing in yer own hands, an' kin turn out a perfessional beauty or a jimpicrute of the first water, just as yer pleases. I reckon I think you kin reduce these ears a trifle—jest a leetle. I know Parthiny has got big ears, but still she ain't no jack-rabbit. Parthiny is a generous girl, as yer kin see by her ears.

"I think there will be no difficulty"—

"How about that air squint in the left optic? Do you think yer kin manage that?"

"Oh, yes, I can touch it up with India ink."

"What particular pose do yer think Parthiny would take best in, full face or a side show?"

"You mean quarter view or a profile?"

"I guess I do. Yer see the photograff is goin' to a young feller what put an advertisement into a newspaper for correspondents, and Parthiny's writin' to him. Now yer see how necessary it is for the pieter to kinder favor her little blemishes. You'll do the fair thing by Parthiny, won't yer?"

"Certainly. What size, madam, cabinet or cards?"

"Which is the biggest?"

"Cabinet."

"Guess then we'll better try her on a cabinet. If the photograffer does a good job, the bigger she looks better. What yer figgers?"

"Four dollars a dozen for cabinets."

"How much for one?"

"Same price; it is the negative that costs, not the number."

"Well, all right. Just go ahead an' square them shoulders back a little, an' bring the nose down fine, an' wipe off the freckles, an' straighten the eyes an' reduce the ears, an' whiten the complexion—an' the hair! It won't be red in the pieter, will it?"

"Oh, no. There will be no color shown but black."

"That's a comfort. Gracious! Parthiny, what would be think if yer sent him an old painted ticken from life' Kin I stay in the room?"

"Oh, yes."

"All right. Strike an artificial, Parthiny, that wasn't give you away, an' we'll rope in that young man as sure as yer a foot high."—Texas Siftings.

British Forests.

The forests of the United States have not been so mercilessly stripped of trees that a wood famine is almost inevitable in a few years. The lumbermen have been allowed to do pretty much as they pleased, and they have pleased to strip always and anywhere. But no end is coming to that reckless method of proceeding, and the lumbermen themselves are beginning to see that "some thing" must be done. That something must, of course, only be planting on a large scale. Happily, there is little need of similar Czar in the Great Britain; none, at any rate, until the greedy landlords are reformed out of existence. It almost has come to pass that England and Scotland are so thickly wooded is the perseverance of the landed class in tree-planting. A family alone, that of the Dukes of Atholl, has in a hundred years planted scores of millions of trees. The "planter Duke," who commenced operations in 1774, planted 27,000,000 trees covering 15,000 acres, principally upon the Dunkeld hills and in their neighborhood. The present Duke of Atholl plants from 100,000 to 1,000,000 trees every year. The terrible storm which destroyed the Tay bridge blew down 20,000 of the Duke's trees, but the loss was hardly noticeable.—St. James' Gazette.

The Preacher's Child.

It was in the family of a well-known D. D. in Boston. The same reason there was here as in Cambridge, the usual prompt payment of the quarter's salary, and the pastor and his wife, unmindful of the presence of a small philosopher of five years, were plunging household economies until the money came in. Suddenly the little maiden remarked with great seriousness, not unmixed with distaste, "Now, papa, I'll tell you what I should do. I should give my people plain sermons and meetings till they paid me that money."—The Congregationalist.

Parley Vous.

There is a beer hall "over the Rhine" to which the French people of the city resort. The proprietor, a good-natured German, has a sign displayed which reads, "French spoken here." "Do you speak French?" was asked of him one day. "Nein, nein," was his response. "Well, who does speak it, then?" "Oh, some of the Frenchmen comes in."—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

RHODE ISLAND and Delaware together are smaller than the Yellowstone Park.

HIS OWN EXECUTOR.

A Well-Known Gentleman's Philanthropy and the Commotion Caused by One of His Letters.

(Springfield Democrat and Chronicle.)

We published in our local columns yesterday a significant letter from a gentleman known personally or by reputation to nearly every person in this land. We have received a number of letters protesting against the use of our columns for such "impolite insults and misrepresentations;" therefore, to confirm beyond a doubt the genuineness of the letter, and the genuine character of its gentleman, a reporter of this paper was commanded to ascertain all the possible facts in the matter. Accordingly he visited Clifton Springs, was the author of the letter, and with the following result:

In Henry Fowler, the gentleman in question, is 63 or 64 years of age, and has an unusually cordial manner. He presides at a condensed over the residential sanitarium, which occupies the old Clifton House, and is unquestionably the leading health resort in the country. Several years ago, owing to some unlucky speculations in his own behalf, and therefore, indirect injury to his substantial property, north $100,000 accumulated, a Board of Trustees, representing the principal Evangelical denominations, has the Trustees are Bishop A. C. Haven, Reverend Dr. Hoffman, Bishop Bishop Simpson, Philadelphia, Methodist; Reverend Dr. Hoffman, President of the University of Northwestern; Rev. Dr. Newman, of the A. R. P. N. Y.; Rev. Dr. Hemenway, President of the Universalists, and their institutions are in good shape. Independent of the Trustees, a number of ministers, of many denominations, are on the board of directors, and each one of them would be unable to make a dollar out of the institution, or participate in the business of dispensing medicines, which, by the way, is not the business exactly. Here came men, who, in years gone by, were stimulated to the highest by the first symptoms of disease, and, after years of toil, and, at last, were crowded until their health became impaired. Here came tired clergymen, by the dozen, by hundreds, and, by the thousands, and, in the last, that is, the last year, there were 1,000 ministers and their families, lawyers, judges, statesmen, authors, journalists, merchants, professors and scholars from almost every state in the union.

Having the training received of Dr. Jackson, the superintendent, and the Trustees, I have, the latter of years has created a good deal of talk, and many of our readers has questioned its authenticity.

To what do you attribute the success of the institution?

"Why, you see, I'm a Christian, and I have not had much time to devote to business. I have, in fact, been a preacher, and, of course, I have not been much of a business man. I have, in fact, been a preacher, and, of course, I have not been much of a business man. I have, in fact, been a preacher, and, of course, I have not been much of a business man

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 20, 1893.

News Brevities.

"We suppose it will only be a short time before Elk Rapids and Charlevoix will have communication with the outside world."—Progress.

The Elk Rapids Progress says that the land through which the Chicago & West Michigan railroad will run, when coming to this place, is being all bought up by capitalists.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unsurpassed. Full pounds at every. Sold by G. R. Weed & Co. 8d5

It need not take long to decide what to buy your friends for a Christmas present this year. Just send them a receipt for a year's subscription to the JOURNAL. We will guarantee nothing could be bought for the same money that will please them more.

Mr W. H. Hurlbut gave the JOURNAL pleasant call last Friday. He has since returned to his home in South Haven but will come to Charlevoix again next spring. He is enthusiastic in his praise of the place, and has great faith in our future prosperity.

"Mrs. Catherine Frinkle died suddenly while watering her stock." What a warning this should be to certain soulless corporations who are becoming rich by "watering stock." Perhaps if some of them should die suddenly the rest of us would be happier.

The firemen are making preparations for their dance Christmas eve. It is the intention to give a first class party, and the object is a deserving one. We hope the party may call out a large crowd. Help support home enterprises should be a motto with all good citizens.

The greatest pain-killer yet found for Cramps, Colic, Stitch in side or back, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Sprains, Bruises, &c., is Hamilton's Jamaican Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure. Round on with but wet cloths, it never fails to cure. For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, sick headache, Biliousness, diarrhea, dysentery, heartburn, sour stomach, &c., it is unequaled. Warranted to give relief. Use both internally and externally. Warranted to cure. Try it. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by G. R. Weed & Co.

The following from the Harbor Springs Independent would seem to indicate that the question of a Michigan Central terminus on Lake Michigan is still unsettled, and that if the inducements were made sufficient, Charlevoix stands as good a chance as any place: "It can be announced with authority that the Michigan Central company has not yet considered any proposition for the construction of a branch road to Harbor Springs. Pookaby, Charlevoix or any other place on the shore. Some of the leading officials have said that the time would come when such a branch would be desirable, but there is no prospect of it at present."

Millions of persons die annually who might be saved if attention was given to the little ills of life. Coughs, Colds, sore Throat, &c., are easily cured by using Hamilton's Cough Balsam, which removes the tickling in the throat and lightness across the bronchial membranes. Immediate relief will be found but 50 cents. Sold by G. R. Weed & Co.

"William Kitts of Marion township, Livingston county, mysteriously disappeared and his friends settled down to the belief that he had been foully dealt with, or fell through the ice in Pine lake. All hope of ever hearing of him was long since abandoned. He now turns up in British Columbia"—Lansing State Capital. Substituting the word Charlevoix for Livingston would make this refer to an affair familiar to our citizens, which is probably the one meant, but as there is a Marion township in Livingston county, and a Pine lake near Lansing, the item reads straight and makes another affair similar to our own.

Are your children peevish and ungrateful? Do they have abnormal appetites and crave food constantly? Beware of worms. Very few children escape their ravages. No child can be happy or well while suffering with worms. They sap the very life by preventing the digestion and assimilation of food. There is a sure remedy. It is called Parmelee's Vermifuge Worm Candies. They are perfectly harmless, but will quickly dislodge the worms and pass them off through the bowels. Buy no other. Price 25 cts per box. Sold by G. R. Weed & Co.

The ball has opened in Washington on the tariff question and members will soon be called upon to take their partners for the dance. Mr. Yaple of Michigan yesterday astonished his colleagues, particularly surprised Mr. Maybury, and greatly shocked Mr. Horr by introducing a bill placing salt on the free list. Mr. Maybury had a bill of the same purport in his desk, but with characteristic deliberation postponed its presentation, until he gave Mr. Yaple the opportunity to fire the first shot in the war on monopoly. On the side of the tariff, Mr. Converse of Ohio, a democrat, introduced a bill to restore wool tariff, which were reduced in the last session. Mr. Hurd, of the same state, is going to antagonize Mr. Converse's bill by one of his own placing wool on the free list and also reducing considerably the tariff on woolen goods. Thus we have developments on both sides of the question already, and we shall probably have republicans on both sides before the session closes. The future party of freetrade is gradually crystalizing.—Evening News.

Enrich the blood. Hamilton's Tonic Bitters are highly recommended for all diseases requiring a certain and efficient tonic. Especially Indigestion, Dyspepsia, want of appetite, loss of strength, lack of energy, &c. They enrich the blood, strengthen the nerves, and give new life to the nerves. They act like a charm in the digestive organs, remove all dyspeptic symptoms, and whenever the stomach is weak or there is a general loss of physical vigor these bitters are just what you need. Only 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. R. Weed & Co.

"A Charlevoix correspondent writes that the farmers thereabouts are plowing, that there is no ice in the harbor or lake, and that 26 degrees above zero is the lowest the mercury has sunk, and that the Chicago and Milwaukee boats are still running."—Evening News. On several occasions we have found items in the News of great value in advertising our resources and advantages, and our citizens cannot do better than give as good a patronage as they can afford to the paper which is doing so much for us. These items create an interest in our place, and the JOURNAL is frequently in receipt of letters of inquiry concerning one or another business opening, thus proving that the News is a valuable medium through which to reach the outside world.

If Charlevoix is ever to become the common center and take the lead as a summer resort, our citizens will soon have to face the question of a large first class summer hotel. While our hotels are large enough and good enough for hotels open all the year the time is not distant when they will be inadequate to the large and rapidly increasing summer business. If we had a hotel larger and better in all respects than the hotels in Petoskey there is a large list of wealthy resorters who would make their headquarters here who now go there. Accommodations may be made here just as good and just as cheap as anywhere in this region, and with many tourists it is simply a question of a first class place to make their headquarters while they are fishing or sailing. Such a house should be built for next season's business. Who will start it?

The Detroit News has the following: Talk about machine shops! Elk Rapids probably has one of the finest in Michigan. The Elk Rapids Iron Co. having 26 steam engines to keep in repair, besides a great deal of other iron work, decided last spring to build a shop and do their own work. The shop is now completed at a cost of more than $3,000. The building is of brick, 37x142 feet, well built and well lighted, and a 15 horse power engine runs over $4,000 worth of machinery, consisting of one planer, one bolt machine, one pipe machine, two drill presses, a double emery wheel, etc. On the average 14 men are employed in the shop. The company have put the shop and its work into the hands of Joseph Parks, one of the most competent machinists in the state. He turns out a class of work of which any company would be proud.

The glass business just now is a fine illustration of the "protected" industrial infant. For twenty years the glass factories have had a tariff tax levied on imported glass of about 60 per cent average on all kinds, and 75 per cent on window glass. And yet today the Pittsburgh glass factories are closed, the workmen having struck against an attempt to still further reduce wages, and the manufacturers are importing foreign glass and paying the heavy duties in order to fill their orders. A Winona dealer lately ordered a car load of glass from one of the principal Pittsburgh factories, and was informed in reply that there was no American glass in the market, that it would be necessary to fill his order with French glass; that seven-eighths of all the glass factories in the country were idle and there was no telling when there would be a resumption of work, probably not before spring as the employes did not seem to care to work at the reduced wages. In 1870—three quarters of a century before glass had any "protective" tariff to help or hinder it—America manufactured $1,000,000 worth of domestic glass and only imported $53,000 worth. This country has an inexhaustible supply of all the raw materials for glass making, and yet with a tariff of 60 to 75 per cent, the factories are closed because they cannot pay living wages and the market is supplied from abroad at about double cost to the consumer. It is about time to see the glass infant.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

December Crop Report.

Correspondents uniformly report wheat in poor condition to withstand unfavorable weather. In some localities it is reported as still improving, but it cannot make as large growth as usual.

Clover seed is yielding no better than was anticipated immediately after the frosts of September 8 and 9. Very little of the small or June clover will pay for threshing. The mammoth variety is yielding fairly well.

Reports have been received of the quantity of wheat marketed by farmers during the month of November at 261 elevators and mills. Of these 219 are in the southern four tiers of counties, which is forty-four per cent of the whole number of elevators and mills. The total number of bushels reported marketed is 1,193,038, of which 282,567 bushels were marketed in the first or southern tier of counties; 483,272 bushels in the second tier; 146,312 bushels in the third tier; 153,451 bushels in the fourth tier, and 66,536 bushels in the counties north of the southern four tiers. At 25 elevators and mills or ten per cent of the whole number from which reports have been received, there was no wheat marketed during the month.

The total number of bushels reported in August, September, October and November, is 5,048,826.

Health in Michigan.

For the week ending Dec. 8, 1893, the reports indicate that intermittent fever, rheumatism, and influenza increased, and that bronchitis, tonsilitis, and diphtheria decreased, in area of prevalence.

At the state capitol the prevailing winds during the week ending Dec. 8, were southwest; and compared with the preceding week the temperature was slightly lower the absolute and the relative humidity, and the night ozone slightly more, and the day ozone the same.

Preceding reports by regular observers and others, diphtheria was reported present during the week ending Dec. 8, and since at 15 places, scarlet fever at 23 places, measles at 9 places.

Eggs at this Season.

Eggs bring the highest prices now, and will pay well to feed for eggs. The cost of the feed, no matter how high, is easily over-balanced at this season, and the feed must be varied and of the best quality. One reason why eggs are high is because hens are not laying, and the object should be to take advantage of the opportunity. It should be borne in mind that the chief mistake made with laying fowls is getting them too fat. We often receive letters asking why the hens do not lay, especially when they are well and liberally fed. We can say that as much depends on the manner of feeding as on the quantity allowed. Corn, corn meal or oily substances of any kind make the hens too fat. Not well laying well when fed on a single article of food, for the demands of the system are such that no one kind of food will sustain the wastes, wear and production of the body for but a short time, or until a deficiency occurs.

When any certain food fails to satisfy the natural cravings of the appetite, which is the index to the want, the fowl begins to refuse it, but will eat the food when a change is made. It should be borne in mind that the chief mistake made with laying fowls is getting them too fat. We often receive letters asking why the hens do not lay, especially when they are well and liberally fed. We can say that as much depends on the manner of feeding as on the quantity allowed. Corn, corn meal or oily substances of any kind make the hens too fat. Not well lay well when fed on a single article of food, for the demands of the system are such that no one kind of food will sustain the wastes, wear and production of the body for but a short time, or until a deficiency occurs.

When any certain food fails to satisfy the natural cravings of the appetite, which is the index to the want, the fowl begins to refuse it, but will eat the food when a change is made. Give only a small proportion of corn to fowls at a time, and that only at night. Give no more than the quantity they will eat up clean. Feed only twice a day—early in the morning and as late in the evening as it can be conveniently given. The morning meal should be of soft food such as slip stuff and

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

OF Mexico's debt of $117,000,000, Englishmen hold about $85,000,000. The rest is held in New York. The republic's annual revenue is about $87,000,000, mainly from the stamp tax and tariff duties.

MR. BLAINE'S little grandson has been christened James Gillespie Blaine Coppinger, and the rich old grand-dad will be expected to come to the front with the conventional silver mug and tearful blessing.

THE Marquis of Lorne, in his article on Canadian home rule, says: "Canada could not stand alone, but would be annexed to the United States on the first pretext were there not behind her the majestic form of a united empire."

IN Nanaimo Land, South Africa, no rain has fallen since Aug. 15, 1883, and plants, and animals and men are dying of drought and starvation. Wheat and seeds have been sent by the Cape Colony, and a relief committee has been formed.

AN old boot is missing from Berryville, the capital of Carroll county, Ark. The County Treasurer, having been summoned to Fort Smith, put $5,000 of the county's money in an old boot, which he had in his carret. On his return the boot was not to be found.

GEN. SHERMAN has received houses and other presents worth $50,000, since he became General of the Army, exclusive of the $40,000 worth of diamonds given by the Khedive to Mrs. Fitch, and since divided among the Generals daughters. For the past fifteen years he has been paid $17,500 a year, and he will draw this salary until his death.

FRANK HARPER, who inherited two of the greatest racehorses this country ever saw, and the other day, "Longfellow is now 16 years old and Tom Brown 12. I always keep a guard over them both night and day. I have been offered $50,000 for Longfellow, but I wouldn't sell him for $100,000, nor would I sell Tom Brown for the same money. I will keep them as long as they live, or until I die."

THE back gate of the Jenkins family had a bolt, which the cook secured each night. One morning about 2 o'clock Mr. Jenkins returned home in an enfebbled condition. Refraining from trying to find the front door, on account of Mrs. Jenkins and the baby, he tried the alley gate. It was locked. With great difficulty he climbed the wall, with its cap of broken bottles, and, dropping into the yard, unlocked the gate. He then, to the surprise of a sleepless neighbor who watched the scene from afar, crept back over the wall to the street and entered by the gate in good order.

THE fabulous statisticians of past days calculated that the vocabulary of Milton comprised about 8,000 words, and that about 15,000 were included in the language of Shakespeare. An admirer of Carlyle, fresh from the perusal of "Sartor Resartus," has, by by making a catalogue of the A and B words which it contains, arrived at the conclusion that not less than 7,500 distinct words are used in that work alone. The only word in the list which could strike an ordinary Englishman as an invention of the author is that of "anywhen," which even now is a household word in the mouths of the peasantry of Southern England.

PROF. WILLARD FISKE, formerly of Cornell university, who has attempted to break into the property of his late wife and who actually carried some of it away to Europe, has raised a storm of which perhaps he little dreamed. Finding that the bequests and wishes of Mrs. Fiske were to have no weight even with the husband whom she had so liberally endowed, her relatives from far and near—the clans of McGraw, of Southworth, of Sears, all related to the deceased woman—are gathering and demanding that the money provided the university be not allowed to hold its bequests. Should Fiske, therefore, triumph in his suit, he will have to defend his wealth against a score or two of his wife's relatives, who declare that if Mrs. Fiske's good intentions are to be defeated by the greed of her husband, they and not he are entitled to the estate. The public will sympathize with them and sincerely hope that in the event of Fiske's cheating the university out of its property a stronger hand may wrench it from him.

DAVID DUDLEY FIELD is indignant about the growing disregard of sinners for the rights of their non-smoking fellow beings. He has nothing to say against the use of tobacco as such, but confines himself to the assertion that abstainers have rights which every smoker who pretends to be moderately considerate of others ought to respect. In the Continent he asks how the smoker and the non-smoker can reconcile their respective pretensions. Nothing is easier, he thinks. Let the smoker smoke into himself, but let one who does not smoke or take tobacco into his mouth or blow it out of his nostrils be free from the annoyance. The non-smokers have their remedy in their own hands. Let them resist every encroachment on their rights. Let them refuse to frequent places of amusement or take passage in conveyance where they are not protected against tobacco.

THE Dio Lewis' Monthly contains an article by Dora Darmore suggesting "A Sex Remedy for Polygamy." The writer is a lady who for a time lived in the Territory of Utah, and has known many Mormon women. The remedy which she proposes is of very practical character. We quote: "There is in the Mormon church a large community of young girls who will be the future wives of Mormonism. The seed is already sown in the minds and hearts of most of them by their unhappy and discontented mothers of a dislike to plural marriages. Send out to Utah not an army of 'school-marms' or milliners, but an army of moral, industrious, intelligent young men to marry these bright Mormon girls, and you have solved the problem of polygamy. Give these girls a chance to marry monogamists and see how quickly they will throw off the fetters of the Mormon church. It is the young women of Utah and not its men to whom you must look for the solution of the Mormon question. Another generation, with it settled in this way, will see polygamy wiped out of the land."

THE arrangements for the International Forestry exhibition which is to be held in Edinburgh next year have been settled. The classification of the exhibits ranges over a wide and interesting field. Practical forestry will be illustrated by implements, models of huts, appliances for floating and transporting timber, and wood-working machinery of every description. The Department of Forest produce will include a collection of the chief uses to which the raw and the manufactured material of the woods may be applied—from gunpowder to gun carriages, baskets, wood oils, cooperage, wood-engraving, tanning and so forth. The class of scientific forestry will deal with the botany of the forests, forest entomology, preservative processes applied to the timber, fossil plants, parasites, and numerous other subjects. Growing specimens of rare and ornamental trees and shrubs, rustic work in arbors, bridges, gates and seats, and dried specimens of ornamental objects will exemplify the division of ornamental forestry. The remaining departments will include pictorial illustrations of the trees, foliage, and scenery of all countries, and the effects of blight, accident, parasitic growth, and abnormal conditions, together with the literature of forestry, working plans of plantations, and examples of the economic condition of foresters and wood men. The entries for the exhibition will close on the 4th of October, 1884.

Wrestling Camels.

Wrestling matches between camels is an amusement in which the Turks take great delight, although they sometimes get a fine animal maimed in the sport. The camels are trained to wrestle when quite young, and take extraordinary pleasure in fray. A correspondent writes: We had a young camel on board, only a month old, and as he was born under the flag he was christened "Uncle Sam." One of the Turks amused himself on the voyage making a "pelidvan" of him, and when he was six weeks old he was more than a match for his master, using his legs, neck and mouth with such dexterity, and displaying such wonderful strength in so young a thing, that he became a very rough playmate, and often hurt the men by throwing them down. We'll raised animals seldom injure each other, being taught to throw their antagonist by getting his neck under their fore legs—the right one—and then throwing their whole weight of their body on him and bringing him to the ground.

The first street railway in America was laid in New York City in 1852.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

Epitaph for Tired Women.

Here lies a poor woman who always was tired,
Who lived in a house where help was not hired;
Her last words on earth were, "Dear friends I am going
Where washing ain't done, nor ironing, nor sewing,
But everything there is exact to my wishes,
For there they don't work on Sundays, nor dishes.
I'll be with loved relatives will always be singing,
But, having no video, I'll get clear of the stinging
Don't mourn for me now—don't mourn for me later;
I am doing to do nothing for ever and ever."
—Detroit Free Press.

A Poetic Wasp.

Ella Wheeler, wh use love poems have been so much commented on the ground of their supposed immorality, in the course of a spicy reply to her critic, says: "My friends have advised me to wait and not have my poems appear in book form until I am, to use their words, 'married or dead.' But so long as I believe the poems proper to publish at all, I do not feel the need of a husband or a tombstone to shelter me from further criticism."—Exchange.

Taking Comfort.

Old Mrs. Makemup to young Mrs. Lucky, who is the fortunate possessor of a wealth of brown tresses, and who has never but even one of her beautiful teeth,—"Oh, dear me, yes, my dear, I make quite enough with you to tell you my about the welcome rest of the Sabbath. And then, too, we are free from fashionable callers on Saturday, at least, and after we've been to church we can get about in an old gown, without our false hair and teeth, and be so comfortable."

Several Kinds of Girls.

A good girl to have—Sal Vation.
A disagreeable girl to have—Annie Mosity.
A fashion girl—Hattie Magazine.
Not a Christian girl—Hattie Body.
A sweet girl—Carrie Mel.
A very pleasant girl—Jennie Rosity.
A "summer girl"—Helen Hunt.
A sick girl—Sallie Vate.
A rich girl—Amelia Ration.
A seedy girl—Cora Ander.
One of the best girls—Ella Gant.
A clear case of girl—Clara Fication.
A geometrical girl—Bella Dendrum.
A musical girl—Susie Note.
A profound girl—Mettie Physics.
A star girl—Meta Orie.
A cringing girl—Annie Mine.
A nervous girl—Hestie Acal.
A unwieldy girl—Callie Sthenics.
A lively girl—Annie Mation.
An uncertain girl—Eva Nescent.
A sad girl—Ella Gy.
A serene girl—Mollie Fy.
A great big girl—Ella Phant.
A war-like girl—Millie Tary.
The best girl of all—Your own.

Look Before You Leap.

Beatrice, in a long article in the Michigan Farmer, tells the sad story of desertion and woe brought to a young girl who married a man who was almost unknown to her at the time the moon took place, and closes the article with this piece of wholesome advice to girls: The young farmers may not be such dashing gallants, nor be as careful even in company, but they don't owe the tailor for the suits they wear, nor make the grand "spread" on borrowed capital. The young man you have known from childhood, whose character you have had an opportunity of knowing, whose possessions, though modest, are honestly his, is the safest husband. It is a dangerous thing to marry a man who comes as the fairman and potent of life, toward here and there by circumstances, who is here to-day and may be gone tomorrow. Teach this "floating population" that a pleasant address and a passport is no favor, but if you must marry a wandering Adonis, make him produce his credentials, lest the story told in an first paragraph comes to be told of you.

A Blue-Grass Belle.

Our Kentucky belle is handsome and, attired in a modest white gown, presents no unentitious attractions. She is accompanied by a companion, whom she is heard to address by the title of mother and who is only slightly older and slightly less attractive than herself, but who is more conspicuous in the general brilliant ensemble of her face and personal paraphernalia. She hands her money to a unsigned type of nauseous nature, the offspring of a combined Dude and jockey, who is seen in the whirling current of the quarter-stretch and drifting straight to the pool seller. While he is taking stock for her in the fast dress of the turf she has turned her attention to another market, where speculation is equally interesting and hazardous. She has allowed a noted loan to perceive her languishing glance, and is casting interesting looks upon him. Her gaze has been purposely fastened upon him, until he, by a well-known physical and psychological law, turns as naturally toward her as the needle does to the sun or the willow to the water; her soul, velvet like drops as unconsciously as the flower drops its odoriferous attributes when the dew falls upon it. The conscious attitude of the young lady, the dark eyes resting intently

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

Free trade papers which occasionally suggest the value of patronizing home industries and supporting home manufactures are at once accused of insincerity. Did it ever occur to the mind of the accusers that inducing a man to any particular act and compelling him to the same were altogether different? One is his own free act and deed, the other is an abridgement of his liberty.

The supreme court has affirmed (Justice Sherwood dissenting) the verdict of $20,000 in favor of Dr. Maclean, of the university, in the famous libel suit against the Detroit Evening News. While the News has many times gone beyond right and reason in disclosing to the public the nastiness of numerous scandalous operations, in this particular case we failed to find any malice proven and published. Perhaps some restraint to the course of the News was necessary, but a clearer case than this should have been chosen. A paper that has done as much as the News to advance the interests of journalism in Michigan, should not be destroyed in the moment of victory by those it has benefited. It will require however, more than one $20,000 to destroy the News, and if any of those justices ever come up for re-election, they will probably find that paper a mighty lively corpse.

The Detroit Evening News.

The Detroit Evening News has just put in a second of the famous Scott presses, with a capacity of 24,000 copies per hour. When both presses are running, which is from about 4:30 to 5:15 o'clock each afternoon, papers are turned out at the rate of 48,000 per hour or 800 per minute, and in case of necessity even this number can be increased to 1,000 per minute. The News is the first and only paper in Michigan to require anything like such rapid facilities. Notwithstanding the competition of two new cheap papers in Detroit, the circulation of The News shows no appreciable decline.

The Echo is the weekly edition of the Detroit Evening News. It has just entered upon its sixth year, and both in popularity and circulation has been a decided success. It is of the same size as The News, contains little or no advertising, and is filled from the first column to the last with the very choicest matter that can be procured. All the best items, paragraphs and articles are culled from the daily; a synopsis of each week's news is carefully prepared for it; its market reports, while brief, are very complete and reliable, and nearly a whole page of each issue is devoted to choice original or selected stories —something superior, on the average, to the ordinary newspaper tales. Altogether it is a little gem of a paper, and at the price is without question the cheapest of its kind in the country. Single copies, 75 cents; 3 copies for $2; 5 for $3.

One of the most readable and popular of the books of travel that have recently been published in this country has been "Five Months Abroad," by Mr. James E. Scripps, of The Evening News. It forms a volume of 458 pages, and is liberally illustrated with original engravings. It is so entertaining as a story throughout, and at the same time is replete with valuable information. The book is sold by the publishers at $1.75 per copy, but it is for a short time being given away to every person who shall get up a club of six subscribers to The Echo, at the low club rate of 60 cents per copy.

Col. O. T. Beard, late of the Detroit Post and Tribune, has engaged to write a serial story for the Detroit Echo, in which he will expose some phases of the rascality in high quarters by which the public are plundered, and by which immense fortunes are amassed at the expense of the common people. Col. Beard has already achieved a high repute as a story writer, and the forthcoming serial will undoubtedly be very interesting.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Until this date had given up and said could not live. 75 cents a bottle. Sold by Dr. Crosby.

GEORGE A. POST.

GEORGE A. POST,

THE YOUNGEST MEMBER OF THE FORTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS AND THE YOUNGEST MAN EVER ELECTED TO THE NATIONAL LEGISLATURE.

Geo. A. Post, of Susquehanna, Pennsylvania, enjoys this distinguished honor, representing the fifteenth district of Pennsylvania, comprising the counties of Bradford, Susquehanna, Wayne and Wyoming. Mr. Post is only twenty-nine years of age, of fine physical proportions, a smooth face strongly marked with more than ordinary character for one of his years, and is one of the most popular and promising young men of his state.

Mr. Post was born in Cuba, N. Y., September 1, 1854, removing at the age of seven years to Owego, in that state, where he resided until 1873, receiving his education in the Owego academy, and the Oswego normal school. He then removed to Susquehanna, Pa., shortly after entering the service of the Erie railway, in which he was soon promoted to a position of responsibility. He was elected mayor of Susquehanna when only twenty-two years of age, which position he filled with distinguished ability.

Mr. Post, while in the railway service, and during his sojourn, improved his evening hours by reading law, and so naturally apt was he in mastering the intricacies of Blackstone, that in a few years he was admitted to the bar. The politicians of northern Pennsylvania began to see that Mr. Post had won a standing on the tidal wave of public popularity that would elect him to congress as a democrat in the fifteenth district, which in the previous congressional election had given a republican majority of 4,621. Consequently he was placed in nomination last fall by the democrats, and elected by a plurality of 2,454 votes over the Hon. C. C. Jadwin (ind. rep.), whose term expired with the forty-seventh congress. This great victory by a young man of only twenty-nine years of age over a gentleman who had served acceptably in congress, and who in age is many years his senior, is the greatest encomium that an appreciative constituency could bestow on the character and ability of Mr. Post.

OTHER HONORS.

Mr. Post is prominent in other than political honors. He is a leading member of the Knights of Honor, having been grand director (executive head) of the grand lodge of Pennsylvania for three years, and the representative from his state to the supreme lodge of the United States for four years, and in 1880 was one of the presidential electors from Pennsylvania. He is one of the owners and editors of the Montrose Democrat, the organ of the democracy of his district, and has been an active campaign orator almost from boyhood up.

Mr. Post is married, and has already become one of the most popular members of congress now in Washington. He is very unassuming, and impresses the student of human nature as a "coming man" in our national affairs.

Taking Care of Her Husband.

Two Austin ladies were conversing about one thing and another, after the manner of women.

"Mrs. Sanajdeky has not been to see me in a long time," remarked one of the ladies.

"She hasn't got time to make calls. She has to take care of and be with her husband all the time."

"Why, is he laid up with sickness?"

"Oh, no; on the contrary, he is in the enjoyment of the best of health; if he was sick she would not have to watch him."—Texas Siftings.

George and Rosalie.

"The doughnuts are gone!"

A look of ghastly horror, that made the pretty, dimpled cheeks of Rosalie McCloskey take on an ashen hue of blank despair, passed quickly over the girl's face as her sister, who stood with one voluptuous foot swinging in a dreamy, sensuous fashion over the front yard, while the other rested on the door, spoke the fateful sentence with which this chapter opens. Up from the meadows where the clustant azure, with a splint on her off foreleg, that Lord Dacres had traded for last spring, was nibbling the tender blades of grass, came the scent of the violets and daisies that were just peeping from the green, and away to the westward were floating great masses of fleecy-white clouds whose edges were made radiant by great shafts of golden light that streamed up from below the horizon as if in benediction upon the dying day. The crickets, those faithful harbingers of night, were beginning to crick a little in spots, and the lowing kine were lying down on the sidewalk, so that people who wished to fall over them would have no unnecessary trouble in doing so. And while the swallows that were flying in little circles around the eaves of Riverton Villa twitted away in a sleepy fashion, there came floating up on the twilight air the deep, solemn tone of the village church-bell, telling to the little world of souls within the precincts of its voice that the semi-monthly meeting of the Perkinsville Home Missionary Society was about to begin.

And then, as Rosalie's eyes were becoming dim with tears of longing and sorrow, she saw approaching her the form of the man she loved so well, and in an instant she was by his side, her pure, young face radiant with smiles and her Sunday hoodie on.

"Oh, Reggy!" she exclaimed, in her impulsive, frow-have-I-got-an-ever-a-mele-give-me-some-marshmallow-drops way, "I was so afraid you would not come!"

"And were you anxious to see me, my darling?" he asks, seating himself upon a rustic bench and coyly posing one knee so that the heiress may perch upon it.

"You know I was, sweetheart," replies the girl, looking down coyly and noticing how the sun glints full with a hectic flush on his rosseo pants. "You know that when you are not with me, when I cannot feel the pressure of your cheek upon mine, and quaff the nectar of your twoet licks for a quarter of a breath, every hour of my life goes by with leaden feet, every moment seems an age"—and placing her arms about his neck she draws him to her in a passionately collar-breaking fashion.

"I am going away to-morrow, my precious one," George W. S. Simpson says presently.

"Shall you be gone long?" the girl asks in hoarse, agonized tones.

"About a week," he replies, and then, seeing that Rosalie has fallen almost fainting into his arms, he kisses her tenderly back of the left ear, and says hurriedly, "but I have left orders at the candy store that you are to have whatever you want during my absence."

There are no tears on Rosalie's cheeks now, but her face is as pale as the moonlight that is stealing through the leafy bower above them, and on it a new, deep meaning that George had never seen there before—a gentle light, as kind as death, as soft as holy love.

Alarmed by the expression of her features, he bends over her. "Tell me, darling," he says, "is there anything I can do for you?"

"Yes," she answers.

"What is it?"

"You can give me a promise—a promise that you will not break."

"Tell me what it is," he says, in anxious, haggard tones, "that I may prove to you my love."

"When does your train leave?"

"At 9 o'clock."

"Promise me," she says, looking into his eyes with a wild passionate yearning, "that you will not get left."—Chicago Tribune.

Grand New-Year Ball

AT THE HUBBERT HOUSE, EAST JORDAN, ON

NEW YEAR'S NIGHT

FOR THE BENEFIT OF STEVENS POST NO. 68, G. A. R.

ALL ARE RESPECTFULLY INVITED TO COME.

FLOOR MANAGERS.

JAMES SOPER. HOWARD WEIBLE.

Good Music in Attendance.

BILL TO DANCE 50 CENTS. WITH SUPPER, $1.50.

John Nicholls

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades, WAGON TONGUES, Shingles, Lath, &c.

Lumber Sawed & Bills Filled TO ORDER.

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at O. B. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

Overcoats!

AND

SUITINGS

Gents' Overcoats.
Youths' Overcoats.
Boys' Overcoats

Gents' Suits.
Youths' Suits.
Boys' Suits

I have just received a large assortment of the above goods, bought at reduced rates. I am selling these goods for less than they are actually worth at wholesale. I have a line of Overcoats I am closing out at $4. Big bonanza for the money. Call and examine these goods and judge for yourself.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Nov., 1883.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds.

Imported and Domestic Perfumery.

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Hartshorne's new

Opera Block.

Joseph Hyland,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Heavy blacksmithing of all kinds, and repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand all his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meats

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

$1 A YEAR. $1

ONE DOLLAR.

ONE DOLLAR.

$1 A YEAR. $1

THE WEEKLY Detroit Free Press AND THE HOUSEHOLD PUBLISHED ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

Two Large Pages. The Greatest of Dollar Weeklies.

Price, $1 a Year. Sample Copies Free. Address, Detroit Free Press Co., Detroit, Mich.

$1 A YEAR. $1

ONE DOLLAR.

ONE DOLLAR.

$1 A YEAR. $1

Job Printing

AT THE JOURNAL OFFICE.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 27, 1883.

Local Business Notices.

TAX RECEIPTS at this office.

NEW YEAR SERMON at the M. E. Church Sunday evening. Fill the house. It will pay you well to come.

Ely means COST when he says cost. Come and see.

H. C. Cooper will offer his TOYS, Holiday Goods, etc., AT COST this week, to close them out.

All grades of Shingles at Upright, Emery & Co's.

HOUSE TO RENT.—On the ter. Inquire of O. B. Weed's. Inquire at the store. W. J. BRADLEY.

FOR SALE—A second-hand portable saw mill, with engine and boiler complete. For sale cheap. Call soon. J. MILO EATON.

Highest CASH price paid for cedar Ties and Poles. UPRIGHT, EMERY & Co.

Buy your wife a handsome and durable French Kid Shoe for a Christmas present. Sure to please. Sold by E. Sherwood & Co.

Cloaks and Dolmans—special sale for December. Don't miss the bargains at D. Sher's.

Farm Produce of every description taken in exchange at Upright, Emery & Co.'s.

Come down to ELY'S and find out what COST means. Boots and Shoes.

For fresh and cheap Groceries, go to Byron See's. F. S.—Candies and Nuts for Xmas.

Picture Frames, handsome patterns on hand, any size made to order. Prices to suit the times. O. B. WEED.

Boots and Shoes are selling like hot cakes at D. See's.

ELY is selling all leather goods in Men's Boots and Women's Shoes and Slippers AT COST.

D. Sherwood & Co. have an assortment of Slippers which can't be beat. Just the thing for a Christmas present.

Now is the time to buy a CHEAP SUIT of Clothes. Upright, Emery & Co. have about fifty suits left.

Candies, Nuts, and Toys, just the thing for Christmas. A fine assortment at O. B. Weed's.

A large assortment of men's heavy boots and rubbers for winter wear, at D. Sherwood & Co.'s.

The only store in town who make a specialty of Gents' Fine Hats is Upright, Emery & Co.

For Sale.—Two or three good horses for sale cheap for cash or good security. J. MILO EATON.

APPLES and Onions by the barrel and bushel at Upright, Emery & Co.'s.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

200 cords of good dry birch and maple stock wood for sale. Good as wood guaranteed. Call at the office of J. MILO EATON.

The Temperature.

The following is a record of observations of the Thermometer at the JOURNAL office, at 7 a. m. and 2 p. m. each day, for the week ending yesterday:

	DEC 20
Thursday	17	26
Friday	20	24
Saturday	10	14
Sunday	14	18
Monday	26	32
Tuesday	26	28
Wednesday	30	24

News Brevities.

E Carpenter and family started for Florida on Tuesday.

A good time may be expected at the masquerade at the opera house next Monday evening.

L. D. Bartholomew and John Burns expect to start for Florida early next week, to be gone most of the winter. Others expect to go soon.

Several young gentlemen have announced their intention of making New Year calls. No doubt the ladies will all be prepared for them.

At the M. E. church next Sunday morning the discourse and exercises will be historical. In the evening at 6:30 a New Year sermon will be delivered.

H Chapman's hotel at Bay Springs has a popular landlord, it may draw a summer patronage such as the JOURNAL mentioned last week in connection with a new summer hotel in Charlevoix.

"Happy New Year."

The following gentlemen will receive callers on New Year's day, at the places named:

W. A. Brown and Gardner Brown assisted by Dan Chambers will receive at the residence of W. P. Brown.

Allie Washburne assisted by Dr. Preston and R. W. Kane, will receive at the residence of Byron See.

CHRISTMAS.

How the Day was Observed in Charlevoix.

Christmas festivities really began on Monday, for most people who could gave up the day to preparations. It was a fine, warm day, and the streets were lively with people. Among the ladies there was great activity in preparing the Christmas trees in the opera house and the M. E. church. There were two trees in each place, and long before dark they were well filled with articles for the pleasure of the little folks, as well as a good assortment of presents for older people in attendance.

During the afternoon many of our citizens indulged in sleigh-riding, which added to the life of the street.

But little was done in the way of decorations except in the opera house and church, although Geo. Miller's windows are worthy of notice. The words "A Merry Christmas" and "A Happy New Year," in mallino letters, were so arranged as to add much to the beauty of the display and not interfere with the light of the room.

A J. McLeod celebrated the day with a very fine display of meat, and in the evening the market was brilliantly illuminated. Mr. McLeod has been quietly preparing for this occasion, and his efforts were crowned with success.

The various merchants handling holiday goods made no effort at display or decorations beyond an effective showing of goods, and in most cases these were well sold off before night on Monday.

To effectively decorate the opera house required a great amount of patience and skill as well as labor, but the work was well done. The opening exercises were music and responsive readings, after which the good things were distributed. The house was crowded, and all were apparently happy. The gifts were mainly for the children of the Sunday school and many were remembered who are not regular attendants at the school. Altogether the occasion was one long to be remembered by the participants.

At the M. E. church, the walls were appropriately decorated with mottos, emblems, and other devices made of evergreens, and two large trees were well filled with articles for the children of the Sunday school, though many others were given. After usual opening exercises, and remarks by the pastor, Santa Claus came in and announced that he put the presents on the tree, and if the children were all "good children" for the coming year, he would come again next Christmas. His presence at this time and place is conclusive to the minds of many of those present that there is a been fide living Santa Claus. A commendable feature of the occasion was the giving of presents to children whose parents or friends were too poor to provide for them. By this means their regard for the Sunday school will be strengthened, and the teachers will be better able to keep them in regular attendance. The church was well filled, many coming and going at all times during the exercises and distribution.

After the exercises at the trees were concluded, those of the older young people (and some married couples, too) who find pleasure in the ballroom, went to Lewis' hall, where the fire department had provided music and other necessaries for a good old-fashioned dance. When the reporter put in an appearance he found as jolly and good-natured a party as ever congregated in a ball-room, and Lewis hall fairly shook with the energy of the dancers. The boys are to be congratulated on the popularity and success of their parties.

Christmas day was not so bright and warm as the day previous, however, it could be called a fine winter day. Many of the business places opened a few hours in the morning, but most of them closed during the afternoon and evening, and the time was devoted to pleasure,—and good dinners. [Fortunate for the printer, he was invited out to dinner, and has a recollection of numerous good things.]

One generous act (we hope not the only one of the kind) was the visit of a number of ladies, on Christmas morning, to a family of motherless children out of the village a short distance. They were provided with provisions, and small packages of toys, candy, etc., which must surely have made the young hearts glad.

During the afternoon there was a raffle at Frank Wood's barber shop, at which a $45 cutter and a $5 lamp were disposed of. Carl Dorsey held the lucky ticket for the cutter, and Geo. Miller for the lamp.

The Christmas trade this year has been very good, all things considered. Dealers report a pretty thorough cleaning out of stocks, with cash receipts little below the average of previous years. A few dealers report sales light—below their expectations—but it was noticable that the most liberal advertisers gave the best report, while those who made little or no special effort "got left" with stocks on hand.

1883 1883

CHRISTMAS NOTICE.

Here we are Again.

O. B. Weed & Co.

PREVIOUS EFFORTS ECLIPSED.

Holiday Goods

Without Limit.

EVERYTHING!

EVERYTHING.

Our Mammoth Stock of Holiday Goods marks a New Era in the History of Charlevoix County.

Presents and Prices to Suit Everybody.

COME EARLY and Make your Selection.

Bay Springs.

H. B. Chapman has caused to be made and circulated two photographs, 5x8 inches, one showing his new mammoth hotel, and the other a distant view of the hotel, its surroundings, and the principal business portion of Bay Springs, with its harbor and railroad. These pictures are evidently designed for advertising purposes, and in connection with the circular printed on the back will doubtless prove very valuable.

Among the reasons given for investing so much in hotel property in such a place, are: That the location and scenery are beautiful; it is within five eighths of a mile of the geograph ical center of the county; well situated for a city; has plenty of pure water; two mineral springs near the hotel; unsurpassed shipping facilities; an excellent place for the manufacture of all articles in wood, iron, leather, and cotton; more trout streams than any other place; even temperature; and good soil and climate for fruit-growing.

Bay Springs is connected with the G. R. & I. railroad by a narrow gauge railroad built for lumbering purposes, but which can, and possibly will, be fitted with coaches for passenger traffic. An extension eastward 13 miles would intersect the Michigan Central, and add largely to both freight and passenger traffic.

There is considerable timbered land for sale, the product of which, when cleared, must pass through Bay Springs, and there is little doubt that Mr. Chapman's money and energy will make that village an important factor in our county business. The old gentleman has great faith, and a tenacity of purpose to be commended. Pity his energies are not expended in behalf of Charlevoix.

There is little doubt that Bay Springs property will rise rapidly in value within the next year or two, and especially so if a vote of the people should locate the county seat there, as Mr. Chapman seems confident will be done, if it should ever be moved from Charlevoix.

Mason—Nicholls.

Mr. John F. Mason and Miss Rosie Nicholls, well-known young people of Charlevoix, were married by Rev. C. F. Van Aiken, at 8 o'clock last evening, at the residence of the bride's parents. After the ceremony refreshments were served, and at 10 o'clock the happy couple departed to their own home, which had been prepared for them, with everything ready for housekeeping. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson leave for the "Lone Star State" next week, where they expect to reside. The romantic part of this match was that the happy pair had never met until a few days previous to their marriage, although corresponding for five years.

We close by wishing the JOURNAL a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. F. A. N.

Married.

MASON—NICHOLLS—On Dec. 26, 1883, at the residence of the bride's parents in Charlevoix by rev. C. F. Van Aiken, Mr. JOHN F. MASON and Miss ROSIE NICHOLLS, both of Charlevoix.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 76 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Democrat.—By mail, $6.00 per year in advance, postage paid.

Weekly Democrat.—$1.50 per year; 75 cents for six months; 40 cents for three months—invariably in advance.

Address,

THE DEMOCRAT,

Grand Rapids, Mich.

To Correspondents.

"DEAF."—Accept thanks for papers; also for Christmas card, which is a beauty.

ZEEK.—Will have them printed and mailed in a few days.

South Arm.

Winter has at last arrived, and nearly everyone is blessing the "beautiful snow."

Mr. E. Reed met with a serious accident on Monday last. While skidding logs a limb hit his nose cutting it badly.

It is rumored that Philip Lanway, of this place was recently married in Gouverneur, N. Y., to a lady of that place. Phil, and his bride are expected home soon.

Echo school has a vacation next week.

The Lewis of Charlevoix was seen on our streets recently.

The East Jordan people did not respond very liberally in making up the fees for the Presiding Elder last Sunday.

F. L. Church, of Antrim county, was here surveying for Messrs. Murphy, McArthur, and Vance, last Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Hall, of Central Lake, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. Vance on Saturday. Isaac Vance is home for the holidays.

Mr. J. N. Thompson, of San Antonio, Texas, and Miss Laura M. Scofield, of Echo, Mich., were married in Echo on Dec. 20, 1883, Rev. H. C. Scofield, father of the bride, officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson leave for the "Lone Star State" next week, where they expect to reside. The romantic part of this match was that the happy pair had never met until a few days previous to their marriage, although corresponding for five years.

We close by wishing the JOURNAL a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. F. A. N.

A MERE OUTLINE.

BY JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

Ah, lady mine! but the face and brow
Were lovelier than the world knows now
Through the light of moon and star
That smile as they see smiling afar—
White lilies in a pallid stream
Of sweetness! while beneath the moon
Those lilies lie in a flood of golden,
Pure moldings of liquid gold
That, ever and ever, through the long,
Years of June,
Where all the scene is colored
Become like a dwelling deber-bed,
So marvelous her face and form,
Their beauty blinds my fancy now.

And there—the oval chin I know,
Carved like a cameo—the rounded
With curves opposite dimple, sculpted
With enthralling light and shade and whitled
The delicated velvet pucker known—
The sweetest whirlpool ever tattoled
By Cupid's tanger-tip—and so
The deadliest needle-eye in the world,

And oh!—how foreman gone and
Ah! thoseof—what eyes she hide!
Lost eyes—the mask the hide
Of may violets through and through,
Where these be colors and dell
Compared with eyes so beautiful!
Ah, lady mine! I know that eyes
As serenely and as dark as night—
As lightly as are the broad-lined bars
Of rainbows set in sunny skies—
And yet as deep and dark—her eyes—
And lustrous black as Moses and stars.

A "BUSINESS ARRANGEMENT."

BY M. C. FARLEY.

She was tall and strong and resolute looking, with a handsome dark face that somehow impressed the beholder with the feeling that the owner was a person of very high courage, and of more than average strength of mind. She stood leaning lightly against one of the big stone pillars of the veranda, carelessly pulling off the tops of the long grasses that grew about her, the clinging cloth dress revealing the fine outlines of a figure that was almost statuesque in its elegance. She was swaying in a tranquil tone to her small audience, consisting of one person only, as she scattered the heads of grass in heaps about her feet, that also hated lovers, and that marriage was only another form of slavery scarcely less obnoxious than that annulled by the Emancipation proclamation.

"All of which I grant you, but which still doesn't change the present circumstances," placidly remarked her interested auditor, as he calmly lit a fresh cigar and changed his position on the garden bench. "Though I need confess Miss Renfrew that to—to mind there is a distinction with a difference."

"The young lady frowned.

"In this case it is a moneyed 'difference' and a moneyed 'distinction' Capt. Hazard," said she, pointedly. "You are a great flirt, and I have heard you declare a hundred times that matrimony is a folly you would never be guilty of."

"To be sure," assented the Captain, lazily blowing the blue rings of smoke upon the air. "But you know that circumstances alter cases, particularly in the matter of marriage."

"But I do not wish to marry you."

"Oh! of course not—most certainly not," retorted the Captain, with a cheerful smile, that enraged his fair companion more than words could have done. "But you know the terms of the will as well as I. It is unfortunate that, while our mutual friend adored us both, and endowed us equally with her worldly goods in her last will and testament, we find it so hard to comply with the obligations it imposes upon us. However, you can renounce your share of the fortune, Miss Renfrew, by refusing to become my wife. That alternative is always left you."

She shut her teeth tightly together, and looked defiantly at her companion. She saw a tall, slightly-stooped figure, clad in the mistress uniform of a Captain of Dragoons. The face that now threw his shading beams through the foliage of the old elm tree shone on a face that had seen a hundred battles, and that was, every whit, as grand and cold and resolute as her own.

"I am too poor to throw away my inheritance," said she, laughtily, pulling at the grass again. "And you know that I am poor; too—

"For that matter so am I," said he.

"And you are taking advantage of my poverty—

"Indeed, no," disclaimed the Captain, hastily; "you can always refuse to comply with the obligations laid down in the will, Miss Renfrew."

"But I—I won't refuse, tried she, angrily. "I won't refuse. Mark that down, Capt. Hazard.

A dark red spot burned in the Captain's pale cheeks for an instant, and he sighed deeply. But whether the sigh was cause by a feeling of relief or disappointment was impossible to determine.

"Then you will be my wife?"

"I will marry you to secure my share in the estate of the late Mrs. Ford, and for that reason only," said she, slowly and scornfully. "You are not to say one word that I love you, for I do not."

"Thank you. I never suppose anything, Miss Renfrew."

"It is to be purely a business arrangement," she continued, with an angry flush;

"Oh, certainly! A business arrangement only! I understand," assented he, politely. "Viewing marriage in the light of a business relation will enable us to manage the whole affair with a caricumspection and precision that might be wanting were we prompted by other than mercenary motives."

"I shall continue on flirting after we wed—that is—I shall do exactly as I please after—" She choked and hesitated.

"After we are married," said the Captain, quietly, finishing the sentence for her. "That is to be expected, and, upon my word, I think I will, too. None of those lump-drum fires for me, where Darby and Joan secludes themselves from the world and its fascinations, for each other. No, Miss Renfrew, we'll each have a hundred strings to our bow—if we can get 'em, and we will manage to spend our late friend's money in decent though good style and have a pleasant time while it lasts. We will look upon this marriage from now on in the light of a business affair—a sort of partnership, as it were, which does not limit either one of us to any certain and circumscribed round of duties. By the terms of the will, we shall have to keep the house on the avenue upon a certain portion of each year, and do some entertaining. But that is easily managed. You can have your great friend and adorer, Jackey Littlefield, at the house as often as you like, and I hope you won't forget to invite a few of the young ladies whom you know I have a preference for. I'm certain that we'll get along famously in this way."

Miss Renfrew stared hard at the Captain. Was there the faintest, almost imperceptible, ring of sarcasm in his words and tone? But no, that could not be. Capt. Hazard had been a flirt and lady-killer from his youth up, and the sentiment's he now expressed were, of course, his real ones. Both the Captain and Miss Renfrew were the protegees of one who, though now removed by death, seemed to reach out to them her protecting arms from the grave.

Both had been very distantly related to the late Mrs. Ford, though they were given to understand by ties of blood to each other. They were the only relatives Mrs. Ford had left in the world, and as a consequence were her natural heirs. It had been her favorite plan in life to see these two children people marry each other, and thus keep her fortune united in the family. But, as said these two children, she had not counted on seemed to strike out in an opposite direction as if anxious to conquer worlds for themselves. Mrs. Ford had given up in despair, and in a fit of chagrin made her last will and testament after a fashion peculiarly her own. Her fortune, valued at hundreds and bonds, besides the elegant residence on the avenue, ran up into round numbers. All this she left unreservedly to the Captain and Miss Renfrew, providing they married each other in a given length of time. Failing to do this, the entire property was to go to the State, with the exception of a few hundreds.

It had been difficult to conjecture what the Captain's thoughts were as he listened to that singular will. As for Miss Renfrew, if she was very high and mighty before she found out what the will was, she became twice as high and mighty afterward, and it did seem for some time as if the State would actually be the beneficiary after all.

Neither the Captain nor Miss Renfrew were in the first flush of youth. The Captain was 40 years old, if a day. He had endured the hardships of war, and had come home while yet a very young man, a sort of battle-scarred hero, with a halting step that seemed the very perfection of grace to the women, who immediately set him up as a god of war, and worshiped at his shrine accordingly.

It's of no use to deny but that the Captain took kindly to this sort of treatment—most invariably do. But it spoiled him all the same, and he developed by degrees into one of the most consummate and skillful coquettes that ever grazed or ogle-grazed the male persuasion. Still the woman seemed to like him all the better for this, and he went on his way conquering all before him.

There was one exception, however, and that exception was Miss Renfrew. When the Captain came home from the wars, he had found, domiciled under the roof-tree at Miss Ford's, a blue, angelic girl of 16, too painfully shy and plain to be thought, for his to waste any of his ammunition in that direction. So he had boldly carried on his manifold flirtations under her keen and severely cross, and boastful of his conquests, and laughed under his breath at the tenderness with which women fell in love with him, and otherwise chaffed and tormented her, until the chrysalis gradually emerged from her husk of reserve and diffidence, and developed to the gallant Captain's unbounded amazement, into a full-blown butterfly, capping the climax by picking up the Captain's own weapons and turning them full upon himself. It had been said that Hazard was the greatest flirt in the city, but Miss Renfrew soon wooded this doubtful honor from him, and people now declared solemnly that, in the light of her performances in that line, the Captain's efforts paled into insignificance.

The angelic girl of 16, with her deep, dark eyes, and a mouth, as Hazard angrilliantly asserted her, as big as her hat, and that covered an acre—she affected the Gainsborough style, and he hated it—blossomed into a magnificent woman at 20.

And perhaps nobody was more surprised than the Captain was himself one day, to discover a certain partyhis own exact pattern at that—violently embracing Miss Renfrew in the back parlor, and making certain wild and incoherent proposals of a heart, hand and pocket-book to that young lady. He had a dim recollection that these offers of himself and his possessions had been treated with scorn and contumely, and that he had been there and there so awfully "sat upon," metaphorically speaking, that life, in comparison, seemed a howling wilderness for some time afterward.

But this was a long time ago. The Captain apparently did not take his disappointment very much to heart, though he refrained from offering the remnants of his affections to anybody else, and Miss Renfrew waxed fatter and handsomer and wickeder, and counted her conquests as the Captain had done his as the years rolled on. Until now there came a crisis in their lives in the shape of Mrs. Ford's will that neither one could resist.

Without this money they were both poor as church mice. The Captain had a boggarly pension and cheapest habits, and Miss Renfrew had the expensive habits of a spoiled child with a pension, and neither of them had ever earned a cent of money or did a day's work in their lives. This simplified matters, and brought the obdurate couple to a focus.

Not long after a wedding ceremony was celebrated with great eclat in the most fashionable church in the city, and the Captain and his wife entered at once into the full enjoyment of Mrs. Hazard was pleased to call a "business arrangement."

Six months passed. In this short length of time, and while in the full possession of his old-time liberty, the Captain had become moody and morose, and Mrs. Hazard developed a tendency toward hysterics that even her best friends had never suspected her of before her marriage.

She had everything she wanted, even to the presence of Jacob Littlefield, who danced attendance upon her whims, even more patiently and attentively than he ever had done before her marriage. Indeed, he made love to Mrs. Hazard in such a brazen and confident manner that the Captain's hands itched to take Mr. Littlefield by the nape of the neck and the back of the pants and pitch him head and heels out of the house.

But this he dared not do. He remembered, with a feeling of burning rage, that Mr. Littlefield was a part of that "business arrangement," which had so blindly entered into. A theory disappointed her in this, and each one seemed to strike out in an opposite direction as if anxious to conquer worlds for themselves. Mrs. Ford had given up in despair, and in a fit of chagrin made her last will and testament after a fashion peculiarly her own. Her fortune, valued at hundreds and bonds, besides the elegant residence on the avenue, ran up into round numbers. All this she left unreservedly to the Captain and Miss Renfrew, providing they married each other in a given length of time. Failing to do this, the entire property was to go to the State, with the exception of a few hundreds.

It had been difficult to conjecture what the Captain's thoughts were as he listened to that singular will. As for Miss Renfrew, if she was very high and mighty before she found out what the will was, she became twice as high and mighty afterward, and it did seem for some time as if the State would actually be the beneficiary after all.

Neither the Captain nor Miss Renfrew were in the first flush of youth. The Captain was 40 years old, if a day. He had endured the hardships of war, and had come home while yet a very young man, a sort of battle-scarred hero, with a halting step that seemed the very perfection of grace to the women, who immediately set him up as a god of war, and worshiped at his shrine accordingly.

It's of no use to deny but that the Captain took kindly to this sort of treatment—most invariably do. But it spoiled him all the same, and he developed by degrees into one of the most consummate and skillful coquettes that ever grazed or ogle-grazed the male persuasion. Still the women seemed to like him all the better for this, and he went on his way conquering all before him.

There was one exception, however, and that exception was Miss Renfrew. When the Captain came home from the wars, he had found, domiciled under the roof-tree at Miss Ford's, a blue, angelic girl of 16, too painfully shy and plain to be thought, for his to waste any of his ammunition in that direction. So he had boldly carried on his manifold flirtations under her keen and severely cross, and boastful of his conquests, and laughed under his breath at the tenderness with which women fell in love with him, and otherwise chaffed and tormented her, until the chrysalis gradually emerged from her husk of reserve and diffidence, and developed to the gallant Captain's unbounded amazement, into a full-blown butterfly, capping the climax by picking up the Captain's own weapons and turning them full upon himself. It had been said that Hazard was the greatest flirt in the city, but Miss Renfrew soon wooded this doubtful honor from him, and people now declared solemnly that, in the light of her performances in that line, the Captain's efforts paled into insignificance.

"Then you will be my wife?"

"I will marry you to secure my share in the estate of the late Mrs. Ford, and for that reason only," said she, slowly and scornfully. "You are not to say one word that I love you, for I do not."

"Thank you. I never suppose anything, Miss Renfrew."

"It is to be purely a business arrangement," she continued, with an angry flush;

"Oh, certainly! A business arrangement only! I understand," assented he, politely. "Viewing marriage in the light of a business relation will enable us to manage the whole affair with a caricumspection and precision that might be wanting were we prompted by other than mercenary motives."

"I shall continue on flirting after we wed—that is—I shall do exactly as I please after—" She choked and hesitated.

"After we are married," said the Captain, quietly, finishing the sentence for her. "That is to be expected, and, upon my word, I think I will, too. None of those lump-drum fires for me, where Darby and Joan secludes themselves from the world and its fascinations, for each other. No, Miss Renfrew, we'll each have a hundred strings to our bow—if we can get 'em, and we will manage to spend our late friend's money in decent though good style and have a pleasant time while it lasts. We will look upon this marriage from now on in the light of a business affair—a sort of partnership, as it were, which does not limit either one of us to any certain and circumscribed round of duties. By the terms of the will, we shall have to keep the house on the avenue upon a certain portion of each year, and do some entertaining. But that is easily managed. You can have your great friend and adorer, Jackey Littlefield, at the house as often as you like, and I hope you won't forget to invite a few of the young ladies whom you know I have a preference for. I'm certain that we'll get along famously in this way."

Miss Renfrew stared hard at the Captain. Was there the faintest, almost imperceptible, ring of sarcasm in his words and tone? But no, that could not be. Capt. Hazard had been a flirt and lady-killer from his youth up, and the sentiment's he now expressed were, of course, his real ones. Both the Captain and Miss Renfrew were the protegees of one who, though now removed by death, seemed to reach out to them her protecting arms from the grave.

Both had been very distantly related to the late Mrs. Ford, though they were given to understand by ties of blood to each other. They were the only relatives Mrs. Ford had left in the world, and as a consequence were her natural heirs. It had been her favorite plan in life to see these two children people marry each other, and thus keep her fortune united in the family. But, as said these two children, she had not counted on

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 27, 1883.

Notes and News.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of Catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

Labor Commissioner McGrath's statistics will show the condition of Michigan laboring men to be far ahead of those of the eastern states.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and force up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co. 5-60

Joseph Greusel, the well known journalist and correspondent, will spend the winter in Washington, as correspondent of the Detroit Free Press.

The greatest pain-killer yet found for Cramps, Colic, Stitch in side or back, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Sprains, Bruises, &c., is Hamilton's Jamaica Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure. Bound on with hot wet cloths, it never fails to cure. For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, sick headache, flatulence, diarrhea, dysentery, heartburn, sour stomach, &c., it is unequalled. Warranted to give relief. Use both internally and externally. Warranted to cure. Try it. Price 25 and 50 cents Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

Before President Arthur gets his scheme of a new navy under way, would it be well for him to explain what has become of the $384,000,000 the country has squandered upon its navy during the twenty years his party have had absolute control of it? There is nothing to show for all this expenditure but 3,000 idle officers and a handful of rotten ships that cannot go to sea.

Millions of persons die annually who might be saved if attention was given to the little ills of life. Coughs, Colds, sore Throat, &c., are easily cured by using Hamilton's Cough Balsam, which removes the tickling in the throat and lightens across the inflamed membranes. Immediate relief will be found in Croup, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, &c., and even in chronic cases and last stage of consumption great relief is received. For incipient consumption it works like a charm. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

Chicago Tribune on Carlisle's election as speaker to the house: "The victory of the better element of the democratic party is a matter for the congratulation of the republicans, for it redounds to the benefit of all good citizens. The people of the country are getting tired to death of the spectacle of political questions being confined to the low level of partisan boxing matches and intrigues of "business interests" for grabs out of the public treasury. The breakdown in the speakership contest of the candidate who stood distinctly for the syndicate theory of government by corporations will, we hope, do much to lift American politics into the higher regions where parties can divide on issues of broad interest and public policy."

Are your children peevish and sad-eyed? Do they have abnormal appetites and crave food constantly? Beware of worms. Very few children escape their ravages. No child can be happy or well while suffering with worms. They sap the very life by preventing the digestion and assimilation of food. There is a sure remedy. It is called Parmelee's Vermifuge Candies. They are perfectly harmless, but will quickly dissolve the worms and pass them off through the bowels. They no other. Price 25cts per box. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

According to the New York Sun things look a little squally for Mr. Arthur in New York. First of all, Senator Miller is against him, and says Arthur cannot get the New York delegation in the national convention nor any considerable part of it. Senator Miller is for Blaine. Frank Hiscock says Arthur will not get any delegates from his district. Abram X. Parker says St. Lawrence county will support Blaine. The same is said of Mr. Ketcham's district. The western part of the state is also against him. Mr. Cornell and Mr. Wadsworth are both against him. All this, if authentic, has an ominous look. It would seem as if Mr. Arthur can by no means count on taking his own state into the convention, and if he cannot do that he had better not be a candidate.

Enrich the blood. Hamilton's German Bitters are highly recommended for all diseases requiring a certain and efficient tonic. Especially Indigestion, Dyspepsia, want of appetite, loss of strength, lack of energy, &c. They enrich the blood, strengthen the muscles, and give new life to the nerves. They act like a charm in the digestive organs, remove all dyspeptic symptoms, and whenever the stomach is weak or there is a general loss of physical vigor, these bitters are just what you need. Only 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

Cheap Burglar Alarm.

Drive a headless nail into the casing over any door, and after closing the door hang a tin pan on the nail when you go to bed. That is to say, do all this if you are naturally timid, and want a cheap burglar alarm, that will work every time. A clothes-pin put through the handle of a key will strike against the door-knob and make it impossible to turn the key with nippers from the other side. A little hook on the top of the window sash can be arranged so as to prevent a burglar from slipping a knife up between the sashes and turning the window-fastener either way.—Boston Globe.

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.; HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,800 inhabitants, located on both banks of Pine River, between Round Lake and Lake Michigan. Nearly all branches of business are represented, yet a few others could be profitably added. Any of the various mills for manufacturing hardwood lumber, including handles, wooden bowls, chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons, will find an abundance of first-class timber easily accessible. Among the attractions are two summer resorts, which are annually visited by thousands of people. The climatic advantages are unexcelled, and they who have passed one or more summers at these resorts, recuperating their strength and securing a new lease of life, are most enthusiastic in their praise of the place. Sufferers from hay fever and asthmatic difficulties find here a sure relief. The shores of Pine Lake and Lake Michigan afford an excellent bathing place. The privileges for boating and fishing cannot be excelled by any other locality. In their season, lake trout, black bass, pickerel, perch, and herring abound in the waters adjacent to the village, while the gamy speckled trout, the fisherman's delight, make the cold waters of the Jordan and Boyne rivers, as well as those of several smaller tributaries of Pine Lake, their favorite haunts. No rivers in the lower peninsula are as famous for their choice trout as the Jordan and Boyne. The scenery from any point of view on Pine Lake is one of surpassing loveliness. The surrounding country offers great inducements to progressive young farmers who desire to build homes for their families. There is an abundance of maple, elm, beech, basswood, ash, hemlock, and cedar timber, which, with our facilities for manufacturing and shipping, generally more than pays for clearing the land. Unimproved lands are held at from $7 to $15 per acre, while improved farms average from $15 to $60 in the interior, and from $25 to $100 near Charlevoix. The principal crops are winter wheat, oats, corn, hay, clover, potatoes, and root crops. The summer resorts at Charlevoix furnish an excellent market for all sorts of garden vegetables. All fruits do well, excepting grapes and peaches. The hardier kinds of apples are especially successful and the price for the same is generally higher than the same kind of fruit grown farther south. Charlevoix county is at the northern extremity of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt.

STATEMENTS and other Stationery for the New Year, at the Journal Office.

AT COST!

All kinds of

Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Ever brought to Charlevoix.

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.

They have no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY,

And Satisfaction Guaranteed.

L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House

CHARLEVOIX.

GEO. W. MILLER,

DEALER IN

Clothing

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

Hats and Caps, Trunks and Satchels,

GLOVES MITTENS, ETC.

Buttars' Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

THE MOST USEFUL BOOK EVER PUBLISHED!

A Book that should be in Every House.

The pros, teachers, and professional people throughout the country pronounce it to be the BOOK OF BOOKS. It contains upwards of 50,000 WORDS, with their definition and pronunciation, according to Webster and other recognized authorities; a large number of additional words and definitions in general use. It contains a mine of information for everybody. This book is handsomely bound in cloth, containing 542 Pages Profusely Illustrated. We propose to send you one of these valuable books, by mail, all shipping charges prepaid, to any address, on receipt of only ONE DOLLAR.

Address M. STOLZ & CO.,

20 Park Place, New York.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1876.

EVERYTHING

In the line of

Furniture

AND

Undertakers' Goods

Can be found at the old reliable house of

H. C. Cooper,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See me before Buying

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS,

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING,

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 25. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, JANUARY 3, 1884. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL is published every Thursday morning. BY CHAS. J. STRANG. Office over T. H. Smith's grocery, CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN. ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH. AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Business Directory.

ATTORNEYS.

CUTCHEON & CRIEE, Attorneys at Law. Office in Buttars' Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW, Attorneys at Law, East Jordan, Mich. 29

FRED. A. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Business promptly attended to. MONEY TO LOAN.

C. W. JERSEY, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

J. M. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

ANDREW KEAT, Attorney at Law. Office opposite U. S. Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

OLIVER P. WISNER, Attorney and Solicitor, 1st P. O. Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX. Capital account $50,000. Transacts a general banking business. Loans on government bonds, real estate, and personal security for more than above amount. Makes no loans on first mortgages. Foreign and domestic exchange.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. Services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. in school house. Sabbath school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7. Rev. E. P. VANDUZER, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. Services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer and class meeting Thursday evening at 7. J. T. HOOVER, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOOK AND LADDER FIRE COMPANY meet the first and third Thursday evenings of each month, at the town hall. R. T. BISSEY, Secretary.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. A. CHRISTIEN, M. D., Office at his dwelling.

L. HAIN, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office in Town block, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. F. PRESTON, M. D., Surgeon and Homœopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich. 29

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HIRAM S. HARSHA, Notary Public. Real Estate, Loan, and Insurance Agent. Charlevoix, Mich.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

A. A. Gaston Post No. 18 meets second Monday in each month, at Odd Fellows' Hall.

I. O. O. F. Charlevoix Lodge No. 322, meets every Friday evening, at Odd Fellows' Hall.

I. O. O. F. Round Lake Lodge No. 296 meets every Wednesday evening, at Odd Fellows' Hall.

F. and A. Free Mason No. 45, meets on or before full moon in Odd Fellows' Hall.

REBEKAH Charlevoix Lodge No. 202, meets on or before full moon in Odd Fellows' Hall.

A. BITANG, President. A. E. CHEDEL, Vice President.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

General banking business transacted. Money loaned on approved security. Interest allowed on time deposits. Collections promptly attended to. Exchange on Europe and domestic points. C. X. THIRMAN, Cashier.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Prices reasonable. M. S. JOHNSON, Opp. Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations excellent. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only sample room in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public. All conveniences for the, Pensenger and Freight business. Only sample room in Charlevoix.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

Rooms thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at less than cost. Call soon and have your pick.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

R. S. MAY.

FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

GO TO

Dr. G. W. CROUTER'S DRUG STORE.

Santa Claus' Headquarters.

An Immense Line to Choose From.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, county of Charlevoix, ss. At a session of the probate court for the county of Charlevoix, holden at the probate office in the village of Charlevoix, on Tuesday, the fourth day of December, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three. Present, Hon. James A. Kelly, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of SHAWAWASEPENAM, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of George W. Crouter and Adelbert R. Crouter, praying that administration of said deceased be granted to persons at the date of said petition, and that the said petitioners be granted, of the first and second instant, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

A HARTFORD paper makes the charge that there are farmers in the surrounding country who have for years brought into the city butter for dealers and families, who are now, and for a year or two have been, buying oleomargarine in Hartford, molding it over at home, and supplying it to their customers as the genuine product of their own dairies.

THAT murder will not always "out" is receiving fresh proof daily in the rapidly increasing list of undetected horrors. Jenny Cramer, Rose Ambler and Zora Buhrer are only a portion of the list of bloody tragedies that are likely to go unavenged. Something must be done for the better detection of crime and the surer punishment of criminals, and especially murderers, when detected.

THE Swedish firm of Nobel Bros., who have developed the Baku petroleum district of Russia, employ 7,000 workmen on a large fleet of steamers and 1,400 oil tracks. They are building a town in which to lodge their servants, and have adopted a semi-co-operative system, giving every one a share in the profits, and allowing all to invest by instanced Chipets, the wife of the Colorado Chief Ouray. She had little communication with the white, but her husband taught her to live as they did. Her house was well furnished and provided with many conveniences that are luxuries in border life. She always had her cook and her table was supplied with good food, well cooked, served in an elegant platter and eaten with knives, forks and spoons. Ouray died in 1880. About a year ago Chipets married again, and returned to the old ways of her childhood among her tribe. She has three trunks of value locked away in the agency warehouses. One of them is filled with silver ware presented to her by the ladies of Washington. For these she has no use.

A PECULIAR clock, which marks the hours from one to twenty-four, has recently been completed by a Wilmington manufacturer. The new timepiece of the kind seems to be adopted by several of the railroads. The most conspicuous innovations are in the marking upon the dial and in the movement of the wheels which run the hands. The minute hand, instead of making twelve revolutions to every revolution of the hour hand, as in the ordinary clock, makes twenty-four revolutions, while the hour hand passes around once. The figures upon the dial are marked in Arabic, instead of Roman numerals. They are from one to twenty-four inclusive, the spaces between the figures thus being only half as great as those on the dial of the ordinary twelve-hour clocks. The minute hand therefore marks the half minutes as well as the minutes. The railroads proposing to adopt the new system as a standard will prepare new time-tables, upon which the distinction between trains marked a. m. and those marked p. m., which is often overlooked by careless travelers, will no longer appear.

THE women in the West have taken to drinking kumiss, in the hope that it will prove fattening. They do not make it in the Oriental manner, of mares' milk, however; but they put a quart of cows' milk into three pint bottles, dividing the quantity equally. They then add to each bottle two teaspoonfuls of white sugar and a quarter of a cake of compressed yeast, tie the corks securely, shake thoroughly, and set it ferment. It is fit to drink at the end of a week, and will keep good for a long time if kept in good condition. It tastes a good deal like buttermilk, but has fizz and sparkle. Those who have confidence in the fat-producing qualities of kumiss say that it should be drunk at the rate of a pint a day. The Cincinnati Enquirer mentions the case of a girl who is engaged to be married. The date of the wedding is fixed for Christmas Day, with the cold condition, imposed by the prospective bridegroom, that the bride shall at the altar weigh 125 pounds. She can't have recourse to the methods of jockeys, and bring herself up to the required standard by strapping pieces of metal to her body; nor will the ordinary devices of producing a comely degree of rotundity to the eye of the casual observer answer the purpose. Accordingly she is now a hard drinker of kumiss.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

What the Girl Did Not Want.

Quoth he—
"The I'm a tilted money,
And just a little poor,
My love is very young
And should my love,
To prove her worth,
Ask me
Or anything
Or small or valuable,
I'm quite I'll pursue her.
Quoth she—
Alas! you never know her,
Else now had hopes been fewer,
Take heed! So many pursue her,
For woman-kind
Of late grown of late
Much dearer
And rarer
The man of pelf or purse her.
—Boston Times.

Too Shocking for Anything.

"Isn't it shocking?" she said to George.

"Isn't what shocking, dear?" asked George, tenderly.

"Oh, I just think it is the most shocking thing I ever heard of."

"What is it? Prey tell me what it is that is so shocking," cried George, wild with curiosity.

"Electricity, love."

Crushed.

"How stupid I am," said Birdie McHenry, languidly, executing at the same time quite a prodigious yawn act.

"That's true," remarked Guy DeSmith, rather impolitely.

"Sir!" exclaimed Birdie, "you are impertinent."

"But you yourself just now asserted that you were stupid."

"I only said so without thinking," said Birdie, pettishly.

"Yes, and up to the time you spoke I had only thought so without saying it," said Guy, bitterly, the light of Miss Birdie, Another lover scratched off the list of one of the Austin belles.—Texas Siftings.

Getting Rid of a Wife.

A native of the Fiji Islands presented himself to a missionary and humbly begged to receive the rite of baptism. "But," objected the priest, "you are a polygamist—you have several wives." "Only two." "That is one too many." "Good! I will get rid of one of them." "Keep the one that you have lived the longest with." "No, I prefer the other, she is the younger." "As you please." Eight days afterward the converted savage returned to the priest, with his face radiant with innocent joy. "Now, father," said he, "you can baptize me." "You have only one wife now?" "Only one, on my word." And he pointed to quite a pleasant-looking young woman who accompanied him. "And what has become of the other?" asked the priest. "Oh, I ate her."

Advice to a Young Wife.

Never disturb a man while reading his paper.

Never ask a fat man for anything while pulling on his boots.

Never speak to a man until he has had something good to eat.

Never discuss servants at table.

When you want anything wait until he has had his breakfast, and then help him tenderly into his coat, and while behind him, something his collar the right way, ask for it.

Never offer a man anything twice.

When he looks injured and plaintive examine his plate; there is sure to be a vacancy.

Be careful not to lie behind him if he stalls his toe in the carpet, because you will be the cause.

If he comes to breakfast looking on the eve of sola ask not the reason, for he will answer that he had but one tower.

If he lies on the sofa after dinner and shakes the house with his snores accuse him not of sleeping, for he is "merely thinking with his eyes shut."

If he says he is "going to the drug store for a moment, dear," bid him adieu for the evening.

If he loses his handkerchiefs every where but at home let this have his own way about it, that the washwoman be dishonest without your knowing it.

If you want him to do anything never tell him it is good for him, for he will not be "tied to a woman's apron string."

When he is ill ask not his complaint, but take to your heels.—Exchange.

Women Who Own Millions.

The following list of the wealthy ladies and ladies of New York has been carefully compiled:

Mrs. R. R. Alden, widow of the late R. R. Alden, estate worth $1,000,000.

Mrs. A. R. Ames, inheritance, $250,000.

Mrs. William B. Aspinwall, estate worth $1,500,000.

Mrs. John Auchincloss, estate worth $600,000.

Mrs. Harriet Banks, share of Lenox estate, $800,000.

Mrs. Edmund Bayliss, share Robert Bay estate, $1,500,000.

Mrs. J. S. Bedford, inheritance, $100,000.

Mrs. Catharine A. Beekman, Beekman estate, $600,000.

Mrs. Walton P. Bell (formerly Miss Mein Kane), $100,000.

Mrs. William T. Blodgett (widow of the late W. T. Blodgett), estate, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Boreel, estate, $1,500,000.

Mrs. Brown, inheritance, $100,000.

Mrs. Isaac Bronson, Bronson estate, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Theodore Bronson, inheritance, $500,000.

Mrs. James Brown, widow late James Brown, founder Brown Bros., estate, $3,000,000.

Mrs. Sarah Burr, estate, $1,333,333.

Mrs. Catharine A. Cammann, estate, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Samuel Carey, share Astor estate, $3,000,000.

Mrs. David Clackson, inheritance, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Camilla Coddington, Coddington estate, $3,000,000.

Mrs. Henry A. Coit, inheritance, $600,000.

Mrs. Wm. Coleman, widow late Wm. Coleman, large Pennsylvania mine owner, estate, $2,500,000.

Mrs. Wm. F. Coles, Coles estate, $700,000.

Mrs. Thomas Colgate, inheritance, $500,000.

Mrs. Custer, Custer estate, $800,000.

Mrs. F. Brockholst Cutting, inheritance, $200,000.

Mrs. William E. Dodge, widow of the late philanthropist, estate, $2,000,000.

Mrs. Henry E. Drayton, widow of Henry E. Drayton, of Philadelphia, inheritance, $300,000.

Mrs. G. W. Elder, widow of late G. W. Elder, inheritance $250,000.

Mrs. Albert S. Gallatin, estate $1,000,000.

Mrs. Thomas Garner, sister-in-law to late Commodore Garner, and share in Garner estate, $10,000,000.

Mrs. C. A. Gerard, share Gerard estate, $250,000.

Mrs. Robert Goelet, Goelet estate, $2,000,000.

Mrs. George Graham, inheritance, $300,000.

Mrs. John C. Green, Green estate, $2,000,000.

Mrs. R. Henry Haight, inheritance, $100,000.

Mrs. Louis C. Hannaresday, formerly Miss Price, of Troy, left a year since $2,000,000, but all contest instituted.

Mrs. Fletcher N. Harper, widow of N. N. Harper, of Harper Bros., share estate, $750,000.

Mrs. James Harper, widow of James Harper, publisher, estate, $500,000.

Mrs. Caroline H. Johnson, inheritance, $250,000.

Mrs. Mary Mason Jones, large estate, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Pierre Kane, inheritance, $500,000.

Mrs. Edward D. King, King estate, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Peter V. King, King estate, $500,000.

Mrs. James F. D. Lanier, widow late J. F. D. Lanier, estate, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Marshall Lefferts, inheritance, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Alson G. Livingston, inheritance, $250,000.

Mrs. James C. Loud, daughter late James Brown, inheritance and estate, $2,000,000.

Mrs. Edwin D. Morgan, widow late ex-Gov. Morgan, $5,000,000.

Mrs. George Opdyke, widow late ex-Mayor Opdyke, $1,000,000.

Mrs. George Osgood, widow late George Osgood, banker, $1,250,000.

Mrs. Henry R. Remsen, estate, $600,000.

Mrs. Marshall O. Roberts, widow late M. O. Roberts, ship owner and retired capitalist, $5,000,000.

Mrs. John A. Robinson, estate, $1,500,000.

Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, widow of the late Theodore Roosevelt, estate, $800,000.

Mrs. G. S. Schermerhorn, estate, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Isaac Sherman, widow of the late Isaac Sherman, banker and retired capitalist, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Edward T. Snelling, inheritance, $500,000.

Mrs. Henry G. Stebbins, widow late Henry G. Stebbins, banker, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Edwin A. Stevens, late Camp, modern Stevens, of Hoboken, one of the richest women in America, $7,000,000.

Mrs. Frederick Stevens, formerly Miss Sampson, estate, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Elizabeth Stevens, widow late Paran Stevens, large real estate owner, $3,000,000.

Mrs. A. T. Stewart, widow late A. T. Stewart, merchant, probably richest woman in America, estate, $10,000,000.

Mrs. Lispenard Steward, share Lispenard estate, $800,000.

Mrs. Robert L. Stuart, widow late R. L. Stuart, sugar merchant, estate, $2,500,000.

Mrs. Robert Stuyvesant, share Stuyvesant estate, $500,000.

Mrs. Moses Taylor, widow late Moses Taylor, sugar merchant, banker and railroad king, share estate, $6,000,000.

Mrs. Isaac Townsend, widow late Isaac Townsend, merchant, estate, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Smith T. Van Buren, estate $600,000.

Mrs. Daniel E. Van Valkenburgh, inheritance, $700,000.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, widow late Commodore Vanderbilt, share estate, $5,000,000.

Mrs. Robert T. Woodward, inheritance, $500,000.

Mrs. John R. Zimmerman, formerly Miss Furniss, share estate, $250,000.

There are also several unmarried women possessed of great wealth in New York whose names are as follows:

S. F. Blatchford, sister of Judge Blatchford, inheritance, $1,000,000.

The Misses Furniss, share large estate, $1,000,000.

The Misses Hamilton, inheritance, $300,000.

Miss Sellus Hendricks, inheritance, $1,000,000.

Miss Sarah Hitchcock, share large estate, $1,500,000.

Miss Lenox, sister of the late James Lenox, share of estate, $1,000,000.

The Misses Rhinelander, share of Rhinelander estate, $1,500,000.

Miss Carrie Tillman, share estate lately largely depleted, $1,000,000.

Miss Harriet Weed, daughter late Thurlow Weed, journalist, $250,000.

Miss Catherine Wolfe, large estate, $2,000,000.—New York World.

A CHINESE BARBER-SHOP.

Scenes and Incidents During the Reign of the Celestial Queue.

Twelve or more Celestials sit on benches or pallets ranged on the floor in a small room adjoining the Chinese laundry on Tenth street just West of Arch street. In the center of a dingy apartment an old and long supercanonized Chinaman sat on a stool holding in his lap the head of a fellow-countryman, whose head was stretched upon the floor. The man grasped in his right hand a shoulder-steel blade, while in his left held a sponge saturated with water. Having lathered with great care the head which he held in his lap he, seemingly with the utmost care, set to work of shaving off a growth of a thousand or four or five days old, surrounded the tonsure, or what is known in the vernacular as the pate, after his scalp had been shaved clearfully as a civilized man's face could at a barber-shop, the heathen operator drew and shuffled around room, each Chinaman in turn resting his hand over the shaved head and pressing either by a grunt or word his approval or dissatisfaction of the job. When he had nearly made the round of the disagreeable task he had Americans and who seemed to be familiarly familiarly, carefully examined the newly-shaved skin and after having run his hand over it several times pinched up, uttering a disapproving grunt and walked toward the light, pulled after him the man whose head he had shaved and said: "Everybody gadsmound under a lamp that hung by a string from a bamboo cross-piece. After a multitude of gestures the man who was called forward and shown a small spot upon which a few hairs had been overlooked. He thereupon took his place on the stool, the Chinaman again assumed his recumbent position and the job was completed to the satisfaction of all.

When the last man was gotten shaved he fell into a chair, lighted a bulbing suddenly to one side, drew out an the razor slipped and cut several hairs from the shaver's face. The barber, as he witnessed the accident, uttering an exclamation of astonishment, jumped and then, falling on his knees, assumed a supplicating attitude and was forgiven from the expression of his face that he had inadvertently committed a venial offense. The customer, for which act he was soon pardon. The dozing Chinaman had also awakened and jumping on hands and his head, uttered a plaintive howl as he was at once surrounded by everybody present. Each person examined the head with consternation pictured on his face.

The owner of the laundry, who speaks English glibly, explained the cause of the sudden commotion. He said, as soon as the razor slipped and cut the shaving had cut off several hairs the unfortunate man's pig-tail—one of the greatest calamities that could happened to the latter. It was the belief of every Chinaman present that for each hair cut or torn from a queue he would be kept one year out of Paradise. Wonderful as it is to be expected to go when he died. As a particular man had lost fifty or more count, four hairs, he would be condemned to roam in outer darkness for a death for four year. The owner explained that many other superstitious and credulous were connected with the pigtail. He said that one Chinaman would not offer a greater insult to another than to pay him a visit, and, if he had wrapped around his head, and was always considered extremely polite and a mark of courtesy to plait the upper strands just before making a call. In his opinion he would have "had up" twenty-seven Stevens, large real estate owner, $3,000,000.

Mrs. A. T. Stewart, widow late A. T. Stewart, merchant, probably richest woman in America, estate, $10,000,000.

Mrs. Lispenard Steward, share Lispenard estate, $800,000.

Mrs. Robert L. Stuart, widow late R. L. Stuart, sugar merchant, estate, $2,500,000.

Mrs. Robert Stuyvesant, share Stuyvesant estate, $500,000.

Mrs. Moses Taylor, widow late Moses Taylor, sugar merchant, banker and railroad king, share estate, $6,000,000.

Mrs. Isaac Townsend, widow late Isaac Townsend, merchant, estate, $1,000,000.

Mrs. Smith T. Van Buren, estate $600,000.

Mrs. Daniel E. Van Valkenburgh, inheritance, $700,000.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, widow late Commodore Vanderbilt, share estate, $5,000,000.

Mrs. Robert T. Woodward, inheritance, $500,000.

Mrs. John R. Zimmerman, formerly Miss Furniss, share estate, $250,000.

There are also several unmarried women possessed of great wealth in New York whose names are as follows:

S. F. Blatchford, sister of Judge Blatchford, inheritance, $1,000,000.

The Misses Furniss, share large estate, $1,000,000.

The Misses Hamilton, inheritance, $300,000.

Miss Sellus Hendricks, inheritance, $1,000,000.

Miss Sarah Hitchcock, share large estate, $1,500,000.

Miss Lenox, sister of the late James Lenox, share of estate, $1,000,000.

The Misses Rhinelander, share of Rhinelander estate, $1,500,000.

Miss Carrie Tillman, share estate lately largely depleted, $1,000,000.

Miss Harriet Weed, daughter late Thurlow Weed, journalist, $250,000.

Miss Catherine Wolfe, large estate, $2,000,000.—New York World.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THERE are 5,000 policemen in England and Wales.

THERE are 3,000 Chinese in Chicago.

THERE are 3,000 Chinese in Chicago.

THERE are 3,000 Chinese in Chicago

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Jan. 3, 1884.

Local Business Notices.

For Sale.—Two or three good horses for sale cheap for cash or good security. J. MILO EATON.

Ely means COST when he says COST. Come and see.

All grades of Shingles at Upright, Emery & Co's.

HOUSE TO RENT.—On the terms near O. B. Weed's. Inquire at the store. W. J. BRADLEY.

APPLES and Onions by the barrel and bushel at Upright, Emery & Co's.

FOR SALE.—A second-hand portable saw mill, with engine and lumber complete, for sale cheap. Call soon. J. MILO EATON.

Highest CASH price paid for cedar Ties and Posts. UPRIGHT, EMERY & CO.

ELY is selling all leather goods in Men's Boots and Women's Shoes and Slippers AT COST.

Now is the time to buy a CHEAP SUIT of Clothes. Upright, Emery & Co. have about 20 suits left.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

200 cords of good dry birch and maple block wood for sale. Good measure guaranteed. Call at the office of J. MILO EATON.

Farm Produce of every description taken in exchange at Upright, Emery & Co's.

Come down to ELY'S and find out what COST is on Boots and Shoes. 2

The only store in town who make a specialty of Genin' Fine Hats, is Upright, Emery & Co.

The Temperature.

The following is a record of observations of the Thermometer at the JOURNAL office, at 7 a. m. and 2 p. m. each day, for the week ending yesterday:

	7 A.M.	2 P.M.
Thursday	12	14
Friday	16	26
Saturday	23	28
Sunday	26	22
Monday	16	20
Tuesday	3	15
Wednesday	10	18

News Brevities.

Write 1884.

Five new subscribers for a New Year send-off.

Logs are moving into Nicholls' mill yard at a lively rate.

The channel is filled with ice, and both fish tugs have laid up for winter.

The Boyne Statesman says that wheat was sown in this county on Dec. 6th.

An enemy can market "Hi gale. Alcohol" was recently received by O. B. Weed & Co.

The band boys had a very pleasant and successful party, both socially and financially.

The Charlevoix iron company are making some repairs to the machinery of the tug J. L. Biggie.

It has been intimated that one of the jokes of New Year's day was the abduction of a colored usher.

A fire in Howard City Tuesday night destroyed 25 business buildings. Loss $75,000, insurance $40,000.

Mr. H. B. Chapman will please accept thanks for a set of photographs advertising his property at Bay Springs.

An article on "Food Fish," prepared for this issue, and partly in type, is crowded out by holiday matter. It will appear later.

T. D. Smith went to Milwaukee on the tug S. S. Coe. A telegram on Wednesday announced their safe arrival on Tuesday night.

A press of holiday matter somewhat disarranges our usual makeup this week. If this thing should continue, an enlargement would be necessary.

The Good Templars' entertainment announced for Friday evening, has been postponed on account of bad weather, date to be announced hereafter.

"The JOURNAL uses trenchant words for a hotel commensurate with the natural attractions of Charlevoix as a summer resort."—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

Miss L. Spaulding's millinery, Mrs. DePue, has gone to Ionia for a vacation and visit to friends, but will return in time for spring work when the season opens.

During the past week we have heard frequent expressions of a belief in better times with the opening of the new year. To encourage this belief will make the times better.

The entire reading matter of these two pages has been put in type by the editor and wife since Wednesday noon, besides caring for the family and other house work. We haven't played any to speak of.

Mr. E. H. Green, with his oldest son and daughter, have gone to Maylands, Pa., to attend the golden wedding of his parents. He will be absent about three weeks. Frank Shanlon was left in charge of his office.

Among the callers at the Fountain City house, Mr. Crouter's, and other old residents, on Tuesday, were several parties of dusky maidens of the forest. A few years ago New Year was a great day for them here.

Hiram Wood and Lizzie C. Skinner, both of Charlevoix, were married by Rev. C. F. Van Aiken, at the residence of the bride's parents, on Wednesday evening, January 2d, at 7:30 o'clock. Numerous presents were received.

The throat is often diseased on account of catarrh, producing dryness and a constant desire to cough. That tickling sensation and the hoarseness that is so common to public singers and speakers especially, is relieved at once by Hamilton's Cough Troches, which are prepared from the most approved formula. Do not wait till acute bronchitis or even consumption takes firm hold of you. Price only 25 cents per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

A dilapidated cutter drawn by a raw-boned horse scarcely a one-horse, and driven by a bare-headed girl, with a fellow who looked as if he was lost, or wanted to go home to his ma, was one of the features of bridge street on New Year.

Farmers are interested in having a gristmill in Charlevoix, because it will save them the long drive to Pinckney. It has been suggested that perhaps some of them would be willing to take shares in a stock company if one was organized here.

Mr. W. J. McGough, of the saw and grist mill located three miles from Charlevoix, made us a call last Saturday. Mr. M. is talking of putting in a lumber factory at his place, and cause here to use absent purchasing machinery."—Petoskey Democrat.

"Among the passengers on the Charlevoix stage Tuesday morning were two ladies from London, England, and a gentleman from North Carolina. The latter had not taken a sleigh ride before in 20 years. Oh, how he shivered!"—Petoskey Democrat.

The pastor of the M. E. church will give his second apostrophe sermon next Sunday morning; subject, "The New Heaven and New Earth." At night will be the intersection of the week of prayer; subject, "Launch out into the Deep." All to an open room are cordially invited.

We have been a mild climate. The Grand Rapids, Dakota, Journal records 20° below, and a private letter from Black River Falls, Wis., mentions 32° below on Dec. 19th. Compare this with the figures on this page, and the fact that the mercury has not yet been down to zero here this winter.

Mrs. Jane Sherman, aged 85 years, died at the residence of her daughter, on Sunday evening, and was buried yesterday. She was born in Ireland, removed to near Toronto, Canada, at the age of 18, and to Charlevoix three years ago. Sickness just from well for a year and but was confined to her bed only about a week prior to her death.

No. 25 of the new Detroit Times is a bed-ad issue, and the news is large seen of that sheet. Typographically, it is almost a counterpart of the Chicago Herald, which means that it is a little beneath. It contains 20 columns of choice condensed news, all for two cents. If you want a morning newspaper from Detroit, without politics, the Times is the best for the price.

Messrs. E. C. and L. C. Tubbs, of Wayne and Chesaning, Mich., have been prospecting in Charlevoix the past week, and express themselves pleased with the town. One of these gentlemen has a friend, a practical miller, now operating a rural gristmill, who wants to own a mill in such a town as this, and Mr. Tubbs thought he would come and look over the prospects here.

Why waste time and money on that which does no good? Your children have worms and are cross, always hungry, sleepless, puny and weak from the presence or worse in the stomach which prevents the food being taken up to nourish the body. Parmelee's Vermifuge destroys and dissolves and removes the worms and then all will be well. You cannot do better by your children than to attend to their health. Price 25 cents per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

One of the most discouraging sights between Charlevoix and Petoskey is the many loads of grain that go there to market, which would remember if we had agriculture. It is safe to say that every man spends a large portion of the price of every load of grain or other produce in the town where he sells it. A gristmill would not only save for Charlevoix merchants what now goes to Petoskey, but would become of more importance to raise more grain for sale.

Eating and starving, it is all the same for you are not benefited. Dyspepsia is worse torture can be conceived of. Blind or bleeding piles are unequaled for annoyance, but to a few applications of Parmelee's Pile Suppository they entirely disappear. The knife is often resorted to by physicians for the removal of protruding piles, but such barbarity is not necessary for Parmelee's Pile Suppositories used according to directions quickly reduce, replace, and drive them away. Warranted to cure. Price 50 cents per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

At home and abroad, at church and theatre, in the counting house and work room is fact everywhere is heard that hacking cough which soon develops into congestion or inflammation of the lungs, bronchitis, pneumonia, and consumption. Be wise in time. Immediate relief and cure can be promptly obtained. Hamilton's Cough Balsam will surely give you relief from those throat and lung troubles that often terminate in death. Instant relief in croup and a sublimer of whooping cough. Your consumptive friend will be greatly benefited. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

"The JOURNAL advises Charlevoix people to patronize outside papers that are advertising her resources to advantages. That's good advice, and the daily Telegraph, if the rule is to be applied, will have 50 subscribers in that village. The Telegraph gives more news of that locality than all other Michigan papers combined outside of that county."—Kalamazoo Telegraph. True enough. The copy of the daily containing the above is dire first the JOURNAL has received. It is an eight-page paper of six columns to a page, and contains, besides its home news, press dispatches, and miscellany, a department of well-written Michigan news, in which Charlevoix is mentioned as frequently as any town in the state.

Soon after the JOURNAL was started, Mr. L. E. Allen subscribed for a copy to be sent to Mrs. Allen's father, Mr. Albert Mills, of Avon, Conn. They have written that they like the paper well; they look for its coming with much interest, and are disappointed if by any means it is delayed. To them it happens each week, many of our citizens have departing their stamps who would be equally well pleased if they could have the paper. No better New Year present can be given. It is a reminder throughout the whole year, and in many cases might take the place of a long letter descriptive of sunrises like Christmas or New Year, or any public exhibition or entertainment. Will our citizens remember this when they are looking around for a gift for a friend?

A correspondent of the Detroit Evening News writes the following: "Here at Charlevoix we find that our lumber is one of the most rapid development of our material interests, announcing upon the further improvements, that can be shown by any port on the lakes. The appropriations have resulted in work that has opened to commerce 25 miles of coast line of the navigable waters of Pine Lake, on which has sprung up seven thriving villages, and fifteen saw-mills for cutting hardwood lumber (sawdust built and pile in operation. From 1856, when the entire shipments were made in one small sloop, through a succession of small but profitable, the trade has increased so that in 1883 over 100 vessels, many of them of heavy tonnage, have been employed. These have carried, in round numbers, 11,000,000 feet of hardwood lumber, 3,000,000 feet of pine, 18,500 cords of wood, 11,500 cords of hemlock bark, 200,000 cubic feet of square timber, 77,000 railroad ties, 70,000 cedar posts, 7,000 telegraph poles, 225,000 lath, and 9,000 tons of pig iron. A corresponding increase is only dependent upon further needed improvements at the harbor."

The Wreck Removed.

Mr. P. J. Crowley, the contractor for removing the wreck of the Parsons, completed his work last Sunday, and the tug S. S. Coe returned to Milwaukee on Monday evening, having been here 26 days. All sorts of bad weather has interfered with the prosecution of this job, but the contractor was persevering and finally accomplished his work. He says he was obliged to go down nearly a hundred times, and on one occasion was down over three hours. All the pieces were taken at least three-fourths of a mile north, and those first removed are now on the beach, having been driven there by the waves and ice. The two last pieces cannot be placed on the beach now on account of ice. The specifications require that all the pieces be piled up on the beach, but that is impossible now, and we have been advised that those which have not already been driven ashore can never interfere with navigation, and will either bury themselves in the sand or be driven ashore in the spring. Mr. Crowley has probably not made from Heavy rich out of this job, but our citizens will remember him as patient and faithful, and finally successful.

In a conversation with Mr. Mitchell the engineer in charge of the work, concerning the condition and needs of our harbor, he said we had more water and a better harbor than any other port north of Grand Haven, and what we most needed was to strengthen and put it permanent condition what we already have. The shore and of the north pier needs rebuilding, the south government needs strengthening, and the south pier should be extended at least as far out as the north pier, this last to prevent the mouth of the channel from filling with sand, as carried by the current. It will be time to do any more dredging until the other work is done. Touching the capacity of the channel, and the character of the work already done, he expressed the opinion that the channel was altogether too narrow for the future growth and needs of this region, and that it could and now be altered or amended. The south pier should be extended parallel with the north, to avoid as far as possible the heavy sea caused by a V-shaped entrance. This would also tend to obviate any further serious damage to the revetment like that of a few weeks ago.

Both Mr. Crowley and Mr. Mitchell are pleased gentlemen to chat with, and freely gave their views concerning our harbor and village, as well as our present condition and future prospects, and they corroborate the freeness and good fellowship of many others, viz: That Charlevoix is the most promising of all northern lake ports, and will have steady and permanent growth and prosperity. It will secure and retain the trade as a place for healthy homes, as a delightful summer resort, and as a point for profitable investment in various kinds of manufacturing enterprises.

To Our Subscribers.

With next week the JOURNAL will be six months old, and so far we have made no public appeal for assistance, nor even a public request for support. A few renders have paid us nothing; of those we ask a small remittance. We have trusted you six months; now will you trust the JOURNAL and send us a year's subscription. While we are willing to take wood or produce which we can use in our family, some cash is necessary to meet monthly paper bills, and these cannot be put off. Give us a bit now.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by UPRIGHT BROS., real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Jan. 1, 1884, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Elmer E. Madge to John Nicholls, s w ¼ of n e ¼, 20-34-8, $100.

Ellen Thomson to James Thomson, s ½ of n ½ of s w ¼, 30-34-5, $200.

James Thomson to Ellen Thomson, n ½ of n ½ of s w ¼, 30-34-5, $200.

Ellen Thomson to Sarah J. Spaulding, lot 3 of blk 3, block 5, city of Charlevoix, $400.

Wm. G. Kilborn to Charles Dunn, 40 acres on s ½ of n w ¼, 8-33-8, $600.

Wm. G. Kilborn to Doors Carroll, 40 acres on s ½ of n w ¼, 8-33-8, $600.

NEW YEAR'S DAY.

A Happy One to Numerous Charlevoix People.

New Year morning was clear and cold. The thermometer indicated 3° above at 7 o'clock, not a breath of air was moving, and the sun rose clear. The thermometer rose gradually to 15° at 2 o'clock. A finer day in the elements of nature could not have been asked. The excellent local trade of holiday week, with the good sleighing and good weather for business generally, had served to make people hopeful of better times near at hand. As the ladies could not soon have another chance to make calls, they determined to make the most of present circumstances. This, of course, made the young gentlemen anxious to do their part well, and the result could have been predicted,—a day of pleasure, an event in social history worthy of record.

Those who received calls, as far as we have been able to learn, are as follows:

At L. E. Allen's—Messrs. L. E. Allen, M. J. Stockman, B. See, and D. C. Loveday.

At A. R. Upright's—Messrs. A. R. Upright, A. Buttars, and S. H. Comfort.

At B. See's—Messrs. Allie Washburn, R. W. Kane, Dr. Preston, and D. Hayes, with Dan Rhoades as colored usher.

At Crouter's—Messrs. G. W. Crouter, Dr. Carlstein, and J. E. Wood.

At Mr. Brown's—Messrs. W. A. Brown, Gardner Brown, and Dan Chambers.

At Fountain City house—Messrs. R. Cooper, H. C. Cooper, and H. Bedford.

At John Nicholls'—Messrs. John Nicholls and James Inwood.

At G. S. Thomas'—Messrs. G. S. Thomas and Oscar Upright.

At the M. E. Parsonage—Messrs. H. Lee Iddings and E. F. Parmelee.

At A. Cameron's—Messrs. John Burns and — Rogers.

At Congregational parsonage—Rev. C. F. Van Aiken.

There may have been others whose names we did not learn.

There were five parties of lady callers, and there may have been individuals who called whose names we have not learned.

The center of attraction was a party of ladies whose outfit was somewhat primitive in make-up. Their team was decorated with ribbons and bells, harnessed with a wooden yoke, and were provided with long horns to prevent the collars from slipping over their heads, and also required a stout boy with a gad to drive them. The sleigh of course was uniform with other portions of the outfit, and might have been designed originally to draw sawlogs on. Their cards, described elsewhere, announced the names of Mrs. Allen, Mrs. Ainslie, Miss Cooper, Mrs. Crouter, Mrs. Eaton, Miss Inwood, Mrs. Loveday, Mrs. Nicholls, Mrs. See, Mrs. Stockman, Mrs. O. D. Wood, Mrs. J. E. Wood. They were a jolly party, and knew how to make the most of their resources for a day of pleasure.

The next largest party of callers was five fine ladies, with one of Eaton's best livery rigs, whose cards announced Mrs. Dr. Carlstein, Mrs. W. A. Brown, Miss Esther Buttars, Mrs. A. R. Thomas, and Mrs. Oscar Upright.

There were three other parties as follows:

Misses Essie Buttars, Flora Nelson, and Mrs. E. W. Donk.

Misses Celia Nicholls, Ella Barry, and Lottie Mason.

Misses Annie and Bertie McLeod. Some of the badges given by the gentlemen were elegant in design and finish, most of them being ribbon-shaped, with fringe or tassels. But Messrs. Brown and Chambers left novelty by procuring satin ribbon, assorted colors, with the names printed on the band, and "1884" on the thumb.

Most of the ladies' cards were written, on extra heavy bevel and gilt stock. Some of the designs for writing were very nice. In ladies' cards, however, the novelty was the printed for the party with the date. It was 9x11 inches in size, on fine china cardboard, assorted colors, with in large black type in the center, the twelve names in black letters nearly half an inch high, arranged effectively as possible around the center. The most of them will probably be framed and kept as carefully as any of the small ones.

A HAPPY
1884
NEW YEAR

One feature of the reception at E. Allen's will not soon be forgotten. The gentlemen had provided coffee and milk, the ladies made of an unbolted meal, and milk of the proportion of one pint of milk to four pints of water. This was served in china bowls. Those who preferred made sugar could have it, but the chances were in favor of the sugar being manufactured in Saginaw. Dessert was served in a turreen, but on lifting the cover a strong scent of onions invaded the room. A gorgeous bouquet occupied a prominent place on the table, the component parts of which originally adorned the tail of a cow. In an adjoining room was another table provided with a different quality of refreshments, and after guests were well served from table No. 1, and assent ready to depart they were conducted to the other room and served from table No. 2, which gave them as much excellent eating as they could be desirous of. It is a notable fact that none of the ladies gave the burlesque away. All were served, but instead, on seeing another, advised them to be quiet and go to Allen's. And later in the evening, and since, the event has been a choice topic of conversation.

After all regular calls were made the party at Mr. See's proceeded to the parsonage made a formal call, after which, reinforced by Mr. Iddings and Parmelee, and led by a colored usher, Dan Rhoades, marched to Mr. Burns' to make a call. Here they were reinforced by Messrs. W. A. and Gardner Brown and Dan Chambers, then proceeded to Mr. Buttars', singing "Hello! hallo! out of time and out of tune." Here they remained but a few minutes, and went to Dr. Crouter's, who set up cigars. From there they went to Fountain City house, and were greeted with a volley of snow-balls the ladies on the balcony. Just as they were departing, and commencing their "hello!" Dan the usher appeared the cigars and Mr. Cooper set out a box. The next point was Nicholls', but the faithful water had not progress to admit such a call, and raised an objection. The party soon disposed of the dog, and their way rejoicing. By Bridge Street house was the next point, here again the captain did not favor the cigars. The boys then disbanded to meet again later in the evening.

A fitting conclusion to such a day of pleasure was a surprise in store for Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Upright. This was planned and managed by Mrs. Crouter, Mrs. Oscar Upright, Mrs. L. E. Allen, and Miss Esther Buttars, and was a success in every particular. It was intimated to Mr. Upright during the afternoon that perhaps some of the boys might drop in that evening and have a social time with him concerning the events of the day, so that he remained at home. After he was comfortably settled to wait for the "boys," Mrs. Donk, who understood what was coming, invited the upper portions of the house and Mr. Upright know nothing of it. In this meantime the guests were assembling at Mr. Buttars', and at 8 o'clock proceeded in a body to Mr. Upright's. The surprise was complete. The company were soon engaged themselves to the utmost. Music was called for, and the young ones responded with several laughable pieces, while the ladies alternately with others of like nature, with Miss Buttars at the piano. After various sports and games were engaged in. Refreshments were served at 10:30, after which the company dispersed, well satisfied with the day and evening. Nearly 70 persons were served with refreshments.

Hayes.

1884—Leap year.

Hang up your new almanacs.

Good sleighing, and every body is pleased.

The Sunday school at Fairgrove has closed for this season. It will commence again in the spring.

Mr. E. H. Burgess expects to put a turning table in his saw-mill soon.

Miss Cora C. Chew closed her fall term of school at Clarion Dec. 21, and is spending her vacation at home, in Hayes. She commences teaching again at the same place Jan. 7.

Rev. J. M. Smith of the M. E. circuit of this place, will commence a protracted meeting at Fairgrove next week.

Mrs. Jennie Wade, of Fremont Center, Mich., is visiting her parents, W. S. Baker.

A happy new year to the JOURNAL and all its readers. ZEKE.

Strictly Necessary.

In one of the rural counties of Arkansas Capt. Sheas was arraigned before court on a charge of murder. The trial was defended by the leading lawyers of the district, and from the fact it was evident that the influence could not be sustained. As a last resort, the audience prepared an attorney, not celebrated for legal ability, as counsel said:

"Your Honor, and you, gentlemen of the jury, I don't suppose that in all this country there can be found a man who more than I am disposed to vote A. and thereby relief could upon my counsel and myself. This is a large gentleman who have opposed me in this case are honorable gentlemen, I am, but they have not immigration at heart. They have shown by oratory and argument that the prisoner is guilty, and I think he should be allowed to go free. According to the strict construction of the law, this may be true; but such a verdict would, I am persuaded, serve the best interests of our rapidly-developing country."

"Your Honor," exclaimed a lawyer for the defense, "I ask gentlemen talks like a mad man. I'm a lien on behalf of a man, who he is innocent, speaks more of I, I am, and than the American citizen."

"Let me explain," continued the prosecuting attorney, "I am afraid that I am working for the best interests of the country, and I repeat the assertion. Within the past six months we have hung three negroes in this country, and not a white man, I am sorry to say. This is discrimination, which immigration will not tolerate. Unless we hang a white man occasionally, you can't hope to become known as an impartial neighborhood. It would be just as bad if you were to hang all white men and no negroes, for in either event, I affirm, a caution. Now, in the interest of fairness, I ask that the Captain, who is a white man, be hanged, and that a copy of the resolutions be sent to each immigration agent and newspaper in the North. Gentlemen of the jury, I pass you, Judge, all have I said for side. To you suppose that, under the proposed-sealed laws, you will ever be able to dispose of it? No; you cannot. I lived a community where I have spent six years some but negroes had been hanged. The wish were pretty rough, the mineral resources were wonderful, but immigration held back. A committee was appointed to investigate the cause. The committee reported that the reason was with the fact, that no white men were hung. Immediate action was taken, and a white man was hung. Living, since to service to the community, was hanged upon the principle that every man, either living or dead, must serve his country. Then, gentlemen, it was resolved that a great deed had been committed. People from all parts of the country poured in, and to-day you cannot buy a foot of land in the county. There are my reasons. Look to your lands, gentlemen of the jury; look to your lands, Judge."

The Judge, in his charge to the jury, said:

"Gentlemen, I have listened with a great deal of interest to this speech of the prosecuting attorney, and I must say that I am deeply impressed with the fact that we are land poor and are at a loss to know how to rid ourselves of our lands. With immigration, we could sell our lands and buy fine horses and flat-boxes and old whisky. You could throw aside your patched pants and could wear short coats without shame. I am much struck with the idea of improvement, and I advise its adoption. The Captain here is of no use to the community, and believing, I hope, he will be worth more than his living body, and believing that you will agree with me, I sentence him to be hanged as soon as the Sheriff can find a rope."—Arkansas Traveler.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Has doctors and given up and said could not be cured. It gives a trouble. Sold by Dr. Chase.

Buy note paper and envelopes with View of Charlevoix, at O. B. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

PITH AND POINT.

THE engineer ought to be on the donkey engine.

THE Harvard Lampoon says a Cambridge ton of coal is the champion light weight.

THE greatest talker in existence could not talk long enough to tire a wagon wheel.

THE diamond is the stone for an engagement; but give us the old cobblestone in a free fight.

"MISERY loves company." That's the reason a henpecked husband advises his friends to marry.

ONE who knows says that in the country they blow a horn before dinner, but in town they take one.

A YOUNG ladies' seminary blew up the other day down East. It is supposed that a spark got into the powder-room.

"DWO VOS SCHOOL enough, Isidt dere was too blendy," remarked Hans, when his girl asked him to take her mother along with him to the dance.

COUNTRY yokel (to his son, at a concert, during the performance of a duet)—"D'ye see, Tom, now it's getting late, they're singing two at a time, so as to get done sooner."

EXCURSIONIST Jack (admiringly)—"You are a trump, Miss Marian." Miss M.—"Why do you call me such a name as that?" Jack (triumphantly)—"Because of your taking tricks."

SOMEBODY has discovered that the correct pronunciation of the word Rhodive is "Rodowa." They might as well tell us that the proper way to pronounce bee-hive is beehowa.

"YOU have been very faithful," said a merchant to his clerk "and as a reward a pleasant little vacation is in store for you." There came a rush of business, and the clerk's vacation turned out to be a vacation in store.—Burlington Free Press.

THE fat woman of a down-town museum recently married the "living skeleton" belonging to the same show. The youth of the Yonkers Statesman sentiment remarks that she probably went on the theory that "nearer the bone the sweeter the meat."

SOME railroad employs a female switch-tender. Those officials are on the right track—women are about of anything as switch-tenders, as when they are on duty the switch is never off, and then they are always pushed on the proper time for trains, you know.

[illegible]

Sick said: "For her part, she had no opinion of those new-fangled notions that are so dreadful particular about 'dirt,' and can't eat nothing but vegetables and such flummery. She called 'em fools, as the Psalmist did." And when some one inquired for the passage, she cited Psalms cvii. 17, 18, to wit: "Fools, because of their transgression and because of their iniquities, are afflicted; their soul abhorreth all manner of meat."—Congregationalist.

"ARRESTED for carrying a pistol, was he?" asked a magistrate of an officer, referring to a gentleman who had just been arraigned. "Let's see the pistol." The weapon was produced, and handed to the Judge, who examined it, and asked—"Where did you get it?" "Bought it at a hardware store." "What did it cost?" "Fifteen dollars." "Fine implement. Heard you away?" And the Judge drew out a pistol, and handed it to the prisoner. "Take $10 to boot." "All right. I'll fire you $10. That makes us even."

—Half a century ago a Mr. Walden of Portland, Me., had four strangely assorted pets: a parrot, a monkey, a tame fox and a Newfoundland puppy. The parrot has seen his companions, one after another, go the way of all flesh, and now, at the age of sixty years, a still one of the most important members—Lieutenant George Walden's family. Contemplation of the vicissitude of life has sobered the loquacity which was once in the parrot's child. In fact, the bird is now, to all appearances, one of the most profound thinkers in the State of Maine.—Boston Post.

SPECIAL OFFER To every person who will send us Two Dollars in advance for one year's subscription to the JOURNAL we will present one year's subscription (in the form of WEEKLY FREE PRESS, printed on large sheet, 8 pages, 48 columns, 32 pages, 384 pages, 12 pages, 96 pages, 144 pages, 192 pages, 240 pages, 288 pages, 336 pages, 384 pages, 432 pages, 480 pages, 528 pages, 576 pages, 624 pages, 672 pages, 720 pages, 768 pages, 816 pages, 864 pages, 912 pages, 960 pages, 1008 pages, 1056 pages, 1104 pages, 1152 pages, 1200 pages, 1248 pages, 1296 pages, 1344 pages, 1392 pages, 1440 pages, 1488 pages, 1536 pages, 1584 pages, 1632 pages, 1680 pages, 1728 pages, 1776 pages, 1824 pages, 1872 pages, 1920 pages, 1968 pages, 2016 pages, 2064 pages, 2112 pages, 2160 pages, 2208 pages, 2256 pages, 2304 pages, 2352 pages, 2400 pages, 2448 pages, 2496 pages, 2544 pages, 2592 pages, 2640 pages, 2688 pages, 2736 pages, 2784 pages, 2832 pages, 2880 pages, 2928 pages, 2976 pages, 3024 pages, 3072 pages, 3120 pages, 3168 pages, 3216 pages, 3264 pages, 3312 pages, 3360 pages, 3408 pages, 3456 pages, 3504 pages, 3552 pages, 3600 pages, 3648 pages, 3696 pages, 3744 pages, 3792 pages, 3840 pages, 3888 pages, 3936 pages, 3984 pages, 4032 pages, 4080 pages, 4128 pages, 4176 pages, 4224 pages, 4272 pages, 4320 pages, 4368 pages, 4416 pages, 4464 pages, 4512 pages, 4560 pages, 4608 pages, 4656 pages, 4704 pages, 4752 pages, 4800 pages, 4848 pages, 4896 pages, 4944 pages, 4992 pages, 5040 pages, 5088 pages, 5136 pages, 5184 pages, 5232 pages, 5280 pages, 5328 pages, 5376 pages, 5424 pages, 5472 pages, 5520 pages, 5568 pages, 5616 pages, 5664 pages, 5712 pages, 5760 pages, 5808 pages, 5856 pages, 5904 pages, 5952 pages, 6000 pages, 6048 pages, 6096 pages, 6144 pages, 6192 pages, 6240 pages, 6288 pages, 6336 pages, 6384 pages, 6432 pages, 6480 pages, 6528 pages, 6576 pages, 6624 pages, 6672 pages, 6720 pages, 6768 pages, 6816 pages, 6864 pages, 6912 pages, 6960 pages, 7008 pages, 7056 pages, 7104 pages, 7152 pages, 7200 pages, 7248 pages, 7296 pages, 7344 pages, 7392 pages, 7440 pages, 7488 pages, 7536 pages, 7584 pages, 7632 pages, 7680 pages, 7728 pages, 7776 pages, 7824 pages, 7872 pages, 7920 pages, 7968 pages, 8016 pages, 8064 pages, 8112 pages, 8160 pages, 8208 pages, 8256 pages, 8304 pages, 8352 pages, 8400 pages, 8448 pages, 8496 pages, 8544 pages, 8592 pages, 8640 pages, 8688 pages, 8736 pages, 8784 pages, 8832 pages, 8880 pages, 8928 pages, 8976 pages, 9024 pages, 9072 pages, 9120 pages, 9168 pages, 9216 pages, 9264 pages, 9312 pages, 9360 pages, 9408 pages, 9456 pages, 9504 pages, 9552 pages, 9600 pages, 9648 pages, 9696 pages, 9744 pages, 9792 pages, 9840 pages, 9888 pages, 9936 pages, 9984 pages, 10032 pages, 10080 pages, 10128 pages, 10176 pages, 10224 pages, 10272 pages, 10320 pages, 10368 pages, 10416 pages, 10464 pages, 10512 pages, 10560 pages, 10608 pages, 10656 pages, 10704 pages, 10752 pages, 10800 pages, 10848 pages, 10896 pages, 10944 pages, 10992 pages, 11040 pages, 11088 pages, 11136 pages, 11184 pages, 11232 pages, 11280 pages, 11328 pages, 11376 pages, 11424 pages, 11472 pages, 11520 pages, 11568 pages, 11616 pages, 11664 pages, 11712 pages, 11760 pages, 11808 pages, 11856 pages, 11904 pages, 11952 pages, 12000 pages, 12048 pages, 12096 pages, 12144 pages, 12192 pages, 12240 pages, 12288 pages, 12336 pages, 12384 pages, 12432 pages, 12480 pages, 12528 pages, 12576 pages, 12624 pages, 12672 pages, 12720 pages, 12768 pages, 12816 pages, 12864 pages, 12912 pages, 12960 pages, 13008 pages, 13056 pages, 13104 pages, 13152 pages, 13200 pages, 13248 pages, 13296 pages, 13344 pages, 13392 pages, 13440 pages, 13488 pages, 13536 pages, 13584 pages, 13632 pages, 13680 pages, 13728 pages, 13776 pages, 13824 pages, 13872 pages, 13920 pages, 13968 pages, 14016 pages, 14064 pages, 14112 pages, 14160 pages, 14208 pages, 14256 pages, 14304 pages, 14352 pages, 14400 pages, 14448 pages, 14496 pages, 14544 pages, 14592 pages, 14640 pages, 14688 pages, 14736 pages, 14784 pages, 14832 pages, 14880 pages, 14928 pages, 14976 pages, 15024 pages, 15072 pages, 15120 pages, 15168 pages, 15216 pages, 15264 pages, 15312 pages, 15360 pages, 15408 pages, 15456 pages, 15504 pages, 15552 pages, 15600 pages, 15648 pages, 15696 pages, 15744 pages, 15792 pages, 15840 pages, 15888 pages, 15936 pages, 15984 pages, 16032 pages, 16080 pages, 16128 pages, 16176 pages, 16224 pages, 16272 pages, 16320 pages, 16368 pages, 16416 pages, 16464 pages, 16512 pages, 16560 pages, 16608 pages, 16656 pages, 16704 pages, 16752 pages, 16800 pages, 16848 pages, 16896 pages, 16944 pages, 16992 pages, 17040 pages, 17088 pages, 17136 pages, 17184 pages, 17232 pages, 17280 pages, 17328 pages, 17376 pages, 17424 pages, 17472 pages, 17520 pages, 17568 pages, 17616 pages, 17664 pages, 17712 pages, 17760 pages, 17808 pages, 17856 pages, 17904 pages, 17952 pages, 18000 pages, 18048 pages, 18096 pages, 18144 pages, 18192 pages, 18240 pages, 18288 pages, 18336 pages, 18384 pages, 18432 pages, 18480 pages, 18528 pages, 18576 pages, 18624 pages, 18672 pages, 18720 pages, 18768 pages, 18816 pages, 18864 pages, 18912 pages, 18960 pages, 19008 pages, 19056 pages, 19104 pages, 19152 pages, 19200 pages, 19248 pages, 19296 pages, 19344 pages, 19392 pages, 19440 pages, 19488 pages, 19536 pages, 19584 pages, 19632 pages, 19680 pages, 19728 pages, 19776 pages, 19824 pages, 19872 pages, 19920 pages, 19968 pages, 20016 pages, 20064 pages, 20112 pages, 20160 pages, 20208 pages, 20256 pages, 20304 pages, 20352 pages, 20400 pages, 20448 pages, 20496 pages, 20544 pages, 20592 pages, 20640 pages, 20688 pages, 20736 pages, 20784 pages, 20832 pages, 20880 pages, 20928 pages, 20976 pages, 21024 pages, 21072 pages, 21120 pages, 21168 pages, 21216 pages, 21264 pages, 21312 pages, 21360 pages, 21408 pages, 21456 pages, 21504 pages, 21552 pages, 21600 pages, 21648 pages, 21696 pages, 21744 pages, 21792 pages, 21840 pages, 21888 pages, 21936 pages, 21984 pages, 22032 pages, 22080 pages, 22128 pages, 22176 pages, 22224 pages, 22272 pages, 22320 pages, 22368 pages, 22416 pages, 22464 pages, 22512 pages, 22560 pages, 22608 pages, 22656 pages, 22704 pages, 22752 pages, 22800 pages, 22848 pages, 22896 pages, 22944 pages, 22992 pages, 23040 pages, 23088 pages, 23136 pages, 23184 pages, 23232 pages, 23280 pages, 23328 pages, 23376 pages, 23424 pages, 23472 pages, 23520 pages, 23568 pages, 23616 pages, 23664 pages, 23712 pages, 23760 pages, 23808 pages, 23856 pages, 23904 pages, 23952 pages, 24000 pages, 24048 pages, 24096 pages, 24144 pages, 24192 pages, 24240 pages, 24288 pages, 24336 pages, 24384 pages, 24432 pages, 24480 pages, 24528 pages, 24576 pages, 24624 pages, 24672 pages, 24720 pages, 24768 pages, 24816 pages, 24864 pages, 24912 pages, 24960 pages, 25008 pages, 25056 pages, 25104 pages, 25152 pages, 25200 pages, 25248 pages, 25296 pages, 25344 pages, 25392 pages, 25440 pages, 25488 pages, 25536 pages, 25584 pages, 25632 pages, 25680 pages, 25728 pages, 25776 pages, 25824 pages, 25872 pages, 25920 pages, 25968 pages, 26016 pages, 26064 pages, 26112 pages, 26160 pages, 26208 pages, 26256 pages, 26304 pages, 26352 pages, 26400 pages, 26448 pages, 26496 pages, 26544 pages, 26592 pages, 26640 pages, 26688 pages, 26736 pages, 26784 pages, 26832 pages, 26880 pages, 26928 pages, 26976 pages, 27024 pages, 27072 pages, 27120 pages, 27168 pages, 27216 pages, 27264 pages, 27312 pages, 27360 pages, 27408 pages, 27456 pages, 27504 pages, 27552 pages, 27600 pages, 27648 pages, 27696 pages, 27744 pages, 27792 pages, 27840 pages, 27888 pages, 27936 pages, 27984 pages, 28032 pages, 28080 pages, 28128 pages, 28176 pages, 28224 pages, 28272 pages, 28320 pages, 28368 pages, 28416 pages, 28464 pages, 28512 pages, 28560 pages, 28608 pages, 28656 pages, 28704 pages, 28752 pages, 28800 pages, 28848 pages, 28896 pages, 28944 pages, 28992 pages, 29040 pages, 29088 pages, 29136 pages, 29184 pages, 29232 pages, 29280 pages, 29328 pages, 29376 pages, 29424 pages, 29472 pages, 29520 pages, 29568 pages, 29616 pages, 29664 pages, 29712 pages, 29760 pages, 29808 pages, 29856 pages, 29904 pages, 29952 pages, 30000 pages, 30048 pages, 30096 pages, 30144 pages, 30192 pages, 30240 pages, 30288 pages, 30336 pages, 30384 pages, 30432 pages, 30480 pages, 30528 pages, 30576 pages, 30624 pages, 30672 pages, 30720 pages, 30768 pages, 30816 pages, 30864 pages, 30912 pages, 30960 pages, 31008 pages, 31056 pages, 31104 pages, 31152 pages, 31200 pages, 31248 pages, 31296 pages, 31

A THANKSGIVING TRAGEDY.

BY EUGENE FIELD.

Jamie sat down to eat his dinner
On a bright Thanksgiving day,
And he murmured, "I will tackle
This turkey in a way!"
"Jamie," his mother gently said to him,
"Jamie, you mustn't eat so much;
You will find it dangerous business,
Tackling turkey, quail and such."

Jamie paid no attention to her,
Save to frown a little bit;
Fact combined doing business
Putting all the viands down!
Yes sir, partridge, duck and rabbit,
Lobster, goose and chicken pie;
Jamie, sauces, entrees vanished
In the twinkling of an eye.

"Jamie, my son," exclaimed the father,
"You have eaten quite enough;
Or you'll catch a dreadful colic"
Filling up on such rich stuff."
Jamie said he felt no apetite,
Would not listen to his sire;
Fact continued he would tackle
Nancy, cookies, pie, pie-crust.

Bigger, bigger grew his stomach,
Filled with pies and cakes and meat—
Bigger still with pastry, puddings
Still to fill no room was left.
When at last appeared the pudding,
Jamie imbibed a quartered grain—
"Darling, are you sick?" his mother
Queried, in an anxious tone.

Then the foolish little fellow
Placed one hand upon his head
And the other upon his stomach—
"Good!" he feebly, faintly said
Papa hastened for the doctor,
Mamma sighed and bore her pain;
But, before assistance reached him,
Jamie had climbed the golden stair.

For there came a loud explosion,
Terrible as cannon sounds—
Filled too full of tenderness vitals,
He had bursted all to flounce!
And for seveteen weeks they labored
Jamie's mind to disentangle
Taken a modest nap was he
In the family burying-ground.

—Chicago Daily News.

OUTWITTING A MOONSHINER.

BY N. C. FARLEY.

For months we had been following up what seemed a hot trail.

The Government had got wind of an illicit distillery hidden snugly away in the wooded fastnesses of a certain locality in Kansas—that shall be nameless at present—and I had been detailed, with several others, to run it down and bring the offenders to justice. But so far they had eluded our grasp.

During the last three or four weeks, however, we had hovered pretty close upon its discovery. Several times lately I had received such accurate information as to the locality of the still that each time we had moved upon the works fully expecting to capture the moonshiners actually engaged at their unlawful business. But disappointment only crowned our efforts. In every instance we found where they had been working, but nothing more. It almost seemed as though they were gifted with supernatural powers, for they not only successfully eluded capture, but they showed by various manuvers at different times that a knowledge of the plans made by the Government was familiar to them. There was certainly treachery somewhere, though I could not decide where.

The long day was fast drawing to a close, and having been in the saddle since early morning I was thoroughly tired out, and drawing rein before a cabin hard by, asked for a night's lodging, with supper and breakfast. To my surprise—the master of the house—I felt sure it could be called, after planting sharply at myself and house, gruffly bade me ride on, adding that he had neither room nor food for a stranger. Being in anything but a good humor in the first place, his rough dismissal served to completely destroy the little stock of good nature that remained to me at the end of my day's travel.

This is a specimen of the famous Kansas hospitality, is it?" I asked angrily. "This makes the fourth time in the last three hours that I have been refused food and lodging. And yet you writers laugh that your lard-eatings are always out to the traveler.

"It must be that there's a sort of difference in travelers," was his sneer reply, as he glanced meditatively at my weakness. A sudden suspicion of the truth flashed across my mental vision, and following his eye my suspicions were verified, for there, only partially concealed by my top-coat, which was unfastened on account of the heat, shone my badge.

Inwardly cursing my stupidity and vowing to make amends in the future, we started on, though the poor beast was too fagged out to take any gait faster than a walk.

Jogging on, tired to death, and still pondering over what was a mystery to me, I saw far on ahead in the fast gathering gloom of the approaching night, a bright light, shining like a star in the darkness.

The horse gave a joyful whinny and quickened his pace. It was not long before we drew up before a small stone house.

Taking care to hide my badge before going in, I once more dipped for food and shelter.

A young woman answered my knock on the door, but my request was met with the usual demurrer.

"My horse has given out, and I am exhausted and starving," I insisted, pushing my way into the room. "You shall be well paid for your trouble."

"But my husband is not at home and won't be until to-morrow," she objected.

"Forty husbands, for that matter, madam, couldn't improve my comfort any if they were all at home. Just give me a cornpone and a cup of Kansas coffee, with a blanket to sleep on, and room in your barn for my horse. I'll be off bright and early in the morning."

"Better let him stop, ma'am," spoke up a big hulking fellow by the side of the fire-place. "He's good bit fer any house, and there'll be a storm before mornin' if I don't miss my guess."

The woman put her head out of doors and glanced anxiously at the sky.

A great black cloud that had been slowly creeping over the hill tops was now hanging lowering overhead.

Knowing how quickly storms gather in that locality, and having had evidence on several occasions of the awful destruction of life and property caused by them, I too glanced uneasily at the heavens.

"Jonas," cried the woman quickly, as if she had at last made up her mind to accept the inevitable, "take this man's horse to the barn and feed it, and his own sleeps with you in the little room off the kitchen."

The hired man, for such he was, led my horse away, and I sat down before the fire.

A good supper was soon smoking before me, though ever and anon my hostess peered out through the small window, evidently greatly worried at the approaching storm.

Jonas returned from his trip to the barn, and taking up the seat opposite mine, challenged me to a friendly game of checkers. He was by no means a poor player, and we were deeply engaged in what we called the "ridder," when we were all startled by a strange, roaring noise.

"A cyclone," screamed the hostess frantically, lifting a trap door and disappearing in the cellar; "come down for your lives!"

But there was no time for escape. Even as her head went down out of sight, the roof of the house was lifted up, and we were caught by some terrible power and carried whirling away, with terrific force.

Boards, stones and trees and every conceivable thing went groaning and whirling through the air with us.

How long this lasted I never could tell. Gasping and struggling for breath, my first sensation was that of drowning; then in an almost senseless condition my body was suddenly dashed with stunning force to the earth and left there. During all this time there was a frightful roaring noise, and a rushing, together of two great bodies, as of two vast armies struggling for a victory. It was an awful moment. Groaning with agony, I realized what had befallen me. To be caught up in a Kansas cyclone was fully as dangerous as to be caught in chasing a Kansas moonshiner to cover.

The storm, however, did not stop for any comments of mine, but went on further its work of blinding and whirling and crashing through the forests, bearing havoc and desolation in its track.

Gradually the roar died off in a long distance, and I was left to my reflections.

Well, I took a roll at the contents, of course.

"It's the clear quill," said I coolly. "Do you know where it's made?"

Jonas laughed a queer little laugh.

"Now, look here," said he, earnestly, "in course I know where thet stuff is made. An' since we've been partners in moonshinin, I don't mind takin' yer in partner in prosperity." And he pulled away more of the hay—disclosing what looked like a plank wall at the back of the manger. "Yer can thin here little door kept" setting the action to the word. "An' here the entrance to a cave. Right in here we make all the 'budge' them pesky revenue officers are a heatin' for, but they'll never stick to this trap; never." And he sailed a satisfied smile and pulled the hay back again into its place.

For a moment I was staggered, but had sense enough left to control my exultation at the opportune discovery.

"This beat's be back to-day," continued Jonas, going on with his revelations. "He's been off a jettin' old Foxy on an old errand. Old Foxy, you know, is the fellow the Government has sent down here to run us under. The boss is hand and glove with him, and makes him think the moon's made of green cheese, and all the time we'uns are laughing in our sleeves to see old Foxy foolin'."

Now, "Foxy" meant me. Instantly I saw through the duplicity that had been practiced upon me, and there and then vowed a speedy and sweet retribution.

Under pretense of looking for the woman, I left Jonas and reconnoitered. The stable was built on a hill-side and every detail had been so cleverly arranged that, but for Jonas' confession, the place would have passed the closest scrutiny without exciting the least suspicion. Luckily, I found my hostess still in the cellar, though more dead than alive, with fright, and getting her out of the debris that surrounded her, found the house had been completely demolished, I got on my horse and rode away to summon help.

It is not to be supposed that grass grew to any very great height between my departure and my return.

Luckily my men were stationed at no great distance off, and, rallying them together, we visited the scene of the storm.

When I got back the owner of the place had just returned to what was left of his home. With his wife, he was surveying the ruins as I rode up and accosted him. It didn't take me two minutes to recognize my quondam friend and informant, and the recognition was mutual, though he had no idea of what was in store for him.

"You haven't yet those fellows yet?" said he, as I drew rein beside him.

"No," said I, calmly, "but thanks to your friend man, I soon will have them."

And quicker than lightning my men gathered round him, and before he fully realized what had happened we had the handcuffs on his wrists. Before going into the barn where the hired man still lay on the hay, I purposely put on my badge in a conspicuous place in order to watch the effect it would have upon him.

His face was a sight: to behold when his eyes first lighted on that tell-tale star.

He gasped a little, then he sitted gently up on his elbow, and shoving his hat at me, growled out:

"So yer was a blamed officer all the time, was yer? Durn yer picter, I'd hev torn yer livers outh yer carcass, if I'd suspected such a thing but night when ye was playin' checkers with me. Missis was right; she wanted to send you all on yer business, an' now I wish I'd a let her down it; I do, b' gosh!"

We seized the barrels of whisky and all the various accouterments with which they make it, and not only sent the two offenders to prison, but captured more of the gang shortly after, effectually putting a stop to illicit distilling in that section of the country.

Chicago Ledger.

A Realistic Scene.

A theatrical company was playing "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in the hamlet camps and quartz diggings of Nevada, following the route of the Comstock lode. It had two Topsys and two Markses, one was entertaining a play away, which, having been located outside the tract of the cyclone, was standing in good order. Here was my horse, and here too, was Jonas, who, with a broken leg, had managed to crawl inside upon the hay.

"Mornin' pardner," said he feebly, as I stood before him scratched and bruised and yet to the skin, though otherwise all right. "An' yer actually alive yet, alive, I gosh!"

"Where's the woman, Jonas," said I, wrapping a horse blanket round my shivering body.

"O, I guess she's blowed clean away. Leastways, I've seen nor heard nothin' of her."

"Well, I'll go and hunt over the debris, and see if she can be found," said I, preparing to go. Before I started, however, Jonas, who retired me shivering in my wet clothes, whispered shyly in my ear:

"Wouldn't mind a little hot taste pooty good this mornin', pardner?"

"I would indeed," replied I, instantly on the alert, "but 'where's it to be found?"

"I'll tell ye, pardner," he went on cautiously. "Ye see as we've been blowed up together in this here storm, and as we've come out'n together, I'm blest if I let ye start out this mornin' a huntin' up the missis without yer wet-your tin' yer whistle a little afore ye go. Put thet in yer hat, and hide it in yer coat, an' don't ye tell a livin' soul—here ye is."

With that he passed away the hay in one of the runways, and literally a good sized decoction. Well, I took a pull at the contents, of course.

"It's the clear quill," said I coolly. "Do you know where it's made?"

Jonas laughed a queer little laugh.

"Now, look here," said he, earnestly, "in course I know where thet stuff is made. An' since we've been partners in moonshinin, I don't mind takin' yer in partner in prosperity." And he pulled away more of the hay—disclosing what looked like a plank wall at the back of the manger. "Ye can thin here little door kept" setting the action to the word. "An' here the entrance to a cave. Right in here we make all the 'budge' them pesky revenue officers are a heatin' for, but they'll never stick to this trap; never." And he sailed a satisfied smile and pulled the hay back again into its place.

For a moment I was staggered, but had sense enough left to control my exultation at the opportune discovery.

"This beat's be back to-day," continued Jonas, going on with his revelations. "He's been off a jettin' old Foxy on an old errand. Old Foxy, you know, is the fellow the Government has sent down here to run us under. The boss is hand and glove with him, and makes him think the moon's made of green cheese, and all the time we'uns are laughing in our sleeves to see old Foxy fooled."

Now, "Foxy" meant me. Instantly I saw through the duplicity that had been practiced upon me, and there and then vowed a speedy and sweet retribution.

Under pretense of looking for the woman, I left Jonas and reconnoitered. The stable was built on a hill-side and every detail had been so cleverly arranged that, but for Jonas' confession, the place would have passed the closest scrutiny without exciting the least suspicion. Luckily, I found my hostess still in the cellar, though more dead than alive, with fright, and getting her out of the debris that surrounded her, found the house had been completely demolished. I got on my horse and rode away to summon help.

It is not to be supposed that grass grew to any very great height between my departure and my return.

Luckily my men were stationed at no great distance off, and, rallying them together, we visited the scene of the storm.

When I got back the owner of the place had just returned to what was left of his home. With his wife, he was surveying the ruins as I rode up and accosted him. It didn't take me two minutes to recognize my quondam friend and informant, and the recognition was mutual, though he had no idea of what was in store for him.

"You haven't yet those fellows yet?" said he, as I drew rein beside him.

"No," said I, calmly, "but thanks to your friend man, I soon will have them."

And quicker than lightning my men gathered round him, and before he fully realized what had happened we had the handcuffs on his wrists. Before going into the barn where the hired man still lay on the hay, I purposely put on my badge in a conspicuous place in order to watch the effect it would have upon him.

His face was a sight: to behold when his eyes first lighted on that tell-tale star.

He gasped a little, then he sitted gently up on his elbow, and shoving his hat at me, growled out:

"So ye was a blamed officer all the time, was ye? Durn yer picter, I'd hev torn yer livers outh yer carcass, if I'd suspected such a thing but night when ye was playin' checkers with me. Missis was right; she wanted to send you all on yer business, an' now I wish I'd a let her down it; I do, b' gosh!"

We seized the barrels of whisky and all the various accouterments with which they make it, and not only sent the two offenders to prison, but captured more of the gang shortly after, effectually putting a stop to illicit distilling in that section of the country.

Chicago Ledger.

A Realistic Scene.

A theatrical company was playing "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in the hamlet camps and quartz diggings of Nevada, following the route of the Comstock lode. It had two Topsys and two Markses, one was entertaining a play away, which, having been located outside the tract of the cyclone, was standing in good order. Here was my horse, and here too, was Jonas, who, with a broken leg, had managed to crawl inside upon the hay.

"Mornin' pardner," said he feebly, as I stood before him scratched and bruised and yet to the skin, though otherwise all right. "An' yer actually alive yet, alive, I gosh!"

"Where's the woman, Jonas," said I, wrapping a horse blanket round my shivering body.

"O, I guess she's blowed clean away. Leastways, I've seen nor heard nothin' of her."

"Well, I'll go and hunt over the debris, and see if she can be found," said I, preparing to go. Before I started, however, Jonas, who retired me shivering in my wet clothes, whispered shyly in my ear:

"Wouldn't mind a little hot taste pooty good this mornin', pardner?"

"I would indeed," replied I, instantly on the alert, "but where's it to be found?"

"I'll tell ye, pardner," he went on cautiously. "Ye see as we've been blowed up together in this here storm, and as we've come out'n together, I'm blest if I let ye start out this mornin' a huntin' up the missis without yer wet-your tin' yer whistle a little afore ye go. Put thet in yer hat, and hide it in yer coat, an' don't ye tell a livin' soul—here ye is."

With that he passed away the hay in one of the runways, and literally a good sized decoction. Well, I took a pull at the contents, of course.

"It's the clear quill," said I coolly. "Do you know where it's made?"

Jonas laughed a queer little laugh.

"Now, look here," said he, earnestly, "in course I know where thet stuff is made. An' since we've been partners in moonshinin, I don't mind takin' yer in partner in prosperity." And he pulled away more of the hay—disclosing what looked like a plank wall at the back of the manger. "Ye can thin here little door kept" setting the action to the word. "An' here the entrance to a cave. Right in here we make all the 'budge' them pesky revenue officers are a heatin' for, but they'll never stick to this trap; never." And he sailed a satisfied smile and pulled the hay back again into its place.

For a moment I was staggered, but had sense enough left to control my exultation at the opportune discovery.

"This beat's be back to-day," continued Jonas, going on with his revelations. "He's been off a jettin' old Foxy on an old errand. Old Foxy, you know, is the fellow the Government has sent down here to run us under. The boss is hand and glove with him, and makes him think the moon's made of green cheese, and all the time we'uns are laughing in our sleeves to see old Foxy fooled."

Now, "Foxy" meant me. Instantly I saw through the duplicity that had been practiced upon me, and there and

The Broken Pane.

It was spring time. The linda were unfolding into blossom—the birds sang joyfully as they built their nests—the green grass was hiding the ugly scars of winter. A child's pale face peered through a broken pane out upon the glorious sunshine, and the soft wind kissed her cheeks and whispered:

"Dry and be!"

Outside the house was life and health and happiness. Inside was sickness, sorrow and poverty. Child though she was, the shadows had settled down about her as the fog gathers round the ship which the rocks thirst to destroy. There were children there, but no child-ish laughter. The sunshine streamed into the bare rooms, but it warmed no hearts. It was a poor—poor struggle against that grim, grim shadow whose other name is poverty.

Hunger and cold and rags dwarf the body, and give the face the look of one hunted for years by an implacable enemy. Despair will waste no over darts enter the struggle, and anxiety leaves its mark so plainly that no one can mistake it.

The child of 12 had known nothing but shadows, grim, silent, stealthy shadows, stealing upon her young life to rob it of every happiness. Even as the looked out upon the glorious world she felt that she was no part of it. It was around her, but beyond her reach.

It was midsummer. Every tree was a thing of beauty—every flower a silent tribute of praise to the Creator. The grass had become a velvet carpet—the blossoms were young fruit—the sun was sending his warm rays into the darkest corners. The world was joyous under the blue skies of summer as the pale face again looked from the broken pane. Out in the world around her the children shouted in their glee. In the dark old house children hungered for bread—the same struggle for bread—the same burdens and anxieties and bitterness of heart. The child had grown paler, and the haunted look had changed every other expression away. Her eyes saw the trees, the flowers, the streets, the busy world and its happiness, and her ears heard the summer breeze as it softly whispered:

"Dry and be."

What would it bring? What is the by and by to those limited by hunger and striving against poverty?

One day when the north wind shrieked and moaned and the snowflakes whirled and flew, another face appeared at the broken pane. It was that of a boy who could not resist the temptation to look in. On a poorer bed than he had ever seen—in a room so cold and bare and cheerless that he shivered as he looked—lay the corpse of the child who had looked out upon the glorious summer. The snowflakes which strayed in at the broken pane were no whiter than her face. There was no more cold for the coldness, but around the mouth were lines to mark the hour of her death. The boy were whispering, "Snow and poverty and despair have beclouded and cut short a young life. Have pity."

The soft winds had whispered, "Dry and be!" In the hearts of those in that boy's eyes would have uttered her sorrows and made her heart brave. They had come too late.

—M. Quad.

Cold Feet.

Some men will jump into bed after running in late and put their bare feet over against their wife, who has fallen into a gentle, peaceful sleep. She dreams of hunting a deer expedition for about a second when she awakes to a realization that her cold-footed and cold-hearted husband is making a mighty effort to get the small of her back. About this time, if he is a happy one, it becomes decidedly sultry for the husband. His wife knows that he has made a mistake, and after solemnly promising never to do it again, and to warm himself by the fire before retiring, peace generally reigns until a fresh outbreak occurs which is generally the next night, he repeats the same trick, and matters assume the same promises. The very thought of a pair of ice-cold feet against your warm back is enough to make the cold chills run all up and down your spine playing tag. A Cedar Rapids lawyer, who has had a big experience in this line, and had finally won so well-trained by his wife as to put on his nice long cotton flannel night shirt when he came home at night and lock up to the stove and get thoroughly warmed before going to bed. His wife was beginning to enjoy life and looked forward to the cold nights at the coming winter with a dread of her husband's cold feet waiting her from her journey through the land of Nod. After his good wife had retired, he arrayed himself in his nice long night shirt, perched himself on a chair with his back to the stove, in which position he soon dozed off, but began to have trouble in getting his legs to believe he was chief engineer in Indiana and was shouting for more brimstone. He did shoot. He was fairly awake. He smelt burnt flannel. He felt rather too warm for comfort. He realized that something had got to be done, and he did it at once, as his nice night shirt was ablaze. He had not too near the stove. The noise he made caused his wife to come running into the room, where she found him rolling on the floor trying to extinguish the conflagration. That man has gone back on everything outside of a bed to warm a pair of cold feet or a cold back, and you can't make him believe there is any other way to get warm than to "spoon it," in the good old-fashioned way, long cotton flannel night shirts to the contrary notwithstanding.—Peck's Sun.

NAUTRALIA clocked stockings are the most striking.

JINGLES.

KEEN SIGHT.

There is an old lady in Lowell,
Who lives on a very long chin
She often hangs out
Her false teeth to tempt
When she's hung them out she goes in.

There is a young lady in Lowell,
Whose sight is so keen she can sew will
Her needle and thread
In the chickens at night,
And over the fact she can crow well.

—Somerville Journal.

STATIONERY POETRY.

Why did the poets like an idyl,
And let the paper cutter go?
When Pope Twitt knew Tennyson
To have a rifle for a to.
Why did the lobsters idly lie,
And not take their winters ease?
Because they knew Swift write
Tennyson's poetry.

—Merchant Traveler.

CANADIAN PLUMBING.

Twice—twice—
Twice—twice—
Man is a fool
Walking quick,
Heels in pockets
Is nice—nice.

Stairs down hill
Are nice—nice
Head ought to lead,
Upward
May be—
With hitching eyes,
Hands in pockets,
Won't come out;
Hitching eyes
Hope and hoist,
Hope slanchoised,
Pants—dropped—
Impost in
The Dominion—

—Express Fields, in Chicago News.

Take a Hint.

Take a sparrow's leg—mind, the drumstick

Put it in a vessel—filled with water nearly;
Stand it up—where the place hasn't much,
Let it stand a week—or how if you like
Pick a handful of the bones into the row
Which goes not for of tin, or any lower metal;
Fill it with water—and in a week or fortnight
Strain the liquor well to prevent it spilling
Put in one grain of salt
Take it and drink it.
Then you will feel a little sick of money;
When the sense is clear nothing concerned
Then three times a day let the pellets swell it;
Let the pellets be—or—be quite dissolved
If be—choice to live—or the same the result.

TO AN ATHLETE.

On, J. Sullivan! oh, J. L. Sullivan!
If John L. George Sullivan, will last!
Then bodiamites immitude! Then god! Then you
Then Zeus will all-compelling hand;
Then glory of the mighty—shout! Then Hercules
Then Achilles hero! Then light of the Aeropolis
Then of a sovereign—power!
Fifty—nine inches art thou round thy rib cages
Twin knuckles hast thou! and again
Twice twain.
Then Sullivan's sun's teeth like stilettoes at Thy throat
Then steel-threaded—biceps arm, and sinewy rock and rock—table clear as little Ben.
Oh, thou grim gramineer! Thou soul-renewer!
Then Hibernia, cry exultant!
Then cracking cheer! Then shell John!
Then Sullivan!
Oh, you! Oh, me too! Oh, me some more!
Oh, thunder!?

STITCH, STITCH, STITCH.

A woman sat perched in a chair,
Stitch, stitch, stitch,
Stitching, stitching in the gloom.
Two little girls were playing
In the time twilighted room;
And unknown to their mother
Starting to pestiness of green,
Two little ghosts
Lay over the place and away,
Stitch, stitch, stitch!
The little girls were rapidly play,
While she's a stitching, stitching;
Of the time of an autumn day,
Jesus, mamma, I want some light—
Stitch, stitch, stitch!
Mamma, mamma, I want some light—
That babies are a hungry lot—
Stitch, stitch, stitch!
Yes, I want some light—
Stitch, stitch, stitch!
Yes, I want some light—
Stitch, stitch, stitch!
Yes, I want some light

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Jan. 3, 1894.

What Congress Costs.

The total number of employees and subordinate officers of the house is 277, divided as follows: Under speaker, 38; clerk, 39; doorkeeper, 153; sergeant-at-arms, 8; postmaster, 16; annual clerks and messengers to committees, 51; reporters, 7.

The speaker's salary is $6,000 with a private secretary at $1,800 and two clerks, one at $1,600 and the other at $1,400. The chaplain of the house receives $900, the clerk of the house $1,500; doorkeeper $3,000; sergeant-at-arms $4,500; postmaster $2,500. The subordinates to the above officers are compensated, 7 official reporters at $5,000 each; 6 clerks at $3,000 each; 4 at $2,500; 3 at $2,250; 26 at $2,000; 4 at $1,800; 7 at $1,600; 2 at $1,500; 7 at $1,440; 47 at 1,200; 44 at $1,000; 16 at $900; 11 at $840; 43 at $720; 11 at $600; 2 at $500; 29 at $400. These salaries aggregate nearly $350,000, to which add the salaries of the 326 congressmen at $5,000 each and we make the discovery that simply the personel of the house costs the country nearly $2,000,000 per annum, or an average of about $20,000 per each day in session.

The senate side of congress have a larger proportion of aids than the house, there being a total of 202 subordinates to 78 senators. There are in the vice-president's office 2, chaplain 1, secretary's office 31, sergeant-at-arms 58, engineer's department 10, post office 7, clerks to committees 48, official reporters 5, their salaries being, the president of the senate $8,000; his secretary $2,500; and messenger $1,440. The chaplain receives $900, the secretary of the senate $6,000; sergeant-at-arms $4,500; postmaster $2,250; and engineer $2,150. Below these there are 2 clerks at $2,000; each, 7 at $2,500; 30 at $2,250; 2 at $2,000; 5 at $1,800; 42 at $1,440; 10 at $1,200; 11 at $1,000; 21 at $900; 1 at $840; 22 at $720; 6 at $600; 20 (pages at $400; and 5 official reporters at $5,000 each, the roll aggregating $295,000. The 78 senators receive annually $468,000, making the personel of that branch of congress cost the people three-quarters of a million dollars annually.

The above figures include only the salaries, and do not represent the aggregate expense of congress, which averages in total about $45,000 for each days session.

The personel of the senate averages $10,000 to each senator, while that of the house reaches only $6,000 to each member. If the house indulged in the same rate of expenditure that does the senate, it would cost $3,250,000 a year for the personel of the former body, against $2,000,000, its present expense.

The average number of days that congress is in session during a year is about one hundred, of four hours each day, a total of four hundred hours per annum, at an expense of $10,000 per hour, or $166,66 per minute. The comparative cost to England for its parliament is about $30,000 per hour, or $500 per minute.

Don't Read This.

To every person who will pay us three dollars in cash in advance for two years' subscription to the JOURNAL we will present one year's subscription to that peer of all weekly papers, the Detroit Weekly Free Press, which also includes that best of ladies' papers, The Household. In view of the fact that next year occurs another great political struggle, and the desire of every true patriot to be fully informed on the vital issues of the hour, we think no better offer than this can be made. It is equivalent to three papers for the price of one,—or rather, the getting of two papers as interest on one year's subscription in advance. There is no better weekly paper published than the Detroit Free Press, and every subscriber to that paper gets free a copy of The Household, devoted, as its name indicates, to matters pertaining to the home and fireside, and is in every respect a paper for the ladies.

Remember, three dollars pays for the JOURNAL two years, and secures the Free Press and Household, one year free. Subscribe now. Sample copies may be seen at the JOURNAL office.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and save up the system you will find Formidos Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co. 2-80

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.; HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

Advantages of Charlevoix

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,200 inhabitants, located on both banks of Pine River, between Round Lake and Lake Michigan. Nearly all branches of business are represented, yet a few others could be profitably added. Any of the various mills for manufacturing hardwood lumber, including handles, wooden bowls, chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons, will find an abundance of first-class timber easily accessible. Among the attractions are two summer resorts, which are annually visited by thousands of people. The climatic advantages are unexcelled, and they who have passed one or more summers at these resorts, recuperating their strength and securing a new lease of life, are most enthusiastic in their praise of the place. Sufferers from hay fever and asthmatic difficulties find here a sure relief. The shores of Pine Lake and Lake Michigan afford an excellent bathing place. The privileges for boating and fishing cannot be excelled by any other locality. In their season, lake trout, black bass, pickerel, perch, and herring abound in the waters adjacent to the villages, while the gamy speckled trout, the fisherman's delight, make the cold waters of the Jordan and Boyne rivers, as well as those of several smaller tributaries of Pine Lake, their favorite haunts. No rivers in the lower peninsula are as famous for their choice trout as the Jordan and Boyne. The scenery from any point of view on Pine Lake is one of surpassing loveliness. The surrounding country offers great inducements to progressive young farmers who desire to build homes for their families. There is an abundance of maple, elm, beech, basswood, ash, hemlock, and cedar timber, which, with our facilities for manufacturing and shipping, generally more than pays for clearing the land. Unimproved lands are held at from $7 to $15 per acre, while improved farms average from $15 to $60 in the interior, and from $25 to $100 near Charlevoix. The principal crops are winter wheat, oats, corn, hay, clover, potatoes, and root crops. The summer resorts at Charlevoix furnish an excellent market for all sorts of garden vegetables. All fruits do well, excepting grapes and peaches. The hardier kinds of apples are especially successful and the price for the same is generally higher than the same kind of fruit grown farther south. Charlevoix county is at the northern extremity of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt.

A correspondent of the Toledo Blade, writing from Charlevoix under date of Dec. 15th, says: "Among the many fine places in the northern part of the southern peninsula is Charlevoix county, situated between Grand and Little Traverse bays. This region possesses the finest natural advantages, being located on Lake Michigan, with two large lakes extending across the country, navigable for the largest vessels, making shipping facilities unexcelled. Immense tracts of valuable hardwood timber cover the country. The soil is capable of producing the finest wheat, oats, potatoes and grass. Vegetables grow to perfection. Apples, cherries, pears, and plums do well. Finest strawberries in the world, and they rarely fail. Climate moderate and equable compared with more southern latitudes. Ground never freezes to any depth. Last winter the coldness was only 15° below zero, while this winter thus far has not been colder than 18° above zero. Summers are pleasant, with cool nights. Climate very healthy. Fish of the best varieties in abundance. Farmers of small means can make themselves homes here with fewer disadvantages than in the west from the first, while capitalists can find many chances for profit. Charlevoix is a village of eighteen hundred and offers a rare chance for a flouring mill, furniture factory, tannery, etc., as their material would be at their doors. This region is becoming famous for its summer resorts, which bring thousands of people, seeking rest and recreation as well as health, in the life-giving breezes from the clear spring-like lakes. Purest water in the world, and plenty of it."

AT COST!

All kinds of

Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Ever brought to Charlevoix.

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.

They have no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY.

And Satisfaction Guaranteed.

L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House

CHARLEVOIX.

GEO. W. MILLER,

DEALER IN

Clothing

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

Hats and Caps, Trunks and Satchels,

GLOVES MITTENS, ETC.

Buttars' Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich:

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

EVERYTHING

In the line of

Furniture

AND

Undertakers' Goods

Can be found at the old reliable house of

H. C. Cooper

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See me before Buying

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY GONE YEARS.

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 26. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, JANUARY 10, 1894. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

is published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG,

office over I. D. Smith's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

CLEVELAND & KITTLE, Attorneys at Law, Office in Insurance Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

A. L. CLEVELAND. A. J. KITTLE.

JOHN E. MILBURN, Attorney at Law, East Jordan, Mich. 22

W. P. HAYNE, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Office in Davis' building. Prompt attention to all business.

W. J. CHASE, Attorney at Law, Commercial Hotel, Petoskey, Mich.

J. W. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

JOSHUA KEAT, Attorney at Law. Office upstairs Cole Hotel, Petoskey, Mich.

FRANK W. SCOVILLE, Attorney and Solicitor, Patent & Copyright Counsellor.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX. Capital $50,000. Transacts a general banking business. Buy and sell government bonds, real estate and municipal bonds. Loans made on approved security. Interest allowed on time deposits. DETROIT & MACKINAC RAILWAY.

CHURCHES.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening. E. P. LEININGER, pastor.

SEVENTH DAY ADVENTIST CHURCH. Sabbath services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sabbath school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting Tuesday evening. Sabbath School Friday evening. J. FOSS, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

PEERLESS HOOK AND READY FIRE COMPANY meets every and third Thursday evenings of each month, at the engine hall. F. P. LEDGER, Secretary.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. A. GRISLER, M. D., Ingleside.

LUTHER H. D. PARSONS and Surgeon, Office and residence, Mich.

W. O. PARSONS, M. D., Surgeon and Homœopathic physician. Office and residence, Mich. 28

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

BOYNE CITY, GRAND RAPIDS & WESTERN RR. Lands for sale on ten dollar plan. Easy terms and long time. Apply to land commissioner, Boyne City, Mich.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

F. & A. M.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 403, meets Friday evening on or after full moon. Visiting Brothers cordially invited. W. J. CHASE, W. M. J. W. CLARK, Sec.

I. O. O. F.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 261, meets every Tuesday evening, in their hall. Visiting brothers cordially invited. W. J. CHASE, N. G. F. P. LEDGER, Sec.

I. O. G. T.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 241, meets every Saturday evening, in their hall. Visiting members always welcome. MRS. ALICE BARNARD, W. C. T. MRS. ELLA L. CLARK, Secretary.

K. O. T. M.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 292, meets every other Friday evening in Odd Fellows' hall. Visiting Sir Knights always welcome. A. E. BURNETT, Commander. A. B. FORSYTH, Keeper of Records and Finance.

A. O. U. W.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 126, meets every alternate Saturday evening in Odd Fellows' hall. Visiting brothers always welcome. A. B. FORSYTH, M. W. A. E. BURNETT, Recorder.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

Transacting business transacted. Money loaned on real estate at reasonable rates. Short time certificates given; careful attention and courteous treatment to all.

C. L. THOMAS, Cashier. A. B. FORSYTH, Vice President.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also lunches and cigars.

Stage connections. W. S. JOHNSON, Opp. Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

HENRY MILLER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

The house is centrally located, and its accommodations unsurpassed. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only sample room in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Free conveyance for the traveling public. Best accommodations for the Petoskey and Elk Lake trade.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

Rates reasonably reduced and refurbished.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few Eureka sewing machines for sale at ten dollars each. Not worn and have a year yet. EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED D. S. WAY.

Buy your paper and envelopes with your name printed, at O. H. Weed & Co's drug store.

FOR

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

GO TO

Dr. G. W. CROUTER'S DRUG STORE.

Santa Claus' Headquarters.

An Immense Line to Choose From.

MORTGAGE SALE. Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed by Peter Sawmaker, Mary Sawmaker, his wife, parties to the first above named in the premises, to Jerome B. Sawyer, bearing date the twenty-third day of June, A. D. 1891, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of July, A. D. 1891, in Liber 1 of Mortgages, on page 185, on which said mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of fifty-one dollars and forty cents ($51 40), principal and interest, and no proceeding having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, and the attorney for the said mortgagee having elected to foreclose the same, and to pay the debt secured by said mortgage, on Saturday, the fifth day of January, A. D. 1894, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the front entrance of Town Hall, in the village of Charlevoix, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, the undersigned will sell at public vendue, to the highest bidder, the said premises or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the said sum of fifty-one dollars and forty cents, principal and interest, and all legal costs, charges and expenses, including the attorney fee allowed by law, which said premises to be sold are described in said mortgage as follows: The east half (½) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of the southeast one-quarter (¼) of section twenty (20), in township forty (40) north, range seven (7) west, containing forty acres of land according to the United States survey.

Dated November 14, A. D. 1893.

E. M. CLARK, Assignee of mortgage.

CHEVALIER & SPIRE, Attorneys for assignee of mortgage. 18-26

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY

has now found a

Ladies' and Children's

Furnishing Goods,

kindly extended to Elder & Inwood, and will be pleased to inform all the old customers, and gain as many more as possible. Call and see stock.

LIVERY.

The undersigned has purchased the livery formerly owned by him, and is called

Geo. Durance, Manager.

These has been added a new stock of

Horses and Carriages

And a cordial invitation is extended to all old friends and patrons to call and see him whenever they need anything in that line.

GOOD SADDLE HORSES A SPECIALTY WITH THIS STABLE.

J. MILO EATON.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 75 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Journal—By mail, $6.00 per year in advance, postage paid.

Weekly Democrat—$1.00 per year, 75 cents for six months, 40 cents for three months—invariably in advance. Address,

THE DEMOCRAT,

Grand Rapids, Mich.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from nervous debility, premature decay, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will for the sake of suffering humanity send free to all who need it, the recipe and direction for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Sufferers wishing to profit by the advertiser's generosity can address, in perfect confidence, JOHN B. ODGEN, 42 Cedar St., New York.

HALL'S

Catarrh Cure

is Recommended by Physicians!

$100 REWARD PAID IN GOOD!

We manufacture and sell this positive guarantee that it will cure any case, and we will forfeit the above amount if failure in a single instance.

Unlike all other Catarrh remedy, so this action internally, acting upon the blood. If you will thoroughly read the following disease, ask your druggist for it and read the pamphlet around each bottle. If he has not got it, send to us and we will forward immediately. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

Dr. Croutter, Agt., Charlevoix. 26

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

At his store near the bridge.

All kinds of fruit and vegetables in their season. Nuts, candies, pop, ginger ale, etc., always on hand. Call and see. Post-side Bridge St.

ROBERT GRUEN,

Boyne Falls, Mich.,

Watch-maker

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry Repaired. 17

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card in effect October, 1893.

GOING NORTH.

STATIONS.	No. 1.	No. 3.	No. 5.	No. 7.
Cincinnati	lv	9 00am	10 00pm	.....
Richmond	.....	5 05pm	11 00	.....
Winchester	.....	5 27	11 23	.....
Ridgeville	.....	5 32	11 28	.....
Muncie	ar	5 45	11 40	.....
Muncie	lv	5 50	12 00am	.....
Converse	.....	6 16	1 00	8 35am
Kendallville	.....	6 33	1 20	9 00
Sturgis	.....	7 10	2 00	10 05
Vicksburg	.....	7 29	2 21	10 30pm
Kalamazoo	.....	7 55	2 50	11 0
Kalamazoo	lv	7 58	2 55	12 0am
Battle Creek	.....	8 26	3 26	12 30
Grand Rapids	ar	9 30am	4 35	2 35
Ionia	.....	10 45	6 05	4 55
Howard City	.....	11 7	6 32	5 20
Big Rapids	.....	11 45	7 15pm	6 0
Reed City	.....	12 10pm	7 40	6 30
Cadillac	.....	1 10	8 35	7 35
Walton	.....	3 0	10 15	9 35
Cadillac	lv	3 20pm	11 05	6 20
Manistee	ar	5 10	12 45am	8 10
Big Rapids	lv	1 45pm	8 0	7 0am
Paris	.....	2 0	8 20	7 20
Grand Rapids	ar	3 10	9 35	8 35
Grand Rapids	lv	3 20pm	9 40	8 40am
Kalamazoo	.....	4 30	10 50	9 50
Battle Creek	.....	4 57	11 21	10 21
Marshall	.....	5 17	11 42	10 42
Albion	.....	5 30	11 55	10 55
Jackson	ar	6 0	12 30am	11 30
Jackson	lv	6 10pm	12 35	11 35am
Chelsea	.....	6 40	1 0	12 0pm
Dexter	.....	6 50	1 10	12 10
Ann Arbor	.....	7 0	1 20	12 20
Ypsilanti	.....	7 15	1 35	12 35
Detroit	ar	7 50	2 10	1 10
Toledo	ar	10 40	5 15	4 15
Buffalo	ar	3 0am	8 0	7 0

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No. 2.	No. 4.	No. 6.	No. 8.
Buffalo	lv	.....	8 45pm	7 30am
Toledo	lv	.....	8 00	6 0
Detroit	lv	.....	10 00pm	7 35
Ann Arbor	.....	.....	11 0	8 0
Ypsilanti	.....	.....	11 15	8 15
Jackson	ar	.....	11 50	8 50
Jackson	lv	6 40am	12 0m	9 0
Albion	.....	7 0	12 20pm	9 20
Marshall	.....	7 13	12 33	9 33
Battle Creek	.....	7 35	12 55	9 55
Kalamazoo	.....	8 0	1 20	10 20
Kalamazoo	lv	8 5	1 25	10 25am
Vicksburg	.....	8 29	1 50	10 50
Sturgis	.....	8 50	2 10	11 10
Kendallville	.....	9 30	2 50	12 0m
Converse	.....	9 47	3 7	12 17
Muncie	ar	10 10	3 30	12 40
Muncie	lv	10 20am	3 40pm	1 0pm
Ridgeville	.....	10 32	3 52	1 12
Winchester	.....	10 37	3 57	1 17
Richmond	.....	11 0	4 20	1 40
Cincinnati	ar	2 50pm	10 20pm	5 30pm

..... LOCKWOOD, Agent, T. ANDERSON, G. P. A., Grand Rapids, Mich.

John Nicholls

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Our Blades,

WAGON TONGUES,

Shingles, Lath, &c.

Lumber Sawed & Bills Filled

TO ORDER.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand at his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

B. SEE'S BLOCK,

CHARLEVOIX.

By permission of Mr. F. S. Blanchard, engraver, we are able this week to show the above view of Mr. B. See's brick block on the corner of Bridge and Main streets, now occupied by Mr. See as a general store. This block is too well known to our citizens to require any description now; but the work of Mr. Blanchard, as engraver, we desire to call attention to. It will compare favorably with most work done in cities, though Mr. B. claims to be but an amateur. If any other of our citizens desire work of this nature, they should make terms, if possible, with Mr. Blanchard.

Food Fish.

A writer in the Scientific American for Dec. 22, under the head of "Fish culture for Profit," discusses the relative merits of various kinds of fish for stocking rivers, ponds, etc., with the methods of keeping them well fed and plenty, and the profits derived from handling them. As there are localities in this vicinity which may be made productive which are now profitless, perhaps some of our readers may be interested in the means and methods necessary. "Black bass, yellow perch, and pickerel have all been used for stocking ponds, and with more or less of success, but they are all such voracious brutes that they speedily clear the water of every living thing that can swim, including even their own young, and the consequence is that only a very limited supply can be secured from a given amount of space. Their remarkably healthy appetites ruin them for profit. German Carp have also been extensively introduced and their value is beyond question very great. They will doubtless retain a strong hold on popular favor, for they deserve it. But we have that which is decidedly to be preferred, when we are looking for profit." If it is the dollars for which we are looking, "a swamp meadow can turn out more money to the acre from bullheads than the same space will readily pay in any other manner, wet or dry." It is never a large fish, one weighing a pound being much over the average, and in raising them for market, they will afford the greatest profit when not exceeding half a pound. The advantages which they afford over the other fish mentioned, for remunerative cultivation, are that they are perfectly hardy, not liable to disease, thrive to the best advantage in sluggish water, need no care or feeding, live on aquatic plants and insects, and can thus secure abundant food from a small space, multiply rapidly, and are ready for market at the age of a year, which is much earlier than any other fish. The demand for them a small pan fish without bones, is almost unlimited. One man quotes them as selling by the ton at ten cents a pound. His estimate is that ten feet square of pond area will yield annually one ten pounds of fish. On this data an acre will return $1200,—a half or even a quarter of it would satisfy most land owners, especially as the land needed and taken for this purpose is valueless for other uses. The preparation of this pond involves small expense; shallow water, not over four or five feet deep, is best. In some cases a spot can be selected where a dam of but a few rods in length across a stream will be sufficient to overflow from one to two acres to the depth required. The only expense beyond building the dam is to so far smooth the bottom that a net can be dragged over it. It is easy to procure the fish in most localities, and nothing farther is required. It is best to leave them two years, so as to allow the fish to increase and grow. After that they can be taken out at convenience. Nets under six inches should be caught, and a net should be used which will allow the small ones to pass through. They can be sent to market as they are caught, or they can be skinned and packed in boxes ready for use."

We are not well acquainted with Charlevoix county, but have been informed that there are numerous streams and ponds which could be made very valuable that now produce nothing. If such is the case, and this article will be the means of putting any young man on the road to wealth, it will not be altogether fruitless.

If a fish larger than these little bull heads is desired, the carp mentioned above are easily cultivated and grow to six, eight, and ten pounds. Touching the ease of raising, a writer in the Denver Daily News, in mentioning a distribution by the state fish commissioner of Colorado, says: One thousand young fish will fill a quart measure together with the water needed. They are to be placed in any wooden vessel into which a few shovels full of clean gravel has been thrown, and can be fed on any sort of vegetable or animal food, such as is left after meals. After the first few days it is claimed the only care needed will be to change the water once a week. Additional vessels may be provided from time to time to prevent over-crowding. Johnson's cyclopedia says of the carp: It is found in lakes and rivers, prefers still waters, and feeds on aquatic plants, worms, insects, etc. Its length in some cases is two feet or more, but it is generally less than a foot long. It is very tenacious of life, and is said to attain the age of 200 years. The flesh of the carp is highly esteemed as food but it is not a very valuable fish for the angler, because it does not bite freely. It is remarkable for its fecundity, and 700,000 eggs have found in a carp of moderate size.

Replenishing the Lakes.

Seth Green, the veteran fish culturist, suggests, as a plan for replenishing the lakes with whitefish, that a convention of fishermen be called, who shall agree to use no smaller net than a two-inch mesh, and provide for men whose duty it shall be to take the impregnated spawn from the fish and send it to the hatcheries. Should these ideas be adopted, with strict enforcement of rules, he thinks that in a few years the lakes would swarm with whitefish, with little danger of future extermination.

Why waste time and money on that which does no good? Your children have worms and are pale, sleepy, hungry, sleepless, nervous and weak from the presence of worms in the stomach which prevents the food being taken up to nourish the body. Parmelee's Vegetable Worm Candies will dissolve and remove the worms and then all will be well. You cannot do better by your children than to attend to their health. Price 25 cents per box. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co.

A farmer friend has sixty colonies of bees, a fine flock of light Brahma fowls, and a farm of 120 acres. He has two sons, aged thirteen and sixteen years respectively, and the elder boy has entire charge of the bees, of which he is very fond. He runs his sections, extracts the honey, introduces queens, divides his bees, and rears queens with a skill which many a veteran might envy. He is already well known in the city, three and a half miles distant, for his honey, and talks about bees and, quotes authorities in the most intelligent manner. All his honey is sold in one grocery store, and though he has had a good yield this season, and has reaped a fine profit, he cannot fully supply the demand at the store.—American Agriculturalist.

The throat is often diseased on account of catarrh, producing dryness and a constant desire to cough. That disagreeable and the annoyance that is so common in public singers and speakers especially, is relieved at once by Hamilton's Cough Troches, which are prepared from the most approved formula. Do not will not make beautiful sweet voices—sample takes from box of one. Price each 25 cents per box. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

A MONTREAL man sued an artificial leg-maker for damages because the leg will not bend when he tries to kneel in prayer. In consequence of this stiffness of the limb he has suffered greatly in body and spirit. Sad to say, the story of his tribulations had no effect upon the Judge, and he refused him any financial recompense. A maker of prying legs can find a customer in Montreal now.

GEN. FREMONT, historically known as the "Pathfinder," is now living in New York with his noble wife, built well advanced in years, he being over 70. It is intimated that Congress in lands this winter to provide a pension for the General in acknowledgment of his distinguished services in the past. The plan proposed is to have him reinstated as Major-General of the army, and then put on the retired list.

MR. CLAY, of Cairo, N. Y., owned a widow, who would not have him because he was gray. Then he began to use hair dye, and just as he had succeeded in getting his hair turned yellow he heard that the widow had married another. Mr. Clay concluded that life was a failure, and that if he could not attain happiness he desired to end time for him to die. So he drank a bottle of dye and died.—Boston Globe.

IT will be remembered that the patriotic Artemus Ward nobly offered to sacrifice most of his relatives while the late war was in progress. Sergt. Mason has beaten Artemus in this matter. He actually tried to kill his relatives himself. He says that he went into the war and fought against four uncles and twenty-two cousins. If he was as poor a shot then as he was when he drew a bead on Gotham, his relatives had little to fear.

THE Rev. Dr. Deems, of New York, has strongly inveighed against the evil of squeezing each other's hands when shaking hands. He thinks a gentleman need not seize a lady's dainty fingers as though they were made of iron, but should "hold them in a proper manner, and not too long." But there's the rub. What is the proper manner, and how long is too long? Would the Doctor think four hours about right, or would he cruelly step in on a Sunday night and put a stop to the business of courting? What young folks want are specifications.

THE Indians of the reservation in Polk county, Tex., adhere to their ancient customs. When they enter a cotton patch they pick the entire week—and pile the cotton in one enormous heap. On Saturday they select some white man in whom they can confide to weigh all the cotton. After doing this he empties the immense heap into the press, after collecting that amount from the planter he divides it equally among the members of the tribe. Then the planter gives the chosen agent his account against the tribe for provisions furnished, and the agent apportions the expense equally among the Indians, and then collects it pro rata from each. Settlement cannot be effected in any other way. This is the Indians' way, and no other will answer.

THE Berlin police authorities possess an almost complete collection of photographs of living German murderers, forgers, thieves, bigamists and criminals generally, and have found it so useful that they have now decided to make a collection of photographs of the swindlers of other countries. They have therefore communicated with the Detective department at Scotland Yard, the Central Police office in New York, and the Prefecture of Police in Paris, and have begged to be favored with the likenesses of all persons who shall be hereafter convicted of serious crimes in England, the United States and France. They have also asked to be supplied with information as to the aliases, handwriting, and physical characteristics of every criminal, and have offered in return to send photographs and descriptions of the convicts of Germany.

A NEW YORK correspondent reports in the Allgemeine Zeitung an astonishing discovery. He states that in the virgin forests of Sonora, a province of Western Mexico, near Magdalena, a pyramid has been found measuring 4,250 feet at its base and rising to the height of 750 feet. A carriage road winds about this enormous structure from base to summit. The face consists of granite blocks carefully cut and perfectly fitted together. Not far distant stands a hill, which, we are told, is honeycombed with cells of various sizes, all cut out of the solid rock. They are without windows, several are on the same level, and the walls are adorned with fantastic shapes and symbols.

JOHN SMITH is a miser who won't sink if money can keep his nose afloat. He lives in West Jefferson, Ohio. He is a small man, 70 years old, and has the appearance of a tramp. He married when very young. His first wife and two children died early in life. He married again, but soon separated from his second wife, who is now in the poor-house. Swim left the practice of law and became a rag-picker. He is worth $200,000. He hasn't slept on a bed for thirty-five years. He owns several farms, travels in the country picking rags and refuses medicine and medical attendance. When sick he is reticent and unusual. He sleeps out of doors or in barns or sheds wherever night overtakes him. He seldom changes clothing and dresses as tramps. He was going to purchase a valuable farm last spring at a cost of $65,000, but, thinking that some one would rob him when he went to pay for it, he refused to buy it. He is often seen about the streets picking rags from the gutters.

IT is said the four-wheeler of London is doomed. While 170 hansoms cabs were added to the 5,229 already in use, the 3,713 four-wheelers were reduced by 134. England is rather addicted to two-wheeled vehicles, for the reason that the tax is less than on a four-wheeled conveyance. Apart from that, however, the convenience of the two-wheeled rig is becoming generally recognized. In this country there has within late years sprung up a class of cheap two-heeled carriages that have many points to recommend them. They are light, they are in no danger of being upset by a sudden turn of the horse, they can be turned, as it were, on a pivot, they are capital at meeting corners and they are cheap. The American two-wheeler is not modeled after the English village cart or dogcart, in fact the only vehicle that approaches it in ugliness and convenience is a cart used in India and some parts of South Africa. As we come to have better roads in the country there is little doubt but two-wheeled rigs will become more and more popular.

KENTUCKY has been almost as much a mother of Speakers as Virginia of Presidents. Carlisle is the fourth from that State to be called to the chair. No State has furnished more than that number of Speakers, and when the aggregate time of service is considered no other State has so distinguished a record. Henry Clay was the presiding officer of six different Congresses. Another distinguished Kentuckian, Lamb Boyd, presided over two Congresses, and John White over one. The Blue Grass State has also already had one Speakership for eighteen years, and is assured of another term. Since the organization of Congress in 1781 there have been twenty-nine Speakers of the House. Next to Kentucky, Virginia has been represented the oftenest and the longest in the chair, furnishing four Speakers, three of whom were re-elected. Massachusetts has also furnished four Speakers, their terms aggregating ten years. Three Speakers have been chosen from the Pennsylvania and three from the Indiana delegation. Ohio has furnished but one Speaker—Keifer. The occupants of the chair who have served through three or more Congresses have been Nathaniel Macon, of North Carolina, three terms; Henry Clay, of Kentucky, six terms; John Stevenson, of Virginia, four terms; Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania, three terms; James G. Blaine, of Maine, three terms; and Schuyler Colfax, of Indiana, three terms. No Speaker has ever been chosen from Illinois, or from any State beyond the Mississippi. The South has had the chief office-bearer for longer periods than the North. The first Republican to occupy the chair was Nathaniel P. Banks, of Massachusetts, who was elected in 1856, after a contest of two months, on the 133d ballot. The Speakership has seldom proved a stepping-stone to anything higher. But one ex-Speaker, James K. Polk, has ever reached the White-House. Colfax is the only one who has become Vice President, and Blaine the only ex-Speaker who has filled a Cabinet position.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

Baby's Letter.

Here in this casket you may behold
Gems from a more precious to me than gold,
Pearls of the purest, rubies of red,
Diamonds a flame of all colors, "I'm glad,"
And pearl tears—very enough,
Every one precious—hear them sob.
Where memories warm did life lain dead
Through long years, and work cold.

A world of mines, and light, and song,
Such as in fairy tales I belong,
Some part of this baby for, don't you see,
He is just as much as I am he.
To think the darling—you wouldn't laugh—
Ever had been frightened, or sad a day,
Until he discovered, little dimpled head,
And found home to rest on Baby's breast.

He wouldn't tell me, he—sure has not
Been acting once as I do suppose he,
But that's how he let baby cries
Through years—years—years—
Years—years—years—
And twelve days, that I guess are long
To mother cradles that go to graves.
To be stories of children's close caresses,

And what was ever more pitiful than this
Life's close caresses, I ask,
Life's close caresses, and the sunrise
Dawning there, I'm sure
Will not be so glad as the heavens say,
The angel side of my mortal was Lost, found, I mean, and I'm so glad that
On the summer sunset of Paradise
Fairer I think, I shall see my baby.

How Uncle Paul Came Back.

"Please, sir, are you my Uncle Paul?"

A big, brawl-shouldered man, in a warm overcoat and furs, and with general air of importance about him, and a stern, forbidding countenance, came hurrying down the street when a little voice accosted him, and an eager, expectant face lifted up, with parted lips, waiting his reply.

"Get out of my way!" he exclaimed savagely, thinking that some one would rob him when he went to pay for it, he refused to buy it. He is often seen about the streets picking rags from the gutters.

"Oh, it seems as if I had a little sister's playing with me, as I ain't so lonesome when I call myself Cassie."

"Never mind, Cassie," she said hopefully, as the gruff man passed out of sight. "He wasn't Uncle Paul, if he didn't have a mustache, 'cause Uncle Paul wouldn't be so cross to mamma's little girl. I guess we'd better get in this little corner where the wind don't blow so cold, and we can watch for Uncle Paul. How spread and happy poor sick mamma would be if we should find him, wouldn't she, Cassie?"

Presently two or three foppishly-dressed young men came down the street. They were sons of wealthy parents, and had nothing with which to occupy their time, but to spend the money given them for that purpose. They were in high good humor on that bright summer morning, and were laughing and joking merrily as they came near the place where Cassie stood watching the faces of those who passed her with eager wistful eyes.

Suddenly she darted from her place of shelter, and touched the hand of one of the young men in order to attract his attention.

"Are you my Uncle Paul, sir?" she asked.

"Ha, ha! Hal, that is rich," laughed his companion boisterously. "This little chit calls you her Uncle Paul. Give her a quarter to buy her a doll, or you'll never feel the last of it."

The young man colored slightly, then, fumbling in his fob in his pockets, he drew out a silver half-dollar.

"See here, boys," he said, "the baby is almost benefited by my being asked early morning, and I'll donate this for a pair of shoes if you'll do likewise."

"Well! be glad to assist any needy relations of yours," they said, merrily, and three silver half-dollars were placed in Cassie's little lame hands.

"He wasn't your Uncle Paul after all, Cassie," she cried, pitifully, while two or three great round tears slid slowly over the pale thin cheeks and dropped on the silver half-dollar. "I thought he might be Uncle Paul, but his mustache was such a lovely one—I guess Uncle Paul's is bigger."

It was a long time before Cassie dared venture to accost a "gentleman with a mustache" again, for her several repulses had weakened her faith in the "mustaches."

At last she spied two gentlemen walking leisurely down the street. The one had a large, dark beard, the other a black mustache.

"Oh, I'm so glad, Cassie, I do believe that it is Uncle Paul," she said, as she bound forward. A moment later a shy little voice said faintly:

"You are my Uncle Paul, ain't you?"

The gentleman with the black mustache in conversation with his companion, and did not care to be annoyed. He thought the child was asking alms, and without heeding her money was about dropping a silver half-dollar into her hand, when his companion asked in a kindly voice:

"What does the little one want?"

"Oh, mamma, of course, dear!" she said the other; "but I must say that I'm one Christmas as though I intended it."

Cassie's many disappointments had worn the panel for her and she exclaimed, as though her heart would break. Drawing the little one close to him the gentleman with the long beard asked:

"What do you want, my dear?"

"I want my Uncle Paul. Mamma is so sick, ma' were florile poor, an' mamma said this morning that she was just encouraged with little Paul, sittin' to breakfast, an' she prayed for God to send us Uncle Paul, 'cause he would help us may be."

And so you came out to meet him, did you," asked the gentleman kindly, as he bent over to search the child's face. His tones had more than a common interest in them as he spoke.

"No, sir, I didn't 'Spect God would send him right down, 'cause he helped, 'cause mamma told me once that we must pray for what we want most, an' then we must work hard to get it. Mamma can't do anything but pray, 'cause she's sick, an' after she went to sleep I thought I'd come out and find Uncle Paul, and 'spritse her when she works."

"Have you ever seen your Uncle Paul?"

"No, sir. He was mamma's brother when she was a new little girl like me. He went away then and mamma hasn't seen him since."

"Then how did you expect to find him, dear?" He drew both wee little hands into his own warm palms and caressed them gently as he spoke.

"I asked mamma how he looked, an' then I'd know him when I saw him, and she said he had a mustache, and a red face, and a pretty brown coat. She said that I'd surely come back 'cause he promised promises that he could when he went away; but grandma 'has been dead a long time, and there's means left but just mamma and me."

The strange gentleman bent over and kissed the child tenderly.

"Don't wait for me, Mr. Howard," he said to his companion. "I will see you again this afternoon. I must take this little one home to her mother now."

His companion bowed and passed on, wondering what attraction his friend could find in a this-faced beggar child.

"I am going home with you, dear," the gentleman said, as he took the little beggar's hand, turning once more to ask if she wanted to see your mamma. Will you lead the way?"

"Yes, sir! But I haven't found Uncle Paul yet. Oh, there's a man with a mustache—maybe that's him"

"I don't think it is," said her companion, clasping the small hand lightly, as she made a move to dart away from him. "Come to mamma now, and then I'll find Uncle Paul for you."

"He's gone now, and maybe I won't ever find him again," she said, regretfully, watching the corner round which the "mustache" had just vanished.

She then led the stranger to her home, up the long flight of stairs, and as they neared the top the sound of a weak voice, calling, "Cassie, Cassie," in tones of distress, reached their ears.

"It's mamma!" cried Cassie, flying down the dimly lighted hall. "She has missed me."

"Where have you been, Cassie?" asked a feeble voice from the bed.

"I was looking for Uncle Paul; but—

"Jennie, my little sister!"

The tall man with the dark beard came to the bedside and clasped Cassie's mother in his strong arms.

"Paul! Oh, thank God!" she cried joyfully.

"Are you my Uncle Paul?" asked Cassie, incredulously.

"Yes, dear," he answered.

"Let where the mustache?"

"I haven't worn one for years. He then, turned to the sick mother his name to find Cassie, adding:

"I returned to the city only a short time ago, and been to the old home, and there learned of father's and mother's death. I also learned that you married and were living somewhere in this city, but I failed to learn the name of your husband, and I found my search for you would have been unsuccessful but for the little boy who sang, 'are you my Uncle Paul?'"

That evening, in the sick-chamber of fashionable rooms to which Uncle Paul had his dear ones, little Cassie climbed into his lap, and, laying a soft cheek against his bearded one, she said sobbingly:

"I think God must want us to be happy, I went out to find you and helped a little."

"God helps those who help themselves," he said, thoughtfully, "and there is a good deal of truth in the saying, after all." Chicago Advance.

Arctic Monotony.

The arctic explorers in the Jeannette, during the long winter, found the darkness hard to endure. The enforced close companionship made large demands upon their patience and sociability, and every one was possessed with a strong desire to go somewhere." When the sun reappeared, after twenty-one days of absence, each man was found to have a haggard look, owing to the want of exercise and to the steady living by lamplight.

During the next summer the Jeannette remained frozen in the ice-pack. The monotony was terrible. Scarcely anything broke the long days, the weather being to the last almost the same frost, the same dogs, the same icy, that one saw just before leaving one's well in sleep. And with these was the conviction that to-morrow would be the same as today, if not more disagreeable.

At night the silence was so perfect that one standing a little distance from the ship felt inclined to believe that no life existed but his own. Capt. De Long records in his journal, "It is positively dismal. The silence was so painful as to induce me to go back to the cabin, where my own kind could be seen and their voices heard."

Such facts as these indicate that an arctic explorer must not only possess courage but a bountiful supply of hopefulness and nervous vitality.

"Courage!" said Uncle Paul, to Mr. Hunt, meet to say, "was the expression of the impression which an artist would receive of a person who should walk slowly by him every hour. Absence

CURIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC.

MORE than 22,000,000 steel pens are made every week, to the astonishment of living producers in Birmingham England.

TORREATTA, the loftiest of the Sandwich volcanoes, is 14,564 feet high; the summit the temperature is 8. At an altitude of 7,500 feet the region of the trees terminates.

THE best observations indicate the existence of a continuous belt of ice 700,000 miles. Thousands of the observations in the past have been observations of the last land.

BEGINNING, fast readers must have encountered instances of lack of judicious nitrogen on the meat to get a crisper up the desire the round pieces heat having a great lack as a result of texture.

ASPARAGUS is recommended as a poisoning. A tea made of the leaves and medicine, supposed to be the may be taken internally, and the leaves soaked in the cold tea are applied the trouble parts.

SOME one who has tried it says a good plan to burn sulphur is to place it in a tin pan in the middle of the room. The sulphur vapor destroys the germs, which are killed, and injure the furniture, which, if not covered, will fade in the sunshine and fading. The sulphur vapor also destroys the odors, which, if not removed, will injure the furniture and fading. In many cases it may be taken internally, and the leaves soaked in the cold tea are applied the trouble parts.

SOME one who has tried it says a good plan to burn sulphur is to place it in a tin pan in the middle of the room. The sulphur vapor destroys the germs, which are killed, and injure the furniture, which, if not covered, will fade in the sunshine and fading. In many cases it may be taken internally, and the leaves soaked in the cold tea are applied the trouble parts.

World Settle It Himself.

A "Clergyman" writes to an English paper: "I am glad to see your article upon the omission of the word 'obey' in the marriage service. Such a point of interest as this omission is used to injecting daily three drops of 1 per cent. solution of the acid treatment causes the tumor to stop and decrease in size. In about a month the dead tissue is thrown off and the tumor disappears. No carmine or iron the cancer itself has been cured from this remedy.

WHEN a Hindoo or Burmese says he is married he is only married as he is married to the seventh degree. All his personal acquaintances and his posterity. It though his posterity. It though his posterity. It though

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

"Yes," said Miss Penn, "I rejected Mr. Hogg. Nice fellow, but I couldn't have the announcement of my marriage appear in the papers under the headline 'Hogg Penn.'"—Ex.

Eliza J. Palmer treasurer of Emmet county, has paid to the county the sum of $2,581.11 in full settlement of his indebtedness which includes all expenses to which the county has been put, as well as the deficiencies.

The fuel, wheat, corn, beans, potatoes, garden sauce, meat, milk, butter, eggs, poultry and sundry other farm products, used in the family, are as much a part of the farmers income as is the cash he receives for whatever he may sell in the market.—N. W. Farmer.

The report that D. R. Locke, (Nasby) of the Toledo Blade, has gone to Maine to investigate and determine whether prohibition prohibits, is a step in the right direction. If there is whisky to be had in Maine either for love or money Locke will find it.—Evening News.

Theatres were burned in Cleveland, Chicago, and St. Louis last Saturday night. In the latter place the entire department of the city were at one fire, and the loss aggregates $200,000. About the same hour, a Catholic convent at Belleville, Ill., burned and 1,500 young ladies were suddenly turned out into the extreme cold, many of them in their night clothes.

Our exchanges generally regard the decision of the supreme court in regard to the Detroit News as outrageous, and the fact that the News maintains its large circulation in spite of bitter competition, also proves that it is a paper for, and appreciated by, the people. Whether it be a slanderous sheet or not, it is just what the people want and are willing to pay for.

Whiskey causes murders unnumbered, sends scores of people to our poor houses, proves the ruin of tens of thousands of men every year—and yet we are told saloons are a benefit. The man who can contemplate the direct work of whiskey and then say a saloon is a benefit, either is very near sighted or has a "policy stern" in the matter. Saloons are a curse even to their owners.—Ex.

It is stated that at a recent meeting of the Allegan county greenbackers Mr. John M. Potter was present and made a bitter speech against any further combination with the democratic party. Is this the same John M. Potter that the democratic editor of this city recently helped to elect city assessor for the term of two years at a salary of $900 per annum?—Lansing Journal.

Every farm in this new country, if ordinary improvements are being made, is constantly increasing in value. This increase is money made and is a permanent and safe investment. If farmers will look back a few years they will almost invariably find their farms have largely increased in value. Think of this, farmers, when you are despondent at not "getting along" faster.—N. W. Farmer.

Are the times really as hard as we try to make ourselves believe? We are confident if complaining farmers will compare their present condition with some former periods in their history they will see that there is a marked contrast, and that they have been much worse off than they now are. The fact is we are too much inclined to forget the troubles of the past and magnify the difficulties of the present.—N. W. Farmer.

Discussing the question of contracting prison labor, the Frankfort Express offers the following suggestions: We believe the prison officers should be put at work but not in a manner to come into direct competition with our skilled mechanics. It is a fact that prison labor does largely interfere with skilled labor in those branches of manufacturing in which prison labor is employed. Wagons, chairs and other articles come under this class. Some of the most experienced mechanics in the state are in our state prison. If all available prison labor were set to breaking stones with which to improve the roads a direct benefit will be rendered to the state and there would be less crime. The same is true of our county jails. Many a man commits some act in the late fall that will insure him a good home and plenty to eat during the winter with nothing to do. No prison labor should be farmed out to contractors.

The selection of Chicago for the holding of the eighth republican national convention next June, makes that city's record four out of the eight held since the party organization. In 1860, Abraham Lincoln; in 1868, Ulysses S. Grant, and in 1880, James A. Garfield received their nominations in the great city by the lake. It is a melancholy reminiscence that the first and the last of the illustrious trio nominated there, died in office at the hand of the assassin.

Referring to the probable extension of the Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad the Grand Rapids Eagle says: This road, stretching across the state from southeast to northwest, should be induced to run through Isabella, Clare, Missaukee, Kalkaska, Antrim and Charlevoix counties. It would afford them a direct eastern outlet besides furnishing a strong inducement to the settling and development of all the country tributary to its line. Seasonable action and a liberal contribution to the enterprise may secure the desired extension.—Kalkaskian.

A writer in the Kansas Farmer says: "In estimating the farmer's profits, he is apt to overlook a great many things which he does not pay any value on. The writer of this was very much surprised once, when he had to pay a farmer for a small quantity of butternilk. We had never before thought about butternilk having any value, though we were getting this particular lot for nine. How many farmers count the value of the apples, cider, or potatoes they have in their cellars, or the canned and preserved fruits, and the jellies and jams in their pantries? A thousand and one things are about the place that are useful, very useful, and would cost a good deal of money if they were from merchants, that in the farmer's books are not written down at all."

For the week ending Dec. 29, 1883, the reports to the state board of health indicate that pneumonia greatly increased, that inflamation of the kidney, whooping cough, diarrhea, intermittent fever, and influenza, increased, and that rheumatism, consumption, and remittent fever decreased in area of prevalence. At the state capital the prevailing winds during the week ending Dec. 29, were southwest; and, compared with the preceding week, the temperature was considerably higher, the absolute humidity slightly more, and the day and the night ozone less. Including reports by regular observers and others, diphtheria was reported present during the week ending Dec. 29, and since, at 10 places, namely, Adrian township, Bridgeport, Delta, Detroit, Grand Rapids, Isabella, Kalamazoo, Monroe, Otisville, Pointe aux Barques, Port Huron, Sebewaing, Ubly, and Unionville; scarlet fever at 17 places, Adrian township, Coldwater, Colfax, Colon, Detroit, Eveley, Grand Rapids, Isabella, Kalamazoo township, Kalamazoo city, Monroe, Manistee, Medina, Oxford, Orleans, Roxand, Selma; Measles at 7 places, Bridgeport, Cedar Springs, Grand Rapids, Gaines, Hudson, Monroe, and Roxand.

The manufacturers of glass at Pittsburg, Penn., having locked the workmen out of their factories, are importing glass from Europe to fill orders from their customers. They are doing this and paying about 50 per cent. duty on the imported glass, rather than pay the wages to their workmen which they claimed, only a few months ago, the tariff would enable them to pay. While this is going on some 3,000 men in Pittsburg alone are lying idle, and the consumers of glass are paying 50 per cent. more than they would have to pay if there was no tariff. The whole matter sums up as follows: The workmen are out of employment and wages, the consumers are paying an exorbitant price for glass, and the manufacturers are making money by importing and selling foreign goods. What blessed fraud protection is! How chuckingly it protects American industry! Idle workmen, manufacturers selling foreign glass at a profit, and the users of window glass compelled to pay 50 per cent. more than it is worth—that is the way the swindling tariff works! It is very evident that protection does not protect the workingmen.—Jackson Patriot.

A Peculiar Case of Protection.

The urgent necessity of protecting the American infant industry against foreign pauper labor, and particularly against the foreign labor of Great Britain, is againtly illustrated by the case of the Lamb Knitting Machine, manufactured at Chicopee Falls, Mass. There is a general tariff of 45 per cent on all machines, and a special tariff of 45 per cent on knitting machines. This tariff, like all the rest in the list, is laid for the purpose of enabling the Massachusetts manufacturer to hold the home market against the knitting machines made by pauper labor in Europe.

We have before us now two price-list circulars issued by the Lamb Knitting Machine Co. One of these is for the American market, the other for the British. The company sells a No. 10 machine in Detroit for $200, and in London, England, in the midst of the pauper labor against which our tariff protects it, for $131.25. The American laborer, for whose benefit the tariff is laid on, can purchase a No. 9 machine for $175, while the British pauper, against whom the tariff ingeniously discriminates, need only pay $120 for the same machine.

The machines sold in England for $131.25 and $120 respectively, are made in the shops at Chicopee, Mass., with the machines sold in America for $200 and $175, by the same labor, of the same materials and at the same cost.

The advantages of the arrangement to the American laborer are obvious.—Evening News.

SUGGESTIONS OF VALUE.

A BIT of economy is to save the peel of oranges; dry it, and grate it for flavoring mince pie and orange cake, and custard, also. If it is dried properly, and is kept in a dry closet, there is no danger of its becoming musty.

TO CLEAN oil or grease spots from carpets, use fullers earth and water; spread thickly, cover with paper, and let it remain two days; brush off, and if not removed, make another application. If haste is required, use benzine.

A TEASPOONFUL of borax put in the last water in which clothes are rinsed will whiten them surprisingly. Found by borax we it will dissolve easily. This is especially good to remove the yellowness from flannels.

A SIMPLE and effectual remedy for bedbugs is to wash the bedstead with a strong decoction of tobacco. Two applications are said to be sufficient to destroy the pests.

TO PREVENT a cut loaf of cake from drying, place a saucer filled with water on the plate with the cake, and cover all with a tin pail. The cake will be as moist as when first baked.

BOILED HAMS are much nicer if allowed to stand in the water in which they are boiled until cold. The meat does not then turn black, as it dry out when taken from the water. It is good, consequently there is less waste, keeping it cut for the table. It always remember to remove the lid of the kettle so that the steam may escape.

The occasion for the domestic remarks of the household assistant are the views the manufacturers of the steel feather and firearm, but recently cleaned at great expenditure of time and energy, will at least be partially removed if a mixture of powdered and sifted emery and olive oil is used. An application now and then, followed by polishing with soft leather, will keep them in a highly reflective condition.

HANDSOME table covers are made of alternate squares or half squares of basket flannel and of velveteen. One made of two shades of brown is very pretty, and one of brown and green color is part cularly effective. The spread should be lined, it is not necessary that the entire lining should be of expensive material; unbleached factory cloth will answer, providing that the facing was clean. No border is required, but, if one prefers to have it, this should be of velveteen, and the facing of a contrasting color. If the blocks are neatly put together, it is not worth, as a rule, to spend time in the spread; but of course to each person's circumstances according to the taste and means of the maker.

As old black bunting dress may be made to serve a further period of usefulness by being renovated and made a petticoat. To dust shakes out of bunting with so little effort of the wearer that it cannot seem to be popular year after year. Rip the dress up, select the finest looking, buy 6 cents worth of soap bark at a drying store, let it stand in water until dissolved. If it is the preferred; if not, you will be obliged to let it soak, and then steep it for a few minutes. Put your bunting in enough lukewarm water to cover it, and turn the preparation in, rinse it up and down until the cloth is saturated with them, rinse it in clear water, which should be lukewarm also. The effect upon the goods is remarkable; it cleanses and restores. Black goods of various kinds may be so used in the same way.

Provision Market.

RETAIL PRICE TO CONSUMERS.

The question frequently comes from parties in other states who receive sample copies of the JOURNAL, "What is the cost of living in Charlevoix?" As a partial answer to this question, we give the following figures as an average, and may add to the list in the future:

FLOUR, per bbl, $3.00@5.00.
BUCKWHEAT FLOUR, per cwt, $3.00.
CORN MEAL, per cwt, bolted $2.00, unbolted, $1.60.
HAY, per ton, $10@12.
OATS, per bu, 32c.
GROUND FEED, per cwt, $1.50.
APPLES, per bu, $1.00.
POTATOES, per bu, 25@30c.
ONIONS, per bu, $1.00.
BUTTER, per lb, 26@30c.
EGGS, per doz, 30@32c.
HONEY, per lb, 20c.
LARD, per lb, 12@14c.
MEAT, beef steak, 20@25c; pork steak, 20@25c; mutton, 20@25c; sausage, 15c; ham, 18c; shoulders, 12c.
TALLOW, 06@07c.

How Screws Are Threaded.

Screw threads are "originated" in the lathe usually. All lathe turning, with regular—constant—feed of the turning tool, is screw cutting, or threading; the tool cuts a spiral around a revolving cylinder.

It is evident, therefore, that by increasing the speed of the feed relative to that of the revolving cylinder, and moving the point of the cutter properly, shaped, a screw thread would result, instead of a paring off of the entire surface of the cylinder. All inspection winding or working screws, as those for fastening on machine tools, are formed in this way, and large numbers, also, of ordinary machine screws, which when once sealed, are expected to remain in place until the machine or implement of which they form a part is worn out.

Wood screws, as screws for fastening wood to wood, metal to wood, etc., are threaded in a similar manner, the thread being cut from the solid by a single cutter removing the material between the threads.

Large numbers of screws are made

"I OWE SO MAN A DOLLAR."

BY CHARLES F. SUTHAN.

Oh, do not cry, my own dear wife,
The cause of our next-door neighbor,
But tell me still how you managed
And cheerfully follow my labor.
You must know the list of those little debts,
Thus never been our haunting curse,
To pay this night; so we'll lock up forth
And make hands with the world to-morrow.
"Tis a debtor is not a shame-faced due,
With a conscience void of offence within,
While I am a king (yet you a queen,
For we owe no man a dollar.

Our neighbor you saw to his coach to-day,
Will his wife and her flaunting daughter,
Who sat down at our cheerless board
To a very scanty repast, I fear.
I saw that the tear-drop stood in your eye,
Though you tried your best to conceal it;
Your woman's heart, I know, ached for them,
And you could not help but feel it.
But knowing how that our cupboard's bare
You turned my neck from the collar,
Which I am a king (yet you a queen,
For we owe no man a dollar.

The neighbor whose show has dazzled your eyes
In fact is a worthless debtor;
I pity the old, from my very heart,
And I wish that his lot was better.
For he has sacrificed honor and conscience,
For his daughter's pride and pleasure;
Will live in sight, though rain should come,
So he goes like a little to the slaughter.
But he feels it tighter every day,
That terrible debtor's collar;
Oh, what would he give, could he say with us
"I owe no man a dollar?"

You seem amazed, but I'll tell you more;
Within the last few days
Smoking along with a traitorous jar,
As if a friend had been him,
Yet he dare from a very worthy man,
Who, I believe, is a real friend of mine,
Whom I called to name and forced to say,
Though he said he was not at leisure,
He lend my best friend—I told him so.
"I'll go to find my neck from the collar;
They I shall be heard as I rattle and sing,
"Now I owe no man a dollar."

Ah, how rich quite do you feel the force
Of the truths I've been repeating;
I know that a downright honest heart
In that gentle breast was beating;
Tomorrow I'll use with a giant's strength
To follow my daily labor.
Hope, and I'll throw the debt quickly away
For our comfort and peace of mind;
And we'll pray to the time when all shall be free
From the weight of the debtor's chain,
When he who owed—the debtor, anyone,
Now I owe no man a dollar.

"THE STAGE WAITS."

"I will drink the toast," said Monsieur Grattin. "Our noble profession, this lyric art." I have no great fancy for your gin, but I will drink the toast in the humor of your cemetery." He was on his legs at this time, and bowed forward left and right before his drank, so as to include all the company under his condescending compliance in pledging the art to which he belonged in a product of England.

"Hear, hear, hear!" cried several voices cheerfully. The Frenchman emptied his glass and sat down with a look of profound satisfaction.

They were all men present—a dozen—and they all appeared in the very best humor and spirits. They were seated in the dining-room of James Walford, a professional singer, and the occasion of the meeting was to commemorate Walford's signature to an agreement with the lessee of the Cremona theater. A few days ago the document had been duly completed: Walford was to have £20 a week, the largest salary he had yet reached, and was to create the leading tenor part in a new comic opera. To be sure, the Cremona was not a first-class theater, but Walford was glad to get a leading part anywhere, and £20 a week was a great advance upon £10, which he had been formerly earning in a subordinate part.

Walford himself was hardly as glad as his friends, for he was the best natured, best tempered, kindest hearted tenor that ever lived, and all his friends wished him well. There were other tenors who wish made those who liked him, glad of his success. A few months ago he had lost a young wife, to whom he was devotedly attached, and he was left a widower with an only child, a boy of 4 years old. Now that his wife was gone, this boy was the very apple of his eye. He took the child with him wherever he might, and when he came home, whether it was early or late, his first act was to visit the boy. Those who knew him best said it was well he had the child to center his affections on, for otherwise they feared his reason might give way.

He was not one of those who wear their hearts upon their sleeves. He was made of stubborn stuff. But then all knew that when he married his late wife he had given her the love of his whole nature, and that the very quiet, cose of his manner, upon her death, meant a stubborn nature terribly crushed. To one or two of his most intimate friends he had said confidentially that if anything happened to his boy he should not care to live.

One of the pleasantest things in connection with the present social meeting was that M. Grattin had come, and shown himself most cordial and agreeable. Everyone regarded this as exceedingly good on his part, for it was known to all that the choice of a tenor for the Cremona Theater lay between him and Walford. Thus he had come, if were, to signalize the triumph of his rival over himself.

M. Grattin was a man of medium height, black-haired, sallow, with dark brown eyes, a slightly aquiline nose and good figure. He was a strikingly-handsome man. His manners were refined and gentlemanly, and the only objection Englishmen found to him was that he seemed to be anxious to show off his politeness in small things at the expense of sincerity in greater. Thus it happened that, although the men present in Albany lodge, Canonbury, that night greeted his arrival on the cordially, and told him he was a dead fellow for coming, next morning, when they thought more quietly over the matter, they agreed it was only what was to be expected from so polite and courteous a man.

It was but natural that, under the circumstances of the death of Walford's wife, his curly-headed little boy Freddy should be made much of by the Bohemian friends of his father. For a time no one came to the house without bringing him some little toy or sweetstuff; and if the boy had not a very good disposition and a gay and airy manner, which made him take the gifts with the laughter of delight rather than the gravity of greed, he would have run a fair chance of being hopelessly spoiled.

Albany lodge was a much more modest house than one might suppose from the name. For, taking the times the lodge meetings with the times he had not, Walford could not hitherto count on earning much more than £300 a year. During his wife's time she had had a general servant for the house, while she herself looked after the boy. But, upon the death of his wife, Walford having no women relative who could take her place, dismissed the general servant and hunted up his old nurse, Martha Grove.

She was now at least 60 years of age, and of course nothing like as active as she had once been. But he knew he could rely on her to do justice to his boy, and that was the great consideration in his heart then. When she came to stay with him, he said to her with all the earnestness he was capable of:

"Martha, I am not particular about the house. I shall not want you to do much for myself. If you will just keep the little place only, and get me some thing simple to eat and drink when I want it, I shall be quite content. But I am particular about the boy. He must not let him get into harm of any kind. He is all now have in the world, and if any great harm came to him I should break my heart."

The old woman promised, and kept her promise faithfully during the time that she had been with him.

At last the great night was at hand. Walford was full of spirit and confidence. The rehearsals had been most satisfactory. Everyone connected with the theater had complimented him upon his singing and acting in the part, and the whole company were in the very best of humor, for the belief was general that the opera would run a hundred nights, at least.

It was a dreary, cold, damp, disheartening evening, when Walford prepared to leave his home for the theater. Some months ago, when his wife died, he had had an engagement, but it was now two months since his latest appearance in public.

"Now, Martha," said he on leaving, "you'll be king of the castle while I'm away. I shall not be back till quite late, midnight. You need not sit up for me. I shall get my supper in town. It's time you cut it, for Freddy to go to bed?" He took the boy in his arms and kissed him fondly, and stroked his brown curls, and called him his Fred, his little man, his fine boy. Then added: "I think, Martha, in honor of the occasion, I must give Freddy a shilling."

The boy clapped his hands with delight, and laughed. He never had had a whole shilling before. Pennies of course often came his way, and although he had no definite idea of the exchange power of a shilling, he knew they were much greater than those of a penny.

The father handed the boy a shilling, and having kissed him again and again lingeringly, rose with a sigh and said to Martha: "Now! take good care he gets into no trouble while I'm away. The safest place for him is in bed. Put him to bed, Martha, at once, there's a good soul."

She promised to do so, and he left the house, got into an omnibus, and made his way as quickly as possible to the Cremona.

Here all was bustle and excitement. Everyone who was anyone was in it. By the time he had dressed he was told that the house was filled crammed, from top to bottom, and that from the gallery where it was possible to book seats they had been turning money away. Everyone behind was in the best of good humor, and he himself felt more elated than on any other occasion since his wife's death.

If this piece were a hit, and he a success in it, his upward progress in his profession would be certain. He should not only be able to live in comfort, but to save up money for his boy, and for the time when that most delicate of all properties, a tenor's voice, ceased to have a market value. He still lacked of 30, and with care he might calculate on twenty years' lease of his voice. Supposing his voice lasted twenty years and this opera gave him a command in the market, in those twenty years he could save enough money to insure his old age against want and to provide handsomely for his boy.

He did not come on very early in the first act. He felt in no way nervous. He never was in better voice and the part suited him perfectly. What more could any tenor desire?

There was, of course, an under-study to his part. Mr. Grattin was the under-study, and, singular to say, he did not arrive in the theater before the curtain went up. This was greatly improper. For, supposing any accident had happened to Walford, there would have been lovely time for Grattin to dress and make up from the moment the bell rang until the leading tenor was required on the stage. Grattin had belonged to the Cremona company for a considerable time, and during that time had always sung second or third tenor parts. He had been paid 2 guineas a week, and for a while there had flouted before him the hope that he might be promoted to a front place with a salary of £20. This hope had been dispelled when Walford got the engagement, and now he, Grattin, had no part at all, and no chance of any, at once during the present run, unless the unique had put his clothes. Wild mysteries upon mysteries were those! Grattin knew, although it was 9 o'clock in the morning, Walford refused to leave the room, and his friend, who had stayed with him loyally all the time, set off to search of some refreshment. He came back very shortly, and unprovided as Walford was, he could not but see that some new and startling surprise had overtaken his friend. He asked hastily what it was.

"I don't think I ought to tell you, Walford, but if I don't some one else will in a few minutes. There was a bad break down at the Crescent last night."

"I knew there was, and I was the cause of it," said Walford, sadly. "Just why can I blame me? Look at this. Where is my boy?"

"I don't mean you, Walford, but Grattin. He fell on the stage in a faint in the middle of the second act, and he dared not go on. They say he's seriously ill. In fact, the doctors think he can't recover. The papers say there is something wrong with his heart."

"I am very sorry to hear it," said Walford. "Poor Grattin! the sight of my house in flames, and the bad luck that my little one had perished, and not having to dress and go on in a comic part, was too much for him."

While the two men were speaking, a third man came up and said: "The police tell me one of you is Mr. Walford. I have a note for Mr. Walford."

When the owner of the tunnel house had read it, he turned to his companion and said: "It is from poor Grattin. He asks me to come to him at once for my sake, or I may never see me again. He lives quite close. I will not be half an hour. Will for me."

Walford found Grattin exhausted, but able to speak fluently. "The doctors say that I may go at any moment. I will not waste a word. I have been unmeasurably unjust to you. I want you to forgive me if you can, if you will. I was jealous of you. I made my mind quite destroy you if I could. The whole plot was mine. I got a woman to decoy your servant away. I set fire to your house—

"And the boy—the boy" whispered the father, pale as death.

"Is sleeping there." He pointed to a door leading off the room in which he lay. "I used chloroform on a handkerchief with him, and then brought him here. He is safe—open the door and look. I shall never sing the part. I had a better voice than you, but I wasn't as good a man. Forgive me and let me die in peace with all on earth, since there is no hope of my gaining peace hereafter. I have earned damnation, but I did not kill the boy. Mercy! mercy, James Walford! Bark! There is your boy's voice. Is it not sweet enough to your ears this morning to take away your anger? Hark! That is not the voice of your boy. That is the call boy, Monsieur Grattin, the stage waits. Ready?"

And with this word Monsieur Grattin answered his Last Call.—Belgravia.

An Aged Cigarette Smoker.

The old chopt is still standing in a fair state of preservation, and for the daily services of the San Gabriel parish, and there are in its near neighborhood a few crumbling adobe hovels left, the only remains of the once-populous and opulent mission. In one of these lives a Mexican woman, 82 years old, who for more than half a century has washed and mended the priests' garb, repaired the robes and renovated the vestments of San Gabriel. She is worth crossing the continent to see, all white from head to foot, as if bleached by some strange gamma-ray, white hair, white skin, blue eyes faded nearly to white; white cotton clothes, ragged and not over clean, yet not a trace of color in them; a white linen sunbonnet, decorately embroidered by herself, always tied loosely around her throat. She sits on a low box, leaning against the wall, with three white pillows at her back, her feet on a cushion on the ground; in front of her another box, on this a lacemaker's pillow, with knotted fringe stretched on it; at her left hand a battered copper culdron holding hot coals to warm her fingers and light her cigarettes. A match she will never use; and she has seldom been without a cigarette in her mouth since she was six years old.—H. H." in the Century.

Looking for Her Son.

A woman has just been hunting through the Commercial for a son whom she had supposed to be dead for many years. While living at Hartford many years ago she quarreled with her husband, who spirited her baby away. The couple went to the West, and the mother was told that the child was with friends and that in a few years she might come for it. Then they separated, and the mother supposed the boy died until she came to a relative of mation that he was alive. The woman was very poor, but she worked from this clew until the story was unravelled. The boy was found, when about 4 months old, under a tree, and adopted by a substantial farmer. But he was really a lad when the mother gained this information.

How to Enforce the Laws.

Attorneys and Judges can do more than any other persons in making our laws and judicial system respected. What respect can our people have for our legal methods and machinery when they see the ends of justice defeated by professional skill and professional tricks, and those who break the laws acquainted? It is high time to begin a thorough reform in this respect, and the lawyers have greater opportunities than any other class of citizens to do it.—Lowell Citizen.

"Are the cloud wedded the shadows," sings a poet. Sort of a bigger-mist, eh?

"I say, Brown, that dog walking on three legs must be good at mathematics." "How so?" "Why, just see how he multiplies by four gents down three and carries one.

A LOS ANGELES paradise has raised a complaint against the fact that two children use a hat rack for a cradle. This may seem very wonderful in the rural districts, but in this country we know four full-grown policemen have been found asleep on a single beat.—New York News.

IS looking over an old magazine we find a reference to the importance of a public watering place in 1769. As our readers will perceive, the lines are not inapplicable at the present time:

Your three Nereus, two or three Tyns;
Your Ladies Lodging, two or three Inns;
Your Coffee-house, two or three Beaus;
Two or three Lovers, arranged in pairs;
Two or three Ladies losing their hearts;
And two or three Squires pursuing the wives;
Two or three Musicians, and one or three fiddles;
Two or three Dancers, all frisk from Change alike;
Two or three Clerks, with their Sunns and Nieces;
Two or three Beauties, full-dressed for the mess;
And as many Old Women, almost quite out of season.

His Reputation Was Spoiled.

Doctor—And how do you feel this morning, my poor fellow?

Sufferer—Much better in most ways, but I am afraid I won't mend very fast; I worry too much.

Doctor—You have nothing to worry about. You will not lose any of your limbs, and the railroad company can be made to pay heavy damages.

Sufferer—I know that; but just think of the humiliation!

Doctor—The humiliation?

Sufferer—Yes; I was always considered a man of energy and activity, but now my reputation is ruined. No one will want to employ a man who was so lazy as to get run over by an accommodation train.—Philadelphia Call.

Railroads Ten Miles Apart.

I asked a wealthy farmer who is a heavy stockholder in many railroad lines and also a farmer, if he thought there was room for another railroad, competition coming. Said he: "I have expressed the opinion for the last fifteen years that a State as rich, for example, as Iowa, where I lived a good while, could support railroads ten miles apart, and I see reason every day to confirm my judgment. I mean that, when the land is settled as thickly as it should be for the character of the soil, railroads ten miles apart can get all the traffic they want!"—Guth, in New York Tribune.

HUMOR.

THE horse prefers to dine at the table d'oat.

THE first weather report—Thunder.

CIRCUMCISE music is not difficult to a choir.

NOT leveled by love—The rank of an onion.

"I TELL the Bill," said Willie when he got into his mother's preserve closet. "And I feet the Bill," remarked papa, overhearing the soliloquy.

"WE have struck smoother road, haven't we?" asked a passenger of a conductor on an Illinois railway. "No," replied the conductor, "we have only run off the track."

THERE is a town on a Missouri railroad called Coming. It is so called because passengers are often in doubt whether the town is moving toward them or the train toward the town.

ALWAYS a tender heart,
He lives ever snowy white,
And every time his heart would move
It from his wife's side.
—New York Post.

"WHAT is true bravery?" asks a New York paper. It is going to the door yourself when you don't know whether the caller is a dear friend, a bill-poster or a man with a bill.—Philadelphia News.

"Can the Old Love?" is the title of a novel. That's generally the way of it. They can the old love as soon as it becomes the least bit old and they forget to keep, while something a little fresher is brought out for daily use.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

LITTLE Mary, who has just returned from Wells, is lamed in consequence of the Indians, having visited a reservation while on her travels. She says that "wigwams are as good as houses for them to live in, and they answer all intents and purposes."—Boston Courier.

"COME away from that straw stack, chile," called a negro woman to her son. "Fust thing yer know yerll hab the lazy fever. Dum yer put none of dat straw in yer mouf."

IT is a mean wretch who will style drops a hair switch in a car loaded with women, and then a smile as he sees every woman make a grab for the back of her head when she notices it.

The fellow at the other end of the telephone wire may be perfectly sound and healthy, but the man at the end should reflect, as he listens, that his business is in charge of a "receiver."—Pittsburgh Telegraph.

WHEN the hired girl was asked to put an extra plate on the table she said she wasn't much of an athlete, but she could work an example in simple addition like that.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

"Do you think she's pretty?" he cried. "Yes, I think she is really pretty well over that girl. Then why don't you go and do the gallant? Well, to tell the truth, I'm just here. None of the other fellows go well over her at all, and there's no credit in winning her out.—Lowell Citizen.

"ARE the blind wedded the shadows," sings a poet. Sort of a bigger-mist, eh?

"I say, Brown, that dog walking on three legs must be good at mathematics." "How so?" "Why, just see how he multiplies by four gents down three and carries one.

A LOS ANGELES paradise has raised a complaint against the fact that two children use a hat rack for a cradle. This may seem very wonderful in the rural districts, but in this country we know four full-grown policemen have been found asleep on a single beat.—New York News.

IS looking over an old magazine we find a reference to the importance of a public watering place in 1769. As our readers will perceive, the lines are not inapplicable at the present time:

Your three Nereus, two or three Tyns;
Your Ladies Lodging, two or three Inns;
Your Coffee-house, two or three Beaus;
Two or three Lovers, arranged in pairs;
Two or three Ladies losing their hearts;
And two or three Squires pursuing the wives;
Two or three Musicians, and one or three fiddles;
Two or three Dancers, all frisk from Change alike;
Two or three Clerks, with their Sunns and Nieces;
Two or three Beauties, full-dressed for the mess;
And as many Old Women, almost quite out of season.

His Reputation Was Spoiled.

Doctor—And how do you feel this morning, my poor fellow?

Sufferer—Much better in most ways, but I am afraid I won't mend very fast; I worry too much.

Doctor—You have nothing to worry about. You will not lose any of your limbs, and the railroad company can be made to pay heavy damages.

Sufferer—I know that; but just think of the humiliation!

Doctor—The humiliation?

Sufferer—Yes; I was always considered a man of energy and activity, but now my reputation is ruined. No one will want to employ a man who was so lazy as to get run over by an accommodation train.—Philadelphia Call.

Railroads Ten Miles Apart.

I asked a wealthy farmer who is a heavy stockholder in many railroad lines and also a farmer, if he thought there was room for another railroad, competition coming. Said he: "I have expressed the opinion for the last fifteen years that a State as rich, for example, as Iowa, where I lived a good while, could support railroads ten miles apart, and I see reason every day to confirm my judgment. I mean that, when the land is settled as thickly as it should be for the character of the soil, railroads ten miles apart can get all the traffic they want!"—Guth, in New York Tribune.

THE "GREAT UNRUFFLED."

A Snappy List of the Average Hotel Clerk.

"It is a sad a hard hotel I give it I'm and a stranger with an easy, world-wise air he leaned against the marble center of a lending hotel.

"What's that, sir?" asked the obliging clerk, with an air of interest.

"I just remarked," said the stranger, politely, as he felt off and lighted a cigar, "that you kept a tough customer."

"Oh," said the clerk, in the most serene and affable manner, "that was no more particular than any other—I do not increase the sum of your happy days."

"Nothing at all sir present," was the response.

"Then why do you complain?" said the clerk, with the air of a man whom nothing could annoy.

"I don't complain, particular, except that I guess, what I said about it. It's a bad place that don't give one more than he gets, and I remember to see it like the place."

"Well, sir, we had," said the clerk, smilingly to his wife as painfully, "it takes a great head to run a big hotel and prevent from being a big fool. You can stop it, but you can't. It's no use trying. It's the same in the world, do things take their own course, while man is the best you can do. You see a man, and he looks good, and you do shoulder as if to pin the fact there, and he proves a rotten.

"This to hear a man talk, but I guess I'm no fool if I love you anything, and like a talk," said the guest in an elated, dog-tired sort of way.

"What I love this house? My dear kids never more is to him, isn't it? I this whole company have to do with the fellows, and I'm a fool, and I'm a fool, and I'm a fool

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Jan. 10, 1884.

From the National Capital.

Notes and Interviews by a Journal Correspondent.

Keifer's position as leader of the republican side is being contested by Hiscock and Kelley, and the recent snub the ex-speaker has experienced at the hands of the very men who gave him their complimentary vote at the opening of congress, for his old position, has sent Mr. Keifer to his home in Springfield, Ohio, in quite a surly mood. A prominent republican member said to me yesterday:

"Mr. Keifer should know that the harmony and success of our party demands his retirement as a leader, and if he will not recognize this fact and act upon it, we shall be compelled to treat him in a manner in public debate that we should prefer to avoid. But the interests of the republican party are paramount if not greater than Mr. Keifer's personal vindication, and upon his further attempt to become the dictator of the minority he will be submitted to further humiliation."

Mr. Keifer's friends say, however, that he must and will be recognized by the republican members as the leading spirit of their body. They quote the fact that Mr. Carlisle and the democratic side look upon him as such, and predict that upon the reassemblage of congress Mr. Keifer will be the central figure of his party in the house.

BRIEF NOTES.

The grand jury of the district have at last indicted W. W. and S. C. Fitzgerald and one Welsh for pension frauds. This is only the beginning of Col. Dudley's warfare against a large number of attorneys violating the pension laws.

The wife of Lieutenant Greely now lost in the arctic regions, will soon be in Washington to urge an expedition for the relief of her husband as soon as the weather will permit.

Sergeant Mason was in the city recently on his way to Zanesville, Ohio, to attend the reunion of the 78th O. V. I., in which he served during the war. He said Betty had $10,000 well invested and that they were happier than ever now. The sergeant says he learned a good trade while in prison—making shoes—and that he will go into the retail shoe business in Washington next spring.

Poultry Raising.

We don't know as any man ever made a fortune raising poultry. We don't know as it can be done. We have seen fortunes figured on paper "as plain as day." So many here—so many eggs—cost so much—worth so much in market—net profit so much. That is easy enough and plain enough. But things are not always what they seem, and figures made in advance do not always tally with the facts that come afterward.

But while we have not very strong faith in poultry raising as a business, we do believe that farmers generally would find it profitable to give more attention than they are now doing to this matter.

How many farmers' tables are supplied once or twice a week with poultry? How many have nice, fresh eggs the year round? How many eat at Thanksgiving and Christmas turkeys of their own raising? How many on their weekly visit to town take a few dozen eggs or a few nicely dressed chickens to exchange for groceries?

In the markets of northern Michigan there has nearly always been a scarcity of poultry, and often it is almost impossible to procure fresh eggs. A year ago not half the families in this village, who desired to do so, were able to procure a Thanksgiving turkey. "Ye editor" had to content himself with oysters and chicken. This year, by skirmishing around for a few weeks in advance, we fared better.

Now what we want to impress on the reader is this: Every farmer can keep from 50 to 100 hens without much expense. The income from them would be a generous supply of meat and eggs for his own table, and several scores of dollars for products sold. The expense would not be felt, while the income would be no inconsiderable addition to the yearly products of the farm.

We notice a number of people in this village have prepared yards for keeping poultry. More will do so if they have to pay, as they have been doing for a year past, from 20 to 30 cents a dozen for eggs. We think it would be a wise thing for our farmers to give more attention to poultry.—N. W. Farmer.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

Tariff and Wages.

The five years of America's greatest industrial depression, from 1873 to 1878—the Galveston News remarks, coincided with the five years of our very highest tariff. In 1877 there were more strikes, and riots, more men out of employment, more communistic disorders, more militia calls, than in all the fifteen years covered by the low tariff of 1846."

What does the tariff have to do with wages, anyhow? Only last week one of our farmers was offered $18 per month for himself and team, to work for one of our lumbermen in the woods.

Does any intelligent laboring man think that he would have been offered less had there not been any tariff of $2 per thousand on lumber?

Where does the protection for the laboring man come in? Has he any protection at all against the hordes of Canadians who are thronging the northern part of the state? Or is the protection only for the manufacturers who have $2 per thousand on lumber?—Cheboygan Democrat.

Eating and starving, it is all the same for you are sure to suffer from Piles. No power under can be exerted of Mind or Healing rules are suggested as sunshine, for as a few quotations on Pamphlet's Pile Suggestions, sent free, will show you. The Piles often resented to be incurable are the result of certain rules, and such invariably as not a necessity for Permanent Pile Suppositories, according to directions sent in return, regular and direction easy. Warranted to cure Piles in every case. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co.

The grandest treasure it is possible for man to possess on earth is a good wife. The poorest investment he ever makes is a worthless one. Personal adornment may please the eye of the vulgar, but it will not hide a false heart. Sin may cloak itself for a brief season in the garment of hypocrisy, but sooner or later it shall come to judgment. Pure affection is a priceless jewel, the establishment of earthly bliss. In the true union of husband and wife, money should not enter into the consideration. The happiest homes the world ever knew have been bought and paid for by mutual earnings after marriage. The good husband and wife adorn her home and makes it a little heaven. It is the shade of a royal family, a king and queen dwell within. There are no false gods in such a household.—Ex.

At home and abroad, at church and theatre, in the midst of hard and cold cross, is felt everywhere to be good that making cough which most so severely jars sensitive or intimidation of the lungs, bronchitis, pneumonia, and consumption. Its wise to time. Immediate relief and one to cheaply obtained. Boneset Cough Drops, will surely give you relief from those liberal and long troubles that often terminate in death. Instant relief in cough and a quicker of sleeping cough. Your consumption cured will be greatly benefited. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co.

If the democratic party wants to win the next presidential battle let it aim all its batteries at the venality and corruption that is now sapping the life blood out of the government under republican misrule. Gigantic monopolies like the Pacific railways and the Standard oil companies have been fostered by republican administrations, the treasury has been relieved of millions of dollars and not a single public robber has been brought to justice, the public domain has been plundered and extravagance and waste have characterized every department. Republican promises of reform are made year after year only to be cast aside with a new lease of power.—Detroit Journal.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and loss in the spring you will find Parsons's Condition Powders unrivalled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co. 1-00

Professor King, the balloonist, attended in Cleveland recently in company with A. D. Davis, of Chicago, and Rose Kennedy, of Springfield, Ill., who were married in the balloon, and made a wedding trip in the chosen sailing a few miles from the city.—Chicago Journal.

—Advice for the season: Keep a dog chained up and he will not run mad.—N. O. Picayune.

Feed for Young Pigs.

Perhaps there are no greater mistakes made in feeding animals than is on the case with pigs. Indeed, we are inclined to think that the climax of massive absurdity is reached in solid feeding. Often animals do grow and thrive in spite of very bad feeding. Of our swine, we might almost say as a rule, do not develop. Fat takes the place of development and surprises we at the idea that fat is growth. If we do not make this mistake at least from the beginning, we are entirely too apt to fall into the error before the pig reaches maturity. It is always a very great mistake, and the earlier in the life of the pig that we begin to make it, the greater mistake it is. To expect a young pig to develop bone and muscle, without feeding it anything that will make bone and muscle, is a great absurdity. Yet that would often seem to be the theory in fattening. After his bowels the pig is either left to take care of itself, the dam not even being properly fed sometimes, or is fed upon that unfortunate theory that fat is growth. Men have been known to feed it the corn meal that the young animal would eat, just as soon as it could be taught to eat corn meal. What could actually be expected as the result of such a course? Corn meal contains sixty-six per cent. of starch, seven per cent. of fat, ten per cent. of albuginous elements, and scarcely any phosphate of lime. Now a growing pig can be literally starved to death upon such a ration, although it may be so fat that it cannot stand upon its feet. Indeed, its inability to stand upon its feet would seem manifest itself, and would be an evidence that it was starved. Its legs would not be strong enough to hold it. Its bones and muscular system would have nothing to grow upon, and must necessarily grow weak, at least weak in proportion to its age and growth of fat. There would all the time be a demand for an increase of muscular and bony strength to support the growing weight, and no response whatever in the demand.

In the artificial feeding of young pigs skim milk stands at the head of all, and when there is plenty of that there need be no serious mistakes about results. I would even meal may be advantageously added in small quantities to the milk, provided there is plenty of milk, as it is the milk that will furnish the strength, muscle, and tissue elements. Indeed the proportion of three to one or very large than is produced by any corn meal in proportion of albumen compared to a quart of milk, is sufficient to make a quart of milk, very desirable. This ratio is about equal to the albuminoids and fat producing elements, as required by the animal system. If the farmer does not have the milk, cooked corn meal and oats in equal parts, and one part of oil meal will prove to be a good ration. Some grind the oats and corn together, and feed cooked, and others feed six parts of peas, four parts of corn and one part of flaxseed. I prefer the last, gain as much as a capital pig in live weight we can conclude, and that too in a rational way, not in our system of feeding. The young pig should be fed liquid food, as food is more easily digested, and should also be fed five or six times a day for a considerable time, after which the number of times can be reduced.

Of course the feeder will not undervalue grass as a food for pigs. It so does he will dispense with a very cheap means of feeding and injure the mineral needs. It will not answer to feed grinding cereals which upon concentrated food. Concentrated food cloys the stomach in a solid mass, and it requires time for the gastric juice to mix with it and digest it. But if with the concentrated food grassis fed, the mass is loosened up and the gastric juice has a greater surface to attack. And there is one other very important matter to be taken into consideration in combination with pigs running upon grass. It furnishes them exercise, and exercise, the reader must not be told, is almost as important as food. It is true that a pig does not need a quarter-section of range over to get exercise enough, and on the other hand it should not be let go undrained, and if on pasture it will be in no danger of that. If it is given a room it is sometimes the case that selling is very profitable. It requires less land to support a pig if the solid system is adopted, and where there are not many pigs it is altogether practical and profitable.—Western Rural.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

PIMPLES.

I will mail (free) the receipt for a simple, PLEASANT BALM that will remove TAN, PIMPLES, FRECKLES and BLOTCHES, leaving the skin soft, clear and beautiful, also full directions for producing a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, inclosing 2c. stamp, DRS. TAYNTER & CO., 12 Barclay St., N. Y.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dread disease, consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure. To those who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription, used, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure remedy for COUGHS, COLDS, SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, and all throat and lung affections. Address, REV. EDWARD A. WILSON, Williamsburg, N. Y.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

EVERYTHING

In the line of

Furniture

AND

Undertakers' Goods

Can be found at the old reliable house of

H. C. Cooper,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See me before Buying

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS.

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING,

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 27. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, JANUARY 17, 1884. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

is published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG,

Office over T. B. Smith's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, AS A SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

BUCKNIGAN & GRIER, Attorneys at Law, Office in Bulson Block, Charlevoix, Mich.
A. J. BUCKNIGAN. C. J. GRIER.

VOGEL & ALGOE, Attorneys at Law. East Jordan, Mich.

CHAS. W. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor, Post Office Building, Charlevoix. Special attention to PENSION CLAIMS.

H. J. JENKS, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

W. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

JOHN EADIE, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

VICTOR J. SEAY, Attorney at Law. Office adjoining C. R. Mott's, Boyne City, Mich.

OSCAR F. WINNEY, Attorney and Solicitor, Patent & Claim Office, Washington, D. C.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX. Capital $50,000. Deposits received, bills of exchange, money to loan on approved real estate, and collections promptly made. Interest allowed on time deposits. Drafts on Europe for sale. Office on Bridge St., Charlevoix.
EBENEZER & BROWN.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Sabbath services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sabbath school at 12 m. Prayer meeting every Sabbath evening at 7. Seats free. Strangers always welcome.
C. F. VANARKEN, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sabbath services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sabbath school at 12 m. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7.
REV. ——, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOTCH AND PANDA FIRE COMPANY.—Meets the second and third Thursday evenings of each month, at the town hall.
F. F. BUSHEE, Secretary.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. T. KRISTEN, M. D.
Office at the Depot, Charlevoix.

JOHN M. D. PRESTON and Surgeon, Office in the Lewis block, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. M. PRESTON, M. D., Surgeon and Homeopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich. 1y

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HERMAN S. HARMON, Notary Public, Real Estate, Loan, and Insurance Agt., Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

G. A. R. Encamp. Post No. 195, meets second Tuesday in each month, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 207, meets every Thursday, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Round Lake Lodge No. 221, meets every Wednesday evening, in their hall.

I. O. G. T.—True Blues No. 70, meets Saturdays on or before full moon in Odd Fellows' hall.

MASONIC.—Harbor Lodge No. 382, meets Wednesday on or before full moon. Hall over Bulson's.

A. BUTTARS, President. A. R. CHASNEY, Vice President.

Merchants & Farmers' Bank,

BOYNE CITY, MICH.

Lumber, Shingles, Lath, Dressed Lumber, Moulding, Sash, Doors and Blinds constantly on hand. Orders received. Collections given careful attention and remitted on the prompt day.

G. S. TITUS'S Outlet.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Pizza Delicious. W. S. JOHNSON,
On Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor,

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations excellent. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only sample room in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public. 40 Sideboarders for the Petoskey and Elk Rapids Stages.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

Room thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at two dollars each. Call soon and have your pick.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. S. WAY.

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of manufacture, at O. H. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

FOR

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

GO TO

Dr. G. W. CROUTER'S DRUG STORE.

Santa Claus' Headquarters.

An Immense Line to Choose From.

MORTGAGE SALE. Whereas default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed by Peter Sidbergel, Mary Sidbergel, his wife, to Lemuel D. Barnhart, dated December, mortgagors, to Lemuel D. Barnhart, mortgagee, bearing date the eleventh (11th) day of January, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth (12th) day of January, A. D. 1882, at 4 o'clock p. m. in liber "A" of mortgages, on page 100, which said mortgage was duly assigned by L. M. Clark, which assignment was recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county of Charlevoix on the fourteenth (14th) day of July, A. D. 1882, at 4 o'clock p. m. in liber "A" of mortgages, on page 100, on which said mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Eighty dollars and forty cents ($80.40), principal and interest, and an attorney fee of twenty dollars ($20), provided therein, should not proceeding for foreclosure be taken. Also no proceeding at law has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale therein contained, I will sell at public vendue, to the highest bidder, the premises described in said mortgage, viz: Lot one (1) in block one (1) in Bulson's first addition to the village of Charlevoix, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, the said Lot one (1) being the place for the holding of the circuit court within the said county of Charlevoix, at the place of public vendue, at the time of the sale, which will be at the south door of the court house in said village of Charlevoix, on the south quarter (¼) of section twenty-six (26), in township thirty-four (34) north, range seven (7) west, containing twenty acres of land, according to the United States survey.

Dated November 14, A. D. 1883.

L. M. CLARK,
Assignee of mortgage.

CRUIKSHANK & GRIER,
Attorneys for assignee of mortgage. 18-26

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY

Agent for

Ladies' and Children's

Furnishing Goods,

Lady corsets by Fisher & Inwood, and will be pleased to print all the old customers, and gain many more besides. Call and see, next door to post office.

LIVERY.

The undersigned has purchased the livery formerly owned by him, and installed

Geo. Durance, Manager.

There has been added a new stock of

Horses and Carriages

And a careful hostlier is extended to all old friends and patrons to call and see him when coming to town and bringing in their hay.

GOOD SADDLE HORSES A SPECIALTY WITH THIS STABLE.

J. MILO EATON.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 75 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Democrat—By mail, $5.00 per year in advance, postage free.

Weekly Democrat—$1.50 per year; 75 cents for six months; 40 cents for three months—invariably in advance. Address,

THE DEMOCRAT,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will for the sake of suffering humanity, send free to all who need it, the receipt and direction for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Sufferers wishing to profit by the advertiser's experience can do so by addressing in perfect confidence, JOHN B. OGDEN, 42 Cedar St., New York.

HALL'S

Catarrh Cure

is Recommended by Physicians.

$100 REWARD PAID FOR NONE.

We manufacture and sell it with positive guarantee that it will cure. And believing it to be the best Catarrh remedy, we ask a single trial from any sufferer.

It is unlike all other Catarrh remedy, as it is taken internally, acting upon the blood. If you are troubled with any distressing disease, ask your druggist for Hall's Catarrh Cure, and if he recommends it, buy. You can get it, send to the manufacturers, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

Dr. Crouter, Agt., Charlevoix. 26

WM. R. MORRISON,

CHAIRMAN WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE.

The subject of our portrait and sketch this week places before our readers the likeness and life of Wm. R. Morrison, who, as chairman of the ways and means committee, will figure more conspicuously in the policy of the present congress on the tariff and revenue questions than any other member of that body.

Mr. Morrison was Mr. Carlisle's manager during the late speakership contest, and has been recognized by his successful protege as had been predicted, in case of the latter's elevation to the speakership.

Wm. R. Morrison, of Waterloo, Ill., was born in Monroe county, that state, September 14, 1825, and consequently is in his 59th year. He was educated in the common schools, and graduated at McKendree college, Ills. He adopted the law as a profession, and soon after he became a member of the bar was elected clerk of the circuit court. From this position he was next advanced as a member of the Illinois house of representatives, serving four terms, the last of which he was speaker of the house. Mr. Morrison was then elected to represent the seventeenth district of his state in the thirty eighth congress, was again returned to the forty-third, forty fourth, forty-fifth, forty sixth, forty-seventh, and forty-eighth congresses, by an average majority of about one thousand. In the forty-sixth congress Mr. Morrison served as chairman of the ways and means committee, and was succeeded in that position in the forty-seventh congress by Judge Kelley, of Pennsylvania; again the committee wheel revolves, and Mr. Morrison once more becomes the head of the most important house committee.

The committee of ways and means have in charge the legislation of the revenues, and the manner and means of raising a sufficient amount to cover the expenses of the government. The ways and means adopted to collect this revenue effect largely, for good evil, the entire business interests of the land.

Mr. Morrison is of large manly proportions, nearly six feet tall, and instantly attracts more than ordinary notice in any assembly, however large. He is very favorably mentioned by many democrats as a growing candidate for the presidency.

—"I should be very much obliged if you would give me a puff," said the book agent as he entered a sanctum. "With pleasure," responded the editor, removing a cigar from his mouth and offering it to the visitor. "Take two or three."—Philadelphia News.

—Count Smith put on a clean paper collar last Wednesday, when the thermometer was 104 degrees in the shade, and it melted round his neck in three minutes and fifteen seconds. This is the fastest time made by a paper collar this year.—San Francisco News-Letter.

—A lady stopping at a hotel in Australia was bitten by a rat, and has sued the proprietor of the hotel for $10,000 damages. The bite was not severe, but her fright was so great that her hair—hanging on the back of a chair—turned gray before morning.—Morristown Herald.

The throat is often diseased on account of catarrh, producing dryness and a constant desire to cough. That tickling sensation and the heartaches that is so common to public singers and speakers especially, is relieved by one by Hamilton's Cough Troches, which are prepared from the most approved formula. Its mild and agreeable qualities commend it to all. Sold by druggists at 25 cents per box.

DWIGHT M. SABIN,

CHAIRMAN NATIONAL REPUBLICAN COMMITTEE.

Dwight May Sabin came into this world April 25, 1843, at Manlius, La Salle county, Illinois, and not in Connecticut as many persons have stated. His father was a farmer on a large scale in Illinois when Dwight was born, and the son grew up on the farm, a hard worker during the crop seasons and a close student at the country school during the winter months. He was not satisfied with the range of studies taught, and devoted his evenings at home to the mastery of the higher branches of mathematics, and civil engineering. After his father's death, the son located in Stillwater, Minnesota, in 1867, he then being about 25 years of age. He began dealing in lumber on a limited scale and capital, but so successful was the venture that his business gradually increased and grew to large proportions, so that at the present time, after 15 years, he is doing a business of over $10,000,000 annually. Besides being the owner of a large number of mills in the pineries, he is the heaviest stockholder in the Northwestern Car Company of his state, and enjoys an annual income from the profits of his various enterprises of nearly $2,500,000.

Mr. Sabin, in early life became identified with politics in Minnesota, and was elected a representative three terms in the state legislature, and two terms to the state senate.

He has been for several years a member of the republican national committee for Minnesota, and was a delegate to the republican national convention of 1862, 1876, and 1880 respectively. Was elected chairman of the republican national committee, Dec. 12, 1883, by a unanimous vote, and since that honor has been conferred, Mr. Sabin's availability as a candidate for the nomination for the presidency at the convention in Chicago next June is being advocated by a large number of papers.

Mr. Sabin was elected to the United States senate to succeed William Windom, and took his seat March 5th, 1883, his term expiring March 4th, 1889. He is a little over 40 years of age, and reputed to be worth $10,000,000.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

Wheat ripens in Italy by the end on June, but in Europe generally it is not ready for the reaper before the month of August, and in some parts not before September.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and loss in the spring you will find Parsons's Condition Powders unrivalled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. H. Weed & Co. 1-00

—An electric light introduced in a Pennsylvania coal-mine the other day caused a lot of mules there out of their wits; and miners said it was the first time one of the animals was ever known to show fear underground.—Philadelphia Press.

—Newburyport, Mass., is the only town in the world of that name, and gets spoiled in all sorts of ways in consequence. The English give it "Newbury Port," and goods from France come to "New Bury port."—Boston Post.

—Newport this year proposes to be very festive. The regulation color of the village carts is to be crushed strawberry, and the donkey's ears are to be curled up in ribbons and his forelock banged, a la belle.—Exchange.

John Nicholls

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades, WAGON TONGUES, Shingles, Lath, &c.

Lumber Sawed & Bills Filled TO ORDER.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand at his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

At his store near the bridge.

All kinds of fruit and vegetables in their season. Nuts, candies, pop, ginger ale, etc., always on hand. Call and see me. West side Bridge St.

ROBERT GRUEN,

Boyne Falls, Mich.,

Watch-maker

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry Repaired. 17

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card in effect October, 1883.

GOING NORTH.

STATIONS.	No. 1.	No. 3.	No. 5.	No. 7.
Cincinnati	lv	8 00am	7 00pm	....
Richmond		3 05pm	11 00	10 20
Winchester		4 19	12 06am	11 28
Bridgeville		4 29	12 20	11 39
Fort Wayne	ar	5 35	1 20am	12 45am
Fort Wayne	lv	5 45	4 00	....
Auburn		6 13	4 36	9 35
Kendallville		6 31	4 52	10 01
Ligonier		6 45	5 05	10 20
Wolcott		7 03	5 22	10 40
Kalamazoo	lv	8 20	7 00	2 20
Battle Creek		9 01	7 36	3 07
Grand Rapids	lv	7 45pm	10 25	5 35
Ionia		8 42	11 20	6 35
Howard City		9 15	11 52	7 05
Reed City		10 14	12 49pm	7 59
Big Rapids		10 40	1 20	8 22
Cadillac		11 55pm	3 00	9 56
Traverse City	lv		3 10	10 15
Traverse City	ar		6 00pm
Petoskey			7 45	12 30am
Mackinaw			10 30	4 30
Sturgeon			12 45am	6 45
Bay View			1 00	7 00
Harbor Springs			7 50
Mackinaw City			10 00	6 30
St. Ignace			10 40pm	8 45
Cut Lake			1 00am	5 30pm
Negaunee			9 10	7 00

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No. 2.	No. 4.	No. 6.	No. 8.
Negaunee	lv		8 00am	2 00pm
Marquette			9 00	....
Cut Lake			1 00pm	6 00pm
Mackinaw City			6 30	8 45
Harbor Springs			8 00	....
Petoskey			6 00	12 01am
Bone Falls			8 38	12 55
Alpena			9 48	2 05
Mackinaw			10 05	3 25
Cheboygan			10 35	....
Cadillac	ar		6 00am	4 50
Cadillac	lv	4 00pm	11 55	4 50
Reed City		4 42	12 32am	5 32
Big Rapids		5 00	1 00	6 15
Howard City		5 30	1 32	6 45
Ionia		6 05	2 15	7 25
Grand Rapids	lv	7 00am	3 00	8 20
Kalamazoo	ar	9 00	7 00	2 52
Battle Creek		9 29	7 35	3 22
Vicksburg		9 35	7 41	3 28
Schoolcraft		9 47	7 53	3 40
Bloomingdale		10 06	8 10	4 00
Decatur		10 17	8 20	4 10
Dowagiac		10 35	8 35	4 30
Niles		11 05	9 05	5 00
Buchanan		11 25	9 25	5 20
Galien		11 35	9 35	5 30
Michigan City		12 20pm	10 20	6 15
Chicago	ar	3 00pm	12 45am	9 00
Fort Wayne	lv	12 15	6 00am	2 30am
Bridgeville		3 32	8 14	3 41
Winchester		3 42	8 41	3 53
Richmond	ar	4 55	9 45	5 00
Cincinnati		7 35pm	1 25pm	7 30am

C. L. LOCKWOOD, Agt. G. P. Agt., Grand Rapids, Mich.

C. M. HEALD, Gen'l Pass. and Tkt. Agt., Chicago.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

JOHN HUNTINGTON, of Cleveland, some years ago put $26,000 into the Standard Oil company, and has drawn large dividends ever since. The other day in New York he was offered $1,000,000 for his interest and he sold it. He went home with a deed for a $100,000 house in one pocket and drafts for $900,000 in the other.

FANNIE B. WARD writes from Saltillo that at whatever hour a person dies in Mexico, it is customary to appoint the funeral just twenty-four hours later, and that as the mortality is greatest all over the world at night, the most of the funeral ceremonies in Mexico are performed at night, no women being permitted to attend. The poor hire the coffins in which their dead are borne to the grave.

GEN. "BOB" TOOMBS, of Georgia, lives in a big two-story frame house, into the hall of which a wagon-load of hay could almost be driven. He is rich, having received for years a handsome income from his law practice. When he was young he bought large tracts of land in Texas, and it is said that he has cleared $100,000 on profits thereof that he has sold, while he still owns enough to turn him two or three times as much more.

ROSA BONHEUR is 61 years old, but is said to be full of energy and in excellent health. In conversation with a young artist not long ago she said: "My dear, you can't afford to ignore the opinion of the world, even in small things. If you do, you are sure to suffer. It doesn't pay to be eccentric, even if your eccentricity helps you along in your studies. You must remember that all studies are a means to an end, and you are to neglect nothing, nothing whatever, that can further that end."

AS AUBURN (N. Y.) newspaper contained the following paragraph the other day: "The polygamous marriages statistics in Utica is spite of Congress, and the gentile papers succeed now and then in learning the facts. They have just recorded a marriage in the Endowment house of a young English girl, who, at the time she came to Utica, was engaged to be married to a respectable young man. The Utica people declared war, and an incurrection was prevented only by a public announcement that the editor meant Utah and not Utica at all.

A GENTLEMAN in Cambridge, Mass., who says that in his youth Sojourner Truth was a servant in his uncle's family, and subsequently an inmate of his father's house, writes that Sojourner did not then know her own age, but was twenty or thirty years ago it was decided, from what she could tell and from what those who had long known her said, that she was born between 1776 and 1800. This would make her considerably under the age she has of late years claimed for herself, and there are other circumstances going to sustain this gentleman's assertion.

BERNARD BOLAND, whose he was executed 15, went into a boot-and-shoe store to tap the till. He was seized by a young employee, who was killed in the struggle. Boland was indicted for murder in the second degree. His counsel advised him to plead guilty, and he was sentenced to the State prison for life. After serving ten years, it lately dawned upon the minds of friends that he should never have been sent to that prison, inasmuch as the statute provides that none shall go there under 16. The fact that Boland was only 15 seems to have escaped the notice of the presiding Judge. A pardon has been granted.

A SCIENTIFIC paper calls attention to a new method of preserving milk, by the use of an aqueous solution of glucose. This method has not been hitherto noticed by milk-inspectors, so far as we know, and it probably has not been extensively adopted by dealers. The specimens which have come under notice are well calculated to deceive, inasmuch as, to the use of glucose, the density of the milk is perfectly maintained, and the sweet taste imparted will commend the adulterated milk to most consumers. The adulterator of milk have been earnestly seeking for some substance, which, while extending the liquid, would not disturb its specific gravity, as does simple water. Glucose means this want. It does not pitifully sweeten the liquid, and it adds to its density, and gives it "body." Let milk-inspectors look out for the new glucosed milk.

PEARY Sun: A "detective camera" is the latest invention. It is carried in a pretty lace shawl, a soft hug, which looks like a little medicine chest with a handle on it. The camera is so made that one can carry it around anywhere, and take a view of a street fight, or a policeman in the act of clubbing a man, or a pretty girl's smile on a street-car, without any trouble. All one has to do is to press a button, after looking through a lens in the top of the box to see if the object is in view, and presto! in the twinkle of an eye the picture is taken. Then the unwilling amateur has only to draw out a sidehead reverse it, and he has his photographic gun ready for the next shot. The slide holds two extremely sensitive plates. If one wants more than two pictures he can carry half a dozen extra plates in his pockets. If the plates are not exposed to light after taking the picture, they can be left for any time before "developing."

AN American eagle, trapped on one of the islands opposite Santa Barbara, was sold to a game fowl fancier, who put it in his chicken yard. Suddenly one of the fowls flew at the eagle and struck it upon the wings. The eagle quietly looked at the little chanticleer with a curious, inquisitive gaze. Then another game fowl struck him in the breast, while the first, one hit him on the neck. The eagle now opened his wings with a leisurely swing and erected his chest feathers, and his eyes seemed to blaze. Again one of the fowls dashed recklessly at the eagle, and received a bunch of feathers in his attack. Before it recovered from its charge, the eagle extended one of its talons and seized the cock by the neck, and, with a dexterous swing, laid it fluttering and quivering beneath its left foot. The second cock now charged upon the huge stranger, whose wings were half opened and ready for swing and falling. As the cock struck it was met by a blow from the eagle's wing, and as it fell was caught in his talons and lay dying upon the grass. The victor did not appear to be excited, and, after thus disposing of his troublesome foes, he quietly stepped to one side and seemed to relapse into deep reflection, every once in a while looking down indifferently upon the dead fowls lying at his feet.

NEW YORK Graphic: Billiard-playing is an artistic pastime which is only less popular in America than our numerous out-of-door games of foot and hand ball. It is doubtful if the introduction of more stringent rules for the former game will help to further popularize it, but it has long been admitted that some change was necessary to make matches between professional players as interesting as they were formerly. The game has gone through many changes since twenty-five years ago when Michael Phelan was champion because of from of 200 on a five-sided by eleven-foot table, with six pockets instead of balls, the across counting two and three and the pockets each three points. First the table was reduced and the two side pockets dispensed with. Then one of the red balls was given up; next the four remaining pockets; and in counting all carrom counters was finally, as it was supposed, fashionedness carrom were reserved to as making the game sufficiently difficult to prevent professional players from ending a game in a single inning. But Daly and Garnier are to play shortly at Lyons, France, on a table laid out in eight squares, and the player cannot carrom twice on the balls while on the same square. This certainly ought to put a stop to "nursing." But there is no hope yet of what perfection the science of billiards may not be brought by experts. It is no uncertain a problem as that of the eventual speed of the fastest trotting horse.

A VINEYARD proprietor near Nines having had complaints made about his wines, required M. Barthelemy, Professor of the Faculty of Science at Toulouse, to analyze them. In some of them a rather large proportion of arsenic was found, larger than the trace sometimes found in red wines. The vineyard was carefully tested contained no arsenic at all, and in this instance the cask containing the wine was a new one—it had not been previously used. The other barrels had been cleaned after use with "drogue" which, in point of fact, is diluted sulphuric acid, and the sulphuric acid of the central districts of France has of late years contained so much arsenic that M. Barthelemy has sometimes used it to obtain a supply of that material.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

Honey Explains.

"Oh, naughty little Horace!"
Said mamma, "to try to bite
Your dearest friend! I'm very sure
You'd be ashamed to act so!
What made you do it, darling?"
"The baby has teeth, you see,
While a world of mischief crowded in
His beautiful, black eyes,
And, 'Me didn't mean to hurt him,
Oh! no, of course we couldn't!
Mamma, I love my sweet little sis
Me thought we'd eat him up, we took 'em—
And I'm very sorry we wouldn't."
—Lucy Larcom.

What Will You Be?

We see two boys standing side by side. Both are intelligent looking and kind-looking; but one becomes an idle, shiftless fellow and the other a noble, useful and useful man. Perhaps when they were boys no one could have seen much difference between them; when they were men the contrast was marked. One became dissolute, step by step; the other became virtuous step by step; as one went up the other went down.

It is a question of great moment—What will you be? One determines he will do right and improve his powers and opportunities to the utmost. He is industrious, learns his business, becomes a partner or proprietor, and is, or, as a man of influence and power. Another does not determine to be bad, but is lazy and neglects to improve his opportunities. He shirks work, he "feels around," next he is seen with tobacco, and probably beer and whisky follow; his appearance shows he is unhealthy; he does not do his work well, loses his position and becomes intemperate and probably a criminal.

There are many today who are standing at the parting place. You can take one path and you will go down as one type of man or woman. If you prefer hanging around a saloon to reading good books and papers, then you are on the road to ruin. If you do not enjoy your parents, if you run away from school, if you lie, if you swear, you will surely go down in life.

If a boy steadily improves his time, tries to learn his business, obeys his parents' mother, is truthful and industrious, is respectful and pleasing toward others, he will succeed. No one can stop his doing well in life. He has determined that he will be a noble specimen of a man, and every good person will help him.—Schuyler's Companion.

Bernie and the Bears.

I have been in a city full of bears over here in Switzerland, children, and when I was there I thought I should like to write and tell you about it, for it was a queer old place. Although there were bears everywhere—in the stores, in the hotels, in the streets, in fountains, on clocks, in dens, on bridges and shows—I guess you don't looked, I was not one bit afraid. Shall I tell you why? Because instead of there were made of stone, or wood, or pewter, or iron, or ginger-bread, or sugarcane, and they could not hurt one; and the fes there old fellows who were alive, like those in the zoo, have been caged in some of our parks at home, or in a menagerie, were in dens, and, although they looked up at us with hungry eyes, and perhaps were wishing they could jump out from their cage into little children, and have a lovely little supper, they could not reach us, so we weren't afraid of them either.

Do you know where Berne is? Look on your atlas, and you will find it the largest city in Switzerland, and Switzerland is a republic like America, you know. And this city is the capital of it, where the President lives, and where the laws are made. If a Swiss marries a foreigner he is obliged to have the ceremony performed here in his country, so there are a great many weddings in the hotels in Berne, and English parties coming and going quite often. The people vote for the President just as we do at home, which seems strange thing over here, where nearly all the other countries are ruled by Kings or Emperors, or Czars, or Queens. A queer way it was that the people named this town! Many, many years ago, when the place was a small hamlet and house weeds, in the middle of a great dense woods, in the shape of a huge fine game, there were only a few parents there, and their sad-hearts one day to talk over a name for their town. Some man wanted one name, and another another, and they got to quarreling about it, for each man was determined to have his own way, so that finally they all agreed that to settle the dispute they would go hunting, and would name the town after the first animal that we killed that day. The first one killed was a bear, so they called the town Berne, which is the Swiss word for bear, and ever since his figure has been on the arms of the town, and he possible have his image everywhere.

The city is beautifully situated, and is considered the handsomest in Switzerland. It is built on a high promontory 1,000 feet above the river, and the swift, broad river Aare surrounds it on three sides. The river flows between very high banks which slope gradually to the water's edge, and which are laid out in beautiful terrace walks and gardens, and shaded walks; while above, on the bank, is a promenade and a drive some miles in length, through avenues or great linden trees, which are as beautiful as our maples. Here the people, rich and poor, come in evening to walk, or sit in alcoves or arbors, taking their suppers, or to drive on the avenue, from which you have a fine view of the lovely Bernese Alps, which, when the sun is setting, and bonting their snowy summits in roseate hues, is a delight to behold.

The city has a wonderful and hardly unhandsome, with its long streets of rows and rows of high, massive, stone, elegant looking houses, resting upon arcades and all lined with shops, with roofs that project many feet beyond the houses. The covered walks under these arcades are pleasant when the sun is hot, or in rainy weather, but they make the shops dark and dismal and gloomy. Certainly those houses do not compare with our avenues of beautiful houses set apart from each other, bright and sunny, and away from the shops and the noise and traffic of the busy streets; but we see none such in Europe.

There are many fountains in the public squares of this old city of Berne. One of these is a bear in armor, with a sword, a belt and a banner; another has a bear on a crossbowman attending a squire, and another still is a large statue of an ugly old ogre, eating up little children. He has pockets full of them, and some are screaming due, behind him, others on his shoulders and one poor little mortal is just slipping down his thumb. I should think the little folks would want to keep away from that street.

There is an old clock in one of the towers of the city, and when the hour is about to strike, a little bronze bear strikes it on a bell, and immediately a number of bears come from the interior of the clock, and each in succession bow to one who sits upon a throne with a sceptre in his hand. It is amusing to watch them. At one end of the city there is a bear's pitch where a menagerie of bears are kept, which have been trained to dance to tin themselves, and to perform many tricks which afford great entertainment for the children. At all hours of the day you see children, and grown people, too, leaning over the stone wall which surrounds this den, watching these creatures and feeding them. They have been there some years since two British officers who loaned them, and her that had issue and 'Ell into the den and were torn to pieces and devoured by the bears, but I cannot vouch for the truth of it.

I am sure you all would be amused to look up to the shop windows there, and see how positive they are, sitting, as usual in one hand and brushes in the other, and quite an artist's pose to their heads as they look at their work; others playing on pianos, flutes, violins and guitars; others standing up in a church to be married; other carrying great baskets on their backs, or umbrellas, or parasols, or walking with canes, and in fact all sorts of attitudes, all fixed up like people everywhere. After seeing the city, you could never think of it without remembering the bears.—Cor. Chicago Intelligent.

Children's Magazines.

The subject of literary entertainment for the young, and especially for children, will be a prominent topic of discussion in holiday books, not already well upon us. It is matter of congratulation that the last few years, those dozen years, have great attention to and the chance of invaluable aids, not only at this particular season, but all the year round, and every month and week in the year. We have found much to say in this respect, and the discussion of our publications has grown with equal step in the development of magazine entertainment for the young and for the mature. But with continually increasing emphasis the question occurs whether this extra attention measures the real value of the provision thus made for children.

The great fault of the children's magazines is that they give the least even modicum of sense to the greatest possible quantity of amusement. Not it is will be amused, and the lightening of the real use of children by the ribbon of various folklore, the promotion of curiosity and fantasy, the infusion of poetic beauty, and the arousing of self-faith these are most praiseworthy in one instance. The objection is that there are no homilies that tells the little ones the world is Jerusalem, and in fact that the principal consideration of the child's paper or magazine are much and molasses, cake and candy. Now, we do not feel our children after this sort at their tender age. We give them milk and bread and meat and fruit, the sweet stuff is a mere occasional luxury. Why should we allow their finer being, their mental quality, to be denourished on mere candy? Are our children physical? We are now greatly interesting in a physical hygiene—why should we lower the intellectual nourishment?

We shall not be suspected of the foolishness of saying we declare that 75 per cent. of romance is too much to present our children in a month, and yet 75 per cent. of what we are presented is the modern average. Is too great for their mental health.

We do not deny the value and the necessity of cultivating the imagination. The Arabian Nights needs encouragement and sustainment, and when our original genius as Frank Stockton appears, we cannot do more than bless appearance, for we shall seldom in a generation find his equal. The bad of American production is not in the fashion of Mr. Stockton—though he is a great exception—but in the general line of fanciful trash and silly fiction. It really affords us a great sense of comfort to open an English juvenile like the Chatterbox, with its honest dullness, its pregnant and moralizing and its plain old-style wordiness.

The mention of wood-cuts leads to another consideration, and that perhaps the radical one. It is not our American illustrated magazines, papers and journals, are often, and perhaps generally above the heads of their ostensible audience. Springfield Republican.

GEORGIA charges citizens $200 for such exhibition.

"WHAT MUS' I DO 'BOUT IT?"

The Chairman of the "Committee on Outrage" Offers a Resolution.

There was one colored member of the Florida Assembly who was not in the unfortunately-numerous minority whenever seen, he was short and very thick set, large, cross features, lips like the bumpers of a railroad car, and had the measured walk of a militia veteran. Withal, he was so intensely black that the Attorney General, speaking of him one, said he believed "the cuss would sweat ink." The fellow was profoundly impressed with the belief that he was a natural-born statesman and political economist, and used to talk deep of pay, of Pennsylvania, considering the be said, a very much overrated state. He had an overweening ambition to be chairman of something or other, and became such a nuisance with his importunity that to get rid of him he was at once made Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. This at once gratified his vanity and his ambition, he erected an extra spree in his lodging

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

The best way to have good children is to be good yourself. There is a rough and ragged old saw to the effect that we may not expect a good whelp from an ill dog.

To destroy a healthy body by intemperance renders a man as much of a suicide as if he were to hang himself or take poison for the especial purpose of killing himself. Young man beware.

If you want to keep warm don't drink whisky; its effects are only transitory and it leaves you colder in an hour. Drink a glass of ale with a plentiful supply of black pepper. It will fix you.—Ex.

The Detroit Free Press has generously opened its columns for the publication of "help wanted" and "situations wanted" without charge. If you are out of work, or if you want help, send your notice to the daily Free Press.

"Any items to-day?" asked a reporter. "Yes," answered a citizen; "just say that when Ben. Butler was a republican general at New Orleans he stole spoons, but when he was a greenback candidate for governor of Massachusetts he was an honest man and did not steel spoons." So it is, they have to leave the republican party to become honest.

Every one is complaining of high taxes, higher than ever before. Here is a state boasting of millions in the treasury and state taxes constantly on the increase. Reason, every legislature for over twenty years has been republican by immense majorities. Every member has free passes on railroads. They adjourn over to go home or to travel, to visit some institution. They do not legislate on an average of four days in a week. They passed a resolution for instance that all could go to Yorktown at the expense of the state. They make immense appropriations for partisan purposes. In fact, that party in the state is so strong they squander all the money they choose to with impunity. People will complain of increased taxes and still vote to keep the party that creates them in power.—Ex.

Hardwood Timber.

The following extracts from the Grand Traverse Eagle touch a matter of equal importance to Charlevoix, and we recommend them to the thoughtful consideration of those who have influence with unemployed capital:

It was but a short time since the finest timber in Northern Michigan was slashed down and burned as rapidly as possible in order to get it out of the way. It is now more generally understood that good hard wood timber is an element of wealth to its owner and to the whole country. Hard wood mills are multiplying in every direction and are almost an important as railroads to remote settlements. This industry is now merely in its infancy and yet much of the later development and prosperity of northern Michigan is owing more to the hard wood interests than to the pine. The next important step to take is to establish hard wood manufacturers as far as possible in connection with the mills. This has been done in many towns in the vicinity of hard wood forests with the most satisfactory results. * * * Our shipping facilities by water are of the utmost importance because they can never be successfully pooled with railroads. There is a vast amount of money in the large cities seeking profitable investment and the opportunities offered here for great and profitable enterprises cannot long be overlooked.

Touching the same subject the Traverse City Herald says:

There is a vast amount of most excellent hemlock timber in Western and Northern Michigan, which must very soon become available, as the pine is rapidly disappearing. Ten or twelve years ago the writer, who was then looking up pine timber, had his attention called to some of the finest hemlock he ever saw, located in the southwest part of Kalkaska county. At that time it would not pay to cut it, but such timber is now becoming valuable. Much of the hemlock of Northern Michigan is very large and exceptionally fine timber, and its preservation is now or soon will be a matter of importance.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year with Hall's Catarrh Cure, that the doctors had given up and said could not be cured. 75 cents a bottle. Sold by Dr. Chenier.

C. R. BELLINGER

carries the largest and finest stock of

JEWELRY,

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Optical Goods in Charlevoix county. Agent for the celebrated ROCKFORD WATCH, the best watch made. All goods left for repairs and not called for in six months are subject to sale for charges.

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

SPECIAL OFFER To every person who will pay us Three Dollars cash in advance for this paper, or arrange to do so, we will present your name on subscription to the Detroit WEEKLY FREE PRESS, acknowledged to be the best weekly family newspaper in the Western States, and the Boston JOURNAL, one of the best weekly family papers published. In view of the fact that during the coming year occurs another great political struggle, and the desire of everyone to be fully informed on the vital issues of the hour, no better offer than this can be made. It is getting two papers free instead of one, and the choice of the FREE PRESS or JOURNAL, a year in advance. REMEMBER, Three Dollars pays for the JOURNAL two years and secures the Free Press and Horticulturist one year free. SUBSCRIBE NOW. Sample copies may be obtained at this office. Address THE JOURNAL, Charlevoix, Mich.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription, free of charge, with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure CURE for COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. Parties wishing the prescription, will please address, Rev. E. A. Wilson, 196 Penn St., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

AT COST!

All kinds of

Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Ever brought to Charlevoix.

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.

They have no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY,

And Satisfaction Guaranteed.

L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House

CHARLEVOIX

GEO. W. MILLER,

DEALER IN

Clothing

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

Hats and Caps, Trunks and Satchels,

GLOVES MITTENS, ETC.

Buttars' Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

Advance Lumber Co

Are now prepared to do

CUSTOM SAWING

Promptly and on short notice. We have on hand a large quantity of

Hard and Soft Wood Lumber and Hemlock Timber.

GIVE US A TRIAL. ADVANCE LUMBER CO. ADVANCE, MICH.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS.

Patent Medicines, all Kinds,

Imported and Domestic Perfumery.

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Bartholomew's new

Opera Block

Joseph Hyland,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Heavy blacksmithing of all kinds, and Repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

Overcoats

AND

SUITINGS

Gents' Overcoats.

Youths' Overcoats.

Boys' Overcoats

Gents' Suits.

Youths' Suits.

Boys' Suits

I have just received a large assortment of the above goods, bought at reduced rates. I am selling these goods for less than they are actually worth at wholesale. I have a line of Overcoats I am closing out at $2[illegible]. Big bonanza for the money. Call and examine these goods and judge for yourself.

E. M. Clark,

Charlevoix, Nov., 1883.

EVERYTHING

In the line of

Furniture

AND

Undertakers' Goods

Can be found at the old reliable house of

H. C. Cooper

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See me before Buying

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS.

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Jan. 17, 1884.

Local Business Notices.

Salt Apples, Onions, Pork, etc., by the barrel. Prices guaranteed.

UPRIGHT, EMREY & CO.

The only store in town who make a specialty of Gents' Fine Hats, is Upright, Emrey & Co.

For Sale.—Two or three good young bulls cheap for cash or good security.

J. MILO EATON.

All grades of Shingles at Upright, Emrey & Co.'s.

FOR SALE.—A second-hand portable saw mill, with engine and boiler complete, in good order. Call soon.

J. MILO EATON.

Corn, Oats, Feed, Bran, Middlings, Flour and Fine Corn Meal. Remember rates, at Upright, Emrey & Co.'s.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

50 cords of good dry birch and maple stock wood for sale. Good measure guaranteed. Call at the office of

J. MILO EATON.

Upright, Emrey & Co.'s Apples and Onions strike the hearts of all who have partaken of them. For sale by the barrel and bushel.

The Temperature.

The following is a record of observations of the thermometer at the JOURNAL office, at 7 a. m. and 2 p. m. each day, for the week ending yesterday, since zero in all cases unless marked with a (-).

	7 A.M.	2 P.M.
Thursday	17	33
Friday	11	14
Saturday	15	26
Sunday	30	29
Monday	13	11
Tuesday	1	16
Wednesday	8	18

Provision Market.

RETAIL PRICE TO CONSUMERS.

FLOUR, per bbl, $6.00@8.00.

FLOUR PEAT FLOUR, per cwt, $3.00.

FEED MEAL, per cwt, bolted $2.00; unbolted, $1.[illegible]

HAY, per ton, $10@12.

OATS, per bu, 40c.

GRANULATED, per cwt, $1.50.

APPLES, per bu, $1.00.

POTATOES, per bu, 50@60c.

ONIONS, per bu, $1.00.

BUTTER, per lb, 30@35c.

EGGS, per doz, 30@35c.

HONEY, per lb, 20c.

LARD, per lb, 10@14c.

MEAT, beef steers, 7@12c; pork steers, 8@[illegible]c; mutton, 8@10c; sausage, 10c; hams, 14c; shoulders, 12c.

TALLOW, 6@7c.

News Brevities.

Excellent sleighing now.

The Kalkaska Leader is offered for sale.

H. H. Vanornum is quite sick at his home in Norwood.

R. W. Kane went to Kalamazoo last Thursday for a brief visit.

A one-ox team drawing saw logs ran away in Bridge street yesterday.

Is there any earthly use in abusing a man because you disagree with him?

Jas. Crawford and Francis Sinclair, of East Banks, were married recently.

The fire department are to give an account of their unrivaled parties on the 23d of Feb.

James and Albert O'Brian, of Norwood, are lumbering at South Arm this winter.

Rev. C. F. VanAnken, and Mr. Morgan, of Atwood, exchange pulpits next Sunday.

Postmaster Bolton, of Inwood fell under his horse last Saturday, and was severely injured.

Rev. Mr. Morgan of Atwood, is holding a very interesting series of meetings at Barnard.

W. L. French has been here a few days looking after his interests. Expects to return this week.

The Good Templars had an interesting program and a fair audience at their entertainment last Friday evening.

Fishing through the ice on Round lake is reported successful, some fine catches of perch and herring being made.

During 1883 there were 849 deeds and 642 mortgages put on record in the office of register of deeds of this county.

John Saveland, a well-known commission merchant of Milwaukee, is looking after his business interests in this vicinity this week.

Some Statesman, Dec. 25th: "The Charlevoix Sentinel is a good paper." Statesman, Jan. 15th: Charlevoix "has one good newspaper and a —— poor one." Well, Phil, what in —— is the matter with the JOURNAL now? Or is this a part of the game of "freeze out?"

Rev C. F. VanAnken is at Atwood this week leading the work in a series of meetings which are reported very interesting and promising good results.

It has been stated that Banks, has added 50 new families to its population during the past three months and new clearings are to be seen in every direction.

On Sunday the ice in the bay broke up and a large portion of it drifted out, moving northward. Later cold weather has again covered the bay with ice as far as the eye can reach.

It is reported from Norwood that David Alexander struck at Henry Brown with an ax during a quarrel one day last week, and in warding off the blow, Brown's hand was severely cut.

Negotiations pending last week for the addition of Mr. Frank Ake to the Advance Lumber Co., we understand, failed to conclude in the manner expected, and he is not a member of that firm.

The Pentwater News just at hand is a successful looking six column quarto local paper. It reports an average circulation of over one thousand which probably accounts for its well filled advertising pages.

"The themes announced at the M. E. church for next Sabbath are eminently doctrinal and practical. In order to verify this declaration, come out and hear. The pastor and congregation will cordially welcome you."

Dan. Rhoades and Alice A. Middleton were married on Jan. 10th, by Elder Whitman, at the residence of the officiating clergyman. They commence house keeping at once. Please accept the JOURNAL'S congratulations.

John Gillespie will have an auction sale at his residence in Banks on Saturday, Feb. 2. Household goods and farm implements are to be disposed of, and the farm is also for sale. He intends removing to Washington territory.

W. J. McGeagh is pushing the handle business, and is getting out great quantities of timber to be worked up into broom handles, etc. He is a live, energentic man, and is doing a good work in the development of his township.

The indications are that a new dock will be in process of construction in a very short time. A subscription paper is being circulated and already enough money has been subscribed to make the success of the project assured.—Petoskey Democrat.

L. D. Bartholomew wrote from Cincinnati last week that he arrived there on the 8th. Henry Aldrich was with him. Mr. Lance had gone to Jacksonville. They found lots of snow and cold weather—the thermometer being 30° below zero.

While crossing the ice from Boyne to Advance last Friday, the ice gave way under the Boyne Falls and Charlevoix stage, letting the team into the water. Prompt action on the part of the driver, Chas Ferguson, prevented the mail and passengers from getting wet, and saved the horses.

"It will be more discouraging to see farmers coming to Petoskey after Charlevoix gets the [grist] mill."—Petoskey Democrat. Just so. And that is just what we mean to put a stop to if possible. Don't expect to get all the trade between here and Petoskey at the beginning, but we don't propose to let any go by after we get the mill.

Upright, Emrey & Co. have 35 men getting out wood, ties, and posts, besides buying all that comes from transient dealers. The lot adjoining their warehouse is filled, and the vacant lot north of Mrs. Bradley's ladies furnishing store has been cleared and will doubtless soon be filled. They advertise to pay the highest market price in cash, and cash catches them these days.

It will be good news to the people in Littlefield, Springvale and Chandler to learn that the Secretary of the Interior has ordered the issuance of patents for all the railroad lands reserved for the Jackson, Lansing & Saginaw road, and so long exempt from taxation. The order was made about the middle of December. The lands will probably be placed on the market next spring. Record.

"The Charlevoix JOURNAL is placed on our exchange list this week. It is only a five column folio, but it has more in it than many nine column folios."—Pentwater News. Thanks, but the regular edition of the JOURNAL is a five column quarto instead of a folio. To our exchanges and our free list who care only for the local news, we send ha'l sheets of four pages.

Notwithstanding the fact that times are hard all over the whole country, the outlook for a profitable winter in this vicinity is very encouraging. Wages for laboring men will not be as high as last year, but are better than in almost any locality in the state. The cord wood business is brisk, wood bringing $1.40 per cord, which will allow a fair profit, to those who go into the business.—Progress.

An exchange well says: "The natural inclination of some people in conversation is to belittle everything in connection with the city or town in which they are resident, and very often they even go so far as to sneer at their local paper for publishing statements intended to promote the interests of the locality represented by them. There is a heap of sound logic which it would be well for such people to take cognizance of in the advice of a rural sheet which urges the readers never to speak anything in disparagement of their town or any of its citizens who are engaged in promoting its prosperity. The way to advance the interest of your city is to do all you can to aid your laborers, mechanics, merchants, doctors and ministers. Help to build your churches and schools. Aid every enterprise of merit, encourage every movement that will honestly bring a dollar to your town and maintain labor and capital. Stand by your own town and people at all times and under all circumstances. This is the way to make things lively and prosperous."

A Mild Winter.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL of January 3d, congratulates itself and residents of that locality, that the thermometer had not been down to zero this winter. How is it now, brother Strang? Weren't you a little previous so to speak.—Cassopolis Democrat.

Guess not. Just glance at the figures in the first column of this page and see what they indicate. The thermometer which gave this record hangs on a small strip of board attached to the stairs leading to the office. It is twenty feet from the ground, five feet from any wall, and gets the west and north wind without obstruction. As it differs but little from other thermometers in the village, we consider it a fair indication of the weather.

Boyne Falls.

Boyne Falls is situated in Charlevoix county on the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad six miles south east from Boyne City, between which places runs a daily stage. Boyne City is at the head of Pine lake, which connects with Lake Michigan at Charlevoix. Boyne Falls has four stores; two drug stores, one furniture store, one bakery, one blacksmith shop, one shoe shop, one hotel, one livery stable, a postoffice, a school-house, a church, a depot, a saw-mill, a broom handle factory and thirty-four dwelling houses. A gristmill is partly finished which is to have five run of burr stone and one set of rollers. The buildings as a whole are of good appearance. The hotel is kept by Israel Dandy, formerly of Mayfield, Grand Traverse county.—Cor. T. R. Eagle.

Heavy Taxpayers.

We give this week a list of tax-payers who pay over one hundred dollars tax in this township. These figures do not include amounts paid where the individual is a member of a firm whose total is less than $100, nor names of those who pay in this and adjoining townships a total of $100 or more, which we understand several of our citizens do. Fractions of a dollar are omitted.

Amos Fox	$266
Charlevoix Summer Resort	254
John Nicholls	205
Upright & Hurlbut	175
John S. Dixon	142
L. D. Bartholomew	123
Richard Cooper	122
Upright Emrey & Co	122
Jas. Inwood	118
M. J. Stockman	114
J. Milo Eaton	113

Farm Produce of every description taken in exchange at Upright, Emrey & Co's.

Half a Century of Married Life.

The Lancaster, Penn., New Era of Jan. 3d contains the following report of the golden wedding of the parents of Mr. E. H. Green, of Charlevoix, which will doubtless be of interest to Mr. Green's many friends in this vicinity:

On Tuesday Mr. and Mr. Joseph Green, of Maytown, the father and mother of the wife of Mr. Simon May, of this place, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding by a golden wedding entertainment. Mr. Green is 73 years of age and his wife is 72. They were married in Ephrata in 1833 by the Rev. William Bates, a Lutheran minister. A few years after their marriage they removed to their present place of residence, where they have since lived continuously. Thirty-four guests were present at the golden wedding, among them being seven children, seventeen grand children, three sons-in-law, two daughters-in law, and a sister of Mr. Green—Mrs. Harry Hulsinger, who also resides in Maytown. The house of the aged couple had been beautifully decorated for the occasion. Over the parlor mantle-piece, in gilt letters, were the dates, "1833-1883." Spanning the entrance door to the parlor were the words, "Welcome Home," also in gilt. The gifts were numerous and elegant. Highly prized of those presented is a beautiful gold-headed cane to Mr. Green from his son, Major E. H. Green, of Charlevoix, Mich., who served in the One Hundred and Seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Reserves during the late Rebellion.

The guests sat down to an elegant banquet at 1 o'clock p. m. After disposing of this, speeches and music followed. The delightful day's pleasure continued until the evening, when they came to a close. Mr. Green retired from business some years ago, and both himself and wife are now enjoying a peaceful old age, beloved by their relatives and hosts of friends and esteemed by all others.

South Arm Items.

Christmas and New Year's passed off quietly. Some entertained family parties and several Christmas trees were held in this and adjoining townships. At the Bennett tree, some sneak thief stole Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Vance's gloves from his overcoat pocket.

Mr Shoal's children have the measles.

Miss Edith Cole of Bay Springs, is teaching the school in Hipp's district.

Mrs. Watts, of Allegan county, is visiting her daughters, Mrs. Roe, Mrs. Stray, and Mrs. J. Mathers, of Central Lake.

Miss Ogletree, who has been teaching in Echo, is quite ill, and it is doubtful whether she will finish her school.

Mr. John Crawford and Miss. Mary A. McClain of East Jordan, were joined in holy matrimony on Christmas. May many merry Christmas days be given them.

Mr. Forbes Murray and nephew, Peter, have gone to Canada canvassing for family records.

Mr. Richard Tyndall preached in the Bennett school house on Sabbath, Jan. 6th, to a large and attentive audience. He expects to spend every alternate Sabbath there, hereafter.

A party of young folks came down from the peninsula on New Year's night, with plans all made for a gay time, but their prospective host was "out," and the school house was engaged for them to go on with the dance.

A special school meeting was held in district No. 4, Echo, on Dec. 29th, but no business could be legally transacted on account of the want of sufficient details in writing the notice. Instead of inserting the object of the meeting, it was written exactly as it stands in the law book. F. A. N.

Resolutions of Respect.

The following resolutions of respect were adopted at a recent regular meeting of Charlevoix Lodge F. & A. M., on the death of Brother Hugh O'Neil:

WHEREAS, By one of the mysterious decrees of Divine Providence, it has been pleased to remove from our midst, and from the toils and labors of this earthly quarry, our worthy brother, HUGH O'NEIL; therefore be it

Resolved, That while we murmur not at the infinite wisdom which decreed the event, we mourn in sincerity for the loss of our beloved brother who, after a useful life here, has been "called up higher."

Resolved, That we will cherish the memory of his modest virtues, his square and upright life, and the genuine and masonic brotherly feeling which marked his coming in and going out among us.

Resolved, That to the bereaved widow and child whom he leaves behind, we offer our sincere condolence and sympathy, and assure them that while they have lost a fond husband and kind father, we beg to share the feeling of our loss with them, and mingle our tears with theirs.

Resolved, That as an outward expression of our sense of bereavement, the furniture and jewels of this lodge be draped in mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the family of the deceased, and published in the Charlevoix papers.

J. MILO EATON,
O. D. HILTON,
O. S. WADSWORTH,
Committee.

Historical Society.

Reported for the Journal.

This society met at the parlors of Mrs. C. L. Loveday, Tuesday evening, with president John Nicholls in the chair.

An instrumental solo by Miss Essie Buttars opened the exercises of the evening. Al. Washburne then read a carefully prepared paper on "The Attitude of France, Spain, and Germany during the Revolution."

Miss Esther Buttars, Mrs. Oscar Upright, and Messrs. Buttars and Wheeler, favored the audience with a beautiful weird piece entitled "Annie Snow."

Miss Maud Loveday rendered a guitar solo which bordered on the sweet strains oft times heard in the military life.

"The miser dying amidst his gold," was recited in a very efficient manner by Miss Nina Stephens, as was also one rendered by Miss Maud Loveday, a selection from Eliza Cook, on Washington.

Miss Essie Buttars and Mr. Parmelee rendered the charming duet of "Brown eyes close to the window," and Mrs. Loveday closed the exercises of the evening with an instrumental solo.

The society will meet at the parlors of Mrs. L. E. Allen on Tuesday evening next.

Take Warning.

Petty thieving is reported to be altogether too frequent in some quarters, and if it don't stop pretty soon, measures will be taken to put a forcible stop to it. Frank Shaubut is one of the victims, and he thinks when an axe is taken from a wood-pile in the daytime, it is time to settle accounts with someone. Numerous other articles have been taken from his premises at various times. Other parties are also sufferers. Barn doors have been broken down, hooks and hinges broken, oats and feed carried off, and in fact a sort of general skirmish for supplies seems to have been inaugurated. In some of these cases parties have been suspected and will be watched until their guilt or innocence is proven. Let us hope that there will be no more reason for complaint, but if there is, let justice come quick and sure.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by UPRIGHT BROS., real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Jan. 15, 1884, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Henry D. Lott to Ellis J. Hagerman, n e ¼ and s ½ of s w ¼, s 24, 34 n, 5 w, $600.

Jacob Frank and wife to Oscar L. Miller, w ½ of lot 3, south of Pine lake, $1,000.

Chauncey Howe and wife to Charles C. Howe, 40 acres of s w ¼, 36-34-7, $100.

Mary H. Wood to Antoine Duval, n e ¼ of s w ¼, 13-34-8, $300.

Mary Phillips and wife to Godfried Benner, 1 acre of s e ¼, 8-34-8, $100.

Sheldon A. Wright to Wm. Hogg, n e ¼ of s w ¼, 12-33-7, $300.

From Florida.

L. D. Bartholomew writes from Jacksonville Fla., Jan. 11th, as follows:

We arrived here at 1 o'clock this morning about 15 hours behind time. The cold wave and blizzard extended as far south as Florida, doing great damage to orange groves in northern Florida, but today it is uncomfortably warm. We found plenty of snow all the way to Montgomery, Ala.; Mercury at Cincinnati and Louisville down to 30° below zero.

Cash! Cash! Cash! Bring your Ties, Wood, and Posts to Upright, Emrey & Co.'s and get the Cash for them.

PIMPLES.

I will mail (Free) the recipe for a simple VEGETABLE BALM that will remove TAN, PIMPLES, PIMPLES and BLOTCHES, leaving the skin soft, clear and beautiful, also instructions for producing a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, Wm. Ira Vennard, Box 181, Plainfield, Union Co. New Jersey.

ACROSS THE PLAINS.

The plains were wide and vast and drear,
The mountain peaks seemed cold and near,
The sun long low toward the west,
We paused, "we sighed, "we are so rest."

But journeying through the closing day,
Our fears are weary of the way;
For, far before our aching sight
The plains lie in the waiting flight.

The mountain peaks that seemed so near,
Are far, far off, we know, we fear;
We see no end the journey takes,
We vainly cry with lifted hands.

O Life that stand against the sky,
We may not reach you ere we die;
Our hearts are broken with the pain,
For rest and peace we may not gain.

Upon the plains we faint and fall,
Our lives lend to the mountain wall;
Our pulses are clogged, but not to pray;
We die we with the dying day.

A Conspicuous Opportunity.

"Why don't I get married?"

"I wonder if there is any process of law or condition of ethics that can protect me from that question?"—and Miss Margaret Winthrop turned sharply around and looked at her brother-in-law as if for a reply.

Dr. Ainslee looked up from his paper with an expression that evinced a certain enjoyment of the chase, rather than a sympathy with the pursued, and answered.

"Yes, there is one means of escape,"

"And that is to get married, I suppose?"

"Exactly."

Miss Winthrop was not soothed by the suggestion. She regarded it as an unwholesome state of civilization in which a woman with a handsome income and a natural bias toward contentment could not pursue her own course without being hounded off at every turn with that interesting query. Among her friends she was spoken of as eccentric, a woman who unfortunately had ideas, and, while possessing the attainable advantages, had signally failed to make any use of them. This failure was all the more conspicuous from the fact that in her first season she had crowned much. She had allowed brilliant opportunities to slip through her fingers one by one, until she had brought the reproach of spinsterhood upon a family that within the memory of man had married its daughters young and well, and, to every thing the world knew to the contrary, happily. She was 28 today.

This was the view taken of the situation by her friends. Miss Winthrop regarded it from a different point of observation. She knew many things that the world could not know concerning the alleged felicity of various members of her family, past and present, who had married early and "well." Then there was the inevitable entail of care and suffering. Why any same woman should fly precipitately into the consequences of marriage when she had the best of life to offer, she, by experience as a warning was something Miss Winthrop had never understood and did not seek to explain. She had all a woman's horror of being called an "old maid," though the amenities of spinsterhood were at times alluring. It had never been her deliberate intention to join the ranks of the belated sisterhood. Of course she intended to marry at some time, but why be in haste? But not single men were in the market? Yes, but single men were not her companions adult. But courtship was the most delightful part of all, and that anticipation of post-nuptial felicity were apt to resolve themselves into an unsatisfactory anti-climax? Of course no well-regulated woman wanted to be an old maid, but conceive the sand of brought in the woman who married her first lover, thus putting it out of her power to compare and contrast the delightful experience of courtship, when he regarding him she could go on repeating it indefinitely with fresh subjects, and under an infinite variety of conditions.

So she pace and pace away.

Would she have sanded? Perhaps was Miss Winthrop's mood, that surrings was, like death, a thing to be deferred as long as possible, and accepted finally as a heroic remedy for something worse was her philosophy. Being 28 to-day she felt that the time had come for heroic measures. She did not look a day over 20. Her hair was the same soft tint of brown that it had always been; her cheek had a firmness of contour and a delicate blush upon it that might have belonged to a girl of 17; the beauty which had made her conspicuous as a debutante gave no signs of approaching deterioration, but what did all this amount to when everybody knew she was 28, and attested with exasperating indolence that she was "remarkably well preserved."

She could not possibly put it off much longer, and yet she felt a certain shrinking from her destiny—as the hand of a minute-hand recall from its instrument—as she began to review mentally the opportunities remaining to her.

"Money is no object," she exclaimed at last. "I want freedom, and the only condition compatible with perfect freedom is widowhood. Unfortunately, we can't be born widows, and the odds against being left a widow without an embarrassed fortune are 10 to 1. There was only some way of making a woman a widow by an act of Congress or a decree of court! It's shocking to think of the risks a woman must run to obtain that seventh heaven of independence. I believe I will advertise for a conspiracy, and agree to share him respectably through the remnant of his existence if he will obligate himself to die within a given time."

Mr. Ainslee, her sister, and her senior by two years, turned toward her like one of shocked and outraged wisdom.

But Mrs. Ainslee, to the indignation of marrying young, had added the folly of sprinting her husband, and Miss Winthrop expected this silent protest from her.

"If you want something of that sort," said the Doctor, laying aside his paper, "it is not worth while to advertise. I have a patient on hand that will exactly fill the bill."

"Tell me about him," she said, with sudden enthusiasm.

"He is not a consumptive," continued the Doctor. "It is even a more hopeless case than that. He may die at any moment; he can't possible live longer than a few months, and is so sorely in need of competent nursing as any poor devil I ever saw. He has no friends here, though he was born and raised in this place. I tried to get him into the hospital, but it is crowded, and there has been so much sickness that I cannot get him a nurse for him, though I have been looking for one ever since he came. He was a classmate of mine at college, but he went away, and I have not seen him since he graduated until I was called to attend him several days ago. He was a splendid fellow then, but he is a total wreck now. The worst of it is that the fellow doesn't want to get well. I don't know what has happened to him since he left home, but whatever it is has crushed him utterly. He seems to have money enough for everything he wants; the only trouble is, he can't get a nurse to spend it money."

The Doctor had forgotten what started his recital; he was thinking only of his friend, wondering what could have sidetrack a jovial and naturally honest fellow so completely, who he was suddenly called to order by Miss Winthrop.

"You are positively certain that he cannot recover?" she asked.

In the natural course of events he cannot. He might be restored by a miracle.

"And can only live a few months at least?"

"I should say five or six months at most."

"This," said Miss Winthrop, with perfect gravity, "is the one opportunity of a lifetime. It would be like flying in the face of Providence not to accept it.

"It looks rather pointed," said the Doctor. "It does not often happen that a woman while indulging a whim can at the same time do an act that may be counted upon for her righteousness."

"If I were to talk like that I should expect something to happen to me," said Mrs. Ainslee, shocked at her sister and surprised by this unusually flippant behavior on the part of her husband.

Perhaps out of respect for Mrs. Ainslee's alarmingly sensitive sympathy the discussion rested here, but the subject was not forgotten. Miss Winthrop pondered it in secret and ultimately evolved a purpose.

Her disappointed pride had been crushed by no catastrophe. He had simply been uniformly unlucky. A series of unpalatable circumstances, each insignificant in itself, had melted his once ample fortune to a meager income barely sufficient for his needs. The strenuous effort to retrieve it in a climate unsuited to him had sapped his vitality and sent him back, broken in health and spirit, to die within sight of his ancestral roof, but not beneath its shelter. His parents were dead, the other members of his family had gone away; the only familiar face he had seen since his return was that of Tom Ainslee, his college friend. He was unattered in hired lodgings, and they were as lonely and dismal as such places generally are. In the room where he lay there was a faded Brussels carpet, its arabesque out at elbows, a lumpish sofa, a bed, and some other essential articles, to keep company with those already mentioned. The room was hot, and the sarcal odor was heavy. There lie listlessly, looking at the stained ceiling, with leaves all covered with dust, a sound he had reached the open window by his bed, yearning for one breath of pure, fresh air, one hour of perfect quiet. But there would never be anything else but this until it was all over; he would never leave this room until he left the world. He turned wearily away from the ceiling and contered his eyes with his hand.

There was a knock at the door, and he responded feebly, "Come in." It was too early for the Doctor; it might be his landlady, who sometimes came into one if he needed anything, and to give him his medicine. He lay the needle of drapery, and smelled a faint, sweet odor. He lifted his hand from his eyes and beheld a vision. A fair, slender woman, clad in soft white mull that seemed to make the room several degrees cooler, was standing by the bed. She wore a bunch of heliotrope in her belt, whose fragrance seemed like the blessed breath from that far-away nook he had been longing for for a moment before; from under the fluffy, feathery pole formed fell a slightly curling fringe of bright brown hair, and a pair of large violet eyes beamed on him with a sweet compassion.

He was an unpromising subject, truly; his face was sharp and white, and a beard about a week old added much to its haggardness. He must be very tall, for he seemed to stretch away from her indefinitely, as she stood there at the bed's head, and he was thinking speculatively.

"This is Mr. Hemingway," she said at last.

"I was once," he answered wearily.

"I am Miss Margaret Winthrop," she continued. "I am Dr. Ainslee's sister-in-law. I believe you are his patient?"

"Yes; Tom and I are old friends, and I remember your father very well. Won't you be seated?" he added, suddenly remembering his position as host.

She drew up the shabby arm-chair and sat down by the bed. It was not, and so easy to begin as she had imagined.

"He will take me for a lunatic or an idiot," she thought as she sat fumbling her reticule, "if I begin by saying that God sent me to make him a Christian gentleman." Her plan was simple, and, to her, sublime. She would tell Tom, of course, that she had been there. Tom would tell Anna, who would look unutterable things and lecture her for a week. He had evidently suffered much; he was lying now in poverty and neglect, and she assumed that she had never appreciated the importance of the whole proceeding until now. But she was a woman of resolution. She had satisfied herself that the arrangement would be one of mutual advantage. The only question in her mind was how to begin.

"It was very kind and thoughtful of you to come," he said, breaking the somewhat protracted silence.

"Thoughtful, but not kind," she recalled with nice discrimination. "Anna was telling us to-day how uncomfortable you were here, and how ill. I imagined that arrangement would be one of mutual advantage. The only question in her mind was how to begin.

"I don't be brutal, Tom," she said. "This place is horribly dismal, and lonely as well be comfortable for the little time that is left."

She took a cottage in the suburbs near the river, with plenty of green around it and windows that looked on upon an expanse of shining water and far blue ranges of hills. It was fancy about the verandas and windows hung a wave of climbing roses that filled the place with fragrance, and into the airy front room, with its lace windows and its distant glimpses of river and hills beyond, went the invalid's bed.

All day long the fragrant breeze from the river, laden with the odor of roses, parted the fleecy drapery of the window and blew softly upon its form. Everywhere reigned the delicious quiet his tortured nerves had craved in many nights as a terrible boon. The hot, sarcal odor was gone, and the sick man lay there in the silence, with his face turned toward the window, and his eyes fixed on the distant hills, and the tumult of his life seemed, and the tumult of his life seemed, and the tumult of his life seemed

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Jan. 17, 1884.

From the National Capital.

Notes and Interviews by a Journal Correspondent.

"Do you know, sir, that an event occurred in this city on Christmas Day, the facts of which would make a splendid New Year's morsel for the people of the United States?"

The above interrogatory was addressed to me by a well-known congressman who has a national reputation as the best informed politician in Washington, and the secret monotone in which the words were uttered indicated that startling information was in possession of this omnipotent honorable; hence, I endeavored to creep into his confidence, and sallied forth with the blandishments of astonishment and curiosity.

"Is it possible! Was it in the political arena?"

"Certainly; and a high-toned arena it was. You remember that President Arthur dined with Secretary Frelinghuysen Christmas night?

"Yes, but there is nothing startling in that."

"Don't be impatient young man. Of course the people know that Arthur dined with his secretary of state, but they don't know that the egg hangs a tale. Not a half dozen people in Washington are cognizant of what happened in Frelinghuysen's private parlor that day. I will give you the facts if I may depend upon your honor that my name be not given as your informant."

"Mr Blank here's my honor. ("We shake.") May this tale be given to the thirsting public as positively reliable."

If it ever comes to a denial, you may publicly call on me for the necessary substantiation."

"Very well; give us the tale."

"You may say that shortly after Arthur and Freylinghuysen had concluded their Christmas dinner, a close carriage drove up before the secretary's residence; from the carriage alighted James G. Blaine, who hastily disappeared into his successor's abode. It had all been prearranged, and they met there in conclave for a purpose."

The congressman stopped here and tantalizingly began to puff at a cigar. Very seldom does a newspaper man lose control of a serene equanimity when information is being imparted to him, but this much of the congressman's story excited my intense anxiety to know the balance, and I impetuously said:

"See here. Don't vex my impatiteness with that tobacco smoke. Why did Blaine condescend to call on Arthur and his secretary?

"You shall know young man, and I want the public to know for reasons that you may surmise. I am not a Blaine nor an Arthur man, and I want to see Arthur's plan nipped in the bud. It is a well known fact that Arthur, Blaine and Logan are now the leading candidates for the nomination at Chicago in 1884. You will remember it was reported that Blaine and Logan had agreed that their supporters in the convention should sing a joint chorus against Arthur. The president became alarmed at this alleged combination, and sent for Blaine. Blaine, not averse to entering any new compact that will increase his chances for the nubilion of his life, called on Arthur as I have said. Arthur, you know, is inested to make a formidable effort for the nomination, because three or four eastern states seem to prefer his candidacy. He is aware that Blaine will hold a large delegation, the largest possibly of any one candidate, and he made overtures to him that smack of the republican rule of Napoleon in France.

A few more whiffs at his cigar, and the congressman continued:

"Arthur intimated to Blaine that if the latter was not nominated on the first ballot, and the vote disclosed that Arthur's delegates numbered respectably with either Logan's or Blaine's, and the Logan delegation exceeded the latter's (in which case report says that Blaine is to throw his forces to Logan), then if Blaine would transfer his support to Arthur, thereby nominating him, Arthur would place at Blaine's disposal the secretary of statership, and the naming of a man for any other bureau in the cabinet! Mr. Freylinghuysen endorsed this proposition by assuring Mr. Blaine that he was very willing to retire from the cabinet at the end of this term, and hoped that such amicable relations could be established between Mr. Blaine and the president as would lead to the consummation of a mutual understanding."

"Did Blaine agree to the proposition?"

"No, sir. He rejected it, declaring that he is not a candidate for the nomination, but you and I know that Mr. Blaine wants to be president of the United States, and that he has little confidence in Arthur's strength before the convention. The matter is resting in that pose at present, but Arthur is not done with Mr. Blaine unless these facts are published to the people. Send them out, and if any one attempts to corner you, call on me."

After hearing this strange Christmas story, I found myself in such a dazed condition that it required some effort to look after the more common place news, but there are a few stray waifs of talk about Curlisle's committees that will be of special interest just now, as tending to show what the outlook indicates in way of legislation. That great free trader, "Tom" Ochiltree, of Texas, often amuses me with his terse and original opinions of public matters, as we frequently meet at Willard's over the festive board, and given a half bottle of cognac, he becomes the most expert talker and thinker in Washington. I asked him the other day what he thought of the ways and means committee. His reply summarizes about the truth of this important body of men. Said he:

"There is too much presidential timber in the committee. Bill Morrison and Abe Hewitt both want to be president, and it's no use of expecting any reform tariff from them, although they both believe in it. Neither one of 'em will imperil his chances for the nomination or election by opposing the business interests. They're both cowards. Morrison made a little fun of Randall's "business interests" during the speakership fight, but he knows as well as any one that the business interests have the money to run the campaign, and are ready to spend it to save themselves from free trade and tariff reform. Bill and Abe, and the republicans make a majority of the committee, and that is the way they'll divide when it comes to a vote."

CHALMERS-MANNING.

I find upon inquiry among a majority of the elections committee that general Chalmers will be given his seat. Judge Lowry, of Indiana, one of the new democratic members and who is on this committee said to me:

"Don't quote me as saying so, but I have no doubt but that Chalmers will be given his seat instead of Manning, from the second Mississippi district, and it will be given to him on the merits of the case. He will certainly get my vote."

COX AND SPRINGER.

It has been reported that Mr. Cox had telegraphed Mr. Carlisle his acceptance of the naval affairs committee, but Cox's friends here deny it and say that he will resign when congress re-convenes. Mr. Springer of Illinois seems to be growing mudder every minute and says he will not submit to this insult of his constituency and himself. He and Morrison are at loggerheads, as Springer claims that Morrison's dictation is the cause of the slight. Mr. Springer at the announcement of the committees seemed disposed to show his chagrin, but his friends now urge him to resent this "infamous trick" as they call it. Moro will be heard from Mr. Springer.

NOTES.

The wife of General Rosecrans, who died Christmas morning, was for a long time a great invalid. The cause of her death was hemorrhage of the brain.

Senator Cameron, who is now in Paris, writes that he will not resume his seat in the senate until spring.

W. W. Corcoran, the philanthropist of this city, celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday on the 27th of December with a quiet family gathering. He is yet quite hale and hearty.

The holidays in Washington were not very brilliant, the social entertainments being limited and private.

The lawyer, E. C. Ingersoll, who died here last week was not related to Col. Robt. Ingersoll.

Croaking Detrimental to Trade.

Times are bad enough, but they might be very much worse, and they certainly will be made no better by the constant grumbling in which not a few are at present wont to engage. The fact that so many see fit to constantly talk in a despondent strain about the condition of trade does more than anything else to retard the coming of better times. For, after all, views which people entertain of the future have a more or less controlling influence upon what they will do in the present. A trifling objection will sometimes defeat an important project. If a syndicate of capitalists are made to believe that the present unsatisfactory condition of general business is to long continue, they, through an over-abundant caution, may defer executing their plans for the building of a railroad or the establishment of a large manufacturing plant. Their very action is productive of the stagnation in business which they so much deprecate. The example of their timidity is infectious, and others through their influence are led to do the same thing. It is needless to say that when everybody stops trading, business is dead. The inactivity which they deplore is, in part, produced by themselves. Hence it is evident that what one says, as well as what one does or fails to do, is an important element in controlling the actions of others. If everybody goes to crying hard times, it is not singular that just the restrictions and limitations which produce hard times are brought about. Confidence is the key note to activity and success in business. Confidence is the child of faith. It cannot be expected that men who think they see a panic in store in the near future will embark in enterprises which would be likely to be frustrated and defeated by such a panic. No one could hope to engage mariners for an ocean voyage by attempting to convince them that they were about reached solid rock now, or are very close to that point.

It is better for all to cherish a feeling of hopefulness, although it is more natural to indulge in desponding than in cheerful predictions. Many who are closely scanning the future discern numerous encouraging signs. The number is that there are not more who do so. When we come to think of the magnitude of the country, the diversity of the wants of the people, the wealth of the nation, and the facilities we have for commerce and manufacturing, it is not surprising that the intelligent observer should see a bow of promise in the future. As surely as the morrow's sun shall rise, so surely will prosperity return to the country. The time of this return may be much nearer than many anticipate. This being true, how idle is it to continue in predictions of evil, especially since such predictions are promotive of the evils feared.—Tradesman.

Eating and starving, it is all the same, for you are sure to suffer from Piles. No more torture can be conceived of. Dunn's Pile Ointment allays the intense itching, gives immediate relief, and in a few applications of Dunn's Pile Suppositories the tumors are entirely cured. The knife is abhorred by physicians for the removal of protruding piles, but such butchery is not a necessity for Dunn's Pile Suppositories cure by exerting no direction quickly relieve, cure and drive them away. Warranted to cure. Price 50 cents per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Why waste time and money on that which does no good? Your children have worms and sweetness, always hungry, sleepless, puny and weak from the presence of worms in the stomach which prevents the food being taken up to nourish the body. Parmelee's Sandoline Worm Candies will dissolve and remove the worms and then all will be well. You cannot do better by your children than to attend to their health. Price 25 cents per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

A Little temperence now and then is relished even by drinking men.—Oil City Blizzard.

And temperence men, all will agree, do often go upon a spree.—Boston Folio.

But when they take their little sips, some other fellow sets 'em up.—Merchant Traveler.

Or have it charged against them, and then slide out through some back door.—Pretzel's Weekly.

At home and abroad, at church and theater, in the counting house and work room, a fact everywhere is heard that hacking cough which soon develops into congestion or inflammation of the lungs, bronchitis, pneumonia and consumption. Be wise in time. Incredible as it may seem one bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup will surely give you relief from these threat and lung troubles that often terminate in death. Instant relief in croup and a sudden of whooping cough. Your druggist has proved will be greatly benefited. Price 50 and 50 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

FOR 1884.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: EARLY SPRING AND SUMMER REPORTS.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL

A Progressive Local and Family Newspaper.

Published Every Thursday, at $1.50 a Year.

With the coming of spring and the opening of trade, our friends should make an effort in their respective localities to increase the circulation and popularity of the JOURNAL. A little effort on the part of each subscriber to secure at least one more subscriber, would soon double our list, and enable us to make improvements not now possible. It is the aim of the publisher to make the JOURNAL a the most complete and thoroughly local newspaper in the county, and with the aid of our correspondents make it a record of the transactions of the whole county. To add to this from time to time, we shall endeavor to keep our readers well informed in regard to the business transactions and personals of a character to interest all in their vicinity. What the JOURNAL has been in the past is best told by a few extracts from many favorable notices clipped from exchanges:

Neat, newsy, and spicy.—Boyne Mountaineer.

Bright and newsy, and stalwart in politics.—Petoskey Herald.

Filled with choice local and general news.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Is filled with fresh local and general news and presents a fair appearance as any paper in the state.—Grand Traverse.

Democratic in proclivities, and thoroughly enterprising in appearance.—Harbor Springs Inter-Mountain.

In the future we shall strive to maintain this excellence, and to improve in every department wherever possible. AS A PROMOTER OF ENTERPRISE the JOURNAL will use every honorable effort to build up not only the village of Charlevoix, but the whole county. One item of our plans already accomplished has been productive of good results, other features planned for the future will be on an equal proportion to the value of the JOURNAL as a county paper. The following notices will show how our work is appreciated by newspapers competent to judge:

The picture of the Charlevoix summer resort will be the means of drawing many a weary traveler there next season.—Detroit Evening Journal.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL presents its readers with a very pretty picture of the town and summer resorts.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

A very interesting series of articles in connection with accurate wood engravings—the Charlevoix JOURNAL.

Yellow Strawn is doing honor to its town, and the place is already benefited by his persistent advocacy of its advantages for trade and manufactures.—Detroit News, Dec. 24.

As an inducement to begin the good work NOW, we offer the following

Cash Club Rates.

Five subscribers for one year, at one time, accompanied with the cash, ONE DOLLAR each.

Ten subscribers for one year, at one time, accompanied with the cash, ONE DOLLAR each, and an EXTRA COPY to the one who sends the club.

For our name and Three Dollars, Cash, we will send the JOURNAL two years, and the three Prize Prints named above. See SPECIAL OFFER in another column.

Samples furnished on application. Address

THE JOURNAL, Charlevoix, Mich.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 28. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, JANUARY 24, 1884. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

Published every Thursday morning.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

Office over I. D. Smith's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

CUSSIMANS & GRIER, Attorneys at Law, Masonic Temple Block, Charlevoix, Mich. A. J. CUSSIMANS. C. A. GRIER.

ROSS & ALGER, Attorneys at Law, East Jordan, Mich. 22

E. P. WAYNE, Attorney and Counselor, Law. Pension business promptly attended to. Office, Ely's Block, Ely's Lake.

J. E. DENNY, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Office in Fulford Sears Hotel, Boyne City.

A. A. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

LEO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

GEO. A. KEAT, Attorney at Law. Office over C. S. Hurd, Bridge, Mich.

JAY T. WINKER, Attorney and Solicitor, Claims, Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX. Capital paid up, $50,000. Transacts a general banking business. Receives deposits, buys and sells gold and silver, government bonds, and other securities. Makes collections on favorable terms. Draws drafts on Europe. Sells tickets to Liverpool, Queenstown, London, Glasgow, Hamburg, Bremen, Antwerp, Paris, Havre, Marseilles, etc. REYNOLDS & BROWN.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Services every Sabbath morning at 10:30 o'clock, preceded by Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7 o'clock. All are invited to attend. J. T. VAN ALYEA, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sunday school at 9:30 a. m. and 2 p. m. Sunday services at close of morning school. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7 o'clock. J. L. DUDDS, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOUGH AND READY FIRE COMPANY, No. 1.—Meets the first and third Thursday evenings of each month, in the town hall. H. F. HAYNES, Secretary.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. J. CHRISTIEN, M. D. Office at his lodgings.

J. DAVIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office in Lewis block, Charlevoix, Mich.

H. E. PRESTON, M. D., Surgeon and Homeopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HOYT & HARSHA, Notary Public, Real Estate, Loan, and Insurance Agt. Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

F. & A. M.—Ashley Post No. 108, meets second Wednesday evening, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 207, meets every Friday evening, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Round Lake Lodge No. 291, meets every Saturday evening, in their hall.

G. A. R.—Post No. 10, meets Saturday on or before full moon in each Odd Fellows' hall.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.—Lodge No. 207, meets every Friday on or before full moon. Hall over post office.

A. E. FERGUSON, Vice President.

L. DUTTON, President.

Merchants & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

General banking business transacted. Money loaned on approved paper at reasonable rates. Interest allowed on time deposits. Collections given careful attention and remittances made promptly.

G. S. TIBBALS, Cashier.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Ale, Tobacco and Cigars.

None Disagreeable. W. S. JOHNSON.

On Bridge St., Bridge, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor,

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations unsurpassed. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only simple rooms in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public. Good stabling for the Pelkosky and Elk Lake stages.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

Rooms thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at less dollars. Call soon and have your pick.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. S. WAY.

Buy your paper and envelopes with Stamps of Charlevoix, Mich. O. B. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

FOR

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

GO TO

Dr. G. W. CROUTER'S DRUG STORE.

Santa Claus' Headquarters.

An Immense Line to Choose From.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed by Peter Shilbegan, Mary Shilbegan his wife, bearing date the twelfth day of January, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of January, A. D. 1882, at 4 o'clock p. m. in liber "g" of mortgages, on page 395. This mortgage has been duly assigned to E. M. Cook, which assignment was recorded in the office of the register of deeds aforesaid, on the twelfth day of January, A. D. 1882, at 4 o'clock p. m. in liber "9" of mortgages, on page 396. On which said mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of fifty-one dollars and forty cents ($51.40), principal and interest, and no attorney fees. Default has also been made in the conditions of a certain proceeding at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the sum secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Therefore, notice is hereby given that I will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, the premises described in said mortgage, on Saturday, the ninth day of February, A. D. 1884, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the front door of Lewis Hall, in the village of Charlevoix, county of Charlevoix, state of Michigan, (that being the place where the last election of this county was held within the said county of Charlevoix). The premises to be sold are described in said mortgage as follows: The west one-half of the southeast one-quarter (¼) of the south east one-quarter (¼) of section twenty-eight (28), in township thirty-four (34) north, range ten (10) west, containing forty acres of land according to the United States survey.

Dated this 11th day of January, A. D. 1884.

E. M. CLARK,
Assignee of mortgage.

CUSSIMANS & GRIER,
Attorneys for assignee of mortgage. 8-52

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY

has opened in the

Ladies' and Children's

Furnishing Goods,

lately owned by Fisher & Howard, and will be pleased to retain all Herald customers, and gain as many new as possible. Call and see us when in town.

LIVERY.

The undersigned has purchased the livery formerly owned by him, and installed

Geo. Durance, Manager.

There has been added a new stock of

Horses and Carriages

And a cordial invitation is extended to all old friends and patrons to call and see him when ever they need anything in that line.

GOOD SADDLE HORSES A SPECIALTY WITH THIS STABLE.

J. MILO EATON.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 75 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Democrat—By mail, $6.00 per year in advance, postage paid.

Weekly Democrat, $1.50 per year, 75 cents for six months, 40 cents for three months—invariably in advance.

Address,

THE DEMOCRAT,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from Nervous debility, Premature Decay, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will for the sake of suffering humanity, send free to all who need it, the recipe and direction for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Sufferers wishing to profit by the advertiser's generous offer, will address, in a manner, JOHN B. OGDEN, 42 Cedar St., New York.

HALL'S Catarrh Cure

Is Recommended by Physicians!

$100 REWARD PAID FOR CURES!

We manufacture and sell it with a positive guarantee that it will cure any case, and we will forfeit the above amount if this is a single instance.

It is unlike any other Catarrh remedy, is taken internally, acting upon the blood. Send for pamphlet, containing testimonials of the most stubborn cases, from druggists, ministers or businessmen. If be has not got it, send to us and we will forward immediately. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

Dr. Croutter, Agt., Charlevoix. 26

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

at his store near the bridge.

All kinds of fruit and vegetables in their season, and at the lowest cash price. Oysters always on hand. Call and see us. West side bridge St.

ROBERT GRUEN,

Boyne Falls, Mich.,

Watch-maker

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry Repaired. 17

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card in effect October, 1883.

GOING NORTH

STATIONS.	No. 1.	No. 3.	No. 5.	No. 7.
Cincinnati	lv	8 00pm	7 40pm	....
Richmond	....	10 10am	9 20pm	....
Winchester	....	10 42am	9 52pm	....
Muncie	....	11 42am	10 48pm	....
Fort Wayne	ar	1 25	12 30am	....
	lv	1 35	3 00	6 35am
Auburn	....	2 17	3 42	7 17
Fort Wayne	lv	4 25	5 00	9 45
Leesburg	....	5 17	5 52	10 37
Warsaw	....	5 42	6 18	11 02
Plymouth	....	6 18	6 51	12 10pm
Bourbon	....	6 35	7 08	12 27
Walkerton	....	7 20	7 48	1 20
Chesaning	....	9 20	9 48	3 20
East Saginaw	....	....	10 30	4 00
Bay City	....	....	11 00	4 30
Alma	....	....	12 15am	5 45
Ithaca	....	....	12 40	6 10
Alma	....	....	1 05	6 35
Gratiot	....	....	1 15	6 45
Jackson	....	....	4 50	10 20
Chicago	....	....	9 40	3 00pm
Detroit	....	7 00am	1 00pm	7 00pm
Toledo	....	9 45	3 45	10 00
Cleveland	....	1 00pm	7 35	2 00am
Buffalo	....	4 40	11 15	6 20
Hornellsville	....	8 00	2 35am	10 00
Elmira	....	9 25	4 00	11 35
Waverly	....	10 00	4 35	12 10pm
Binghamton	....	11 15	5 45	1 20
Scranton	....	2 45am	9 15	4 50

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No. 2.	No. 4.	No. 6.	No. 8.
Scranton	lv	....	5 15pm	7 25am
Binghamton	....	....	8 00	9 40
St. Ignace	....	....	3 45am	6 15pm
Markham City	....	....	8 20	9 50
Harbor Springs	....	....	8 50	....
Petoskey	....	....	9 15	12 45am
Boyne Falls	....	....	9 38	1 20
Alanson	....	....	9 48	1 30
Walloon Lake	....	....	9 54	1 36
Traverse City	....	....	9 25	....
Cadillac	ar	....	11 40	3 50
	lv	6 00pm	11 55	4 20
Leroy	....	6 45	12 40am	5 08
Big Rapids	....	7 20	1 15	5 50
Paris	....	7 35	1 30	6 05
Grand Rapids	ar	8 40	2 45	7 15
	lv	8 20	4 32	10 30am
Grand Rapids	lv	7 00am	5 00	1 00pm
Kalamazoo	ar	9 00	7 00	3 25
Kalamazoo	lv	9 05	7 05	3 35
Battle Creek	....	9 35	7 36	4 05
Marshall	....	10 32	8 41	4 40
Albion	....	11 00	9 05	5 20
Jackson	....	11 40	9 40	6 00
Fort Wayne	ar	1 00pm	11 20	7 10
Fort Wayne	lv	1 20	6 00am	7 30am
Hobgsville	....	2 56	8 18	....
Auburn	....	3 07	8 31	....
Richmond	ar	4 55	9 45	4 37
Cincinnati	....	7 20pm	1 30pm	7 35am

C. L. LOCKWOOD, A. G. P. T. A.,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

John Nicholls

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades,

WAGON TONGUES, SHINGLES, LATH, ETC.

LUMBER SAWED AND BILLS FILLED TO ORDER.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand at his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

WARNER MILLER,

THE JUNIOR SENATOR FROM NEW YORK.

Senator Warner Miller, known more familiarly as "Wood-Pulp Miller," of Herkimer, New York, was born in Oswego Co. that state, August 12 th, 1838, and is therefore in his forty sixth year. He graduated at Union college in 1860, and then became a teacher in the Fort Edward collegiate institute, but when the war broke out, in 1861, he enlisted as a private in the fifth New York cavalry. He served with conspicuous bravery in the Shenandoah valley, being promoted to sergeant-major and lieutenant. At the battle of Winchester he was taken a prisoner, but was finally "exchanged" after the close of the rebellion. Mr. Miller engaged in farming and became the owner of extensive paper mills in which enterprise he is still engaged. He was a delegate to the national republican convention in Philadelphia, in 1872, and in 1874 was elected to the New York legislature, serving two terms.

Mr. Miller then entered national politics and was elected as a representative to the forty-sixth congress and was returned to the forty-seventh. In 1881, when Conkling and Platt resigned their seats in the senate, Mr. Miller was chosen by the New York assembly to succeed Thomas C. Platt and took his seat October 11th, in the same year. His term of office does not expire until the 3d of March, 1887.

Senator Miller, by his recent manipulation of the republican caucus of the New York legislature securing the election by the lower house, of Mr. Sheard as its speaker, has won for himself the sudden reputation of being the leader of the New York republicans and the well-known fact that the senator is antagonistic to the present administration of Arthur gives special significance to his political controlling power in his state as indicating that he will become a prominent factor in dictating against Arthur's renomination at Chicago next June.

Mr. Miller is a man of splendid physical and mental strength, and possesses that personal magnetism which wins the lasting friendship of those with whom he comes in intimate contact.

Notes and News.

Michigan has not been the only part of the country visited by the cold wave. The thermometer went down to zero at Atlanta, with four inches of snow at little Rock, and two inches at Shreveport.

One of the dens of New York where the sour dregs of beer casks are sold to soften them was furnished thirty fire customers for the Tombs Court on a recent Monday, thirty-three of the culprits being women.

Should tree agents ask you to buy cuttcuts proof plums and genuine prunes at $2.50 each, and blackberries which grow on a vine like grapes, at $1 each, say "nay" to them, as they are humbugs and deserve the toe of your boot.

The old medical records attribute the origin of scurlet fever to horses, the first cases being reported in 1514 in royal stables. Within a short period after this discovery it appeared among human beings. Now the disease is very rare among horses. Dr. Steckler, of New Jersey, has just been making some experiments that are regarded as highly important by the medical fraternity. He recently inoculated young colts in order to secure the pure equine virus, and 12 children vaccinated with this virus are reported to have escaped after being exposed to the worst form of scarlet fever. If the theory advanced by several eminent physicians that the germ of scarlet fever is the same as that of diphtheria, and Dr. Steckler's discovery shall result in averting both, he will prove a benefactor to humanity, whose name will rank by the side of that of Dr. Jenner, who first used cow virus in vaccination as a preventative of small pox in 1796.—Detroit Journal.

One of the most successful journalistic ventures in the west is the Detroit Evening Journal. It is now only four months old and has a circulation of nearly 17,000, with an income of from 100 to 500 every week. Its special attention to Michigan matters has already made it a favorite in many places throughout the state. It is now an established institution, and no daily in the west can point to a like success in the same space of time. It contains complete telegraphic news, and its market reports are indorsed by the Detroit board of trade as reliable and satisfactory.

I have made my own way in the world. Why? Because as a boy I had time to reflect and think, and when I came to a city at the age of ten years I have a right to say that I was as far advanced in my studies and the knowledge of what I had studied as though I had been kept at work all the time in school. Who is the speaker of your house of representatives? Another man born as I was, on a farm in New Hampshire. Who is the mayor of Boston? He was born within six miles on a rocky farm than mine, if possible. I give you this advice of an old man who is passing away, and whatever may be his mistake, it has no mistake, in sincerity and earnestness. And again, I say now as I began, that the wealth, the prosperity, the steadfastness, the hope of religion, of liberty and of freedom to the world rests on the producing and on the country population of the common work, and on that of the United States.—Ben. Butler.

Much might be written of Carlisle. Only 48 years old, he is a self-made man in a double sense, for he has remade himself within the last 12 years. At that time it seemed as if his life had been lived out and that the coils of drink would never be loosened from about him until he rested with Mordecai and Marshall and the host of their bright Kentuckians who have graves in the islands where the Circe lives. Frankfort is about as demoralizing to young fellows as the Sonora Mountains to the Arizona Indians, and he already served two terms in the legislature and was then, at 36, lieutenant-governor. There were few who did not think that this would be the end of it. There was no Cassandra to hear the whisperings of the gods about him. It was "Poor John Carlisle." Suddenly he shattered his cups and placed a seal upon desire and became, as ever since he has remained, a devout churchman and an exemplar of the strictest temperance. There was surprise in the town when more and more it came to be seen that the change was not the freak of a headache, but gravely made and meant to last a lifetime. But so it was. He shrank from all fanticism and was as blithe as ever, but the club rooms missed his epigrams, and his books grew thumbed with use. The comrade had become a student.—From a Louisville Letter.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of Catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

Why waste time and money on that which does no good? Your children have worms and are cross, always hungry, sleepless, puny and weak from the presence of worms in the stomach which prevents the food being taken up to nourish the body. Parmelee's Sandoline Worm Candies will dissolve and remove the worms and then all will be well. You cannot do better by your children than to attend to their health. Price 25 cents per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

DR. JAMES P. BAKER, of Braddock, near Pittsburgh, whose practice was good for $34,000 a year, awaits sentence for decoying moneyed men to lonely localities, where highwaymen robbed them.

THE Southerner is becoming grim in his humor. When Andy Taylor, the day before he was hanged in Knoxville, asked Sheriff Foute for a drink of whisky, the Sheriff said, "I will give you a drop to morrow."

JOHN VAN WILLIGEN, a farmer residing in Woodstock, N. Y., butchered a cow recently that had no gall on the liver. The animal was 10 years old, and was one of the healthiest cows on the place. Medical men have frequently averred that no animal could live without gall, and this instance may be considered a marvelous one.

MR. EDMUNDS writes to an anti polygamy society in Cleveland: "My views in respect of further legislation regarding polygamy are mainly expressed in the bill reported last session by the Committee on Judiciary, which I shall again introduce at this session, with, perhaps, some additional provisions. I have reason to believe that the legislation already adopted is operating favorably to the end desired."

A PHILADELPHIA man was recently found wandering about the streets with his throat cut. He was carried to a hospital, where he has become what the surgeons call a "beautiful case." They have sewed him up and rigged up an apparatus for forcing a chemical substitute for air into his lungs, and some other apparatus with a rubber tube to introduce food into his stomach. The man was living at last accounts, and his case is said to be without a parallel in the history of surgery.

THE Board of Supervisors at Sacramento sent some carpenters out to where the Chinese leper lives, beyond the north levee, to build for him comfortable winter quarters. The poor fellow was much pleased at the interest taken in his case by the "Melican man, and was very profuse in his thanks for their kind services. Holding up his hands, the fingers of which are dropping off one by one, and pointing to his feet, the toes of which have disappeared, he said, with a grave smile, "You see; bimeby Chinaman all gone."

THE Hon. Thomas A. Robertson, Proctor Knott's successor in Congress, is said to be a better story-teller than the Duluth statesman. He has an easier command of language, and is much more graceful in his manner of delivery. He is above medium height, with very signature of health. His face is round, full and light-colored. The color of his face is intensified by a fiery red moustache and goatee. Reddish, curly hair comes down well upon his broad forehead. There is an air of reckless good-fellowship about Robertson which is certain to make him a popular member.

DICK'S Sun: Here is patriotism: An aged couple of colored people reside at Terre Haute, who were born slaves in Virginia and who have been married sixty years. They have had twenty-five children, four of whom were killed in the war. "Don't you draw a pension from the Government for the death of your sons in the army?" was asked of the old man. "No, indeed! No, indeed! Me and Chas don't want de gov'ment to do so mo' for us; de gov'ment done got de brack man free, and we's happy." This is the class of colored people on whom the salvation of the race depends. They have something else to do than loafing around asking for aid.

THE Bartholdi statue is made of copper, strengthened by an inner skeleton of iron. For each piece a center or mold was made of wood, on which the copper could be worked and fitted. The sheet-copper epidermis of the figure is made of 200 pieces, and weighs 178,000 pounds, while the iron frame weighs 204,000 pounds. When finally erected, the molded sheets of copper will be riveted together by copper bolts, and the iron skeleton will be secured to the masonry by twelve great foundation bolts. The variations due to temperature are provided for by elasticity in every part, and corroding will be checked by painting with red lead wherein iron and copper are in contact. It is reckoned that the pressure of wind upon the statue, which will be 150 feet high, may go as high as 100,000 pounds.

THE newest swindler discovered is a girl. She sits in a telegraph office writing a message. She wore mourning clothes, which were strikingly neat and cheap. "Will you please tell me," she said to a bystander, "how I can condense this message to ten words? I don't wish to have to pay anything extra." This was what she had written on the blank: "I am friendless here; have only a dollar left. Send some money." The misrepresentable narrator looked her squarely in the face, and found it charming, though not to a delusive degree. The polar was artificial, and the dolorous expression was mimicry. Every day for a week she has written that same message, without ever sending it over the wires, but with more or less success in exciting mercenary sympathy.

A NEW YORK letter says Gen. Sickles is always mentioned as among the prominent people at the opera, and it accounts for it in this way: This is not because Gen. Sickles is so distinguished, but rather from the manner of his entrance at the opera. You probably know that Gen. Sickles has lost one leg, and has been unable to wear an artificial one, so that he is naturally obliged to walk on crutches. After the house is comfortably seated and the opera is going smoothly along, just as the prima donna reaches her most florid passage, or the tenor touches his high C, you hear a dull thud down the main aisle of the opera-house, and, looking around, you see a rather fine-looking man on crutches swinging himself into his seat. You naturally ask, "Who is that?" and soon get your answer that it is Gen. Sickles.

JUDGE GEORGE DENNY, who shot and killed James H. Anderson in a terrible hand-to-hand encounter at Lancaster, Ky., is one of the most prominent criminal lawyers in the old commonwealth. He is a man of splendid physique, six feet two inches in height, and weighs about 200 pounds. Judge Denny was the leading counsel for prosecution in the celebrated Thompson-Davis murder trial at Harrodsburg, Ky., last May. In that case the Judge made a speech two hours in length, which excited the warmest congratulations of Hon. Joe Blackburn and Senator Dan Voorhees, of Indiana, who represented the defendant. Judge Denny is an eloquent man, and talks with an earnestness which carries conviction. He has always been an uncompromising Republican, and was elected Judge in a district strongly Democratic. At the Kentucky Republican State convention held in Lexington last July Judge Denny was temporary Chairman. He delivered a speech which set the convention wild with enthusiasm, and the effect produced by his address was so great that he could have received the nomination for Governor almost by acclamation had he not refused to be a candidate. Two or three years ago he went to Carter county, Ky., to assist in the prosecution of some "moonshiners" and desperadoes with which that locality was infested. Upon his arrival he was warned that if he made a speech to the jury advocating the conviction of the offenders it would cost him his life. The Judge paid no attention to the threats. When he came to address the jury, the court-room was crowded, and among the crowd were many desperate men, friends of the prisoners. The demeanor of some of them cast lire eye over the assemblage, drew a pistol from his pocket, laid it on a table in front of him, and coolly said: "If it please your honor and gentleman of the jury, I have come here to do my duty in the prosecution of the prisoners at the bar. I have been threatened with death if I make a speech. I shall make that speech now, and the first person who interrupts or menaces me I will shoot dead."

Used Railroad Tickets.

The number of tickets collected by a first-class railroad in the course of a year is something stupendous. Five tons of these trifling paper slips accumulate in the Boston and Albany railroad office in this city every year, and yield a sing sum when sold for paper stock. The colored tickets are bundled up by themselves in sent packages, and the white ones in separate lots, the latter, of course, bringing the higher price. —Springfield Republican.

EGGS at average prices are among the cheapest and most nutritious articles of diet. Like milk, egg is a complete food in itself, containing everything necessary to the development of a perfect animal, as is manifest from the fact that a chick is formed from it.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

Dainty Bonnets.

Have you seen my Dolly's bonnet?
It is just a sweet little dear
Why, I'm in love with it,
Its lace and its bibbons so merry,
Oh, what a pretty hat!
Dressed in balmy June, does she do?

"This is mean when Cupid's taking,
Its pretty beauty one hower at the bar
Tell me, mother, what is love?
Love, my child, is a little fellow,
Who goes about with a bow and arrow.
Tell me, mother, is love a man?"

But he only whistle dirty,
Ah! he only a fib, dear, now bitchy
"Tell me, mother, what is love?"
I'd rather ask Dolly's bonnet.
No! I am sure she knows and listens—
For I'd bet money I could.

A Much Misused Word.

The intelligent woman expressed her opinion upon the ancient custom that yet obtains among a few obscure papers of calling a woman a female. The term, she insists, is a technical one and should be left to the exclusive use of physiologists and zoologists. It took, writes a friend, to come to a realizing sense of its multiness when applied to individuals of feminine gender. Nothing but a quiverer now than those goosly-goaly little books that were written by moralists of "female" boarding schools, and bloodless papers of struggling parishes wherein the "female" element was a silent majority. The subjects were "Female Duty," "Female Modesty," "Female Meekness," "The Virtues Most to be Admired in the True Female," and if the omnipotent Creator recognized two separate sexes of mankind, one to be appropriated by the "male," and the other to be worn in meekness and humility by the "female" portion of humanity. The Bible says that God in the beginning created male and female. Its own usage, "male and female created He them" seemingly like two ones according to their two kinds, but not using the terms as names. Sarah Josepha Hale probably did more than any other one person to abolish the nice uses of the word. The deeds of trash which the old Godey's Lady's Book used to let loose upon the country may be excused in a measure, since it had no opportunity pass in critique and rhetorical brewers of "female" literature. Nobody hears of male boarding-schools or male academies. Men are not alluded to as "brilliant male writers," or "eminent male artists." Books were never written on male piety or male integrity, yet the use of one, in the same sense, is as correct as the other.—Mary H. Krout, in Cincinnati Commercial.

The Female Dress.

Given a small, straight, flat figure, with a face delicacies in its tissue, and the problem of making the girl look like her fairest ideal, perhaps, just her feets is not exceedingly difficult. It can be very simply worked by refining to let her petticoats grow to a proper length, eschewing all devices of bodice that produce artificial inflation, and enjoining an innocent simplicity of earrings and manner. That was what had been done with the bride whom I have mentioned. There was in her family the usual incentive in the retarding her apparent growth from childhood to womanhood. Two older sisters married to matrimonially place themselves before their ages were emphasized by the younger child's being mistaken for a baby. Why, I remember that one evening at a reception the dear girl came down to the parlor in a lovely costume of white tulle, as simple and infantine as a christening robe and with a long waist lower than the top of her high bodice, but she had contrived to give a slight roundness to her corsage. That was an amendment to the family resolution which was immediately adopted though she pleaded hard to carry it.

"I'm a woman, and I want to look like one," she pleaded.

"You may be a woman, but you've got to look like a child as long as nature will let you," was the maternal mandate.

So she had to go back to her room and fetter the bosom in which indignation was swelling.

"I'll develop all of a sudden, the first thing they know—see if I don't!" she said to me on that occasion.

And she did it on her wedding day, for certain. The dignified little creature who dragged a train up the center aisle of a fashionable church was no longer childish. Her babyish braids of hair had become an elaborate coiffure; her ankles were out of sight, and, instead of their stockinged display, there was a charming disclosure of bare arms that were far more plump and tapering than anybody had expected, and so fair as eighteen years of seclusion could make them; her bodice, for the first time, was absolutely exactly what it meant is none of the public's business. Improved I should say so. If the bridegroom had fallen in love with her former aspect he had every reason for congratulation in the change when he held her in her bridal robes.—Clara Belle.

Popular Catechism.

What is this?
That is a managing mamma, darling.
Why a managing mamma?
Because she is managing or trying to manage.
Who is what?
To marry off her daughters.
My! that is a huge undertaking.
Mountainous, my precious.
But those seven gawks hanging behind her?
Sh! These, dear, are her charming unaccomplished daughters.
But that sallow old girl with the giggles and stiff neck?
That, my precious, is Mathilde, the literary light of the family.

How literary?
Well, Mathilde has read Swinburne and Herbert Spencer, knows two professors of the Concord School of Philosophy, has published four poems in the Philadelphia Ledger, and can write verses all night long. Besides, Mathilde knows four constellations, Mathilde does, acts in amateur theatricals, and is writing a play.
Precious! and how old is she?
Just 19, sweet.
And who is the wall eyed young lady with freckles and beveridkles walking with Mathilde?
That, dear, is Angele, the beauty of the family.
How the "beauty?"
Well, whenever they get up tableaux at the church Angele is selected, and that proves it.
How old is Angele?
Just 19, love.
And that one immediately behind Mathilde—the young lady with the crooked teeth and a nose like an india-rubber shoe pressed at the heel?
That, darling, is Therese.
And what does she do?
She is the good girl of the family—goes to church twice a day, says grace at meals, and writes Bible-marks for every sum she sorts.
How old?
Just 16.
Next—the pudding-faced girl with twisted hair?
That is Marie.
What?
Marie is the tiff of the family. Marie uses slang and pursues up her mouth, smokes cigarettes, and makes faces, and always says what a bad, naughty girl she has been, and is generally as playful as a kitten.
Old?
Just 19, dear.
Next?—the meek little dunce with a figure like a shad?
Madeleine.
Well, what is the matter with her?
She is the housekeeper of the family. Madeleine can cook right through four cookbooks; she makes her own dresses, and could have guessed as much myself.
Sh!—and then Madeleine looks after everything, and sees that everything is right, and—well, there's no end to the comfort brought about by Madeleine.
She is just 19, too, I suppose?
Nineteen last week, darling.
Ah!—that bilious sorceress in the hat?
Sh! that, my precious, is Belle.
Well, what is the chronic trouble with Belle.
Why, Belle has travelled, and she is the wit of the family. When lord Muffin was telling a long story to Angele last evening, Belle told him to "saw it off" and "choose it."
That was very funny.
Yes, dear.
You say she has "travelled?"
Yes, dear.
Where?
Well, she has been in Colorado, and Chicago, and Milwaukee.
Her age?
Just 19, sweet.
Well, now tell me about that pale little consumptive with gold teeth.
That, dear, is Celeste.
Consumptive?
Just.
Any miraculous talent?
Yes, darling.
What?
A "voice."
Cultivated?
Well, Sig. Tutti Frutti di Vermicelli says that he thinks about 200 lessons will "develop it."

An Insect Used as Food.

The great valley of Mexico, lying at its vast altitude of 7,000 feet above the sea, possesses many and very peculiar forms of animal life. Among the most peculiar, frequently, known to the Aztecs as "Water-lice," an insect about the size of the common house fly. It is found around the borders of Lake Tezcuco, where its eggs, called ahuauhtli, or "water-wheat," are collected in great quantities. The insects are pounded into a paste, as they are collected in myriads, boiled in corn husks, and then sold in the markets of Mexico. The eggs, likewise, which resemble fine fish roe, are compressed into a paste, mixed with the eggs of fowls, and form a staple article of food, particularly called for during Lent. The Indians of the Mexican Valley also make a business of gathering these eggs, have a restaurant method, they plant bundles of reeds in these lakes, a few feet apart, with their tops sticking out of the water. The insects deposit their eggs upon these reeds in such quantities that they not only cover them, but depend in clusters, like the globular eggs of frogs. When completely covered, these bundles are removed from the water and shaken over a sheet, then replaced for a fresh deposit.

Four Gage a good old monk, who visited Mexico in 1626, says of the food: "They gathered much of this and kept it in troughs, and made thereof Cakes like unto Birchloafs, and they did eat them with as great a Stomach as we eat Cheese; you, and they hold opinion that this Scum of fattness of the Water is the Cause that such great numbers of Fowl resorth to the Lake, which in the winter Season is infinite.—Good Cheer.

MAKE your own barometer by taking a long narrow bottle, double it in two and one-half drachms complete eleven drachms spirit of wine (alcohol); dissolve in another bottle thirty-eight grains saltpeter and thirty-eight grains ammonia in nine drachms water and add. Cork the bottle and seal it with wax, then make a very small aperture in the wax and cork, with a red-hot needle.

BROWN AS A COIN DETECTOR.

How Some Bank Officers Managed to Test Peculiarities of a Dollar.

"Is that a good half dollar?" asked a gentleman of a friend, as they entered a Dearborn street cigar store. "I can tell all the peculiarities of spurious pieces. I lacked like the felt greasy and smoked dead white Brown on the counter.

Without waiting for an answer the gentleman said: "I had some fun once with one of these pieces. I was playing once in a bank at Akron, a few many years ago, and there we was a man whom I will call Brown, sometimes here to defend himself, who used to leaf about the bank and stick his nose in everybody's business. He was a dreadful bore, always getting up some little practical jokes on others, and never learned of the slightest joke on himself. One day Mr. Bradley, the cashier, and Mr. Island, who has been Mayor of Minneapolis, fixed up a job. I was to go out and pretend to make a collection, bringing back some three half dollars, which had been provided. I went, and when I returned handed the money over the cashier's desk to Bradley.

"Here, said he, holding up the half looking coin, 'what kind of money are you all this?'

"Island, Brown jumped up, as I thought he would, and, looking at the coin, began to laugh as if he could not know anything more than to take a counterfeit as that.

"I said I thought it was a good money Brown said I was a fool. Then Mr. Island said he would show me to be right.

"'Well, and Brown. The schemer of you, Island. A man that has handled millions and millions, as you have, ought to know just a little something about money.'

"'I do, said Mr. Island, and that why I say this is a good piece.'

"'I'd bet $1,000 it isn't good money said Brown.

"'All right, said Mr. Island, taking up a pen and writing a check to the amount, I take the bet.'

"Both checks were written, when Brown asked, 'Who is to decide?'

"'You may, replied Mr. Island, pulling off the tiny tin foil with which the good coin had been carefully covered.

"Brown was the mildest man I ever saw. Oh, how he ripped and swore! he called us a set of Indians, and compared to rob him, and said he would rather have his money at a bar of a beer saloon than trust it in the keeping any lawyer. As he wrote the check he shouted it specially at the workload toward another bank. He never, however, said he had no money with us, simply because he knew it was indicious from a transcript point of view. In a few days he learned that Mr. Island never had any idea of keeping his $3,000; but for some reason or other he did not half plant the bank. The he fell back into his old habits, and played another trick on him. It took like the same trick, and Brown was glad to play the same joke on Island played before. But this time it was a counterfeit half dollar we had provided another trick on him. It looked

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

The Detroit Evening Journal may be straddle the fence on politics, but it is not on the tariff,—it strikes hard for protection.

A Michigan farmer propounds the following question in the Chicago Tribune: "We should like to inquire of some believer in a high tariff if the American manufacturers cannot compete with the European without the aid of a tariff, how is it that we could sell to England in the two years of 1880 and 1881 20,788,992 yards more of cotton goods than we bought of her?"

Most parents are too careless about the character of books, periodicals and papers their children read—boys more especially. Those who have investigated the evil influences of bad reading in New York, report that of the 3,313 inmates of the homes of refuge in that city, nearly every boy under 16 years of age, confined there, had been a reader of "slime novels." "As ye sow, so shall ye reap."

The Detroit Evening Journal makes the following center shot: "Texas is a democratic state to the tune of 60,000 majority, or more. The Texas treasury contains $1,075,000 in cash to-day. The state does not owe a dollar, and the officials are puzzled to know what to do with the money. We publish this information for the benefit of the republican organs that are eternally shouting about the danger of democratic rule."

At a recent printers' banquet in New York, Henry Ward Beecher declared that it is a crime to print a newspapers in small type. "God might wink at such a crime," he remarked, "but the man who continually reads such a sheet would soon be deprived of the pleasure of winking." We are glad to observe that Mr. Beecher has profited by the clear type and clean pages of the JOURNAL, two of the strong points that commend it to popular favor.—Stolen.

The Detroit Evening News and Evening Journal are rated as independent rather than political papers. They are not. They are partisan of the bitterest kind. The News is free trade and the Journal is protection, and each represents the extreme view of its party. No matter what the name of the party which espouses either of these principles, their partisanship is none the less radical whether they own the party name or not. "Fiat" money found as extreme supporters as these, a few years ago, yet the money question was settled without serious injury to any industry, although dire misfortune was promised by the party in power if any change was made. The tariff and revenue questions can be settled equally well and without a fraction of the damage that is caused by the croakers who claim to fear a change.

Michigan Crop Report for January.

For this report returns have been received from 739 correspondents representing 591 townships. Four hundred and sixty-six of these returns are from 343 townships in the southern four tiers of counties.

At Lansing the average temperature during December was 28 degrees F., the highest, on the 7th, 56 degrees F., and and the lowest on the 19th, 2 degrees F. It began snowing in various, perhaps all, parts of the state on the 14th, and during the next few days snow fell in sufficient quantity to cover the wheat fairly well, and the ground has not been bare since. This statement is made up from meteorological returns to the state board of health.

Farm animals are yet in very good condition, but correspondents quite generally note the fact that the failure of the corn crop begins to tell in their appearance. To the question "has wheat during December suffered injury from any cause?" 89 correspondents in the southern and 78 in northern answer "yes," and 323 correspondents in the southern counties and 154 in the northern answer "no." "Horse distemper," "epizootic," and "catarrhal inflammation" in horses are reported prevalent in a number of localities. "Hog cholera" is reported from a few localities, and the presence of "chicken cholera" is noted by two correspondents.

The quantity of wheat on hand in the southern four tiers of counties is estimated at 23 per cent, and in the northern counties 28 per cent of the 1883 crop. These figures indicate about 7,559,284 bushels of wheat now in the hands of farmers.

The quantity of wheat reported marketed since the first of September is 5,977,712 bushels, but as reports have been received from only about one-half of the mills and elevators in the state, the total quantity marketed is probably twice this amount, or say 11,950,000 bushels. The quanity used for seed is probably about 2,500,000 bushels, and the amount consumed by farmers, and others supplied directly from farmers' bins may be estimated at 1,500,000 bushels, making the total amount marketed, used for seed, and consumed by farmers, 15,950,000 bushels. Deduct this amount from the total product, 23,147,135 bushels, and we have 7,197,135 bushels as the probable amount remaining in farmers' hands, or about 312,000 bushels less than the amount as estimated by crop correspondents.

Historical Society.

Reported for the Journal.

Mrs. L. E. Allen's spacious parlors were well filled on Tuesday evening, by a meeting of the historical society, John Nicholls presiding.

The program for the evening opened with an instrumental by Mrs. Ella Smith.

Miss Maud Lovelay read the paper for the evening, describing in a clear and interesting manner "The operations of 1776."

W. A. Smith excelled his own record in a tenor solo.

Ed. F. Parmelee gave a select reading, the "Revolution rising."

Mrs. G. S. Thomas and Miss Essie Battars rendered an instrumental duet, and Mrs. Bradley and Miss Lottie Mason a vocal.

Mr. Severance, by a Shakesperean reading, added greatly to the evening's entertainment.

Mr. Parmelee closed the exercise with a vocal solo.

The society will meet next Tuesday evening at the parlors of Hon. A. Battars.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by UPRIGHT BROS., real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Jan. 22, 1884, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Richard Williams to Wm. Ferguson, Shore lot 17-33-7, $100.

J. C. Glenn and wife to Walter L. French, 30x60, off e end of lot 1 blk 1 South Lake, $500.

Thomas C. Bird and wife to John Peterson, 4 acres on se cor. of se ¼ 16-33-7, $100.

Jason Lewis to W. F. Empey & Co. w½ of se¼ 26-32-6, $150.

Job Printing

AT THE JOURNAL OFFICE.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, (free of charge,) with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. Parties wishing the prescription, will please address, REV. E. A. WILSON, 194 Penn. St., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

Advance Lumber Company

Are now prepared to do

CUSTOM SAWING

Promptly and on short notice. We have on hand a large quantity of

Hard and Soft Wood Lumber and Hemlock Timber.

GIVE US A TRIAL. ADVANCE LUMBER CO. ADVANCE, MICH.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds,

Imported and Domestic Perfumery,

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Barnhart's new block

Opera Block

Joseph Hyland,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Heavy blacksmithing of all kinds, and Repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

GEO. W. MILLER,

DEALER IN

Clothing

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

Hats and Caps, Trunks and Satchels,

GLOVES MITTENS, ETC.

Buttars' Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

AT COST!

All kinds of

Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Ever brought to Charlevoix.

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.

They have no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY,

And Satisfaction Guaranteed.

L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House

CHARLEVOIX.

Overcoats!

AND

SUITINGS

Gents' Overcoats.

Youths' Overcoats.

Boys' Overcoats.

Gents' Suits.

Youths' Suits.

Boys' Suits.

I have just received a large assortment of the above goods, bought at reduced rates. I am selling these goods for less than they are actually worth at wholesale. I have a line of Overcoats I am closing out at $2.00. Big bonanza for the money. Call and examine these goods and judge for yourself.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Nov., 1883.

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS,

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

Local Business Notices.

Dried Apples, Onions, Pork, etc., by Uptegraf, Emrey & Co.

For Sale.—Two or three good horses cheap for cash or good security. J. MILO EATON.

All grades of Shingles at Upright, Emrey & Co.'s.

FOR SALE. A second hand portable mill, with engine and boiler complete, in good order. Call soon. J. MILO EATON.

The only store in town who make a specialty of single Fine Hats, is Upright, Emrey & Co.

Wood, Wood, Wood. 100 cords of good dry birch and maple wood for sale. Good measure guaranteed. Call at the office of J. MILO EATON.

Upright, Emrey & Co.'s Apples and potatoes stand the hearts of all who have tried them. For sale by the barrel and bushel.

The Temperature.

The following is a record of observations of the thermometer at the JOURNAL office, at 7 a. m., and 2 p. m., for the week ending yesterday, as we go to press in all cases unless marked with a *.

	7 AM	2 PM
Thursday	26	27
Friday	20	20
Saturday	*5	*3
Sunday	8	16
Monday	3	21
Tuesday	2	*3
Wednesday	0	*4

Provision Market.

RETAIL PRICE TO CONSUMERS.

Corrected by Upright, Emrey & Co.

FLOUR, per bbl, $6.00@8.00.

GRAHAM FLOUR, per cwt, $2.00.

FEED, per cwt, bolted $2.00, unbolted, $1.90.

Meal, per ton, $20.

Oats, per bu, 40c.

POTATOES, per bu, 25@30c.

APPLES, per bu, $1.10.

ONIONS, per bu, 50@60.

BUTTER, per lb, 20@30c.

Eggs, per doz, 20@25c.

LARD, per lb, 10c.

Pork, per lb, 5@7c.

Dressed Pork, per lb, 6@7c.

Fresh Meats from the Market.

Beef, roast, 12@17c; steak, 20c; corned, 8@10c; mutton, 8@12c; sausage, 15c; hams, 14c; shoulders, 12c.

News Brevities.

"Have you your sled?"

The ice harvest continues brisk.

L. E. Allen is in Detroit this week.

H. H. Vannorman is slowly recovering.

D. Sea is in Detroit this week on business.

Will Sea is again in the employ of T. D. Smith.

How did you get that "tin" bad co'd upon your head?

Jas. Washburn is pushing the work on his schooner.

A new church at Barnard next summer is talked of.

W. A. Smith returned home from Ottawa on Tuesday.

Didn't you forget to bring that wood for the Journal.

The meetings at Barnard continue with unabated interest.

Ice 12 inches clear is taken out of Round Lake this week.

The JOURNAL and the Weekly Free Press one year for $2.00.

Hr. Mel Livingston, of Boyne, is now one of the JOURNAL force.

Richard Williams, of Ironton, was one of our callers on Tuesday.

At 7 o'clock this morning the thermometer indicated 23° below.

Boys find the south end of Bridge street an excellent place for coasting.

A. R. Upright is in Kalamazoo this week on business connected with the lodge.

Jas. Hyland is overhauling and refitting the boiler of the tug Bob Emmons.

The thermometer has indicated zero, and below, several times during the past week.

Edwin Cook, of Inwood, gave the Journal a brief call on Tuesday. Come again.

Sliding down hill has been the favorite evening pastime of the young folks of late.

We hear that a party of four or five gentlemen have purchased a sawmill which will soon be erected near Wm. Black's, south of this village.

None seem to stand the chill of a frosty morning better than the little boy with his sled.

Last Saturday morning opened clear and cold with the thermometer 9° below zero, and no wind.

Unhappy is the little boy or girl this winter who isn't the possessor of a sled or a pair of skates.

Paul Chartrand, of Rock Elm, has, it is said, one of the cleanest, best improved farms in his vicinity.

The Fremont Indicator just at hand, is a five column quarto with the first page full of local brevities.

M. J. Stockman arrived home last Friday. He reports colder and more disagreeable weather outside than we have here.

Mr. D. J. Hays, for some time assistant book-keeper for the iron company at Ironton, has returned home to remain.

Charlevoix has an amateur engraver who turns out work equal to much that is done in the cities.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

Mr. Harry Tooker will carry "static shooting sticks" and point out "type lice" to the visitors at the Journal of fice for a few months.

J. Milo Eaton and Geo. A. Leonard went to Grand Rapids on Tuesday, to look after the manufacture of special machinery for the brush handle factory.

The M. E. Sunday School is on the road to successful work. With mercury ranging from 10 to 12 degrees below zero, there were 110 present last Sunday.

If you want a first class weekly paper from the metropolis of the state, come and pay its two dollars for the JOURNAL and the Detroit Weekly Free Press one year.

The ladies' aid society of the M. E. church will meet with Mrs. Iddings, at the parsonage, next Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. All are requested to be present.

A child of Albert O'Brian, of Norwood, has been very sick for some time but is now so far recovered as to permit Mr. O'Brian to return to his work in the lumber woods.

The "Round Lake Fish Co." have built a shanty on the ice and gone into business. They will be ready to supply the trade—after they get enough for their own breakfast.

From the amount of lumber being sawed this winter to be used for building purposes next summer we should judge that Boyne City will easily double in size this year.—Statesman.

Edwin Cook, of Norwood, has fatted and sold nine head of cattle this winter, selling the last of the herd to Elk Rapids butchers last week. This is but one of many items of his success.

We don't think there will be enough vessels navigating Lake Michigan next season to carry all the shipping wood, logs, etc., being got out here this winter. It is really immense.—Statesman.

Fox's ponies ran away last Thursday afternoon, and threw out. Geo. Miller's little girl, and then ran to the barn and stopped against a tree. Luckily the girl was not seriously injured.

The ladies of the Congregational church and society will give an oyster supper, at the Bridge Street House, on Friday evening of this week. Supper will commence at 7 o'clock. All are invited.

Miss Lizzie Watson, for the past four months a compositor on the JOURNAL has returned to her home near Bay Springs. She will make a trip to visit friends in the west in the near future.

The Mancelona Herald was printed last week on a fine quality of tinted book paper, and announces its intention of continuing. That paper must be making something more than ordinary profits.

During last year 2,510,935 passengers were carried on the various steamers in the eighth supervising district of the great lakes and out of the whole number only 42 lives were lost, six by the foundering of the steamer Manistee in Lake Superior Nov. 16, and six by the foundering of the steam barge H. C. Akely on Lake Michigan Dec. 13. The crew of the Manistee were also lost, making a total of 16 lives lost attributed to the dangers of navigation. There were 9 accidents by fire, 6 by collision 1 by stung, and 10, steamers were wrecked or foundered with a loss of property amounting to $363,905.

Peter McPherson, an old resident a few miles south of Charlevoix, who went to Kansas with his family a year ago, recently returned overland with horses and wagon. They were two months on the road returning.

"What will the harvest be?" is the question now asked by many of our leading farmers. From all reports it will undoubtedly be a good one, as wheat is reported as looking exceedingly fine in most parts of the country.—Ex.

Three of Mr. Bacot's children narrowly escaped drowning yesterday. They were riding on a load of saw logs on the ice, and the load went through, and the children were pretty thoroughly chilled before they could be rescued.

"Romy" Emrey, who has charge of Upright, Emrey & Co's camp, manages 15 to 20 men, and gets out 35 cords of wood every day, no matter what the weather is. This is his first experience, but he proves himself able and successful.

The Gratiot Democrat, which was burned on Jan. 4th; resumed publication, with the aid of its neighbors, without missing a date. Johnson's personal loss was considerable, but he is not one to sit down and cry over misfortune.

We understand the proceeds of the oyster supper at the Bridge Street House to-morrow evening are to be devoted to furnishing the Sunday-school room in the new church. It is a worthy object and our citizens should patronize liberally.

The manufacturing company are building foundations for their engine and boiler this week, and will soon have them in their place. The windows and doors are in the lower story and men can work there very comfortably in the coldest weather.

J. Milo Eaton drove to Boyne last Saturday on the ice, and cut ten or a dozen holes in different places to learn its thickness. The thinnest he found was not less than six inches, and most of it was eight to ten inches of clear solid ice. He thinks it entirely safe for teams with moderate loads.

Touching the matter of successful missionary work here, and the appreciation of it, we have been informed that many on going out the M. E. Church have indulged in such remarks as "how delightful the service," "precious Savior," etc. This is without doubt a great encouragement to the pastor.

The Charlevoix Sentinel suggests and the Harbor Springs Republican approves Hon. A. Buttars of Charlevoix as the next republican nominee for lieutenant-governor. Buttars is a clean, strong man and mentally and physically wouldn't rattle around in any chair the people might call him to fill.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

For the morning service at the M. E. Church next Sunday the subject selected is "The Immortality of the Soul." The discussion "will go upon the basis that there is something in us all, which fire cannot burn nor death assail,—impregnable to corruption." For the evening service the subject announced is "How to shine." If you will hear the discussion "you will understand how Daniel came to talk about shining." Can you be present?

The Clinton and Shiawassee Union says: "This is a time when everyone should do his best to financially help his neighbor, by not withholding from him any of those rights which are due from a creditor to a debtor, or a debtor to a creditor. Let every one so far as he can, prove his manhood, and soon the pinch will have passed, and in the months beyond we can look forward to a harvest that must even now be recognized as our bridge of safety."

The Allegan Gazette makes the following remarks concerning a subject that is now of considerable importance to fruit growers: "Whenever the mercury flirts with zero people begin to wonder if the peach buds have been hurt, and the question has been asked many times this week. The Michigan peach bud is pretty hardy under some circumstances. When the wood ripens thoroughly the buds will stand twenty degrees below zero, especially if the succeeding weather does not become suddenly warm. If the wood goes into the winter in a growing, unripe condition, ten degrees below zero would kill the buds. Last fall was late and pleasant, and the trees entered the winter in fine order."

Mr. William Van Buren, who has been connected with the State printing office of W. S. George & Co., at Lansing, for 13 years, has acquired an undivided one-third interest in the business, and will continue to fill the position of business manager. Mr Van Buren is one of the best printers in Michigan, and a most excellent business man. He has a host of friends throughout the State and is extremely popular with those having dealings with the state printing house or the Lansing Republican office.

"Six months ago" the JOURNAL "had a healthy appearance and was quite a favorite here, besides building fair to become a strong rival of the Sentinel," but now "it seems to have lost its early energy."—Statesman. If a constant increase of business, as well as personal commendations for the clean, newsy paper, means loss of energy, why, then we are "guilty," and we are willing it shall continue. As to the slang: if you do not already understand what it means, you will later on. It is well understood around here, though.

The lawyers in attendance on the Supreme Court had considerable fun at the expense of one of their number, who was making an able legal argument on Wednesday. He was explaining to the court that he was not able to discuss all the points raised by the opposing counsel for the reason that he had been handed their brief but a few moments before they began to speak, and he said that he had listened to the argument of learned counsel with one ear while reading the brief with the other! Of course this brought down the house."

The Kalamazoo Telegraph has secured a correspondent in this place, and readers of that paper who are interested in this town and vicinity may reasonably expect to find its news department more valuable to them than heretofore. The Telegraph is doing as much or more than any other state paper to build up Charlevoix, and this will make a material addition to the efficiency of their efforts. An increasing subscription list to their daily or weekly edition would prove the appreciation of our citizens of the service rendered.

We have recently received two copies of the Eaton Rapids Journal, a handsome, newsy, six-column quarto. Sixteen years ago next March we entered that office in the position of "satanic majesty." It was then a seven-column folio, both sides printed at home, but was frequently issued as a half sheet for lack of paper. Its type was old and worn out,—the remains of the Lansing State Journal,—and was a very poor specimen of printing as compared with the present handsome sheet. J. B. TenEyck, the editor, who was also postmaster, years ago, was called upon for a "corrected proof," and his form was locked up and laid away by the side of his ancestors. Eaton Rapids whiskey was the chief obstacle to his financial success, though he was seldom intoxicated, Henry A. Shaw was judge of probate, and it was currently reported at that time that the fees for printing were frequently staked at the poker table, and the judge's success at the game left the editor with little besides "dead type" to show that his was the official paper of that department of the county. The high water in Grand River, in the spring of '68, swept down main street, and deposited huge blocks of ice in the street as far down as the old Herrick House.

Farm Produce of every description taken in exchange at Upright, Emrey & Co's.

Cash! Cash! Cash! Bring your Tires, Wool, and Furs to Upright, Emrey & Co's and get the Cash for them.

Eating and starving, it is all the same, for you are sure to suffer from Piles. No worse torture can be conceived of. Blind or itching piles are unequaled for annoyance, but by a few applications of Purmelee's Pile Suppositories they entirely disappear. The kind is often inserted by physicians for the removal of protruding piles, but such barbarity is not a necessity for Purmelee's Pile Suppositories used according to directions quickly reduce, replace, and drive them away. Warranted to cure. Price 50 cents per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

ANOTHER FIRE.

Whiskey Brings Disgrace and Ruin to a Once Happy Home.

Henry Cunningham, living in the south part of town, has been on a spree for several days. Last Saturday night, it is reported, he drove his wife to the neighbors by various threats. On Sunday she saw the marshal, but when that officer arrived at the scene of action all was quiet and he claimed no jurisdiction, but advised the woman to get a warrant early Monday morning if she wanted to do anything about it, then the man could be taken care of. This, for some reason, she did not do. During Monday, while Cunningham was away from the house, the wife went and secured the three children, and hid them away, so she told so he could not find them. Sometime during the evening he returned to his home. About ten o'clock one of the neighbors was awakened by him, with the report that his house was burning. Two men started for the house, but could see no light, nor the man who gave the alarm. They went inside and found the house full of smoke. After vain efforts to get to the chamber, where the fire seemed to be, they removed the furniture from the lower room, and decided that they could do no more toward saving the property, so by that time the entire upper story was beyond help. It is supposed that Cunningham went to bed smoking, and the fire communicated to the bed. The wonder is that he was not himself suffocated. If the children had not been taken away during the day, the probabilities are that they would have perished. This matter may yet find a place in the courts.

Hayes.

Occasional cold days, with the thermometer at zero.

The sleighing is not to be excelled.

Chas. Whitford, the school inspector, is visiting the schools in this town ship.

The M. E. protracted meeting at Fair Grove, closed last week. A society of 28 members was organized.

The way some of the farmers are getting out logs, and from appearances, and what they say, there will be some buildings erected next season.

A new comer arrived at Mr. Yores—a little girl.

Quite a number of men of this township, are at work near South Arm.

Mrs. Ella Gregory, of Cross Village, is visiting her parents, W. S. Baker, at present. Mr. Baker's daughter, Mrs. Jennie Wade, returned to her home last week.

Miss Flora Nelson is teaching the Whitford school. The schools of this township are now all supplied with teachers.

Chas. Whitford is building a dock at his mill on Pine Lake. He expects to ship lumber next summer.

Young men of this vicinity should be on their guard, as some of the ladies here are observing leap year.

ZEKE.

List of Jurors.

The following is a list of jurors drawn for the February term of circuit court to be held in Charlevoix, commencing Feb. 26th.

John Gemmel, Bear Lake.
Jas. D. Mitchell, Boyne Valley.
Chas. Bellinger, Charlevoix.
Geo. W. Howard, Chandler.
Daniel Painter, Evangeline.
A. L. Cash, Eveline.
Wm. M. Hood, Hayes.
Lewis F. Price, Hudson.
Ben. J. Rice, Marion.
Geo. Wardrof, Melrose.
Jno. Muirhead, Norwood.
S. M. Richardson, South Arm.
Addison Darron, Springvale.
Chas. A. Bachman, Wilson.
Jno. Simmons, Bear Lake.
Wm. Nelson, Boyne Valley.
A. Buttars, Charlevoix.
Wm. Tingle, Chandler.
Jas. H. Thompson, Evangeline.
Geo. M. Wood, Eveline.
Geo. Pierce, Hayes.
J. D. Leach, Hudson.
Henry Dixon, Marion.
Amsden Stafford, Norwood.

C. R. BELLINGER

carries the largest and finest stock of

JEWELRY,

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Oxford Goods in Charlevoix county. Agent for the celebrated ROCKFORD WATCH, the best that plate can make. All goods left for repairs and not called for in six months are subject to sale for charges.

MODERN MARRIAGES.

O Love! Love! Love! what those were those Long ere the Deluge, kept Adam awake,
And Between lone and silence broke
When, in the green Arcadian close,
You married Coupie only the two,
With only the cross for a bedding!
Hours to hug, and hand to hand,
Yet, amid Nature's sweet companionship,
Both in the Garden of Eden alone!
Not asked for a thousand wedding.

So have we read, in classic rhyme,
How Hero watched for her beloved,
Night after night, in the storm and wind,
She was the bride, bride-maid, and
And waited, and watched, for her golden hair,
Whenever he landed golden and bare,
With nothing to eat and nothing to wear.
And what? Than any sonnet
For Love was Love, and Lover Hero were—
(Ah! for the thrill! the wonder the tears!)
And Love was sweet, all the world over,
Wherever Cupid might wander!

So thousands of years have come and gone,
And still the moon is shining on,
Still Hymen's torch is lighted,
And couples, in this land of the West,
Some couples, I have been thought it best
To follow the ancient fashion of the rest,
And quietly get married.

But now, True Love, you're growing old—
Bought and sold with silver and gold,
Lady Love is home and carriage!
Moonlight walks,
The chance of the eye and the sweetest sigh,
The shadowy haunts with no—one by,
Is the wish to dispense!
Hit—over this
Is the wish to be alone,
In the quietude of marriage,
And the quietness sweet is not complete
Till the Clergyman pronounces it sweet
Before the altar of Mammon;
And the bride must be left a silver tower,
Where pearls and rubies fall in a shower
And a wedding fashion Joy for Mammon
Cupid, adieu!

"A WITLESS THING."

"A document in audence; thoughts and circumstances after!"—Hamlet, act iv., scene 5.

"Now remember, Lord Grayton," said the Doctor, solemnly, "all I told you. You are very welcome to come to our ball, though, as a rule, we only ask a certain set of wise men and maidens like unto our ways and their ways. Still, you are a good fellow, humorous and cheery, and if you are sensible you can enjoy yourself, and, maybe, do them a world of good. I believe in electricity as a curative agent—not the much humbugged of belts and chains and music boxes, that only shake the nerve centers, but the real electricity of animal spirits, the tonic of good health."

"I shall do exactly as I am bid," said Lord Grayton, a handsome, thoughtful, muscular young man, strong as a horse, buoyant as a balloon, just back after a self-imposed exile of five years in India with the big game; "but tell me of all these confounded cautions again. I did a lot of dancing of various kinds years ago, before I went after the tigers"—and he laughed as mingled memories of Mayfair and the Lotus club swam back to him—"and I've tried both the Corrobore and the Salonga; but 'pon honor I never danced with a lunatic girl yet."

"Are you quite sure of that?" said the Doctor, grimly; "they are to be met with outside Copwood, I can tell you. However, listen; the rule is simple. Be civil and don't contradict. If old Crackton asks you to play chess, play. He's a good player, and will beat you fairly if he can; if he can't he'll make a false move and call 'checkmate,' and then you must resign. If poor Snobby thinks you are the Prince, and 'Sirs' you all over the place, and throws out hints about being asked to Sandringham; if you are asked to listen to the claimy clock in Blake's interiors, or to avoid some one else, because he's glass and night break, you must do your best to be courteous to them all, and on no account laugh at their fancies."

"Sounds rather jammy. And the ladies?"

"I'll see to that, and introduce you to the nicest, and tell you what to avoid speaking about; and one will make the talking for themselves, the women don't talk much."

"Sign of insanity, I suppose. And what am I to talk about?"

"Everything save some one thing—the Empress of Austria, or the stage, or white roses, or Mr. Mullock, or black stockings. I'll give you the one—never fear; only it may happen that one of them will ask you to dance, and then you must steer as best you can—talk anxiety or art on chance. My own girls and their friends get on famously with the male patients, and you must do your best. Come, you are going to be our best tonic to-night, and you must be off and dress; 9 sharp, mind, as they all go to bed at midnight."

"Queer thing this," soliloquized Grayton, as he completed his elaborate dressing, "beginning my first season after five years by dancing with a lot of lunatics. Hope they won't wear straw in their hair; if they do I shall bolt to the Congleton dance."

He had many strange adventures that evening as he strolled about the pretty hall room at the Copwood private asylum. He was duly dedicated at chess by the venerable Crackton, who deliberately did back a captured queen on the board, and performed prodigies of valor with her. He sympathized with the gentleman who had swallowed a crocodile, and he noticed the pale, nervous man who amused himself by counting the lights on each side of the room and singing a ditty to himself. "Sorry I can't admit it, sir, sorry I can't admit it." He had been in acoustic either once upon a time. He noticed the fussy little man with the pale lilac sleeve tie, who hunted to stage-management the sixteen lancers, and who piteously entreated the dancers "to go that all over again, please, and try to get it giggsier," and the erratic journalist, who wrote paragraphs on his shirt cuffs, and many other folks that passed by in the most pageant of unsettled reasons.

"There's King Lear," whispered the Doctor, as "a very foolish, fond old man, four score and upward," passed them, muttering of "Brighton A's;" "you know, who he was?" and he whispered a name in Grayton's ear that made the nobleman whistle softly.

"And are there my Ophelias, 'whose young mind's wits should be as mortal as an old man's life?'" asked Grayton, showing that he knew his Shakspeare as well as the Doctor.

"Yes, but we keep their secret. Now go and dance," and the Doctor took King Lear off for a cup of coffee.

It was a sad, weird sight altogether, and, as Grayton watched it, it reminded him of Kauffmann's "Dance of Death," and he felt oddly morbid as he thought of his own lonely life. He had once loved and given his heart to a woman whom he had both idealized and idolized; he had youth, brains, and with her he felt he could conquer the world. It was an old story; she turned out to be as heartless as she was lovely, and so he took to the tigers. He had got over it all now, but he shuddered as he remembered the fret of it all, and thought how near madness he had been driven when he heard of her ultimate fate and where her life had drifted to. So there where Ophelias lone! More like Andreys, he thought, as he watched some rather uncouth gambling in a corner. His eyes wandered round the room and rested on a face.

It was an exquisite oval face, sometimes sad and wistful in expression, at that rare, delicate olive color one sees in the South; with the skin of as fine a texture that the red flush springs up through the veins tinting it at a moment's excitement, the large brown eyes were soft and dreamy, the chiseled mouth was half parted, and the dark-brown hair, looking black as night, was worn Greek fashion close to the head, escaping in undulating lines past the tiny rose-tipped ears. She was seated on a low sofa, surrounded by people, but with bath maids. She wore a simple white frock, just sufficiently trilled round the little white celium of her throat, and a great black-red rose nestled in her breast. One little high-arched foot, in peach-colored netted silk, kept swinging to the music. No one seemed to talk to her except the Doctor, who smiled pleasantly as she passed, and said something to which she answered with a nod.

"Ophelia at last," said Grayton to himself, and in melancholy vein he wished he were Hamlet, and could lie at her feet and watch the play.

"Poor Ophelia! divided from herself and her fair judgment!" the quotation was irresistible. "I wonder what sent her here—some brute of a man, or a soldier-lover killed at Kassassin, perhaps! I hope this terrible Meg Merrilies is not going to ask me to dance" and he moved away as he saw a wild-eyed woman bearing down upon him, to a seat somewhere near the pale girl with the black-red rose.

For a time he watched her; then he tried to imagine her. At last their eyes met; he stared her full in the face. She never shrank from his look, only a sort of pitying light seemed to glow in the sorrowful eyes. A moment passed, and then she arose quietly and with perfectly self-possessed grace walked over to him—to his intense astonishment, sat down quietly by his side, and said, in a soft, musical voice:

"You seem sad to-night; I am sorry."

For a moment he was tongue-tied; then he recollected his instructions and pulled himself together.

"Well, I think I was sad because you were looking so."

"Was I? I suppose I always do, then. Of course being here naturally makes one feel sad. But we won't talk of that," she added, quickly. "Do you care for dancing? I'll dance with you, if you like."

"Danced with you?"

"Oh, yes, if you like; many of the others dance, you know."

"But why should we assume to recognize her and state?" thought Grayton, as he stood up and passed his arm round poor Ophelia's slender waist, wondering how she would "jig and mable." They were playing the "Dream Faces," and as they swung in modulated rhythm to the pretty song he felt that few slips of same it would come up to her.

"That's light," said the Doctor, encouragingly; "set a good example." "Mean the Doctor to be a tonic, I suppose," thought Grayton; so he carried off Ophelia for an ice.

"You dance beautifully," she said. "No, you sit down and I'll get you the ice; there, now, there's a spoon and a wafer; now you feel comfortable, don't you? Don't that a lovely value?

"Yes, I'm fond of Dream Faces; the people one meets in dreams are generally vastly nicer than the real folk. I have many dream friends."

"Have you?" she said, looking amused; "tell me of them."

"Well, you know, I think I'm married to a dream-fe—just like Gilbert's Princess Toto, you know, with her dream husband. And she comes to me sometimes and scolds me for my ways—mostly anything wrong in the day; and sometimes sees very loving, and sometimes she's cross and doesn't come near me for weeks."

He felt as if he were telling a fairy tale to a child.

"How charming! Do tell me more of her. Is she beautiful? What is she like?"

This fanciful conceit seemed to amuse her, so he went on describing pretty pictures of an ideal woman; then grew ing unconsciously eloquent. He burst out, "Ah, if one could only meet her alive, what a wife she would make! A very second self, aiding, sympathizing, helping, loving—at once the cheerest of chums and the most idolized of idols."

The lad flushed a little as he spoke, but she went on, "What a pretty picture! Where did you get your beautiful thoughts about marriage?"

"I suppose my dream girl taught me."

"Is she pretty?"

Grayton wondered if deliberate barefaced compliment would be a good tonic for a lunatic. "Yes, beautiful. She has large brown eyes, wonderful hair, a low voice, an olive oval face, she dances superbly, and she wears a black-red rose in her dress."

Ophelia looked a little frightened. "Forgive me, I didn't mean to be rude, but she is—really, you are not angry with me?" and he laid his hand gently on hers.

"Oh, no!" then there was a pause. "Come, and let me show you some pictures; I'm something of an artist myself," and she led him into a long gallery, and talked art so sensibly and sympathetically that here, at all events, he felt there was very pleasant method in her madness.

"Talking art" is a recognized method of interchanging sympathies.

He was no bad judge of a picture; but he prefer-red to admit ignorance, and asked the stupidest questions simply for the pleasure of hearing her talk. There was a kind of innocent dignity about her unmitigated bosh. She was more like a vestal virgin than a bacchante. So the evening passed all too quickly, till he confided to himself that Lord Grayton was an important division in the Lords that night, and that he was bound to be "not entered" before the clock struck 11, and after that he had promised to dance another dance.

"Must you go away?" she said; "why?"

"Well, you see, I'm one of those mischievous hereditary legislators, and I am bound to vote against you; I must be in our House at 11."

Of course she could not have understood a word he said, for she murmured to herself, "I hear fellows so young to get to make to Mr. Jarvis, and that he wished me correspondence with him. Considering his personal relations with the President he had no right to be at the drawing-room.

A week later Mr. John Adams went to the Capitol to deliver messages from the President to each member of Congress. Having delivered that address to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, he was passing through the rotunda toward the Senate chamber, when he was overtaken by Mr. Davis, who pulled his nose and slapped his face. A scuffle ensued, but they were quickly parted by Mr. Dorsey, a Representative from Maryland. President Adams notified Congress in a special message of the occurrence, and the House appointed a select committee of investigation. Witnesses were examined and elaborate reports were drawn up, but neither the majority nor the minority recommended that any punishment be inflicted upon Mr. Jarvis.—Brem: Pacing Power.

A Poetic Contest.

A resident of Cincinnati, drawing nigh 60 years of age, in his solemn moments ponders within himself by what means it might be made known to the world that such a man as Andrew Horner ever lived; and as according to his own estimation if he excelled in anything it was as a poet, he resolved to publish a volume of his manuscript poems, composed at various periods during his youthful life.

Finding it cheaper to get them printed at Glasgow, on his way he put up at the head inn in the town of Ayr. After tea, and seated enjoying a long pipe with a glass of grog, several noggins dropped in, who soon knew his business affairs, and prevailed upon him to read some of his compositions, which were much applauded one after another.

A critical remark, however, dropped from one of the company, who remarked that in believed there was a poor plowboy in the town who could make better poetry.

"Produce him," said Andrew.

The challenge was clenched by a lot of a guinea. The boy was found taking his porridge after a hard day's work, and with difficulty brought to the inn when he understood the business. Being seated, the lad was carving for writing materials, which were placed before Mr. Horner, who took the paper and wrote a little and rubbed his forehead impatiently, but at last passed the paper to John, who was sitting toward the celebrated Robert Burns) with the remark that Pegasus would not fly.

"You see, friends, I have written the year in which I was born, and intended to put into mind some events of my life, but then wot'l flow," and, passing the paper, he said, "Let the boy try."

Bobby, receiving the sheet, saw—

In seventeen hundred and twenty-nine,
And nine.

The old man read aloud to John, a smiler
Supplied it as a matter of course
But after it was he claimed his place.
Bobby, rubbing his head, said:
Antiquitie! Antiquitie! Horner.

Upon hearing this, Mr. Horner rammed his volume of manuscript into the fire, and returned home to Carlisle the following morning.

One of the Family.

"Say paul," said an Austin man to a stranger who was shuffling so slowly along the street that his shadow seemed to be stuck fast to the sidewalk, "don't you come from the West?"

"I reckon you're about right in your calculations," he drawled.

"I thought so."

"What made you think I hailed from the Far region?"

"Because I hear that there ben been a shower of small there lately, and I was sure that you must be one of the family."—Texas Siftings.

HUSHED.

USED-UP—A weather vane.

THE holiday ring—A say-whoop.

NEWS of the week—Health bulletins.

THE chord of sympathy is often best expressed by a cord of wood.

NOW hit the most inhumane would think of pulling down the blind.

"WHO'S the boss of this ship?" asked a landsman of a sailor. "Why, we do, sir; we boss it around pretty much." "Do you know anybody who can boss your rudder?" "Sure, and I know you well enough."

Twenty-four Hours to Live.

From John Kahn, Lafayette, Ind., who announces that he is now in "perfect health," we have the following: One year ago I was so old in appearance, in the last stages of consumption. Our best physicians gave my case up. I finally got so low that one doctor said I could only live twenty-four hours. My friends then purchased a bottle of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, which considerably terrified me. I continued until I took twelve bottles. I did not know the perfect health.

MANY persons in Illinois are using Ely's Cream Balm, a Catarrh remedy, with satisfactory results. A lady in Peoria writes the cause of small which she had not enjoyed in years before. She had given up her case as incurable. Mr. Barnes has used it in his family and commends it very highly. A Tuskaloosa lawyer, known to many of our readers, writes that he has found it a partial relief.—Pitcher (Ill.) Gazette. Not a liquid or snuff. See advt.

Universally Approved.

J. A. Rogers, M. D., of Dayton, O., says: "I have used Dr. Wm. Hall's Wine of Tar Syrup has been universally approved by my patients and myself. I never any complaints about it being sold it for years."

It is another evidence of the well-merited advancement of the PARK, FRYER AND PARSONS, Chemists, of Detroit, Mich., that they have received the highest awards at the Cincinnati, Boston, Paris, Philadelphia and Sydney Exhibitions. This put Britain ranks among the best and handsomest of family and medicinal papers, and its proprietors are fully able to carry on the office of the Cincinnati Exhibition award of $40,000 was made in the center to the subscribers, all of which was satisfactorily shown by the names and addresses, on the advertisements, of some of the receivers.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, depression of spirits and general debility in their various forms, we know of no remedy more efficacious than Hop Bitters. Its unexhaustible virtues are "Perry Davis's Pain Killer." Of Druggists, made by Carwell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best family medicine for patients recovering from fever or other sickness it has no equal.

The Best in the World.

Dr. J. W. Bradford, of Carrollton, Miss., says: I have sold Wright's Indian Vegetable Spring for years. It is the best cough remedy I know in the world. Sold by all druggists.

Be affected with Sore Eyes, use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye Water. Druggists sell it. 25c.

PERSONS suffering from the effects of Indiscretion, Decay, Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, etc., should send for Dr. Ward's Medical Treatise, which is published for the benefit of the unfortunate. Sent free, sealed, in plain envelope. Address, World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE PERSPIRING qualities of perfumes are well known to those who have any knowledge of Hyperscent at all, and this is why Hyperscent is valuable as a body perfumer, "carbolene" (odor of violets) is the best of all.

CONSUMPTIVES given up by doctors have found cures by Piso's Cure. 25 cents a bottle.

"Rough on Rats" clears out Rats, Mice, 15c.

Mother Sn.ln's Worm Syrup, fastidious. 25c.

"Roughon Coughs" Troches, Lozenges, 15c.

WRIGHT'S Mace Apple (Liver) Pills, 30c.

"Rough on Corns," Ladies' Corn Cure, 15c.

"Rough on Pain" Plasters, 15c.

"Rough on Bats" clears out Bats, 15c.

"Rough on Corns," for Corns, Warts, Bunions, 15c.

WELLS' Health Renewer cures Dyspepsia, Impotence.

The "Rough on" Tooth Powder, elegant, 15c.

McGillim's Opinion of Southern Generals.

"Who was the greatest Southern General?"

"There were two of them—Lee and Johnston."

"Which Johnston?"

"Joe."

"Lee was loved of Jefferson Davis' cousin of Albert Sidney Johnston. Do you agree with him?"

"Sidney Johnston died too soon. I had no opportunity to become acquainted with his merits as a commander, officers of ability and judgment, however, informed me that General Johnston was an officer of commanding ability. He enjoyed the friendship and confidence of Jefferson Davis, and he could trust him to display his abilities to their best."

"Which was the greater soldier, Joe Johnston or Robert E. Lee?"

"It would be difficult to tell. Both had generous commissions with their opportunities, and both deserve to be ranked among the greatest Generals of my age."

"Was either greater than the other?"

"I would be hard to tell. They were doubtless possessed of different qualities, and they were equally brilliant and matchless in performance. Lee was superb in the defensive and Johnston was without a peer in the offensive. Lee had grand fighting qualities, and Johnston was equally grand in planning a campaign."

"What about other Southern Generals?"

"I think Beauregard should rank next to Lee and Johnston. He made an excellent officer, and perhaps had as equal as an engineer in the army."

"Where is Longstreet's place?"

"He was an excellent fighter, and distinguished himself on the battle field, but Joe Johnston and Robert E. Lee were the soldiers of the Confederacy."

"Where Union generals?"

"You must put some one else to discuss them with you."

The Wide, Wide World.

LIVER DISEASE OF PERU.—Sonnr A. Alfa D. Ignis, LL.D., and Counselor, Tribunal of Justice, Lima, Republic of Peru, writes: One single application of St. Jacob's Oil, cured me completely of rheumatic pains so long left with me. I recommended it to many of my friends, Mr. Dennis Joyce, Kansas, widow, and Mr. D. Herman Decker, a German publisher. Madame Green was relieved entirely by the pain-curse from her old neuralgic pains of her months' standing. Mr. Decker was cured of neuralgiphobia pain in a complication of the nerves. Dr. Jacob's Oil is the great remedy for a speedy cure. Dr. Alfa D. Ignis, LL.D., was in his tribunal from his ailment by one or two applications, after having tried numberless other remedies without effect."

It Was Contempt.

In the days when he was a citizen of Detroit who has been gathered to his fathers was a Justice of the Peace for one of the wards, and he was busy one day as he sat in his office with people who had come to have their cases decided promptly, "it is some that some down to see from Aunty Clinker."

As he absent was once returning from a Democratic dinner, his hat never sun away, broke loose from the cart and pitched flat into the ditch. There he slept until morning, when a neighbor came along, who, waking him, said: "Is that you, Patrick Moriarty?" "I don't know whether it be or not, replied Pat, looking around. "I ma Patrick Moriarty. I've lost a pair of good horses; if I be not Patrick Moriarty I've found a good cart."

"My son has the elements of a good business man in him," said a gentleman to a friend whom he met on Fifth avenue. "How so?" "Why he can sign several men's names so natural that they couldn't tell them from their own."

"Indeed. By the way, here is a suit against you which I wish to collect." "I never gave it." "But your son sold it to me." "Oh, yes, I know." "The scamp's getting too dog-gested smart."—Hillsdale's Hickory.

Human Endurance in Water.

Man and animals are able to sustain themselves for long distances in the water, and would do so oftener were they not incapacitated, in regard to the former at least, by sheer terror, as well as complete clearness of their use powers. Webb's wonderful endurance will never be forgotten. But there are other instances only less remarkable. Some years since, the second mate of a ship fell overboard while in the act of hoisting a sail. It was blowing fresh; the time was night and the place some miles out on the stormy German ocean. The hapless fellow, nevertheless, managed to gain the English coast. Brock, with a dozen other pilots, was plying for fares by Yarmouth; and as the main sheet was belayed, a sudden puff of wind upset the boat, when presently all perished except Brock himself, who from 4 in the afternoon to 1 o'clock the next morning, swam thirteen miles before was due to hail a vessel in the offing. Exhausted beyond the capacity of swimming immense distances, although mainly to rest by the way, dog recently swam thirty miles in America to rejoin his master. A mule said a dog, washed overboard in the Bay of Biscay, have been known to make their way to shore. A dog swam ashore at the Cape of Good Hope with a letter in its mouth. The crew of the ship to which the dog belonged all perished, which they must not have done had they only ventured to tread water as the dog did. As a certain ship was labouring in the trough of the sea, a sailor found needful, in order to lighten the vessel, to throw some troop horses overboard. In other things, my informant, a staff surgeon, told me, when they found themselves abandoned, faced round and swam for miles after the vessel.—Health and Home.

A Special Invitation.

We especially invite a trial by all those suffering from Kidney and Liver complaints who have failed to obtain relief from other remedies and from doctors. Kidney-Wort, a powerful remedy, Kidney-Wort, has effected cures in many obstinate cases. It acts at once on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleansing the system of all poisonous humors, and restoring a healthy condition of those important organs. Do not be discouraged, but try it.

AMONG the tonics: Shoot party—Well, Pat, how's trade? (brass-digger—"Poorly, sure, entirely; since, we haven't buried a livin' soul this three weeks!"

Twenty-four Hours to Live.

From John Kahn, Lafayette, Ind., who announces that he is now in "perfect health," we have the following: One year ago I was so old in appearance, in the last stages of consumption. Our best physicians gave my case up. I finally got so low that one doctor said I could only live twenty-four hours. My friends then purchased a bottle of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, which considerably terrified me. I continued until I took twelve bottles. I did not know the perfect health.

Are you Constipated?
Have you Malaria?
Are you Bilious?
Are you tormented with Piles?
Are you troubled with Dyspepsia?
Ladies, are you suffering?
If you would Banish Disease and gain Health, Take
KIDNEY-WORT
THE BLOOD CLEANSER.

SHARP PAINS
HOP PLASTER

PATENTS
Young Men
JULIET CURSON

CONSUMPTION!
TO SPECULATORS.
GRAIN & PROVISION BROKERS.
ABSOLUTELY THE BEST. WILSON'S LIGHTNING SEWER!
ELASTIC TRUSS
THIS NEW
I CURE FITS!
POOR
Eggleston Truss Co., Chicago, Ill.

If you are Interested

In the inquiry—Which is the best Liniment for Man and Beast?—this is the reply and test. It penetrates every sore, wound, or lameness, to the very bone, and drives out all inflammatory and morbid matter. It "goes to the root" of the trouble, and never fails to cure in double quick time.

ALLEN'S Lung Balsam!
A GOOD FAMILY REMEDY!
—THAT WILL CURE—
COUGHS, COLDS, CROUP,
CONSUMPTION.
CONSUMPTION.
ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM
A SKEPTIC SAID
SAMARITAN NERVINE
THE GREAT
NERVE CONQUEROR
NEVER FAILS

$50,000 IN PRESENTS GIVEN AWAY!
OUR SECOND AWARD! This Offer Good Until May 1, 1884.
A FEW WHO RECEIVED PRESENTS
IN OUR LAST AWARD:
FOR ONE DOLLAR
The List of Presents to Be Given Our Subscribers;
THE FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE, 89 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

ST. JACOBS OIL
THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY FOR PAIN.
CURES Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Lumbago, Backache, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Swellings, Sprains, Bruises, Burns and Scalds, and all other bodily pains and aches.
THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

CATARRH
ELY'S CREAM BALM
HAY-FEVER
ELY'S CREAM BALM
CURES
CATARRH
HAY-FEVER
PRICE 50 CENTS.
ELY BROS., OWEGO, N. Y.

IF YOU WANT TO MAKE MONEY
640 ACRES
CHICAGO SCALE CO.
ORGAN AGENTS

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Jan. 24, 1884.

From the National Capital.

Notes and Interviews by a Journal Correspondent.

January 1st, 1884, has passed into the history of time, and with it the annals of another New Year Day festivities in Washington life. With the exception of Inauguration Day every four years, the first of January is the most brilliant day in Washington social and political circles, and although the inclemency of the weather this year detracted from the usual exhibitions of street gaiety, the indoor receptions in official and private residences were on a scale of lavish expenditure and display.

THE PRESIDENT'S RECEPTION of course was the center of attraction, to fully describe which would require to much of your valuable space, but a synopsis of the event may not be uninteresting to the readers of the JOURNAL.

The interior of the executive mansion was elaborately decorated with floral designs at an expense of nearly $10,000. At eleven o'clock as the first notes of "Hail to the Chief" were played by the marine band, stationed in the vestibule, President Arthur, accompanied by Mrs. Carlisle, entered the corridor followed by the members of his cabinet with their wives and some twenty-five prominent ladies without escort who were to assist in the reception. The party proceeded to the "Blue Room" in the middle of of which the president took up his position with the ladies on his right and the secretary of state on his left, the other cabinet ministers being in the rear.

The diplomatic corps were the first received, Secretary Frelinghuysen presenting them to the president, after which followed the justices of the United States supreme court and their wives. Colonel Puckwell and Marshall McMichael then took the secretary of state's position and presented the senators and representatives. This consumed one hour when the army and navy were received, followed by department officers, Mexican soldiers, the grand army, oldest inhabitants' association, and then the public in general. The president shook the hands of and afterwards, in answer to an inquiry whether his arm was fatigued, he replied: "Not at all. I have learned the science of spending a day in shaking hands without becoming tired. I invariably manage to grasp the hand and do the shaking myself before my visitor has the opportunity to collect his thoughts."

ON THE FIVE THOUSAND PEOPLE,

The residence of the cabinet, ministers, supreme judges, senators, congressmen and the lesser officials of note were "open" during the afternoon, and it is estimated that over 100,000 calls were made in the city from 11 a. m. to 6 p. m.

THE NEW CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY

has just been completed by the public printer and it reveals some curious personal statistics. Of the 26 senators who were sworn in at the beginning of the present session only twelve are now to that body. Mr. Morrill of Vermont is the oldest, being 74, while Mr. Kenna of W. Va., is the youngest senator, he being only 35 years of age. The longest senatorial biography in the directory is that of Mr. Brown of Georgia, who admits that because he favored reconstruction measures he "became very unpopular," but salves his vanity by asserting that "in every instance when he has been a candidate before the people he has been successful." The briefest sketch is that of Senator Call, of Florida, who occupies four lines. The richest senator Fair, of Nevada, reputed to be worth forty millions, though Mr. Bowen of Colorado, is said to possess nearly as much as Fair. The poorest are about a dozen of the southern senators whose riches are on an even plane, being confined to their seantorial salaries. Brown of Georgia, and Mahone of Virginia are the only two from the south who are wealthy. Senator Butler of S. C. is pronounced the handsomest man in the senate, though Mr. Riddleberger of Va., disputes the palm in this respect. Senator Ingalls is considered the best debater and Senator Morgan the best logician. Messrs Edmunds and Garland are the ablest lawyers, while Senator Vance is the finest rhetorician and best story teller. Both Mahone and Riddleberger make their confederate records a conspicuous portion of their personal sketches. Senator Anthony is the oldest in senatorial service, and Edmunds next.

NATIVITY OF THE SENATORS.

Kentucky leads the states in furnishing the present senate with eight native born senators; Ohio comes next with seven; New York, six; Georgia, Tennessee, Virginia and Pennsylvania each four. Ohio furnishes two senators for Indiana, and two for Iowa, the four gentlemen representing these states having been born in the buckeye state.

THE HOUSE BY THE DIRECTORY.

There are twenty foreign born members of the House. The oldest is Mr. Kelley and the youngest Mr. Post. General Rosecrans has the longest biography, nearly a page, while Messrs. Skinner, of N. C. and Horseman, of Mich., give simply their names and post office address. After Rosecrans, ex-speaker Keifer indulges in the longest sketch. A grandson of Henry Clay, who now sits in the house employs less than three lines.

THE MEMBERS WRITE THEIR OWN SKETCHES, and a great diversity of taste is manifested as to what is worth telling of themselves. For instance, John S. Wise of Virginia considers it an honor that he "was captain of the Richmond light infantry blues for several years." L. H. Weller, of Iowa, known in his state as "Calamity Weller," informs the country that though born and reared a democrat, he voted for Fremont, Lincoln, Grant, Greeley, and then sandwiched Tilden in, and next voted for Weaver, the greenbacker. After moving to Iowa he "tilled the soil in the day, and studied law, politics and theology at night; was admitted to politics at once, subsequently to the courts, and finally to the church." Mr. Weller then details a number of defeats while running for office, while most congressmen conceal the defeats and make the successes prominent. Col. "Tom" Ochiltree says that he is the "first native Texan ever elected to congress, and as the colonel is a bachelor he omitted to say when he was born, but gives his age away when he states that at the age of sixteen he engaged in the Indian campaign of 1854-55; he is therefore forty-six, or thereabouts."

NATIVITY OF THE MEMBERS.

The only native of Washington in congress is Gilbert M. Woodward of Wisconsin, whose birth in this city was accidental. New York leads in the house with 35 native sons; Pennsylvania, 33; Ohio, 31; Kentucky and Virginia, 17 each; Massachusetts and Tennessee, 15 each; North Carolina, 12 Of the entire Arkansas delegation (7) in both houses, but a single member was born in the state. Only two of the Mississippi delegation (9) are natives of the state, but she gets even by having sons in the Arkansas, Missouri and California delegations. Of the 401 senators and congressmen 267 are lawyers, while the remaining number represent over forty different trades and professions.

THE PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION

question will probably be settled this winter by the passage of a bill providing that the line of succession from the vice-presidency shall be the president of the senate pro tem, next the speaker of the house, and finally the chief justice of the United States supreme court, with one to fill the office until another election has been ordered and taken place. Ex-Senator Eaton, now a representative in the house, from Connecticut, will champion such a bill and it has a large number of advocates.

THE HUNTINGTON LETTERS

are still the great theme of conversation among politicians. One benefit will accrue to the country from their publicity, and that is, they are an insuperable obstacle to the Huntington-Mills Crocker scheme to grab the Texas Pacific land grant. Fourteen millions of acres of land are involved in this grant, and the committee on public lands have prepared a number of bills declaring it forfeited together with about 60,000,000 acres in the northwest. Very few members, in the light of these letters and the Newell diary implicating several western senators and representatives as having received over $300,000 to aid in securing the passage of the grants, will dare to oppose the forfeitures of these public gifts to the railway monopolies, gifts that were secured by the shameless lobby of 1870-72.

BRIEF NOTES.

It is now settled that Mrs. Carlisle is the official head of society in Washington. The president's recognition of this fact New Year's day compels the wives of the cabinet dignitaries to submit to the ruling, though a few of them acquiesce very ungracefully.

Mr. Blaine's late conference with President Arthur is gradually leaking out, and causing considerably speculation as to its final results. Further developments may be expected.

Quick Pay.

The leading locomotive works of Philadelphia employ 3,000 workmen, and the hands are paid off regularly every week. In thirty minutes after the paymaster begins his work every man has his cash. The system of keeping the time and paying this vast number of workmen, says the Record, is quite simple. When a man goes to work he receives no pay until the second week. This permits of five days in which to calculate the wages of each man and place the money in envelopes. In each department there is a timekeeper, who makes a return every day to the paymaster. The counting and arrnging of the immense amount of money required to pay the large force is accomplished by the paymaster and an assistant. On the books of the company opposite the name of every employe, is a number by which he is known. The figures range from 1 to 3,000. On Friday evening the men form in line in the order of their number. The paymaster and his assistant take their places at the head of the column. "Number 1, 2, 3, 4," says the assistant, as the men step up in a lively manner to receive the envelopes containing a week's wages. He rapidly calls the numbers, soon running into hundreds, then into thousands, and at the end of half an hour the vast crowd of workmen has disappeared, and the paymaster's labors are done.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year with Hall's Catarrh Cure, that the doctors had given up and said could not be cured. It seems a miracle. Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and loss in the spring you will find Spratt's Patent Ellipse Ponderes unexcelled. Fall pamphlets sent free by H. R. Ward & Co.

The throat is often diseased on account of catarrh, producing dryness and a constant desire to cough. That tickling sensation and the hoarseness that is so common to public singers and speakers especially, is relieved at once by Hamilton's Cough Troches, which are prepared from the best imported materials. Do not wait till some bronchitis or even consumption takes firm hold of you. Price only 25 cents per box. Sold by D. B. Ward & Co.

The circulation of the Detroit Evening Journal has increased so rapidly that its managers have found it impossible to promptly meet the demands for it from all parts of the state, but in a few weeks it will be able to supply all Michigan readers without delay. One of the famous Scott perfecting presses, with all the latest improvements, was ordered several weeks ago, and will be completed about the middle of February. The Evening Journal will then have one of the fastest presses in Michigan, and be able to meet its rapidly increasing circulation without difficulty.

At home and abroad, at church and theatre, in the counting house and work room, in fact everywhere is heard that hacking cough which soon develops into congestion or inflammation of the lungs, bronchitis, pneumonia, and consumption. Be wise in time. Immediate relief and sure cure be cheaply obtained. Brown's Cough Lozenges will surely give you relief from throat and lung troubles that often terminate in death. Instant relief in croup and whooping cough. Your consumptive friend will be greatly benefited. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by D. B. Ward & Co.

"With the beginning of the year the Detroit Evening Journal congratulates itself upon the marked success it has achieved, and promises to give its readers the benefit of every dollar it earns for the next 12 months. The Evening Journal aims to meet the longfelt want for a clean, spicy and enterprising newspaper. It avoids sensationalism, and all matters of an objectionable character are excluded from its columns. This may be safely said to be one of the great secrets of its success, and as a family paper it is just a conspicuous favorite. It prints more reading matter than any evening paper in Detroit, and gives all the news of the day in an attractive form. It is the wave of an party, and the servant of no man or set of men, but stands as a thoroughly independent journal, devoted only to what it believes to be for the best interests of Michigan."

PIMPLES.

I will mail (Free) the recipe for a simple VEGETABLE OIL that will remove TAN, PIMPLES, FRECKLES and MOTH PATCHES, leaving the skin soft, clear, smooth and beautiful; also instructions for producing a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, inclosing a 3c. stamp, Mrs. V. Lawrence & Co., 11 Bleecker St., N. Y.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

FOR 1884.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.; HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORT.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL

A Progressive Local and Family Newspapo

Published Every Thursday, at $1.50 a Year

With the coming of spring and the opening of trade, our friends should make an effort in their respective localities to increase the circulation and popularity of the JOURNAL. A little effort on the part of each subscriber to procure at least one more subscriber, would soon double our list, and enable us to make improvements not now possible. It is the aim of the publisher to make the JOURNAL the most complete and thorough local newspaper in the county, and with the aid of our correspondents make it a record of the transactions of the whole county. To add to this feature we desire correspondents in localities not now represented, who will carefully and correctly report business transactions and personals of a character interest all in their vicinity. What the JOURNAL has been in the past is best told by a few extracts from many favorable notices clipped from our exchanges:

Neat, newsy, and spicy.—Boyne Shakerian.

Bright and newsy, and radical in politics.—Petoskey Record.

Filled with choice local and general news.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Comes to us fraught with fresh local and general news and presents as fine an appearance as any paper in the state.—Crawford Democrat.

Democratic in principles, and thoroughly entertaining in appearance.—Harbor Springs Independent.

In the future we shall strive to maintain this excellence, and to improve in every department whenever possible. AS A PROMOTER OF ENTERPRISE the JOURNAL will see every effort to build up not only the village of Charlevoix, but the whole county. One item of our plans already accomplished has been productive of good results, other features planned for the future will be an equal proportion to the value of the JOURNAL as a county paper. The following notices will show how our work is appreciated by newspapers competent to judge:

The picture of the celebrated summer resort will be the means of drawing many a weary mortal there next season.—Detroit Evening Journal.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL presents its readers with exceedingly correct views of the town and summer resorts.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

A very interesting series of articles is now in progress with accurate wood engravings.—Detroit News, Nov. 29.

Either Shrader is badly hoosiered his town, or he is a little too modest in not more fully informing the public of its advantages for trade and manufactures.—Detroit News, Dec. 18.

As an inducement to begin the good work NOW, we offer the following

Cash Club Rates.

Five subscribers for one year, at one time, accompanied with the cash, ONE DOLLAR each.

Ten subscribers for one year, at one time, accompanied with the cash, ONE DOLLAR each, and an EXTRA COPY to the one who sends the club.

For one name and Two Dollars, Cash, we will send the JOURNAL one year, and the Detroit Free Press one year.

Samples furnished on application. Address

THE JOURNAL, Charlevoix, Mich.

EVERYTHING

In the line of

Furniture

AND

Undertakers' Goods

Can be found at the old reliable house of

H. C. Cooper,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See me before Buying

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 29. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 1884. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL is published every Thursday morning, BY CHAS. J. STRANG, office over T. D. Smith's grocery, CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN. Entered at the postoffice at Charlevoix, Mich., as second-class matter.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

E. D. KIMBANK & CRUTE, Attorneys at Law, Office in Bridge Block, Charlevoix, Mich. C. J. STRANG.

A. C. VARNUM, Attorney at Law, East Jordan, Mich.

E. D. KIMBANK, Attorney and Counselor, Collections promptly attended to. Office in Bridge Building.

W. P. HENRY, Attorney and Counselor at Law, Office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

J. J. LEACH, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

WILSON & KEAST, Attorneys at Law, Office Opposite U. S. Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

W. P. HENRY, Attorney and Solicitor, Patents & Patent Copyrights Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX, Charlevoix, Mich. Transacts a general banking business. Loans money on approved security, receives deposits, collects drafts, buys and sells exchange on all the principal cities of the world. Interest allowed on time deposits. WILLIAMS & HOWARD, Bankers.

CHURCHES.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. Sabbath services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sabbath school at 12 m. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening. J. F. CHANDLER, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sabbath school at 12 m. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening. T. J. HODGES, Author.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOME AND KEWAYA FIRE COMPANY meet the first and third Thursday evenings of each month. At the Iowa hall in Charlevoix. W. G. HOWARD, Secretary.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. K. GRISSELL, M. D., Office at his Ingleside.

J. HOLT, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office Bridge St., Charlevoix, Mich.

W. H. BENNETT, M. D., Specialist and Diseases of the Eye, Charlevoix, Mich.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HORACE CHAMBERLAIN, Notary Public, Real Estate and Insurance Agent, Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

G. A. R. Meets at Masonic hall, Charlevoix, the first Saturday in each month. A. O. WIXSON, Commander. E. D. KIMBANK, Adjutant.

F. & A. M. Charlevoix Lodge No. 347, meets Friday evening on or before the full moon. E. D. KIMBANK, W. M. J. J. LEACH, Secretary.

I. O. O. F. Charlevoix Lodge No. 262, meets every Saturday evening. H. WIXSON, Secretary.

A. E. CRUTE, President. A. E. CRUTE, Cashier.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

Approved business paper discounted. Money loaned on approved paper at reasonable rates. Deposits received. Collections given careful attention and remittances made promptly.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL presents its readers with exceedingly correct views of the town and summer resorts.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

FOR

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

GO TO

Dr. G. W. CROUTER'S DRUG STORE.

Santa Claus' Headquarters.

An Immense Line to Choose From.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed by Peter Gaudette and Mary Ann his wife, parties to the first part, to Jacob Bostwick, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, party of the second part, bearing date the twelfth day of January, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of January, A. D. 1882, in liber "B" of mortgages, on page 187, by which default the said mortgagee has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole of said mortgage to be due and payable, and there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Fifty-one and one dollars, principal and interest, and no attorney fee or costs have been paid or agreed to be paid, and no proceeding at law has been had for the recovery of the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof; Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and the statute in such case made and provided, the said premises will be sold at public auction, or vendue, to the highest bidder, at the north door of the court house in the village of Charlevoix, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the fourteenth day of April, A. D. 1884, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day, of so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy said mortgage, with the costs and charges of foreclosure and sale, and the taxes, if any, on the premises so sold, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: The south half of the southeast one quarter of the southwest one quarter (½ of se ¼ of sw ¼) of section twenty-eight (28), in township Thirty (30) north, range seven (7) west, containing twenty acres of land according to the United States survey.

Dated November 14, A. D. 1883.

JACOB BOSTWICK, Assignee of mortgage.

E. M. CLARK, Attorney for assignee of mortgage. 6b5

CHARLEVOIX & CHICAGO.

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY

Has now in Stock the

Ladies' and Children's

Furnishing Goods,

Latest styles in Fedora & Tycoon, and will be pleased to show them to any lady who desires a stylish and neat hat or cap.

LIVERY.

The undersigned has purchased the livery business of Geo. Durance, and will keep

Geo. Durance, Manager,

There has been added a new stock of

Horses and Carriages

And a competent livery man is employed to attend to the business. Parties can be accommodated over night and have their horses cared for.

GOOD SADDLE HORSES A SPECIALTY WITH THIS STABLE.

J. MILO EATON.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 75 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Daily Democrat—By mail, $6.00 per year in advance, postage paid.

Weekly Democrat—$1.50 per year; 25 cents for six months. Sample copies of either issue free. Remittances by in advance. Address,

THE DEMOCRAT, Grand Rapids, Mich.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will for the sake of suffering humanity, send free to all who need it, the recipe and direction for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Sufferers wishing to profit by the advertiser's generosity can do so by addressing in perfect confidence, JOHN B. OGDEN, 42 Cedar St., New York.

HALL'S Catarrh Cure

Is Recommended by Physicians!

$100 REWARD FOR A CASE it fails to cure. Catarrh is a Blood Disease.

We manufacture and sell it with the positive guarantee that it will cure any person suffering from Catarrh. The above reward is for a single instance.

It is unlike any other Catarrh remedy, as it is taken internally, acting upon the blood. If you are troubled with offensive breath, dullness, loss of smell, taste and hearing, discharges, or symptoms of Catarrh in its worst form, or even if you think it is, and we will forward a remedy free. If it does not cure, we will pay the bills.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

Dr. Chenerys Agts., Chaumont, N. Y.

Board by the Day or Week

AT THE

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Trade reasonable. W. S. JOHNSON, On Bridge St., Depot, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor,

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is entirely located, and its accommodations and The Table supplied with the market affords, only simple room to invite.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, - Michigan.

Free conveyance for the traveling public. Best accommodations for the Pelosky and Elk Lake lumbermen.

United States Hotel,

Geo. W. Cimes, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

Rooms thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few first class sewing machines for sale at from $10 to $15 each. One second hand cover stitch.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. S. WAY.

Have your paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at G. W. Wood & Co.'s drug store.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS.

Vice President Pro Tem.

Geo. F. Edmunds, the subject of our sketch this week, was re-elected president pro tem of the senate on the fourteenth inst. after Senator Anthony of Rhode Island had been elected and declined because of continued ill health.

Mr. Edmunds, of Burlington, was born at Richmond, Vermont, February 1, 1828. His education consisted only of that afforded by the public schools, after graduating from which he began the study of law and at an early age became a practitioner of considerable ability. He soon drifted into politics, and successfully, as he was elected a member of the Vermont legislature in 1854, '55, '56, '57, '58 and '59, serving three years as speaker. He was then elevated to the state senate and was its presiding officer pro tempore, in 1861 and '62. Soon after this Hon. Solomon Foote, one of the U. S. senators from Vermont died and Mr. Edmunds was appointed to fill the vacancy and he took his seat April 5, 1866.

Mr. Edmunds has since been continued in the senate, his present term, which expires March 3d, 1887 being his fourth election. He was a member of the electoral commission of 1876 and was first elected president pro tem of the senate immediately after the resignation of David Davis, last year.

Senator Edmunds is a fine parliamentarian, his rulings while in the chair being unbiased by any political preferences he may entertain as a republican. He is well liked by all senators, and grows his position with all the dignity and ability becoming the vice president of the United States.

How the Tariff Robs Lansing Workingman.

One principal disadvantage that the manufacturing interests of this city have to contend against is tariff taxation. It weighs down upon them with crushing effect.

The tariff enhances the cost of much of the raw material which our local manufacturers are compelled to use. The chief article that enters into the goods manufactured in this city is iron. Iron is "protected" by a heavy duty. The Lansing manufacturers are forced to pay an annual royalty to the Pennsylvania and southern iron makers of many hundreds of dollars. The machinery which they use is also "protected" by the tariff. So is the copper, brass, pine lumber, and a long list of other articles, which they require in their business. The effect of this tribute levied upon them by the tariff monopolists is to reduce the wages of the men employed in these Lansing establishments. There can be no doubt about that. In order to make their goods sufficiently cheap to find a ready sale, the manufacturers must keep down the cost of them. Their largest item of expense is for labor. The latter naturally comes in for the earliest and sharpest scaling down. Raw materials the manufacturers must have and they have to pay the market price for them. But labor they can make their own terms with, and hence it suffers most in the cheapening process.

Thus the workingman in Lansing is oppressed and cheated by the tariff. But this is not the worst feature of the matter. The tariff adds to the cost of nearly all of the clothing, and many other necessaries of life, which the workingman is compelled to provide for his family. The tariff, therefore, not only robs him of a just compensation for his labor, but it turns around and exacts a toll from him for the mere privilege of being clad decently!

And yet there are those who talk about the tariff "elevating and dignifying" American labor! Out upon such arrant humbuggery!—Lansing Journal.

The Duty on Lumber.

If, as some of the lumbermen claim, the removal of the tariff on lumber will not effect prices, because, as they say, lumber is now sold more cheaply than Canadian lumber can be laid down in the states, there is no reason why they should object to a reduction or removal of the duty. On the other hand, if it will reduce prices, it can only do so by stimulating the destruction of the Canadian forests. If this should be the case, the result would be to give more employment to the men who yield the ax and do the laborious work. It would perhaps keep some of the Canadians at home who now annually come to Michigan during the logging season, and if they are provident take out of this country the net proceeds of their work. This would diminish the supply of working lumbermen in Michigan, and by the necessity of the case increase the rate of wages, which, in spite of all the fine talk we sometimes hear, is now so low that a Michigan worker in the woods who has a family to support finds it hard work to make a decent living.

As consumers would not be detrimentally affected by a reduction of the duty on lumber, and as wage-workers could not possibly be, the only question to be considered is whether the millionaire lumber kings would suffer the direst disaster if their profits were, by any possibility, slightly reduced. Let any one examine a list of very wealthy men of Michigan, and he will be struck with the great proportion of them who made their fortunes in lumber and pine lands. They always obtained the highest prices they could for their land and commodities, and found their labor as cheaply as they could find it. Their fortunes were not made by wielding the ax or skidding logs at $16 a month and board.—Free Press.

Vessel Inspection Rules.

The board of supervising inspectors of steam vessels, in session at Washington, have amended the rules so that boilers built prior to Feb. 28, 1872, may be deemed to have a tensil strength of 50,000 pounds, but not over that to the sectional square inch, whether stamped or not, and shall be tested under the provisions of section 56 of the act relating to boilers built after Feb. 28, 1872. No iron or gas pipe for steam connections shall be used that is more than two inches inside diameter. When lapped in or joined by seven joints, pipes over two inches must have flanged joints and connections.

The democratic editors of Indiana in convention assembled resolved that "it is the duty of the democratic leaders, state and local, to provide for a more extensive circulation of democratic newspapers among the masses," etc. The way to get a paper circulated among the masses is to publish a paper the masses want to read. Then it will circulate itself. If it is not that kind of a paper no leaders—not even those in the editorial columns—can persuade or make people take it. As a rule the greatest newspaper failures are those party organs which depend upon party leaders to secure them subscribers and readers. If a paper is in good one the leaders are glad to help it; if it is not they are powerless to help it.—Free Press.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors that's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of Catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by druggists.

John Nicholls

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades,

WAGON TONGUES, SHINGLES, LATH, ETC.

LUMBER SAWED AND BILLS FILLED TO ORDER.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand at his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

A BOY near Poughkeepsie took some paint and dye and fixed up a dog to resemble an escaped menagerie leopard. And of course the dog fell bad and hunted up his master and went to snuffing at his heels, and the master went up a tree so quick that it absolutely astonished the dog, which sat down to wait for the cold man to descend. It was a cold day; and the wind blew and the bare branches rattled, and the man shivered and swore for half an hour, till finally the dog barked.

THE amenities of political life in England are worth a little notice. Mr. Lowther, for instance, referred to Mr. Gladstone recently as a public robber of loyal subjects, whom he afterward turned over to the knife and bullet of the assassin. "Mr. Gladstone," Mr. Lowther continued, "turned round upon those whom he had robbed and driven out of the country, and those whom he had murdered or allowed to be murdered, and complained that they were not prepared, and never had, in fact, shown their desire to support the Government in the maintenance of law and order."

EVEN in these days when women are competing with men in science, in literature, in trade, and in various other forms of employment that occupy the time of the industrious, it is not often that one hears of a woman explorer. But it is doubtless true that no women and few men ever attempted such an undertaking as is now being carried out by Mrs. Fannie B. Ward, a well-known newspaper correspondent at Washington. She started last spring for a tour through Mexico alone, spent several months learning the language, and proposes to explore the country thoroughly in the interest of Frank Leslie's publications. It is appropriate that such an enterprise should be made for and under the instruction of the most successful lady publisher in the country, Mrs. Frank Leslie.

A CALIFORNIA girl is disposing of her kisses at 2 cents apiece. One week her receipts were $11.25. At regular rates she should have had $11.75, but she sold one job lot of twelve dozen at $2.50, which accounts for the difference. One devoted admirer has made a special contract. In consideration of his doing all his kissing with her, he is charged much less than the regular schedule rates. This traffic has been going on for some months without the knowledge of any persons except those immediately concerned. A short time ago a young lady in the East got $1,000 for a kiss. And yet a pretty California girl is selling her kisses at 2 cents piece. It is like selling diamonds at 10 cents a bushel. Less than a beefsteak.

THE condition of the poor classes in London is pitiful. "Tens of thousands," says a correspondent, "are out of work and get nothing to do, while thousands more are working night and day on starvation wages. Ann all these people are compelled to pay from one-seventh to one-fourth of their earnings for dens not fit for beasts, damp, noisome cellars, old rickety garrets, rooms swarming with vermin and breeding fever, in one of which a whole family will be found huddled together. Things have got to such a pitch that every one admits something must be done, and that specially." What is to be done or will be done, no one knows. The Marquis of Salisbury, the Conservative leader, has proposed that the state build houses for these poor wretches.

ABOUT thirty-three years ago a young man of Lafayette, Ind., sighing for fortune, reasoned with himself as to the most convenient and expedition way of curing the fickle dame. He dressed himself in the fantastic costume of the Orient, styled himself the "Fakir of Savia," and practiced sleight of hand in gift performances. He was quite as fraudulent as the worst of the order, and at one time in Mahadonia, Ohio, having sold $600 worth of tickets on the strength of handsome gifts promised, fled before the hour of the entertainment, leaving his audience a much of howling indignation. He was not heard of again for a number of years, when he was converted at a revival meeting in Madison, Ind. He became an evangelist. He served the new cause with an ardent faith in glorious beauties and became one of the most useful workers in the fruitful field. His character was sweet and lovable. The Rev. Dr. Carroll, who recently died at Louisville, esteemed of all who knew him, was one time the "Fakir of Savia."

CHARITY is represented by a correspondent as having become fashionable in New York city. Fifth avenue belles are taking it as a diversion. In some instances it is merely a Sunday-school class that serves as a rich girl's hobby, in which case she bath clothes and religiously instructs her pupils. One heiress is fond of healing a kind procession of uniformly dressed little boys from their place in a Sunday-school room to her residence, where a luncheon is served to them. Another makes some tiny girls picturesque by putting them into costumes of Mother Hubbard cut. A third has industriously sought out badly-legged and knock-kneed youngsters of impoverished parentage, and out of her private purse they are maintained in a hospital while recovering from operations which usually result in straightening their members.

PORTLAND Oregonian: A remarkable story comes from St. Helen, which is well vouched for. About six months ago twin brothers—Alfred and Henry Grove—arrived from Kansas and settled near St. Helens. There was a very strong resemblance between them—in fact, so strong that intimate friends could scarcely tell one from the other. Henry was married, but his wife was living in Kansas. He soon made the acquaintance of the family of John Avery. Being near neighbors, including their daughter, Lottie Avery, aged 19. One night, about five weeks ago, in jest, he asked her to become his wife, and, to his utter surprise, she accepted, informing her mother immediately. The mother, in a practical way, broached the subject of the date of the marriage, etc., and before Grove could recover from his surprise the details had been arranged. He immediately went to his brother Alfred, told the story, and asked for advice. Alfred volunteered to personate the brother and stand for him. The ceremony took place Oct. 21, the couple remaining at the home of the bride's parents. Alfred fell in love with the girl, and a week after the marriage told of the deception. In her indignation she ordered him from the house. She then informed her parents, and the father started after the son-in-law with a shotgun, and has followed Alfred to this city, where he is supposed to have died.

A LAW case of unusual interest, not so much for the amount involved as the question at issue, was recently decided in the United States Circuit Court, at Jefferson City, Mo. It was the case of Baker vs. The Rockford (Ill.) Insurance company. The facts were that Sunday, April 18, 1881, a cyclone passed near Jefferson City, destroying, among much other property, the house of Joseph Baker, on which he had a fire and lightning policy in the Rockford Fire Insurance company for $1,000. Baker brought suit against the company to recover his insurance, alleging that cyclones are electric or lightning storms, and that the destruction of his house by a cyclone was a destruction by lightning, against which the company had insured him. This raised not only a very nice legal, but a delicate and unclassified scientific question, and it was found necessary to take the testimony and depositions of several persons well known in scientific circles to place the question properly before the jury. For the plaintiff the deposition of the late Prof. John D. Tice was taken. He inclined very strongly to the electric theory, as did also Mr. Ldewdyn, of Mexico, Mo. For the defense the testimony and depositions of Col. C. Shaler Smith, Prof. Francis G. Nipher, of Washington university, St. Louis; and Prof. James C. Watson, of Washburn observatory, Madison, Wis., were produced; also the reports of John P. Finley, of the United States signal service, detailed by the Government to investigate cyclones, and who has taken observations of between 600 and 700 tornadoes. The defence admitted that more or less electricity prevails in storms. The Court instructed the jury that if they found electricity the predominant and controlling force in a cyclone or tornado they were to find for the plaintiff. After being out about three hours they returned a verdict for the defendant.

IF is certain, that either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught, as men take diseases one of another; therefore, let them take heed of their company.—Shakspeare.

A DELICATE MISSION.

The Young Maiden Who Had Lost Her Parents.

"Can I see the editor?"

Could she see the editor! That living combination of yellow hair, fire, feathers, smiles and fascination! Well, the editor should giggle hysterically! He did also demanded the dismissal of the managing editor, the spiritual instructor of the religious editor, the salary of the city editor, they would have been placed on the sacrificial altar before that session.

Five genteel manipulators of public opinion backed as much as they formed a line before her, beseeching her that she make known her case.

"I am almost afraid of editors," she murmured, taking in the battery around with a shy glance.

"None of these is editor enough to hurt," observed the religious editor, with an insinuating wink.

"I think you can trust me," said the managing editor, with a scowl at his associates.

"Anything in my line?" inquired the society editor, with a smile like the new moon, as he stood on one foot and outbounded the left thumb.

"If it is in the religious line of trade, you want to see me before going elsewhere," interjected the religious editor, feeling round in his vest pocket in his vest pocket.

"You are all so kind," she uttered, edging away from the religious editor in disgust, "I am not accustomed to business ways, but—" and the scarlet mouth quivered, while every editor wondered whyever she did let women outdoors for having in sooth so tenuous the delicate chords that quivered beneath the touch of this fragile creature.

"We won't make this business, we will call it pleasure," cooed the city editor, in the tones that have so endeared him to the people of Kickapoo.

"Well, continued the vision, encouraged by the sympathy by which she was surrounded, "I'a is dead—"

"Ah!" moaned the processions as one mouth.

"Then I'm your man," boldly asserted the religious editor, gently taking her unresisting hand. "What you want is a beautiful obituary, for the style of which I have succeeded in making that office justly famous, and which I think, I may modestly say, is in the habit of taking the sticks off anything in that vein now presented to the public. Give me the name of the deceased, and I will cast a gloom over the community that will make the community's hat—stand on end!"

"What a brute," hissed the city editor, as the beautiful chin of the blushing visitor fell on her neck.

"I want to see you dead, and so is ma," whispered the bereaved, casting a reproachful glance at the religious editor.

"Planted in the same coffin, I suppose," suggested the religious editor, unconscious of the effect he was producing on the fair mourner. "We can do two as easy as one. Never mind the harrowing details, we fling those with the obituary. Social position of the remains; floral decorations; tear pa and ma' block for the community, and the rest of it. It's a lucky thing I happened to be in when you called. Those other fellows would have butchered the whole business and made you wish the old man and ma were buried and never pegged out. You just leave the matter with me, and I'll fix you out with the orthodox buckets of grief."

"You are very good," replied the maiden, with quivering lips. "Pa and ma are already buried. They died two years ago, and I had to face the cold world—"

The procession groaned and glared at each other.

"And so I concluded to do something to employ myself, rather than live dependent on rich relatives," continued the maiden, in a broken voice.

"Hence!" shouted the procession, and the religious editor, with a new light in his eye, relaxed his hand and dropped his arm around her waist.

"Are the rich are those relatives?" he insinuated.

"And," she proceeded, disregarding the question, "and I am now putting up lightning rods of a better quality at less expense, more perfectly insulated and with more enthusiasm than any man, woman or child in the same business in the United States. I see that the Eagle building has been remodeled and extended, and I feel confident—just let me show you my samples of the—"

But she was left alone with her samples, and the hall, hall of five fleck coats described artistic circles as their owners bounced the anxious doors and left the radiant vision to scramble down a dark stairway as best she could.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Over-Trained Princes.

Young princes and princesses must find it irksome to be under tutors, as most of them are, who have never learned the wisdom uttered in the nursery line, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy."

It is said that Louis II., the present King of Bavaria, took an utter dislike in his boyhood to history and politics, through the indiscreet zeal of a tutor who discoursed on these subjects in season and out of season.

He would say, pointing to a hay-stack, "Can you guess what is the height of that?" "Thirty feet, perhaps the boy would answer.

"Well, does the number thirty remind you of anything?" And then most thirty knights on both sides at the 'Combat des Trente'? Were there not thirty Greeks at Athens? Was there not a 'Thirty Years' War?" And so on, till poor little Prince Louis lost all pleasure in the sight of hay stacks.

A little girl in Maine was also sorely teased by a compleat tormentor tutor. One day he had been sent out to see a regatta on the Seine.

"Well, what have you been doing?" asked his father when he returned home. "Oh, we have been talking of Tiresmos," said the boy, wearily, "and I have heard the story of Ballios over again.—Youths' Companion.

Origin of Popular Phrases.

In Fine.—The word fine, which is now found only in fine construction, seems, at first glance, to be Latin, and ought, if so, to be pronounced as a disyllable, after the analogy of in pace, in vinco, alas die, and other Latin expressions which have been borrowed into our language. The word is, however, really English and, therefore, not disyllabic. Fine is not the ablative of the Latin word finis, but is that word anglicized, and spelled, after the uniform rule of English orthography, with a final e silent, as in the words line, pine, which are also of Latin derivation but not of Latin inflection. The word was received in other constructions than the one given above. For example, Benedick says:

> Because
> I will not do them this time to the wrong in
> I meet not any
> I will do myself no disfigurement more
> And for this time, I will live in fancy
> Only the bachelor and married men.

Act III. 5th Measure and Milton use the word timeless, where we would now say endless:

> Your and continual praise, and thick enough;
> Thus, timeless, hundred, is its place as whole
> Tedious, where, in the end, it grows
> Fulsome, and ceases to be praise.

"The Harp of Zolius."—Zolius, the god of the winds, was fabled to live in Italy, between Italy and Sicily, where, as we read, the harp-shaped islands are called forth by the influence of the air on strings. It is possible that an instrument of this kind was known in ancient times, for the Talmudists say that the kinnor or harp of David sounded of itself when the north wind fell upon it. But the merit of the invention, in the form it now takes, is due altogether to modern times.

The sound is peculiar; the wild and wordlike melody, the gradual advance and retiring of the aerial tones, can be only described by the instrument itself. When the breeze which vibrates the strings of the harp freshens, the sounds swell on the ear until they almost scream through the house; then, as the breeze falls, the notes recede in the distance, becoming more and more faint and tender, till they can be only faintly distinguished as they die away like the plaintive waiting of a spirit. Thomson, in the "Castle of Indolence," gives a beautiful account of the music of the Zolian harp:

> Each season it gives, to luxurious at indolence
> Into the wind, from each kind chosen every
> A chief needful in the varying wind
> A various instrument, to wake and pour
> Forth wild and soft, as the wind blows, the tones
> Of nature's music. Nor perhaps, the sense
> Ecstatic, such strange sounds, of pleasure, pain
> Lull, sorrow, and fear, yet pleasing, pain
> Lull, sorrow, and fear, to the soul inspire.
> The indolent inmate lies, lapt in soft sighs and all > around
> —Castle of Indolence 55.

"Mashers."—As an additional contribution to the new slang phrase, and subject go to the origin of the word masher, we would suggest that it is by no means of modern birth, but comes from a phrase in a play written by Beaumont and Fletcher, "Mashed in Love," where mashed is used as an alteration of the word smashed.

"A Tinker's Dam."—The expression is frequently used, but its meaning is known to but few. Here is an explanation: A tinker's dam is a dam of dough, or other suitable material, constructed by a tinker to confine his molten solder to the luminous in hand; and, inasmuch as when a tinker's dam has once served its purpose it possesses little or no commercial value, the phrase has come to be frequently used and almost universally understood as the synonym of worthlessness.

"That's the Ticket."—This slang expression corresponding in meaning to the above is a corruption of "That's the etiquette"—that's the proper mode of procedure. Etiquette is the French word for ticket, and its present meaning in English arose from an old custom of distributing tickets, or etiquette, upon which the ceremonies to be observed at any formal proceedings were duly set forth. The modern word "proprietary" exactly corresponds to the old etiquette.

General Dodge.

An Austin widow has been receiving a great deal of attention from Tom Bingham. A friend calling to visit her asked:

"What do you do all day to kill time?"

"Well, most of my time is taken up with general duties."

"Duties! Duties! Why, I never heard of him. You fickle creature! What will the Colonel say when he finds this General cutting him out in that way?—Texas Siftings.

A Sad Affliction.

A gentleman who imagined that he recognized a lady friend on Austin avenue, advanced cordially and as she dressed her:

"Good morning," he said, "but isn't this Miss Greenleaf?"

"No sir," replied the lady, "my name is Redpath."

"Ah, excuse me; I must be color blind!"—Texas Siftings.

THE TRUE HEIRS.—Industry and economy.

Mashers.—"As an additional contribution to the new slang phrase and subject go to the origin of the word masher, we would suggest that it is by no means of modern birth, but comes from a phrase in a play written by Beaumont and Fletcher, "Mashed in Love," where mashed is used as an alteration of the word smashed.

"A Tinker's Dam."—The expression is frequently used, but its meaning is known to but few. Here is an explanation: A tinker's dam is a dam of dough, or other suitable material, constructed by a tinker to confine his molten solder to the luminous in hand; and, inasmuch as when a tinker's dam has once served its purpose it possesses little or no commercial value, the phrase has come to be frequently used and almost universally understood as the synonym of worthlessness.

"That's the Ticket."—This slang expression corresponding in meaning to the above is a corruption of "That's the etiquette"—that's the proper mode of procedure. Etiquette is the French word for ticket, and its present meaning in English arose from an old custom of distributing tickets, or etiquette, upon which the ceremonies to be observed at any formal proceedings were duly set forth. The modern word "proprietary" exactly corresponds to the old etiquette.

General Dodge.

An Austin widow has been receiving a great deal of attention from Tom Bingham. A friend calling to visit her asked:

"What do you do all day to kill time?"

"Well, most of my time is taken up with general duties."

"Duties! Duties! Why, I never heard of him. You fickle creature! What will the Colonel say when he finds this General cutting him out in that way?—Texas Siftings.

A Sad Affliction.

A gentleman who imagined that he recognized a lady friend on Austin avenue, advanced cordially and as she dressed her:

"Good morning," he said, "but isn't this Miss Greenleaf?"

"No sir," replied the lady, "my name is Redpath."

"Ah, excuse me; I must be color blind!"—Texas Siftings.

ETIQUETTE AT HOME.

It Should Not Be Reserved for Society Alone.

The ease and negligee of home often induce carelessness as to etiquette, the improper being that politeness and polish are only needed in society, and that carelessness of manner is appropriate to home life. All such notions are erroneous. There is positive comfort in politeness, and courtesy is as important at home as abroad. Unpoliteness engenders the outward expression of rudeness. It has a place with forms and attentions, which are internal. A lady in society is treated with a certain deference which she finds not in delicate attentions. Children in society are treated with considerate kindness, which is always considerately expressed. There are rules of etiquette which relate to the many little attentions and formalities, which in society are carefully learned and often rigidly enforced. They very be made onerous and an oppression. But etiquette is clearly defined.

We do not advocate an etiquette for the home so rigid as to be burdensome. Yet it may be the means of treating politeness as a self-propelling buggy in the hands of a good model-maker in Philadelphia by a working model of his invention. He says it differs from other self-propelling vehicles going the rounds of the papers. The machine can be made about the usual size of an ordinary buggy with four wheels, with power equivalent to two horses. The machinery, engines, generator and occupant of the vehicle are supported by the rear driving wheels, which give it the necessary traction to insure success. The front wheels act as a balancing and controlling position. He uses liquid fuel, and can generate the maximum power in less time than a horse can be harnessed and attached to a buggy. The machine can be operated and controlled as easily as a lady can a sewing machine, and be made to run twenty or more miles per hour on good roads, and will ascend a hill having a rise of seventeen feet to the hundred with perfect ease.

HISTORY has often recorded how a tin can came to be tied to a dog's tail, much to the panic of that animal. Seldom, however, has the tin can been attached to the tail-board of a street car, as that patient public carrier is not of a very excitable nature. A wicked New York boy attached by a long wire a tomato can to a car on the Forty-second Street railway, and a year ago last March Dr. C. L. Mordhouse undertook to cross the street, but wire wound itself around Dr. Mordhouse's left leg, the tomato can tripped him, and the car dragged him a long distance, bumping and bruising him against the pavement. Among the spectators of the accident were the Misses Matilda and Sophia Waugel. They gave Dr. Mordhouse their place and residence, and he called on them to request them to act as witnesses in his behalf in a suit for $5,000 damages against the railroad company. While the trial of the suit was pending, he won the love of Miss Matilda and married her his wife. She appeared as a witness for him before Judge Lawrence and a jury in the Supreme court. The jury gave Dr. Mordhouse a verdict for ten thousand. The court evidently thought that the Doctor had won a wife by the accident, and that that fact ought to mitigate the damages. There are married men who would have used the unfortunate incident as a plea for further damages.

Ancient Apple Trees.

A correspondent of the Toronto Globe writes from the farm of George Walker, on the Belgrave river: Opposite the house is a large apple orchard of sturdy trees, with tops thirty to forty feet in diameter. The ground is in grass, and receives very little manure, yet the orchard bears very well. The land has been cleared, and an crop or orchard for 100 years. On the outskirts of this plantation I found a number of very ancient apple trees, planted by the original settlers about the year 1792. The trunk of one was over three feet in diameter, but the upper part has been greatly abbreviated, and the straggling, mossy, gnarled branches, resting out unfeelingly, convey an impressible idea of decrepitude. These old trees yet bear a scanty crop, and I found the apples still clinging amid the russet leaves. The owner intends to let them stand for they should the little log house of his father's forefathers, who have long since passed away. The apple trees of Connecticut and Clinton are planted thirty feet apart, sometimes with much more and very narrow. The crop, as elsewhere, has been small during the past two years. Blossoms, however, are a good crop, large in quantity, and very smooth and fine. The Baldwins and greenings are a "splendid" crop, and have done so well that many new plantations are being set out with them. The early harvest apple is a total failure, though generally it yields well. The spy, like several other varieties, is scabby and rough, and the apple crop, as a whole, is of inferior quality, and scarcely a quarter of an average in yield.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THIS is the year the run of cattle on the far Western ranges shows a shortage of 10,000 head as compared with last year, while the run of Texas cattle is 120,000 less than at this time last season. This makes a total shortage of 130,000 head.

REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER told in Brooklyn congregation a few days ago that they might "as well put a pocket into the constitution against sin and depravity as against the manufacture and sale of liquor. Get the sense of a community behind a law and it will stand; otherwise it will not. It is for you and for me to cease blaming others and go to work ourselves."

MR. HAYCOCK has won a suit of several years' standing against a hotel which he had frequented while in his prime. The defense was that he bended by the month at a reduced rate, and that guests were required to deposit valuables in the safe. The case went through the courts up to the New York Court of Appeals, which gave him indemnity on the ground that the terms of his accommodation were not that the innkeeper's liability, specially named. Therefore all diners since that would be shown in polite society should mark intervenors at home. And if husband and wife are courteous, children imitate and practice it. Example is the great teacher in this line.

Beyond this courtesy exerts a very decided influence on character. Tribal to the elements of politeness given a balance and evenness to character. Its very inception involves self-control and consciousness restrained. It is with most several nature. The forms and rules are acquired and the habits slowly grafted on. Where this is done so much has been accomplished in the line of self-control, that its influence extends to temper and habits of mind. Such persons are apt to be self-contained in all emergencies. A gentleman will be such under all provocations and amid all trials or tests. Home children thus educated become something more than polish. It is something more than a graceful bow or dinner, or to maintain an agreeable conversation, or to show, at all times, the air of good breeding. The value of it all is in the traits of mind that have been imparted. A clear person will feel clean, and one accustomed to politeness will naturally realize the elevation of feeling that attends courtesy. So habits formed at home are important, and the habit of courtesy ranks among the first.—Philadelphia Call.

Indian Gambling.

The game began a few hours after the arrival of the Sioux braves, and, running day and night, lasted without interruption until to-day, when the last Indian was cleaned out. The game is very simple, and yet it seems to be so fascinating that it takes hold of even the most stolid of the Indians. It consists of a small piece of wood, about the size of a lead pencil, painted red, and a piece of bone, about the size of a lead pencil and parallel with each other, and then set on the ground crosslegged opposite the poles. The sticks were placed on the ground between the poles. Each side was furnished with six or eight small sticks and four big ones. Two strings of small shells were procured, and after it was decided by chance which side should take the first deal the game began. A game accompanied by the striking of the poles with the sticks and the singing of the tasties of the players to each was then begun by the side which won the shells, and the two Indians who had the shells moved their hands and arms in such a manner that shells from one hand to the other, and finally concealed both hands under their blankets and ceased moving them. This seemed to be the signal for one of the gamblers on the other side to guess in which hand the shells were concealed. If he guessed right, the shells were thrown to his side, and two of the short sticks. Then the singing and pounding, and gesticulations were taken up by that side and continued until the shells were won back by the other side. When all the short sticks were won on one side the game was decided, the players having the sticks being declared the victors. The clanking and beating of the poles then ceased until the stakes for another game were deposited on the ground, when the performance was repeated.

At the outset the games ran evenly, but in the course of two or three days the Sioux ran out of their ponies, and silver that appeared in the stakes after that was put there by them, the Pawnees having won every pony and other valuables. Once or twice the Pawnees made small stakes, and their pony stakes, but before they could entice any of the silver to their side luck turned against them, and they had to borrow money in all directions for re-enforcements, and, losing and scraping everything that the tribe had that could be sold or gambled away, they lost it all. When they got to borrow and beg it was they reluctantly abandoned the game.—Minnemonee (Nev.) Setter.

IT is a standing joke in Italy that Salvini carries about with him the King's pardon, to be used in case his realism on the stage should carry him to the point of an actual smothering of some Desdemona.

SHE neglects her heart who polishes her glass.—Lavater.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

THE LOVE OF HIS LIFE.

> So, so, I never mention her,
> I never breathe her name;
> Let my tongue be silent, rather
> Than I should speak of shame.
> Life is wasted fragrance
> Love is but a dream;
> Cold as ice is her bosom,
> False as false is woman.
> Yet I love her still
> Let the world know
> I love my lost Cynarcis
> I sigh for her, I pine
> Oh, no, I never mention her.
> The girl who'll make me happy
> Is a fairer, kinder lady
> Who will not treat my love with scorn
> Who will not make me mourn
> Who will not make me sigh
> Who will not make me die
> Who will not make me
> I love and must love yet.
> —New York Journal.

When the Honeymoon Ends.

"When does the honeymoon end, Mr. Johnson?" asked a sentimental young lady of a friend with whom she was discussing the subject of married life. "I don't know," replied the practical Mr. Johnson, "but I've heard that you could consider it over when a husband begins to worry more than two days without a full complement of suspender buttons.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Schools for Workingwomen.

Philadelphia has night schools for workingwomen, in which the studies are divided as follows: These schools are conducted for herself, such as reading, writing and arithmetic—physiology and hygiene—sewing, cutting and fitting; those which contribute to her enjoyment of her leisure, and aids her comfort to her labor, and which add comfort to her home life—viz.: cooking, reading, aloud and singing. The teachers are volunteers.

Eli Perkins on Women Masons.

Eli Perkins is a Royal Arch Mason, and at a Masonic celebration in Washington he undertook to answer the question why women cannot be Free Masons.

Women sometimes complain that they are not permitted to enter the lodge room and work with the craft in their labors, and learn all there is to be learned in the mysteries of Masonry. I will explain the reason. I learn that before the Almighty had finished His work He found it lonely in the garden and creating Eve. The creation of the living and creeping things had been accomplished, and the Almighty had made Adam, who was the first Mason, and created for him a large lodge in the world, and called it Paradise No. 1. He then called the beasts of the field and fowls of the air to pass before Adam, for him to name them, which was a piece of work too hard to do alone, that no confusion might thereafter arise from Eve, who the Lower would make trouble if she were allowed to participate in it, if He should bring her before Adam being fatigued with his first task fell asleep, and when he awoke found Eve in the lodge room. Adam being senior warden, placed Eve as the pillar of beauty in the south, and they received their instructions from the Grand Master in the east, and, when finished, the immediately called the craft from labor to refreshment. Instead of attending to the duties of her office as she ought, she left her station, violated her obligation, and let it be an expelled fact that she was business there, and went around with him, leaving Adam to lead after the jewels. This fellow had been expelled from the Grand Lodge, with several others, some time before. Adam's lodge was no longer trustworthy, and that she had caused Adam to forget his duty, and had let one in whom He had expelled, the Grand Master closed the lodge and turned them out, setting a faithful tyler to guard the door with a flaming sword. Adam was angry about it, and of course Eve was angry about it, and in consequence of the trouble all was angry about it, and commenced raising Cain, and did it again when she got Able. Adam, on account of his reformation, was permitted to establish lodges and work in the degrees, and while Eve was allowed to join him in his work of charity on the outside, she was never again permitted to assist in the regular work of the craft. Hence the reason why a woman cannot become an inside Mason.

"Pretty Arms."

A girl of seventeen, who signs herself with the heading to this paragraph, writes an appealing little letter asking for advice and reading lessons why she should wear short sleeves or sleeveless evening dresses, the principal one of which—in fact, the only one—is that she has pretty arms and wants to show them.

Oh! "Pretty Arms" do you not know that lovely white arms are meant to be admired? Do you not know that, if properly cut, they are pretty arms? Do you not know that if you wear your pretty arms in their fairest light, and learn all there is to be learned in the fascination of it, I will explain the reason, I learn that before the Almighty had finished His work He found it lonely in the garden and creating Eve. The creation of the living and creeping things had been accomplished, and the Almighty had made Adam, who was the first Mason, and created for him a large lodge in the world, and called it Paradise No. 1. He then called the beasts of the field and fowls of the air to pass before Adam, for him to name them, which was a piece of work too hard to do alone, that no confusion might thereafter arise from Eve, who the Lower would make trouble if she were allowed to participate in it, if He should bring her before Adam being fatigued with his first task fell asleep, and when he awoke found Eve in the lodge room. Adam being senior warden, placed Eve as the pillar of beauty in the south, and they received their instructions from the Grand Master in the east, and, when finished, he immediately called the craft from labor to refreshment. Instead of attending to the duties of her office as she ought, she left her station, violated her obligation, and let it be an expelled fact that she was business there, and went around with him, leaving Adam to lead after the jewels. This fellow had been expelled from the Grand Lodge, with several others, some time before. Adam's lodge was no longer trustworthy, and that she had caused Adam to forget his duty, and had let one in whom He had expelled, the Grand Master closed the lodge and turned them out, setting a faithful tyler to guard the door with a flaming sword. Adam was angry about it, and of course Eve was angry about it, and in consequence of the trouble all was angry about it, and commenced raising Cain, and did it again when she got Able. Adam, on account of his reformation, was permitted to establish lodges and work in the degrees, and while Eve was allowed to join him in his work of charity on the outside, she was never again permitted to assist in the regular work of the craft. Hence the reason why a woman cannot become an inside Mason.

"Pretty Arms."

A girl of seventeen, who signs herself with the heading to this paragraph, writes an appealing little letter asking for advice and reading lessons why she should wear short sleeves or sleeveless evening dresses, the principal one of which—in fact, the only one—is that she has pretty arms and wants to show them.

Oh! "Pretty Arms" do you not know that lovely white arms are meant to be admired? Do you not know that, if properly cut, they are pretty arms? Do you not know that if you wear your pretty arms in their fairest light, and learn all there is to be learned in the fascination of it, I will explain the reason. I learn that before the Almighty had finished His work He found it lonely in the garden and creating Eve. The creation of the living and creeping things had been accomplished, and the Almighty had made Adam, who was the first Mason, and created for him a large lodge in the world, and called it Paradise No. 1. He then called the beasts of the field and fowls of the air to pass before Adam, for him to name them, which was a piece of work too hard to do alone, that no confusion might thereafter arise from Eve, who the Lower would make trouble if she were allowed to participate in it, if He should bring her before Adam being fatigued with his first task fell asleep, and when he awoke found Eve in the lodge room. Adam being senior warden, placed Eve as the pillar of beauty in the south, and they received their instructions from the Grand Master in the east, and, when finished, he immediately called the craft from labor to refreshment. Instead of attending to the duties of her office as she ought, she left her station, violated her obligation, and let it be an expelled fact that she was business there, and went around with him, leaving Adam to lead after the jewels. This fellow had been expelled from the Grand Lodge, with several others, some time before. Adam's lodge was no longer trustworthy, and that she had caused Adam to forget his duty, and had let one in whom He had expelled, the Grand Master closed the lodge and turned them out, setting a faithful tyler to guard the door with a flaming sword. Adam was angry about it, and of course Eve was angry about it, and in consequence of the trouble all was angry about it, and commenced raising Cain, and did it again when she got Able. Adam, on account of his reformation, was permitted to establish lodges and work in the degrees, and while Eve was allowed to join him in his work of charity on the outside, she was never again permitted to assist in the regular work of the craft. Hence the reason why a woman cannot become an inside Mason.

Nasal Catarrh.

A radical error underlies nearly all medical treatment. A salt-rheum appears on the hand. An ignorant doctor says, "It is a disease of the skin." He dusts an ointment. The eruption disappears. An ulcer appears on the ankle. The ignorant doctor says, "It is a disease of the ankle." He applies a salve. The sore disappears. There is a discharge of matter from the ear. The ignorant doctor says, "The ear-passage is diseased." He prescribes an injection. The discharge stops. A cross of nasal catarrh is prevented. The ignorant doctor says, "This nose is sick." He prescribes a snuff. The discharge stops. In every case the apparent relief is temporary. The difficulty soon returns, and it is worse than before. Harm has been done. Often other difficulties have been added. In every one of these cases the ignorant doctor has entirely mistaken the seat of the malady. Of course, his prescription is a blunder.

Salt-rheum is not a disease of the skin. It is a disease of the system showing its ill in the skin. Catarrh is not a disease of the man's nose. It is a disease of the man, showing itself in his nose. The blood which is now in my brain is, before I am done writing this sentence, back in my heart again, and off on a visit to my feet, and now it is back in my heart again, and now it is distributed to my liver, stomach, kidneys—every part. Every part of the body is fed every moment from the same blood. Every atom of every organism and tissue is obtained from that blood, and every atom of this blood comes back to the heart to be mixed and aerated. Now, do you suppose that one part of the body can draw away from the rest, get up a disease and carry on an independent operation of its own, on its own responsibility?

What I have said is not new. This dependence of local upon general disease is a common idea with the people. A young man begins business with a large capital. He falls into dissipation. In ten years it exhausts his fortune. When at last we see him beg for bread, we do not say this exhibition of his poverty is financial disease. His financial constitution has been ruined. The begging is only an unpleasant exhibition of that ruin.

During this course of dissipation the poor young man has lost fortune, he ruins his health. His lungs fall into consumption. A doctor may tell you it is a disease of the lungs; but it is no more a disease of the lungs than was begging a disease of the broken-down merchant. In both cases it is only a local exhibition of the constitutional trouble. In brief, a local disease is a living body is an impossibility. Every disease must be systematic before it can assume a local expression. In other words, every local pathological manifestation is an expression of systematic pathological conditions.

But to return to nasal catarrh. A man has a catarrhal discharge from his nose. He is an active, and hitherto confined to sedentary habits. His digestion is weak, bowels constipated, head dull, and general condition altogether unsatisfactory. He comes to me with a long story about catarrh, and finally wishes to know if I have any confidence in the advertised cures for this disgusting affection; would he willing to take anything or do anything if he could only get rid of the horrible nuisance, etc.

"Will you do exactly what I advise for a week?"

"Yes; I wouldn't mind standing on my head for that length of time, if I could only reduce myself to the decent use of one pocket-handkerchief a day."

"For a dish of oatmeal, one baked potato, and one slice of bread, for your breakfast; a piece of roast beef as large as your hand, with one boiled potato and one slice of bread for dinner; take nothing for supper, and go to bed early. Sleep, if possible, half an hour before dinner. Drink nothing with your meals, but within two hours afterward. Drink as much cold water as rising in the morning and on lying down at night as you can conveniently swallow, and you may add draughts of cold water, if you wish, before eating your meals. Live four to six hours a day in the open air; bathe frequently, and every night on going to bed rub the skin hard with hair gloves. In less than a week one handkerchief will do you. And yet you haven't touched your nose in the way of treatment."

To cure nasal catarrh you have only to make your stomach digest well, only to make your bowels healthies. Your nose will quickly find it out and adapt itself to the better manners of his companions.—Dio Lewis' Monthly.

Card Games of the Last Century.

In the early part of the last century, says London Truth, the British Parliament sought to deal with the baccarat clubs of that day. The fashionable games were, at the end of the seventeenth century, "glock," "primero," and "in and in." To these succeeded the "ace of hearts," then "basset," and "bassard." In 1739 an act was passed making all these games fraudulent and unlawful, and enacting that any person who played them in any place except those the king could should forfeit £50. The Law was scarcely made when it was eluded by the invention of other games, the principal of which was called "passage." To prevent this, it was enacted the enjoying year that this and every other game invented, or to be invented, with one die or more, or any other instrument of the same nature, with numbers thereon, should be subject to a similar penalty.

SILK culture is fast becoming one of the industries of Utah.

A "Penguinery."

In each nest sits one young, half fledged bird, in the Dal-bird, the penguin lays and hatches but a single egg. Day of the nests have half birds standing beside them, each occupied in feeding its solitary chick, duckling, gosling, or whatever the penguin offspring may be properly called. This because of itself a curious spectacle, the stunpointed egg-hunters stop a while to witness it; for they are still outside the bounds of the "penguinery," and the birds have as yet taken no notice of them. The nest is a little mound, which the mother stands perched, from time to time depositing her head outward and upward, at the same time giving forth a queer, clattering noise, half-quack, half-bray, with the air of a orator harangning an open-air audience. Meanwhile, the youngster stands patiently waiting below, evidently with a foreknowledge of what is to come. Then, after a few seconds of the quacking and braying, the mother-bird suddenly ducks her head, with the smallest of her beak with the agape, between which the fledgling thrusts its head, almost out of sight and so keeps it for more than a minute. Finally withdrawing it, up again goes the head of the mother, with neck geared out, and oscillating from side to side in a special spell of speechmaking. These curious actions are repeated several times, the entire performance lasting for a period of nearly a quarter of an hour. When it ends, possibly from the fowl simply having become exhausted, the mother-bird leaves the little glutton to itself and settles off seaward, to replenish her throat-larder with a fresh stock of mollusks.—Capt. Mayne Reed, in St. Nicholas.

The First Italian Opera in New York.

Italian opera was introduced in New York by Manuel Garcia, On Nov. 22, 1825. Garcia's first performance was given, the opera being "Il Barbiere di Seviglia." Garcia's Garcia's company Malibran as "Rosina." The prices of admission were Boxes, $2.25, Pit, 75 cents, gallery, 25 cents. The total receipts for the season were $8,685. The largest receipts for a night were $1,262, the smallest, $250. But, in spite of the apparent first success of the Garcia opera troupe, it could not keep its company long in New York. On Sept. 8, 1826, he gave his last performance, and afterward went to Mexico.—New York Times.

ONE your month and purse continually, and your stock of reputation and wealth shall, at least in regard, be great.—Shakspeare.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Jan. 31, 1884.

Business Announcements.

New goods at B. See's this week.

For good goods cheap go to B. See's

Fresh canned goods of all kinds at E. M. Clark's.

Upright, Emrey & Co. received a large supply of Groceries Tuesday.

E. M. Clark has a few more Overcoats which he will close out at cost.

Buy your Baking Powder of E. M. Clark, and get a number for the prize drawing.

For Sale.—Two or three good horses for sale cheap for cash or good security. J. MILO EATON.

Parties wishing anything in the line of Clothing or Boots and Shoes, will do well to call on E. M. Clark.

To all wanting anything in the line of Dry Goods, Groceries, Boots and Shoes, or Clothing, go to B. See's.

Cash! Cash! Cash! Bring your Ties, Wood, and Peals to Upright, Emrey & Co., and get the Cash for them.

If you are sick of old and stale groceries, give Upright, Emrey & Co. a trial. They receive fresh goods every Tuesday.

FOR SALE.—A second-hand portable saw mill, with engine and boiler complete, for sale cheap. Call soon. J. MILO EATON.

No. 13 was the number that drew the Price Fruit Set at E. M. Clark's, and Mrs. Eda Smith was the lucky person. We have one more left.

To avoid Dyspepsia, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, and other complaints resulting from the use of old and stale groceries, try Upright, Emrey & Co.'s new supplies.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

200 cords of good dry birch and maple block wood for sale. "Good measure guaranteed. Call at the office of

J. MILO EATON.

The Temperature.

The following is a record of observations of the thermometer at the JOURNAL office, at 7 a. m. and 2 p. m. each day, for the week ending yesterday, above zero in all cases unless marked with a (-):

	7 A.M.	2 P.M.
Thursday	23	23
Friday	7	19
Saturday	10	20
Sunday	20	28
Monday	21	36
Tuesday	22	38
Wednesday	37	35

Provision Market.

Retail prices to consumers, as corrected every Wednesday evening by UPRIGHT, EMREY & CO., general dealers:

FLOUR, per bbl, $6.00, $7.00, and $8.00.
BUCKWHEAT FLOUR, per cwt, $1.50.
CORN MEAL, per cwt, bolted $2.00; unbolted, $1.90.
HAY, per ton, $8@20.
OATS, per bu, 40c.
GROUND FEED, per cwt, $1.50.
APPLES, per bu, $1.40.
POTATOES, per bu, 40@50c.
ONIONS, per bu, $1.00.
BUTTER, per lb, 26@28c.
EGGS, per doz, 30@35c.
LARD, per lb, 14@15c.
HAMS, 16c; Shoulders, 12½c.
SALT PORK, 10c; Beef, 8c.
CHEESE, 18c.
WATER-WHITE OIL, 25c.
FARMERS' PRODUCE in good demand; oats and potatoes wanted.

Fresh Meats from the Market.

MEAT, beef steak, 12@14c; pork steak, 8@12½c; mutton, 8@12½c; sausage, 15c; hams, 16c; shoulders, 12½c.
TALLOW, 4½@5c.

Local News Brevities.

B. See returned home last Saturday.

The streets were lively last Saturday.

E. M. Clark has new locals this week.

D. S. Way went to Tampa Bay, Fla., last week.

Look for B. See's announcement in another column.

The county jail at Manistique buraed last Friday morning.

F. E. Wood returned home from Grand Rapids last Friday.

Nine years ago to day the editor and wife joined hands for life.

Robert O'Neil visited with O. D. Hillon, of Norwood, this week.

The state item column of the Detroit Times is daily increasing in length.

Mr. John M. Harris, of Ironton, gave the JOURNAL a brief call last Saturday.

The ladies' aid society will meet with Miss Buttars next Wednesday afternoon.

E. H. Green and two children returned home from their eastern trip yesterday.

Born—On Jan. 29th, to Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Crinckshank, a daughter, 11½ pounds.

Will Rogers and John Marks, of East Jordan, gave the Journal a call on Tuesday.

Just before going to press we are informed that Mrs. Minnie Bedford is quite sick and under the care of Dr. Lewis, at the Fountain City house.

Rev. J. T. Iddings will preach at Buck's school house next Sunday, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Rev. N. L. Otis, a former resident of this place, has filed a bill for divorce from his wife.

Mrs. C. J. Grier is recovering from her recent illness, and hopes to be out again in a few days.

The Shakespearean club will meet with Miss Essie Buttars one week from next Monday evening.

The new type for the Enterprise has arrived, and the boys will get out their paper as soon as possible.

The Petoskey Record figures up $152,797 in improvements and new buildings for their town in 1883.

O. D. Wood, wife, and child, started on their western trip on Monday, and will be absent about three weeks.

Mr. Henry Bennett, father of Mrs. O. D. Wood, will return to Charlevoix in April, and make this his future home.

Don't forget the unsqueraded to be given by the fire department on the 22d. Be ready to give the boys a benefit.

Wonder if an overdose of Lydia Pinkham's compound will cause her ghost to arise and disturb one's dreams?

You'll have a jolly time at the unsqueraded to be given by the fire department on the 22d, "and don't you forget it."

James O'Brian has returned from his lumbering operations at South Arm and expects to remain at home the balance of the season.

Notwithstanding the extreme cold of last Thursday there was open water on Lake Michigan, plainly visible from our office window.

A large amount of local matter has again made it necessary to change the make up of the JOURNAL, and this time it will be continued indefinitely.

Will See will be out of town for two weeks, and those desiring to pay their taxes before his return can be accommodated by calling at George Miller's.

The woman's christian temperance union will meet at the home of Mrs. H. Berdan, on Friday, Feb 1st, at 3. The ladies are cordially invited to be present.

J. Milo Eaton and Geo. A. Leonard returned home from Grand Rapids last Saturday. Their new machine will be delivered and set up about April 1st.

It is said that a steamboat line is to be established between Petoskey and Manistique. When we get a railroad we shall have a steamboat line to Escanaba.

Messors. J. W. Hays and family and D. J. Hays have gone to Plainfield, Ills., and other points west, on a visit to friends and to look after business interests.

The cold was excessive all over Michigan last Thursday morning. Reed City reported 32° below, Walton 40, Mancelona 35, Fife Lake 36, Traverse City 24.

Mr. and Mrs. Guyles and Mrs. Meech, of Norwood, and Mrs. Mears, of Banks, were in attendance at the meeting of the historical society last Tuesday evening.

An old gentleman by the name of Harris, father of Mrs. Ball, of Barnard, died at that place last Saturday. His funeral was held on Monday, Rev. Mr. Morgan officiating.

F. C. Wells, traveling agent for W. R. Kilborn, of Petoskey, made the JOURNAL a brief call on Tuesday. He visited Charlevoix in the interest of Kilborn's patent sleigh brace.

The compiled laws of Michigan state that any physician prescribing medicine while intoxicated shall be liable to one year's imprisonment and a fine not exceeding $500.—Ex.

O. B. Weed & Co. have ordered a quantity of St. Jacob's Oil almanacs, mentioned in the JOURNAL a few weeks ago. After they arrive, if you want something rich, call and get one.

Last Sunday evening while Mrs. Eaton was coming out of the school house, she slipped and fell. The injuries were not as serious as they might have been, but the slippery places should be looked after and ice should be removed or sprinkled with salt or ashes.

The meetings at Barnard are closed for the present. While they were in progress, the attendance was good, and interest really quite satisfactory. Fifteen persons united with the church last Sunday.

A party of young gentlemen are organizing a series of select parties, to be held at the Bridge Street house every two weeks. A preliminary party was held last Wednesday evening, and was a very pleasant affair.

Congressman J. A. Anderson, of Kansas, well known here as a popular resorter, is a worker in congress if one may judge by the number of bills he introduces and advocates, which find mention in the daily press.

W. R. Kilborn, of Petoskey, gave the JOURNAL a pleasant call on Tuesday. He is pushing the sale of his machinery in this section, and reports business on the increase. He finds Charlevoix county a profitable field of operations.

L. D. Bartholomew writes from Bartow, Fla., having stopped there a few days, on the way to Tampa Bay. Henry Allrich has gone to Fort Draugc, where E. Carpenter and family are located. Mr. Bartholomew will visit them there soon.

Mr. J. A. Voght, at Nettleton's wagon shop, is making a pattern of "duck bill," said to beat anything of the kind in this region. He claims it will take hold and let go better than any other made, and he is making them of the very best material.

For the present, it is announced, there will be in the M. E. church, an alphasis of the regular services. This being the case, the character of the preaching may be easily surmised. A cordial invitation is extended to all to be present who can and enjoy the services.

By the exercise of considerable patience and good judgment, Miss Esther Buttars kept a calla lily blossom over fifteen days, and forced another laid so that she had two fine blossoms for the members of the historical society to admire last Tuesday evening.

The Detroit Free Press has improved and enlarged its state news department until it is now a pleasure to look it over, and much easier to find what you want, because it is always in the same place. Its item column for the past few days beats any other daily we get.

T. D. Smith is pushing the wool, tie, and post business up Pine lake. He has 14 teams drawing wood from Bear lake to Pine lake, and has an agent buying ties and posts at Boyne. He has been negotiating for agencies at other points on the lake; and evidently intends to get all he can.

A prominent gentleman of Boyne, who had been reading the Charlevoix papers and Vennor's almanac, armed himself with a linen duster and started for Charlevoix, arriving here just in time to meet the cold wave last Wednesday night. Henceforth he loses his faith in Charlevoix papers as weather indicators.

From W. H. Edwards, of Lansing, we have received a handsome specimen of printing, being an invitation issued by the Grand River Boat Club for their first annual reception at the Lansing House January, 30th. The work indicates patience and skill in manipulating the latest designs of typographic ornaments.

The young folks of Norwood had a "candy pull" at Edwin Cook's last week, which was well attended and furnished plenty of amusement. The only accident to mar the pleasure of the occasion, was on the return home, when the cutter containing the teacher of the Hilton school tipped over, breaking the cutter, and compelling the occupants to walk two miles.

Rev. James M. Barkley, pastor of Hillsdale Presbyterian church, has the following to say of Frank W. Smith's lecture, "In and out Out of Andersonville": "For the charity with which you treated the subject, I wish to thank you. Southerner though I am, yet I could hardly have dealt with it so kindly as you did. Yet I am thankful you did so. It was the spirit of Him who said: 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." I was glad of another thing, viz: that where there was so much to sicken the heart, you found something to cheer. In fact you almost made it the "Bright side of Andersonville prison." Think your audience hardly knew whether to laugh or cry. I shall never forget the "Spoon Drill," "The Champion Stutterers," and the "Charge of the Mule Brigade."

W. F. Lance writes from Orlando, Orange county, Florida, Jan. 21, that "Florida people say it is cold for Florida; it is about the same as the coolest days in Charlevoix in the summer. It is pleasant here. This town is three years old, and is as large as Charlevoix. It is the county seat, and has a railroad."

The ladies of the Congregational society desire to thank Mr. and Mrs. Robert Miller, of the Bridge street house, for the use of the house for their supper last Friday evening, and the kind attention given them during the evening. Also to those who took part in the exercises, and helped to make the evening pleasant and profitable. The net receipts of the supper were $25.28.

A dispatch from Washington says that Col. Stockbridge has interested himself in procuring the necessary papers to press upon the secretary of war the advantage of permitting a race course to be established at Mackinac Island. The matter does not require legislation, but under the law making Mackinac a national park all subjects relating to the island are left to the discretion of the secretary of war.

We have received a communication from a gentleman in Boyne City, commending the JOURNAL for its clean, business-like appearance, and its straightforward course in presenting the questions of the hour. They are encouraging words, and we appreciate them. They bid us continue our hope for the future, and give renewed strength for the work to come. With the gentleman's permission the communication will find a place in our next issue.

Rev. C. F. Van Auken has been doing a little missionary work at the Ross school house for some months past, giving them a sermon once a fortnight when circumstances permitted. Last Sunday, without previous notice, he gave an invitation to all who desired the prayers of the church and intended to make a start in Christian work, to rise, and nine persons replied by rising at once, and without any especial effort on the part of the pastor.

Mr. W. R. Kilborn, of Petoskey, has secured patents on a brace for lumber sleighs, which will prevent the reeling of sleighs and breaking or splitting of beams and runners, and save in repairs and lost time many times their cost. They can be attached to any one-beam sleigh, and increase the strength and durability of the sleigh in every respect. Mr. W. J. Stevenson has the exclusive sheg right for Charlevoix, and will attend promptly to all who come.

We call attention this week to the card of Mr. O. W. Smith, electro-plater and manufacturing jeweler, to be found in another column. Mr. Smith is pushing his work this winter, getting as much of his stock work ready for summer trade as he can. He expresses great faith in the value of "precious stones" as an attraction to the average resorter, and believes that many people make the hunting of agates one of the chief objects of their summer visit. To cultivate and satisfy this desire, Mr. Smith is manufacturing some very fine charms, ring sets, etc., from stock on hand, which he will have on sale. His efforts should be crowned with success.

Business men at least, if not everybody, should have their envelopes sent by mail printed with a request to return if not called for, or at least the address of the sender, for if for any reason the letter should not reach the person addressed, it will be returned to the writer after the time designated by the request; or, if merely the address is on the envelope without a request to return, it will be returned to the writer at the end of thirty days after it has reached the office addressed. Otherwise it lies in the office thirty days uncalled for, is then advertised, lies in the office thirty days, and then goes to the dead letter office, when, after it has taken its turn of examination, is returned to the writer only if it contains something of value. Last week a Greenville business man received a letter containing a draft for $24.31 which was mailed at Greenville over two months ago. It has been held at Detroit sixty days and then went to the dead letter office. The writer directed it to Detroit when he should have addressed it to Ionia. Greenville Independent.

F. D. Waldron, general agent of the Michigan Mutual and Manufacturers Mutual Fire Insurance Co's, of Grand Rapids has been in town for the purpose of appointing a local agent and working up the business. The Michigan Mutual after submitting to a severe test, has been authorized by the commissioner of insurance to do business all over the state. The liability of each member of the company is limited to his actual premium, and the profit of the company being divided annually among the members gives them the benefit of insurance at prime cost. The officers of the Michigan Mutual are well known business men of Grand Rapids and the company start out with $100,000 of assets under the most favorable auspices. Mr. G. S. Thomas will be the agent for this village and vicinity.

Fogyism vs. Progress.

Harbor Springs and Petoskey are engaged in a struggle for commercial supremacy, and at this distance from surface indications as reflected in the newspapers, it looks as though Petoskey will come out ahead. We recollect of hearing a story once to the effect that San Francisco, Cal., was built up by business energy and not by natural advantages. Across the bay was as fine a harbor and location for a city as there was in the whole western country and the owners of the property recognized its advantages. They felt that that spot must become a great city,—its location and advantages were such that it could not be otherwise. They proceeded to make their pile right there. Every move made was toward enriching themselves, without a thought of building a great city, and systems were inaugurated which amounted to little less than robbery. In the meantime the owners of the less eligible site were working to build a city. They recognized the fact that if they did anything they must work for it, and they worked. To day San Francisco is one of the richest cities on this continent, while her early rival, with every advantage of nature in her favor, is scarcely recognized in history, and seldom marked on maps of the United States. It looks now as if Harbor Springs and Petoskey were engaged in such a struggle, and the result promises to be similar, unless a change of tactics by one party or the other is made soon. Harbor Springs says, we have the harbor, the location, all the necessaries for business equal to the demands of the surrounding country, without the outlay of a dollar for dock or harbor. Why, then, the folly of expending thousands of honest dollars for an artificial harbor and dock within a few miles of us? Petoskey says, we are here, and we propose to stay, without paying tribute to a small community who take advantage of every opportunity to draw from us our legitimate trade. We shall build our own dock, and if it be possible to get a government appropriation for a breakwater, we shall have that too. Petoskey has not a rich commerce to build upon, like the city we have taken for illustration, but if her courage and energy fail not, the principle will work itself out in that way.

Cannot Charlevoix profit by the experience, and take advantage of the present uncertainty? We have here an excellent natural harbor. We have unsurpassed location and surroundings for a city. In our resources of hardwood timber and agriculture we have something to build upon. Combine with these a progressive spirit of generosity, and seek to build a city, and we will also build our own pocket-book as well as a monument to our memory. If a man comes to buy a lot with a declared intention of seeing a manufactory, make some price with him, but don't let him go. Get all you can for your property, but don't for a moment think "he's got to come here anyway, and I won't throw away my chance to make something." If you lose him, and he goes to a neighboring locality, he will remember the treatment against you, and advise other prospecting friends not to come here. He will bring all his influence against you. Large manufacturing houses seek companionship, and competition in the same business, and it is much easier to get the third or fourth large factory than it is the first and second. If a man offers a water front, don't refuse it because his buildings will obstruct the view of the lake or of some other property, the increased value of your property will enable you to build better, and a new lot than you did on the old, all the experience gained will enable you to make up in artificial things what you have lost in view of distant scenery.

If we are building for our children a comfortable home with a steady income, and a of wealth from a prosperous trade will be appreciated far more than an unobstructed view of lake or river, a mountain or wood, or even the most picturesque outline of the child grows to maturity and then. Other beauties,—perhaps very ones we have left,—will appear attractive, and away go the expectations. But if we bequeath to a prosperous trade in a live growing city, there will be some amusement to remain. To do this we must not permit a man to leave here to go to a better offer to locate in a neighboring town. While other towns are fighting for the milk, let us skim the cream.

In and Out of Andersonville.

For some months several members of Burke Post, G. A. R., have been getting to secure Mr. Frank W. Smith to lecture for the benefit of the post, and they have at last succeeded. The lecture was delivered in Tuesday evening, Feb. 12, and the subject, "In and out of Andersonville." In the short time Mr. Smith has been delivering this lecture he has gained an enviable reputation, and he is greeted with full houses wherever he goes. This evening's audience was known here that seats were taking rapidly reserved in advance, and became a desirable seat it will be necessary to buy your ticket as soon as possible, if any of the unoccupied reserved seats of Robert Miller, at the Bridge street house. The following extracts will indicate some of the leading points of the lecture and the manner in which it was received and commented on other cities:

The "Tribune" held his audience for two hours as easily as most speakers hold forty-five minutes. The boys and girls seemed to be charmed for their eyes were rivited from first to last upon the ex-prisoner of war. Not only was the general "make up" of war and prison life reflected to with wonderful power and pathos, but the many places and positions where human character made itself manifest were brought out in such a way as to greatly encourage every professed Christ, and to exalt the better judgment of all present on the side of right.—Altoona Morning Tribune, Oct. 16, 1883.

Mr. Smith gave a history of his life, of his military life, the way he was taken prisoner and his incarceration in that horrible den Andersonville. His description of prison life was listened to with rapt attention. Perhaps much light upon the subject, at times he gave the comic side, which convulsed the audience with laughter, then he would turn suddenly to the serious, and express himself in such a feeling and pathos, show of strong powers of oratory.—Evansville Wis., Review, Nov. 23, 1883.

For two hours and twenty minutes Mr. Smith held the audience in rapt attention, as he portrayed pictures of the thrilling incidents which came under his notice, and the experience of the "Boys in Blue" while guests of the Boys who wore the Gray. The illustrations drawn with chalk on the blackboard elicited hearty laughter from the audience. Pieces of the brown pen, places about it, and methods of escape were all illustrated on the board.—Bellefonte Daily News, Nov. 8, 1883.

Wm. Black's Lecture.

We have been called to account and perhaps justly, for not mentioning Mr. Black's lecture in last week's issue, though we are not wholly to blame. No previous announcement of the lecture had been furnished us for paper, and we knew nothing of it, until the hall was lighted and audience assembled. Other engagements prevented an attendance, and want of time prevented any arrangement for getting a full report. If officers of societies giving public entertainments will manifest sufficient interest to give us notice in the issue previous to the date of entertainment, we will try to provide for getting a report though we may not be able to attend personally. Concerning Mr. Blacks lecture, the following has been handed us by one who was in attendance:

To the Editor of the JOURNAL:

Last Monday night I had the pleasure of listening to a fine lecture by Mr. William Black, of Marlon, read before the Liberal Club of Charlevoix, at Bartholomew's opera house. * * The subject of the lecture was "education" the lecturer starting out with the old text saying that "Knowledge is power," gave a very clear argument, directing the subject into some four parts, the physical, mental, industrial and ethical,—all of which were handled in a masterly manner. After the lecture concluded, music was quite furnished by the ladies band, after which commenced an attack by the members of the club on the speaker's arguments. As the names were called out by president Robert Miller, some attacked fiercely the ideas of the speaker, while others as positively agreed with him. It was a rare mass-meeting of many things, and yet in the most perfect order. Charlevoix may well feel proud of her Liberal Club. To me unacquainted with its workings, it might seem odd at first, but when once understood, it would seem to have its foundations laid deep, having a grand chance to be a useful style. The house was well filled, and "open wonder arose with its vociferous cheer, soft eyes looked love to eyes which spoke again, and all wild merry as a marriage bell."

Historical Society.

This society met last Tuesday evening at the parlors of Hon. A. Buttars, about 70 members being present. The exercises opened with a piano duet by Mrs. G. S. Thomas and Miss Abbie Bennet. Mr. R. W. Kane read a humorous selection from the Ingoldsby Legends, which gave satisfaction in both the excellence of reading and the moral drawn. Mrs. Mears and Mr. W. A. Smith sang the "Italian Serenade." In the absence of the regular historical reading, Mrs. Oscar Upright read a well-prepared paper containing good-natured hits on members of the society and others of our citizens, and quite a complete history of the society since its organization. After intermission, W. A. Smith sang "When the tide comes in." Ed. Parmelee gave a declamation entitled "The clown's story," which contained many suggestions that strike home to the heart. H. Lee Iddings read in an able manner a difficult selection from Hiawatha. Al. Washburn gave evidence of fine conceptions of declamation in his rendering of "The Last Hymn," which has been pronounced one of the best rendered exercises of the evening. Next Tuesday evening having been selected by the G. A. R. for their lecture, the society will meet one week later at the residence of Byron See.

Ironton.

The furnace is in full blast. Last week it ran out 314 tons of pig iron, the largest amount it ever made in one week.

R. M. Cherry, president of the Pine Lake Iron Co., arrived last Friday night, to remain a few days.

Sleighing is good, and company teams draw six cords to a load of wood three miles. A total of 112 cords a day is put into the yard.

W. C. Mears, of Banks, registered at the Pioneer House on Sunday. He reports business good in that town.

The mumps have disappeared for lack of victims.

Ironton is to have a brewery. Cannot say whether it will add much to the piety of the place.

A. B. Noyes, who has been confined to the house for the past ten days, is out again.

Our general health is good. No doctors in town.

Henry Hammond's boy who broke his leg recently, has recovered sufficiently to go to school on crutches.

The town board of Eveline met at Schoffen's hall last Saturday, to grant an extension of time 30 days for the collection of taxes.

Our population is increased every few days by the arrival of men with their families to work for the iron company. Every house is full that can be rented.

ANON.

South Arm.

The "oldest inhabitant" reports the weather colder at Intermediate on Jan. 24th., than at any time in the recollections of the past. The thermometer registered 34 degrees below in the morning and 26 in the evening. At South Arm it registered 41.

About 30 of the South Arm school visited the spelling school at Intermediate on the 15th. They report a splendid time.

Mr. Davis made nearly a fatal mistake recently, by taking sugar of lead for something else. He is recovering.

Mrs. Webb fell recently and broke three ribs.

South Arm reports 57 pupils enrolled, and East Jordan about 100.

F. B. Shaw is visiting old friends in this vicinity.

S. G. Lamman has sore eyes.

D. Isamm has a new waterbury watch, and feels as pleased as a boy with a new whistle.

The prayer meeting at H. Olney's on Thursday evening, was well attended notwithstanding the cool weather.

Hon. Richard Knight's son Will, of Banks, is drawing logs with his $1000 team.

F. S. Meech, of Norwood, passed through this town recently.

F. A. N.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by UPRIGHT BROS., real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Jan. 29, 1884, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

J. T. Hanson and W. S. Court to Charlotte Weir, 20 acres, twp of Evangeline, $600.
Geo. A. Gardner and wife to John and Thos. Charlton, lots 3, 4, 5 of sec 3, 203.14, $400.
Thos. Charlton and wife to Wm. Charlton, lots 3, 4, 5 of sec 3, 203.14, $400.
Peter Rardoski and wife to Arthur Meigs et al, lot No 1, Sec. 6, $300.
Willis M. Strong to Emma A. Strong, 320 acres, 11 & 12, $1200.
Harry Chamberlain to Philo Chrysler, 160 acres, 14-35-4, $1,000.

When a cure is guaranteed why will you refuse to be relieved of that cough which is liable to become seated on your lungs and to cause you many a suffering day and sleepless night? Your children are liable to be taken with Croup and die before a doctor can be summoned. Be wise and obtain a remedy that will not fail to give relief from Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Croup, and all other lung difficulties. Hamilton's Cough Balsam will do all this and costs but a trifle. Price 25 cents 50 cents a bottle. Sent by O. B. Weed & Co.

Beware! Coughs, colds, and slight Throat diseases often develop into incurables. Scated Cough, Consumption, etc., and should have immediate attention and be removed in the first stages. Not only public speakers, but all, are liable to throat troubles, and to obtain relief should use Hamilton's Cough Troches, which relieve coughs and hoarseness, making the articulation clear. Warranted to give satisfaction. Price 25c per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Secure admiration. Who can help admiring a lovely face, a clear, smooth, beautiful complexion? These can be easily obtained by the use of Hamilton's Oriental Balm. It will surely remove Freckles, Tan, Pimples, and Blemishes of every sort, and is in no way injurious to the skin, but is the most harmless and elegant preparation of its kind. Price 50c per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

TOOTHACHE.—Money is a great cure for aching hearts, but a twenty dollar gold piece placed on an aching tooth don't seem to have the desired effect. In fact, nothing is sure but Hamilton's Toothache Drops, which are warranted to cure in one minute. Price only 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and loss in the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 25 cents Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 1-69

O. W. SMITH,
ELECTRO-PLATER,
Manufacturing Jeweler and Lapidist.
Electro-plating in Gold and Silver. Any article of Jewelry made to order. AGATES AND JASPERS cut to order.

C. R. BELLINGER
carries the largest and finest stock of
JEWELRY,
Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Optical Goods in Charlevoix county. Agent for the celebrated ROCKFORD WATCH, the best time-piece ever made. All goods sold by regular and low rates for in silver medals are subject to sale for charges.

PIMPLES.
I will send a receipt for cure for a simple disease that has been the despair of thousands, leaving the skin soft, clear and beautiful; also instructions for producing a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, inclosing a 3c. stamp, Rev. Vennor & Co., 72 Barclay St., N. Y.

G. W. JEFFERIES,
Dealer in
Fresh and Cured Meat
Fresh and Salt Fish,
AND VEGETABLES.
Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.
West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

New Goods.
At Cost
FOR CASH
For the Next 30 Days.
MISS L. SPAULDING,
Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

O. B. WEED & CO.
Are headquarters for
DRUGS
CHEMICALS,
Patent Medicines, all Kinds.
Imported and Domestic Perfumery.
Toilet Articles,
AND FANCY GOODS.
None but Pure Medicines
Kept in stock.
Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Bartholomew's new
Opera Block

Advance Lumber Company
Are now prepared to do
CUSTOM SAWING
Promptly and on short notice. We have on hand a large quantity of
Hard and Soft Wood Lumber and Hemlock Timber.
GIVE US A TRIAL. ADVANCE LUMBER CO. ADVANCE, MICH.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,
DEALER IN
Hardware,
FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.
Charlevoix, Mich.

GEO. W. MILLER,
DEALER IN
Clothing
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
Hats and Caps, Trunks and Satchels,
GLOVES MITTENS, ETC.
Buttars' Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

AT COST!
All Kinds of
Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.
The Finest Line of
French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear
Ever brought to Charlevoix.
Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.
They have no Superior.
CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY,
And Satisfaction Guaranteed.
L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House
CHARLEVOIX

Overcoats!
AND SUITINGS
Gents' Overcoats.
Youths' Overcoats.
Boys' Overcoats.
Gents' Suits,
Youths' Suits.
Boys' Suits.
I have just received a large assortment of the above goods, bought at reduced rates. I am selling these goods for less than they are actually worth at wholesale. I have a line of Overcoats I am closing out at $2.00. Big bonanza for the money. Call and examine these goods and judge for yourself.
E. M. Clark.
Charlevoix, Nov., 1883.

Joseph Hyland,
CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,
Sheet-Iron Worker,
and manufacturer of
Hyland's Patent Fireman.
Dealer in all kinds of
SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.
Heavy blacksmithing of all kinds, and Repairing of boilers promptly attended to.

SEVEN TIMES ONE.

BY JEAN INGELOW.

There's no dew left on the daisies and clover,
There's no rain left in heaven,
I've said my "seven times" over and over,
Seven times one are seven.

I am old, so old, I am write a letter;
My birthday lessons are done;
The lambs play always, they know no better;
They are only one times one.

O moon! in the night I've seen you sailing
And shedding your silver rays down;
You were bright, ah, bright! but your light is failing,
You are nothing now but a bow.

You moan; have you done something wrong in the heaven?
My head has broken your dose?
I hope!—you have you'll mend in forgiven,
And shine again in your place.

O velvet bee, you're a dusty fellow,
You've powdered your face with gold!
O lark, I'm sorry that I made you of yellow,
Give me your honey, I'm cold.

O columbine, open your folded wrapper,
Where lies both truth and love dwell
O purple vetch, lift me your purple flapper
That hedges in your clear green hall!

And show me your nest with the young ones in it;
I will not steal them away;
I am old! you may trust me, linnet, linnet—
I am seven times one to-day.

CASTLES IN THE AIR.

BY MAY HORNBY.

Oh, visions that linger me waking,
How vainly ye come!
Like a ship in over a blanket
Or a rainbow across a sky.
Ye dance, and gleam, and glitter—
I behold thee, wondrous fair—
I would dwell in your cloud-built palaces,
My castles in the air.

I would stand on your golden towers
And gaze at the gleaming west,
Or lay my head, at evening,
On a pillow of cloud, to rest;
And through the purple shadows
Of your halls I would hear the music
Of the far-off sunset band.

RUNNING THE FORTS.

Alex W. Pearson, of Vineland, N. J., writes a story of how Porter ran by Vicksburg. Mr. Pearson was paymaster on the steamer Red Rover, attached to the Mississippi squadron. He tells how the gauntlet was run in this manner:

The ironclads were anchored in the Mississippi, just below the mouth of the Yazoo, in the order of procession they were to take in passing the blockade. All seemed ready, and everybody was on the qui vive for the start. Just 10 o'clock that night we heard the deep tone of the boatswain's mate, of the Louisville the lad a voice like a lion: calling: "All hands! Up anchor!" "There! They are off!" was the word, and we hurried on deck to get a parting glimpse of our "forlorn hope." We breathlessly listened to the rattle of the chain cables as they came in, and could distinguish the dark outlines of the iron-clads as they swung in the stream. Then there was a signal from the flagship, and again we heard the boatswain: "Let go anchor!" The cables rattled out again, and all was still. We drew a long breath. "They're not going to-night!" "Something has happened!" So all hands turned in.

Thus, upon successive nights, was the plan practiced in the preliminaries of departure, until all became so used to the performance that the movement was as mechanical as any other drill, and spectators ceased to regard it with especial interest.

Meanwhile the three transports which were to go below were getting ready. It was decided to economize life by removing the crews from these steamers, leaving only two pilots at the wheel and two engineers to handle the engines. The duty of guiding these large and defenseless steamers through the hottest of fire they were destined to traverse seemed extra hazardous. The post of the pilot, particularly, perched up in the sky-parlor, was unconfortably isolated and distinguished when Vicksburg poured shot and shell were flying about regardless of consequences. The loneliness in itself was kind of "pokerish." Danger, like misery, loves company.

To avoid the disagreeable responsibility of ordering volunteers to occupy these perilous positions, Admiral Porter called for volunteer pilots. Every pilot in the squadron volunteered! Even the two old Nestors who presided at the wheel of the Red Rover got me to write an application requesting that they might be "permitted to have the pleasure" of taking one of the steam transports past Vicksburg.

THE PILOTS OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Here was another difficulty. All were so eager for the post of honor that it was a delicate matter to make selection. I cannot forbear digressing here to place on record my humble tribute of respect and admiration for the pilots of the Mississippi river. Taken as a class, their gallantry admits comparison. Accustomed to grave responsibility in ordinary emergencies, trod to decide and act instantly, when upon such action the safety of hundreds of human beings confiding in their care, in the face of imminent peril, deliberate yet prompt, with a courage which has stood all tests, their seeming reckelessness springs not from regardlessness, but from a heroic contempt of danger and in the performance of duty they understood to be legitimate duty. I verily believe that the pilot of the Mississippi squadron would have volunteered to take the fleet of steamers over Niagara falls.

Those who were so fortunate as to be "permitted the pleasure" repeated to arrange their surroundings according to their judgment; that is, to try their want any surroundings. Reasoning philosophically, that a cannon shot on an iron plate harm by the splinters it scatters then by itself, they had the pilot house, which exposes to take shot on the lofty decks of these Western steamers, removed, leaving the wheel and themselves exposed. This settled the splinter business, except such as might come from a shot striking the spokes of the wheel. One of the pilots remarked to me when inspecting his post of duty and honor, "They'll have to take center shots to 'raise' the hair on us now!" Still, there was an unusual wakefulness about the elevation calculated to make one feel as I once felt when topping out a tall hay tack in the midst of a vindictive thunder-storm. I was "lead center" just then, and felt so.

A CONSIDERATE ADMIRAL.

When Admiral Porter was ready to start on his excursion past Vicksburg we learned it on the hospital ship. Porter always had a tutherly care for and interest in the comfort and satisfaction of those of his comrades who had suffered by the fortune of war. He knew that the poor wounded and helpless heroes languishing in the wards of the Red Rover felt a keen sympathy with him and with those he would like with him in this desperate undertaking, and he knew that all eagerly wished to see what might be seen of a spectacle which promised to be one of tremendous import and excitement. One day he intimated to Dr. Pickney that he might take the Rover down to the bend above Vicksburg to-night coaling ship. So we knew something was in the night. We knew what that meant. And all those poor sufferers on board soon knew it, too. It was better than a dose of quinine. There was no more lying idle in bed, or seeing your friend go in.

At sunset we weighed anchor and stood down the river and took "orchestra seats" as spectators and auditors of a drama which would be like the lurid blaze of artillery and accompanied by the music of its thunder. It was a clear and splendid evening, but as the shades of night closed in the sky, though starlit, became hazy, and a gloom settled over the river, which rendered almost undistinguishable the outlines of its shores. As the darkness thickened I heard the remark often repeated among our invalid boarders: "It is just the night for it."

It was touching to see wounded veterans who that morning would have thought it impossible to leave their cots, straining their crippled sinews to clamber up to the hurricane deck, where they might have the best view of the scene to be enacted. There was little conversation on board that evening. Anticipation was too busy for words. We were oppressed with that sense of expectancy of something indefined and fearful which engrosses the attention and renders language mute. The time seemed interminable. We thought the dowsed squadron would never appear. We strained our sight to pierce the thickening shadows, and ever and anon we would hear the pings of the steam. At last we tired of watching and waiting. Midnight was at hand and we began to fancy that something had caused a postponement of the movement.

A SPECTRAL PROCESSION.

Just then some one in the pilot house exclaimed, in a stage whisper, but which was heard by all, so intently silent were we:

"There they come!" We gazed up the channel and saw in the dim form of the Benton evolve itself out of the invisible. Like Banquo's line of specters the others followed. There was no gleam of light, no wreath of vapor, no plume of the pudding sheets, and no perforation of the steam. The long column swept by as in majestic but funeral silence. There was a weird ghostliness about this death-like apparition more impressive and appalling than if it had shone with the flashes and shivered with the rattle of the iron monsters we knew were frowning from those dusky portholes. I have witnessed with anything seeming, but all fade beside the memory of the awe-inspiring passage of that spectral procession.

The transports came last, and defined against the glimmer of the sky we could distinguish the outlines of our friends the pilots, statue-like, at either side of the naked wheels. Not a man aboard ship but envied them the rapture of the unseen experience before them. As the shadowy squadron appeared so vanished. It glided out of the night and departed into it again. It left us breathless, awe-struck. We rubbed our eyes and wondered if the vision had been real. Then there was another interval of exceedingly suspense. We waited anxiously. The last scene was about to open.

THE TREMENDOUS SURPRISE.

At length we saw a single flash. Then another and another and another, then a whole sheet of flame, followed by the deep crashing thunder of the "dread artillery." The sky lit with the light of a conflagration. The enemy, provident for this event, had filled vacant buildings with combustibles, and fired them to illuminate the river and give their cannoneers a better chance for aim. But the night was still, and the dense smoke of the burning stretched out of the hazy atmosphere, hung in a hold sheet over the surface of the stream. Everything was enveloped in a vapory veil, through which could only be descried the quick emptions of the volcanos of guns as they belched fire from tempest at the passing squadron.

So the lowering was the storm that the pilot of the Tuscumbia took his bearings, and finally turned his ship completely around, heading up the stream! While in this position, but upper works of one of the steam transports as she swung by. The pilots, standing at the naked wheel, loomed out like gigantic spectres! He hailed them to know how they were getting on. "All right, by G—d!" they shouted back, and on they went.

The passing of Vicksburg took not many minutes, but they seemed prodigious and had a good deal crowded into them. We lost one of the mosquito the Henry Clay and had another so disabled that she had to be towed out of range. Otherwise the damage was less serious than had been expected. Most of the crews's shot were thrown away. Accuracy in shooting on the wing with 100-pounders when all hands are in a hurry is not easy. In the glare of the conflagrations fitfed again into darkness; the thunders of the battery thunders rolled away over the Warrenton hills; the quiet of summer midnight descended once more upon the troubled bosom of the river, and we knew that the gauntlet of Vicksburg defenses had been run.—Philadelphia Times.

The Wrong Sam Baptized.

Stammering or stuttering is one of the most unpleasant things at times that a man can be afflicted with. A man may be troubled with almost any other malady and be cured or helped, but a man who stutters, though he may at times be free from the habit, never has confidence in his talking ability. They may run all right for a time, but just as he expects the most from his vocal organs, and wants to do his best, they go back on him, and he flounders around, and can't express his thoughts to save his life. A stutterer is usually the best-natured man in the world. It seems as if everybody picked out the jolliest fellow as a valuable case to put your vocal works into, so there won't be any kicking. There is a gentleman living in this State who stutters just when he don't want to, but who can talk right along all night when there is nothing particular to be said. If he gets excited, or interested and wants to orate, he gets stuck and has time to walk around the block before he can get things to working again. He was out in Iowa recently, and attended where he was stopping, the first sling men were getting up a party one Sunday to go to a town a few miles distant, where a camp-meeting was in progress, and where there were to be a number of converts baptized, and they invited one friend, the stutterer, to go along.

"Not m-m-much," said he, as he worked at untangling a fish line, while a boy brought him a bottle full of angle-worms, "If I know m-m-my own heart. I don't go to no k-k-k-camp meeting where they b-b-b-baptize. I att-t-tended a baptizing scrape once, and my k-k-clothes have not got d-d-dry yet.

"What was the matter?" said a drummer for a Chicago grocery-house, who was sitting on the piazza railing.

"Didn't fall in the water did you?"

"No-no," said the stutterer, as he stuck his hook to biter for the pure of the angle-worm do keep them from crawling off, and I didn't fall in, but I got in all the s-s-s-same. I was s-s-s-s-s-tuck-ed in. If you won't tell you can hear the story."

The boys swore they would never give a secret away, and he went on:

"Well, about twenty years ago I was editing a pep-per-per in Wack-k-ensuh, and there was a revival in the town all winter, and in the spring they advertised to b-b-b-baptize all of the k-k-k-converts. Everybody went, and I went-went down to the k-k-creek to see them s-s-s-scrub. They had a presbyter elder, a stranger to me, to do-do-do the piece of the public work, and he pep-pep-pitched in, and when they had dipped a b-b-b-few, I noticed the elder looked as-sort of tired when he pushed the last convert ashore, and I thought if he wanted to s-s-s-out of the w-w-water, so I reached out my k-k-handle to help him up the b-b-bank. Do you know, he thought I was a k-k-candidate for baptism, and he took hold of my hand and was pepp-pulling me in, when I said, 'elder, don't pep-pep-pull before I could say my m-m-mother-in-said, 'Have you f-f-first, my young b-b-christian friend,' and he put his arm around me and was pulling me right in. I wasn't as-st-st-strong as I did now, and I got a g-g-grip like a prize tightner, and before I knew what he was about he was saying, 'I b-b-baptize thee in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost,' and I was as weak as a k-k-cat. I tried to get away from him, and tried to explain that I s-s-wasn't the feller, and that I had n-never been converted, but the naturally mom took on us-us-us, and I gave up, and I thought I couldn't get in a word in time, and he dipped me under. As I went down I could see the crowd on the b-b-bank laughing, because they all knew I was baptized, and that it was a mistake of the strange preacher. I came up strangling and the first thing I saw was the elder, you have made the d-d-darndest mistake of your life, and went out on the bank and shook myself. Yes may talk about m-m-ministers not pulling one with enthusiasm, but I always think that Pleasing Elder Knowe I was no k-k-christian. I was baptized in the s-s-s-creek, and they laugh at me to this day. So, gentlemen, I b-b-can't go to the s-s-s-s-side of the creek and see the s-s-s-s-hows' and the stuttering man took his fish-pole and angle-worms and went down toward the pond, while the traveling merchant to the camp-meeting.—Peck's Sun.

One poetry can be removed without injury to the rich stained glass by passing a hot soldering iron over it. The heat of the iron soften it readily, and permits its removal with a knife or chisel without much trouble.

A BRAVE man thinks no one his superior who does him an injury; he is but a fool if he does not know he is himself superior to the other by forgiving it.—Dayo.

The Unfinished Manuscript.

Literary men may, perhaps, receive a kind of social black eye; that is, no one believes that they are quite as good husbands or as good fathers as they should be; and, from the observatory of a casual view, this is correct. Few people know to what extremities literary men are reduced. Few, very few indeed, know how they court the so-called sense of inclination. The man who banishes the drawing-knife or plane cuff, if he be in good physical condition, do his work creditably; but the literary man, though he be in robust health, and though he may not have an ache or a pain, is frequently unable to do acceptable work. This is a curious fact which no student of metaphysics can explain, for the mind of man, although it is constantly becoming clearer and more capable of comprehension, is still something which a Newton cannot define, nor a Bacon perfectly explore. A man's mind seems to have but little to do with his sickness, for, although his heart may be warm, his words are sometimes cold.

"I want you to go to bed," said Mr. Mecklamore, the well-known novelist, to his little girl. "Every night when I sit down to work you persist in snorting around. Go to bed; I've got work to do."

"She can't understand you," said Mrs. Mecklamore; "I don't think that she is well."

"She's always ill when I want to work. She seems to study the time. What do you want to snort that way for? Not are enough to drive a man crazy?"

"Robert, I don't think the little girl can help it," the wife replied. "She is too young to know anything about the unfinished manuscript."

"Well it's time she was learning," the author exclaimed, turning, with an angry air. "Other people can work without interruption. I don't see why I should be imposed on. I'll go down town, I am write there without interruption," and he gathered up his papers and left the house.

Quietly, and without interruption, he worked for several hours. Occasionally, when his mind was deep in the making of a character, he would give a little anxious face, and hear an exclamation of gladness; but he waved aside the vision and continued on. Late at night a boy came with a note. The message ran:

"I am very uneasy about Dora; I think she has the diphtheria."

My work is done for tonight," he mused; and, arranging his papers with a disconsolated air, he went home. He found the doctor there. The little sufferer was in bed and her throat was swollen. She tried to say something, but "papa's throat was so sore" she could not articulate. An unfinished manuscript stared at her.

"Is it a very violent attack?" he asked of the physician.

"Not very."

The mother sat on the edge of the bed. The father approached, but did not see the lines of the manuscript now. The little girl choked, and they lifted her up. The unfinished manuscript was dim.

"She has been ailing for several days," said the mother, "but we did not think there was any serious the matter with her. She has been so gay and full of frolic that we didn't think anything could ail her."

The sufferer looked at her father and tried to speak, but failing, she put her hand into his and smiled. The unfinished manuscript was dim. With a struggle she said:

"Am I dead?"

"No, angel," whispered the father.

"Do you want me to go to bed?"

"No, dear, no."

The unfinished manuscript was failing more and more.

"She is past all help," the doctor said.

The mother laid her face in the window-curtain. The father took her in his arms. She looked at him and was dead.

The unfinished manuscript had failed.—Texas Siftings.

Photographing Dogs and Babies.

The artist was a lean-eyed man; his hair was unkempt, his scarf was disarranged, and his coat-sleeves were turned up. He looked weary.

"I have just been attempting to fix a baby's attention," he said, in an exploratory tone. "by throwing handsprings behind the camera. When I showed the negative to the mother she made the inevitable observation that the face lacked expression. Can you put expression on the surface of a lump of dough?

"Is it easier to photograph dogs than babies?

"Oh, a thousand times. You can give a dog a sausage and hold it for a time without difficulty. Then, dogs are more amenable to expressions. None of them have the look of stupidity that the average baby wears except the pug, and dogs, by the way, are the easiest to take. All you have to do is to put them in front of the camera and they go to sleep at once. The most difficult dog I ever struggled with was an Italian greyhound. He was as delicate and extremely sensitive little creature, and endowed with almost human intelligence. It took me two days to adjust his legs still half a second to save his life, but he was a dog, and succeeded at length in making a picture that was half satisfactory."

"Do you photograph many dogs?"

"About 200 a year. The work is done by a few specialists. The big photographers won't bother with dogs.—New York Sun.

THERE is loss and loss epicurean enthusiasm over venison every year.

HUMOR.

A TAILOR's goose—the duds.

A FRAME of mind—The skull.

THE weight of all flesh—Stockounces to the pound.

INDIFFERENCE, from a theatrical point of view, always indicates broakers ahead.

Brown—"Tom' means light." Smith—"That's what I thought, at first." Brown—"But I wasn't certain. I say luck's light, however."

A DIFFERENCE: A friend of mine who died of the death of a well-known stock dealer, replied: "Why, he's died of that I am. I'm dead broke; but I'm a dead broker."

"WHAT are you laughing at, my dear?" asked Mr. Jones of his husband, as he was chuckling over his morning paper. "Something I saw here," he replied, "but it's hardly funny enough for you."

ONE of the greatest unexplained physiological mysteries is why a pile of blankets, a boy's hand in a cold short time, while a loose ball chilled to the core. Another is why a boy will be seventeen miles in the hot sun long a few doors, without becoming chilled in the least, and yet that same boy will groan like a horse with the colic if he is asked to fetch a glass of water from an adjoining room.—Texas Siftings.

A BEAUFORT bachelor so greatly admired the way in which his housekeeper prepared coffee that he proposed she was accepted, only to be married the coffee was made by the hired girl.—Texas Siftings.

THERE is very little difference between an inmate of a penitentiary and the average husband. In the ways found out, and the former will like to be.—Judge's Library.

Did you ever see a woman throw a chicken? It is just as easy—for the chicken. The way usually him herself on the foot, gets sat and she can hardly fall straight while the chicken holds its head up, clucks softly, and looks as though it wondered what under the sun the fuss all meant any how.—Footlight.

WIFE—"What are you doing, dear Husband, in a reflective attitude?" "Thinking." Wife—"Are you thinking of your little wife, love?" Husband—"No, I was thinking of something."—Merchant Traveler.

"Your claim too much for Samaritan Nervine," says a skeptic. Its patrons say just the contrary.

The dark age: A woman between 25 and 40.

"Mr. RICHARDSON'S Samaritan Nervine cured me of Epilepsy."—Jacob Sutes, St. Joseph, Mo.

HOT SUNSTROKE that a baby's 1st 24th should come.

The Doctor's Indorsement.

Dr. W. D. Wright, Tinsdaal, O., sends the following testimonial of Hop Bitters: I have prescribed Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the lungs in a great number of cases, and always with success. One case in particular was given up by several physicians who had failed in her consultation with myself. The patient had all the symptoms of confirmed consumption—cold night sweats, hectic fever, loss of flesh, etc. I prescribed the common medicinally to get better, and was soon restored to her usual health. I found Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs the most valuable expectorant for breaking up lingering coughs not solids.

Indorsed by the Clergy.

We take pleasure in recommending Dr. Warner's White Wine of Tar Syrup to any one suffering from a cough, whether it be throat or lung disease.

REV. M. L. Hartley, pastor Presbyterian church, Reading, Mich. Rev. J. T. Inlings, Pastor Cong. church, Mich. Rev. V. L. Lockwood, Ann Arbor, Mich.

"Put up" at the Gault House.

The Gault house offers its guests and families accommodations at the low price of $2 per day. Also the Palmer House, Chicago, corner Clinton and Madison streets, three blocks nearest to Lake Michigan depot, ladies' entrance on Madison street, one block from the Union depot. Elevator, all appointments first-class.

H. W. HOWE, Proprietor.

Curbs—Bone.

The winner blood is store and cold. Yet summer hot I a-herved gold:
Curbs—bone, I'm sorry of a wit. Once seen
Can be covered well with Curbline.

"Cured Gleepsmen.

REV. L. S. Cutting, of Topeka, Kan., says: Dr. Warner, your White Wine of Tar Syrup has been in my family and found to be all and even more than you claim it. It is a most valuable remedy for all throat and lung diseases.

For several years I was troubled with Catarrh; have tried many remedies, yet without lasting benefit. Your Catarrh Remedy I believe is the only one. I. B. Conner, Hookstown, Beaver Co., Pennsylvania, Pa. (Sun advertisement.)

PURE Cod-Liver Oil, made from selected livers on the seacoast, by DARNELL, HUNT & CO., New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to any of the other oils in market.

I HAD suffered from CHRONIC SORE EYES for years, and had to use spectacles; was advised to send for a doctor. I did entirely between two suns. Dr. Tyler's Green Balm has worked a miracle.—C. S. HALLEER, Binghamton, N. Y.

CHAPPED Hands, Face, Pimples, and Rough Skin, cured by using Jennings' Lily Cream, made by CASWELL, HAZARD & CO., New York.

Now a costly medicine—"Dr. Jones's Cure for Consumption" is free to the poor.

"Rough on Rats" clears out Rats, Mice. 15c.

Mother Seigel's Warm Syrup, instantly relieves. 25c.

"Rough on Coughs" Troches, 15c; Liquid, 50c.

WELLS' May Apple (Liver) Pills, 10c.

"Rough on Toothache," instant relief. 15c.

"Rough on Corns," for Corns, Warts, Bunions. 15c.

WELLS' Health Renewer cures Dyspepsia, Impotence.

The "Rough on" Cough Powder, elegant. 15c.

An eminent physician first prescribed Piso's Cure for Consumption.

St. Jacobs Oil
THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY FOR PAIN.
Delivers and cures
RHEUMATISM,
Neuralgia,
Sciatica, Lumbago,
BACKACHE,
HEADACHES, TOOTHACHE,
SORE THROAT,
QUINSY, SWELLINGS,
SPRAINS,
Bruises, Cuts, Burns,
FROSTBITES,
BURNS, SCALDS,
and all bodily aches and pains.
FIFTY CENTS A BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.
The Charles A. Vogeler Co.
(Successors to A. Vogeler & Co.)
Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

BIG PAY: sell our rubber hand stamps. Terms free. Rubber Type Factory, 1 Ch. Chicago, Illinois.

$60 A WEEK AT HOME. $5 OUTFIT FREE. Address Shaw's Co., Augusta, Maine.

FREE. By return mail. Full Description of Hoosick's New Tailor System of HAIR Wholesale and retail. Send for price-list. HOOSICK MFG. CO., Box 5, Troy, N. Y.

Elecat. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Lame Back, Sprains, Bruises, etc. Sold by Druggists. Circular free. Electro Medical Co., Cincinnati, O.

Young Men can by Telegraph or Lightning learn Telegraphy and secure a situation. Circulars free. VALENTINE BROS., Janesville, Wis.

$250 A MONTH. Agents Wanted. 20 best selling articles in the world. Samples worth $5 free. Address J. Ware & Co., Chicago, Ill.

A GENTS WANTED for the best and fastest-selling Religious Books and Bibles. Prices reduced 33 per cent. No cheap Premium Pictures.

THE Law of Bee Insurance, particulars, secrets, circulars, etc., sent free. Address, with stamp, Bee Journal, Chicago, Ill.

LARGEST Seed Warehouse Established, N. Y. Dollar Seed Box, 40 Kinds, Vegetable and Flower Seeds, Warranted Fresh, Sent on receipt of $1. Catalogue of Seeds, Bulbs, Plants, Free. Address, Ellsworth & Co., Rochester, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE, to sell Tailor's Guide. Sample by mail, 25 cents. Address, Tailor's Guide, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Wear Clothing Without Buttons. Very best, Lasting, Cheap. Sample Button, Shank and Directions, 10 cents. Address, Button Co., Box 1, Ridgeway, Pa.

CONSUMPTION. I have a positive remedy for the disease above named, and will send two bottles free to any sufferer who will send me their Express and Post Office address. Respectfully, Dr. T. A. SLOCUM, 181 Pearl St., New York.

TO SPECULATORS. B. LINDBLOM & CO., No. 5, MILLER & CO., 54 Chamber St., Chicago. 30 Broad St., New York. GRAIN & PROVISION BROKERS. Commission, $10 per Million. Continuous Sales. Daily Market Reports Free. Weekly Review, containing Market Review, Statistics, Facts, Prospects, etc., Free. Send for Circular.

MONEY. $100 Per Month guaranteed to every lady or gentleman to work for us. Address, with stamp, Lock Box 1, Cincinnati, Ohio.

IF YOU WANT TO MAKE MONEY write to CARUTH & CO., Bankers, Washington, D.C.

THE DEVIL'S DIARY. A high spicy, up-to-date, humorous satirical story of MARRIED LIFE, with over 100 Pen Pictures. Extracts from the Diary of the Devil's Daughter, Gertrude, aged 16, and her mother, from week to week till married. The marriage is the climax of the story. Agents wanted. Sample, 25 cents. Address, Publisher, 1 Ann St., New York.

PATENTS NO PATENT, NO PAY. Send for Circular. Lemuel W. Serrell, Successor to Serrell & Serrell, Washington, D.C. Half Instructions and Decisions Free. Prosecution of Claims a Specialty.

KIDNEY-WORT
THE SURE CURE FOR KIDNEY DISEASES, LIVER COMPLAINTS, CONSTIPATION, PILES, AND BLOOD DISEASES.
PHYSICIANS ENDORSE IT HEARTILY.
"Kidney-Wort is the most successful remedy I ever made." Dr. P. C. Dubois, Monkton, Vt.
"I shall prescribe Kidney-Wort freely." Dr. J. Ayer, Lowell, Mass.
"Kidney-Wort has cured my wife after two years suffering." Dr. C. S. Mosman, Rutland, Vt.
IN THOUSANDS OF CASES it has cured where all other had failed. Try one bottle, CERTAIN IN ITS ACTION, and it is PLEASANT.
It purges the Blood and Strengthens and gives New Life to all the important organs of the body. The symptoms of the Kidney's disease are numerous, and the worst of them are such that a person can hardly imagine that any one thing could be so much out of order. In this way the worst diseases are confirmed from the system.
PRICE, $1.00 LIQUID OR DRY, SOLD BY DRUGGISTS. Dry can be sent by mail.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. Burlington, Vt.
KIDNEY-WORT

This porous plaster is absolutely the most comfortable, most active, most powerful and most durable of all plasters. Ask your druggist for it. Price, 25 cents. HOP PLASTER Manufg. Co., New York. Sold by the 10 or 1 Lots, Hop Pills and Hop Bitters, Kidney Troubles, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sore Chest, Affections of the Heart and Lungs, and all pains or aches in any part of the body. Beware of Imitations, Hop Plaster is the only genuine. Sold by druggists. Mailed on receipt of price. Sold by all druggists. Hop Plaster Company, Propr's, Detroit, Mich.

LAME BACK

CATARRH
ELY'S CREAM BALM
Cleanses the Nasal Passages, Allays Inflammation, Heals the Sores, Restores the Sense of Taste and Smell. A quick and positive remedy. Not a liquid or powder. Snuff or Blower. Agreeable. Price 50 cents. Sent by mail or at Druggists. ELY BROTHERS, Druggists, Owego, N.Y.
ELY'S CREAM BALM CURES CATARRH HAY-FEVER COLD IN HEAD
HAY-FEVER

For Two Generations
The good and staunch old stand-by, MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT, has done more to assuage pain, relieve suffering, and save the lives of men and beasts than all other liniments put together. Why? Because the Mustang penetrates through skin and flesh to the very home, driving out all pain and soreness and restoring the afflicted part to sound and supple health.

SAMARITAN NERVINE NEVER FAILS.
"You claim too much for Samaritan Nervine," says a skeptic. Its patrons say just the contrary.
Opium Eating, Dissociation, Nervous Weakness and Dizziness are complaints Nervine claims to specify, and that which Nervine does it does it often and well. Its Nervine, Sanitives, Alteratives and Laxative properties meet all the conditions herein referred to. It's known and tried as a
THE GREAT
NERVE CONQUEROR

TO SPECULATORS.
B. LINDBLOM & CO., No. 5, MILLER & CO., 54 Chamber St., Chicago. 30 Broad St., New York.
GRAIN & PROVISION BROKERS.
Commission, $10 per Million. Continuous Sales. Daily Market Reports Free. Weekly Review, containing Market Review, Statistics, Facts, Prospects, etc., Free. Send for Circular.

ALLEN'S Lung Balsam!
A GOOD FAMILY REMEDY!
—THAT WILL CURE—
COUGHS, COLDS, CROUP,
CONSUMPTION.
Mr. Reynolds, Druggist, Buffalo, N. Y., writes: Sales of Allen's Lung Balsam for Consumption and Throat Diseases are larger than of any other cough medicine we keep. Jeremiah Wright, of Buffalo, N. Y., says: I have used Allen's Lung Balsam in my family for years, and find it the best cough medicine I know of. Sold by all druggists throughout the world.
Wm. F. Phillips, Manufacturing Chemist, Buffalo, N. Y., writes: Allen's Lung Balsam is the best cough medicine with which I am acquainted. Wm. A. Gaines & Co., Druggists, Detroit, Mich., say: Of the sale of Allen's Lung Balsam we can say that it is the best cough medicine we have found which generally gives relief. We have been selling it for many years, and it is the most popular cough medicine with our customers.
ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM
is harmless to the most delicate child! It contains no Opium in any form!
Recommended by Physicians! Prepared only by Druggists, Buffalo, N. Y. Price 25 cts. & $1 a bottle.
Hop Bitters Expectorant is has no Equal.
SOLD BY ALL MEDICINE DEALERS.

Delicate and Feeble Ladies.
Troublesome, tenacious mucous coming you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet; that constant drain that is taking from your system all its former vigor; drawing the blood from your cheeks; that continual dragging down your vital forces, rendering your invitable and irritable, can easily be removed by the use of that inexhaustible remedy, Hop Bitters. Irregularities and obstructions of your system are relieved at once, while the special causes of peculiarly female pains are permanently removed. None receive so much benefit, and none are so profoundly grateful and strong as such are induced to recommending Hop Bitters as women.
Feels Young Again.
My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system; headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physician or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old. We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family.—A. Hall, in Providence.
BRADFORD, Pa., May 8, 1875.
It has cured me of several diseases, such as nervousness, sickness at the stomach, monthly troubles, etc. I have not been a sick day in a year, since I took Hop Bitters. All my neighbors use them.
Mrs. FANNIE GREEN.
$1,000 LOST.—"A tour of Europe that took me $1,000, cured me of one bottle of Hop Bitters; they also cured my wife of fifteen years' nervous weakness, dyspepsia and dyspepsia." H. M., Auburn, N. Y.
High Authority.
Hop Bitters is not, in any sense, an alcoholic beverage or liquor and could not be sold for use except to persons desirous of obtaining a medicinal bitters. CHARLES JOHN B. HAIN, U. S. Com. Internal Rev.
SO. DANVERS, Mass., May 1, '79.
SIRS—I have been suffering ten years and I tried your Hop Bitters and it done me more good than all the doctors. MISS S. S. BROOKS.
Baby Saved.
We are so thankful to say that our nursing baby was permanently cured of a dangerous and long-standing disease by the use of Hop Bitters. Our family physician pronounced it a marvelous cure. Mrs. H. M., Auburn, N. Y.
Hop Bitters Cures Rheumatism.
Hop Bitters Cures Ague and Fever.
Hop Bitters Cures Liver Complaint.
Hop Bitters Cures Nervous Prostration.
Hop Bitters Cures Nervous Weakness.
Hop Bitters Cures Dyspepsia.
Hop Bitters Cures Kidney Complaint.
Hop Bitters Cures Urinary Diseases.
Hop Bitters Cures Neuralgia.
Hop Bitters Cures Sleeplessness.
Hop Bitters Cures Nervous Prostration.
Hop Bitters Cures Female Complaints

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Jan. 31, 1884.

From the National Capital.

Notes and Interviews by a Journal Correspondent.

The congressional atmosphere is rising in temperature just at present, and there is no telling just how far up the thermometric scale the mercury will be driven, or just how much certain government officials will suffer from the metaphorical hot weather threatening the department of justice, the dignity of Brewster's "coat of arms," a Mr. Cameron surnamed "Brewster," and a dozen or more of an alleged "ring" that have been feeding on fat fees and whiskey punches paid by the government.

$107,286 FOR WHAT?

This is the amount, Secretary Folger says, the government paid for counsel and detective fees in the second star route trial. Brewster, the attorney general, with a salary of $12,500, drew $5,000 additional for services already paid for by his salary. George Bliss made more money out of the government than did several of the star route thieves he was trying to convict. Up to the present time he has been paid $78,000 for two years services, and his account the first quarter for the third year, reaching nearly $10,000, is now pending for allowance. Mr. Kerr complacently pocketed $21,877 for his services on the second trial, and Mr. Merrick nearly $20,000, or at the rate of $170 per day. Pinkerton, the detective, and a special assistant by the name of Gibson, drew $13,000 for "shadowing" the defendants, their attorneys, the jury, and many prominent personages supposed to have been interested in the defense. The saloons of Washington reaped their share of the swag by the patronage of the detectives, who would follow the supposed conspirators into these places to overhear their conversation. The name of every prominent saloon in Washington figures in these detective's expense reports, and they evidently spent enough money to have kept themselves drunk the whole year round.

"DIAMOND CUT DIAMOND."

Brewster and Bliss, the two "B's," created a hive of industry for room payed detectives. They begin to suspect that those detectives who had been at work for them some time but failed to bring in any evidence that would strengthen the government's case had been bought off by the star routers, so they conceived and executed the brilliant idea of employing another force to "shadow" the first one and for months this disgraceful farce was fostered by the department of justice!

MR. SPRINGER'S COMMITTEE will now proceed to investigate other expenditures in Brewster's bureau, and some extremely scandalous exposures are promised. The case may properly be recorded in the annals of congressional investigations as "Justice versus Justice," and the country will have to witness the spectacle of a strongly odorous grease spot on the robes of the present administration.

BANDALL'S REPUBLICANISM.

Speaker Carlisle's private secretary is also the Washington correspondent for the Boston Post, and was the author of the statement in that paper last week that Mr. Randall and his Pennsylvania colleagues had agreed with the republican minority, to aid in the defeat of any reduction of the present tariff. The article was a canard on its face, and Mr. Randall called upon Speaker Carlisle to know whether his secretary had official permission to engage in the maligning of members of the house. Mr. Carlisle reprimanded his secretary, and in the future the Boston paper will have to look elsewhere for its sensational correspondence. But this tariff question promises to be upon which the democrats in the house are in peril of dividing a large number of the leaders favor the springing of the issue at this session in order that the democratic party may go before the country during the presidential campaign upon its true tariff principles. I talked on the subject with Hon. Benton McMillin of Tennessee, a prominent leader on democratic side, and a true representative of his party. Mr. McMillin said to me:

A DANGEROUS ROCK

"That the present tariff needs modification and reduction every man who is not a protectionist for protection's sake must admit. I know it is said 'the industries of the country will be frightened.' Will they be less subject to fright one or two years hence? We should attempt nothing but what is just, and no individual or corporation has a right to take fright at justice. We should deal with the question from a patriotic, rather than a political standpoint, if the time comes when the two do not coincide. But even from a political point of view the democracy has more to fear from inaction and cowering, than from taking and maintaining a judicious but firm stand in favor of reforming the outrageous anomalies and deformities of the present tariff.

If we do this we clearly define our policy and we can go into the contest on our own grounds. If we do nothing our opponents define it for us and charge more than we desire to accomplish in the way of ultra legislation. It is vain to try to smother our tariff issue. The democratic majority of the 45th and 46th congresses declined to act and the people sent them to the minority. The republicans of the 47th congress improved some things a little, but the people became disgusted with their dallying and have sent to congress about seventy democratic majority. We now know what the people expect of us and if we do not place the failure to accomplish a revision of the tariff upon the republican senate our present majority will drop to a minority when the people again go to the ballot box. If we leave the tariff and taxes as they now are we will have a surplus in the treasury in January 1884 of $200,000,000 after paying all bonds due up to that date. That will make $9 for every man woman and child in the U. S. locked up in the vaults. What will be the result?

TECHNICAL APPROPRIATIONS,

a lobby that will linger around it as vultures around a carcass, devising every means from larceny to legislative robbery to get their hands into it. Besides so much money would be diverted from the legitimate channels of trade that stringency, panics and ruin would follow. This must be averted and can only be done by reducing taxes."

"What are some of the unjust discriminations of the present tariff, Mr. McMillin?"

"Why sir, the more luxuriant and non-essential the article the lower the duty in most instances. To illustrate. On cut diamonds the duty is only 10 per cent, while upon mechanic's tools and agricultural implements it is 50 to 90 per cent. Uncut diamonds are free, but the raw materials entering into articles of every day use are taxed from 40 to 100 per cent. Finer cotton cloths made by the poor are subject to from 50 to 100 per cent duty. Silk velvet is dutied 25 per cent, but on coarse woolen knit goods the poor have to pay from 60 to 85 per cent. The last congress reduced the tax on playing cards to 10 per cent, but left it keeping an embargo on the Word of God! So with hundreds of articles I could name. This democratic congress will reform these things or be sent to their homes and men returned who will."

25 PER CENT ON BIBLES,

I give Mr. McMillin's views at length because they are an able reflection of Speaker Carlisle and his followers's inclinations on the tariff question. On the other hand, Ex Speaker Randall said to me yesterday in answer to a question as to what course he and his supporters would follow:

"I have been interrogated about that a hundred times in ten days past and I have paid little attention to the questions, because those newspaper correspondents report me incorrectly. Now you may say for me explicitly, that I think the democratic party will lose from northern states this year if a reduction of the tariff is attempted this session, and believing this, it must be inferred that I, and all who coincide with my view will act accordingly. That is all I have to say at present."

There are about 125 members in congress who will support Mr. McMillin's views, while Mr. Randall's position will not obtain over 60 democratic adherents, through the 118 republicans would vote with the latter and thus prevent the passage of any reform bill.

How the Tariff on Salt Operates.

Mr. Horr himself, in his most extravagant claims, does not place the wages paid at Saginaw any higher than 25 per cent more than those paid at Goderich. Conceding that claim to be just, although it is in fact ridiculous, let us see how much protection Saginaw would need to pay the enormous sum of $1.42 per day to its laborer at the salt block. On Horr's estimate the wages at Goderich is $1.13 per day, or 28 cents less than at Saginaw. If the laborer at Goderich, therefore, made precisely the same amount of salt per day as his rival at Saginaw—2,240 pounds—which he does not begin to do, the employer at Saginaw would need a tariff of 29 cents on 2,240 pounds. He gets $1.80, or $1.51 more than he needs by his own showing.

The Saginaw salt manufacturer gets in protection more than six times the alleged difference between the price of labor in Canada and Michigan, which difference is the only reason on which he claims protection.

He pays 29 cents more than his Canadian rival for labor, and he gets $1.80 for it in tariff.

If the tariff really acts as he claims, as an offset to the difference in the price of labor, he had enough of it to add $1.51 per day to the wages of his men in tariff.

The above statement and comparison of the claims of the salt manufacturers of Saginaw on the assistance of the government.

The fact that the salt men at Saginaw has been selling cheaper than Canadian salt shows beyond cavil that no assistance is needed for any reasonable profit; that in spite of whatever difference in the price of labor may exist, there are other advantages which enable the home industry to compete with and even beat the foreign. Jackson Patriot.

Are You Insured?

At the present time, when so many towns without adequate fire protection are being visited by fire, a particularly pertinent question naturally arises—the question of insurance. It has been said, and well said, that a business not worth insuring better be abandoned; and in view of the losses that have lately fallen on both jobbers and retailers, the statement would appear to be irrefutable. A dealer who buys on credit has no right to imperil the property of his creditors, unless he has ample capital to make them good, in case of a loss by fire. It is too frequently the case that the destruction of an uninsured stock fails as heavily on the jobber as on the retailer, the latter forcing his creditors to accept a compromise nine times out of ten. So frequent have been instances of the latter of late that a number of wholesalers at this market have resolved not to extend credit to any considerable amount hereafter to any dealer who neglects to carry an insurance equivalent to his liabilities, in case he would be insolvent should a loss occur. And one house proposed to print the inquiry, "Are You Insured?" at the top of all billheads used, insisting upon this precaution on the part of customers. The mercantile agencies are influenced in no inconsiderable degree, in their classification of ratings, by the amount of insurance carried, and frequently rate an uninsured dealer two grades lower than they would otherwise, especially if he would not be solvent in case of a loss. Aside from the above reasons why a dealer should protect his creditors and seek to keep his credit good, there are abundant reasons why he should protect himself and not lay himself open to the charge of disregarding sound business methods—not the least important of which is insurance against fire.—Tradesman.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year with Hall's Catarrh Cure, but doubtless had given up and said it could not be cured. 75 cents a bottle. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1872.

EVERYTHING

In the line of

Furniture

AND

Undertakers' Goods

Can be found at the old reliable house of

H. C Cooper,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See me before Buying

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS.

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING,

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or raft and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 30. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1884. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

is published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

Office over T. D. Sullivan's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

CROSSMAN & GRIER, Attorneys at Law, Office in Rehkopf Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

A. A. CROSSMAN. C. J. GRIER.

FOGG & ALDRICH, Attorneys at Law, East Jordan, Mich.

FRED W. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor. Real Estate Agent. Business promptly attended to. MONEY TO LOAN.

H. J. JERSEY, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

J. E. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MELVILLE, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

VIRGINIA KEAT, Attorney at Law. Office opposite T. D. Sullivan's, Boyne, Mich.

OSCAR F. WINSER, Attorney and Solicitor, and U. S. Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX. Capital $50,000. Buy and sell exchange on Chicago and Detroit. Loan money on approved security, receive deposits, collect coupons, etc. Interest paid on time deposits. BRAYTON & BIRON.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. Sunday services—Preaching at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7 o. Pew free. J. T. ANDREWS, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. Sunday services—Preaching at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting Thursday evening at 7 o. J. T. HODGES, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOOK AND LADDER AND READY FIRE COMPANY meet for drill and hard Thursday evenings of each month, at the town hall.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. A. CARNEGIE, M. D., Office at the Ingleside.

L. LEWIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office in Dr. Lewis Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. H. PRESTON, M. D., Surgeon and Homœopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HIRAM S. HASSIA, Notary Public, Real Estate, Loan and Insurance Agt. (Chatty's.)

SECRET SOCIETIES.

A. A. R. Hemlock Point No. 119, meets second Monday in each month, at Odd Fellows' hall.

F. & A. M.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 347, meets every full moon evening, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Round Lake Lodge No. 291 meets every Wednesday evening, in their hall.

I. O. O. F.—Pine River No. 152, meets Saturday on or before full moon in Odd Fellows' hall.

MASONIC.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 295, meets on Friday on or before full moon. Hall over postoffice.

A. BITTNER, President. VICTOR PRESTON, Vice President.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

A general banking business transacted. Money to loan on approved paper at reasonable rates. Drafts constantly on hand for sale payable in any section and conditions complied with promptly. C. S. TITSWORTH, Cashier.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Prices reasonable. W. S. ADAMSON,

Up Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor,

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations are unsurpassed. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only sample room in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, - Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public and boarders by the day or week. Fine sample rooms for commercial travelers. Bus to and from all trains free.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

Rooms thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 75 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Democrat—By mail, $5.00 per year in advance; postage paid.

Weekly Democrat—$1.00 per year; 75 cents for six months; 40 cents for three months—invariably in advance.

Address,

THE DEMOCRAT,

Grand Rapids, Mich.

1872 DR. G. W. CROUTER, 1884

THE DRUGGIST.

Our Motto: P. P.

PURITY, POLITENESS.

WE MAKE IT A POINT TO SELL ONLY

Full Strength & Fresh Goods

OUR PRICES WILL ALWAYS BE AS LOW AS

STRICTLY PURE DRUGS

CAN BE SOLD.

Our Stock is the Largest in the County.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed by Peter Skibegosh, Mary Skibegosh his wife, joining to her in her dower rights in the premises, mortgagor, to Lemuel H. Bartholomew, mortgagee, bearing date the eleventh (11th) day of January, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the County of Charlevoix, on the fourth (4th) day of January, A. D. 1882, at 4 o'clock, p. m., in liber "4" of mortgages, on page 338. That upon the thirteenth (13th) day of July, A. D. 1883, said mortgage was duly assigned to E. M. Clark, which said assignment was recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the County of Charlevoix, on the twenty-sixth (26th) day of July, A. D. 1883, at nine o'clock a. m., in liber "2" of mortgages, on page 168. On which said mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of fifty-one dollars and forty cents. For which sum, principal and interest, the undersigned, assignee of said mortgage, by virtue of the power therein, should any proceeding be had to foreclose the same. And no proceeding at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the sum secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, therefore, notice is hereby given that I will sell at public vendue, to the highest bidder the premises described in said mortgage, on Saturday, the ninth day of February, A. D. 1884, at ten (10) o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the front entrance of Lewis Hall, in the village of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, State of Michigan, (that being the place for the holding of the circuit court within the said county of Charlevoix). The premises to be sold are described in said mortgage as follows: The west one-half (½) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of fractional section one-quarter (¼), of section twenty-eight (28), in township thirty-four (34) north, range seven (7) west, containing twenty acres of land according to the United States survey.

Dated November 14, A. D. 1883.

E. M. CLARK,

Assignee of said mortgage.

CROSSMAN & GRIER,

Attorneys for assignee of mortgage. 18-30

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY

has purchased the

Ladies' and Children's

Furnishing Goods,

lately owned by Fisher & Inwood, and will be pleased to retain all the old customers, and gain as many more as possible. Call and survey stock.

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

of his store near the bridge.

All kinds of fruit and vegetables in their season. Nuts, candies, pipes, cigars &c., &c., always on hand. Call and examine. West side Bridge St.

C. R. BELLINGER

carries the largest and finest stock of

JEWELRY,

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Optical Goods in Charlevoix county. Agent for the celebrated DOW KEYLESS WATCH, the best time keeper ever made. All goods left for repairs and not called for in six months are subject to sale for charges.

ROBERT GRUEN,

Boyne Falls, Mich.,

Watch-maker

Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry Repaired. 17

Sewing Machines

CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at ten dollars each. Call soon and have your pick.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. S. MAY.

HALL'S

Catarrh Cure

is Recommended by Physicians!

$100 REWARD PAID FOR NONE OF THEM WHEN A BOTTLE OF HALL'S CATARRH CURE FAILS TO CURE.

We manufacture and sell this positive guarantee that it will cure any case, and we will furnish the above amount if it fails in a single instance.

It is unlike all other Catarrh remedy, as it is taken internally, acting upon the blood, and is a vegetable preparation, which you can buy of any druggist for $1, and above no imitation as substitute. If he has not got it, send in to us and we will forward immediately. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

DR. CROUTER, Agt., Charlevoix. 23

PIMPLES.

I will mail (Free) the recipe for a simple VEGETABLE BALM that will remove TAN, FRECKLES, PIMPLES and BLOTCHES, leaving the skin soft, clear and beautiful; also instructions for producing a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, with stamp, JOS. TAYLOR & CO., 11 Barclay St., N. Y.

HENRY B. PAYNE,

SENATOR ELECT FROM OHIO.

O. W. SMITH,

ELECTRO-PLATER,

Manufacturing Jeweler and Lapidist.

Electro-plating in Gold and Silver. Any article of Jewelry made to order. AGATES AND JASPERS cut to order. 29

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand at his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

John Nicholls

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades,

WAGON TONGUES, SHINGLES, LATH, ETC.

LUMBER SAWED AND BILLS FILLED TO ORDER.

Joseph Hyland,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Heavy blacksmithing of all kinds, and Repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at O. W. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

Henry B. Payne was born November 20, 1810, in Madison county N. Y. and was the son of Judge Elisha Payne, one of the early settlers of that part of the state. He graduated in 1831 at Hamilton theological seminary which his father founded, and afterwards read law with Judge Field formerly of the Virginia court of appeals, and John C. Spencer of Canandaigua. He removed to Cleveland in 1833, and finishing his law studies with the late Sherlock Andrews, was admitted to the bar the next year, and practiced law until 1846. Since that time he has been engaged in various extensive business enterprises, and not long ago was a stockholder and director in eighteen corporations, embracing coal, iron, manufacturing and banking interests.

Mr. Payne was a presidential elector on the Cass ticket in 1848, and the next year was elected to the Ohio senate. In 1851 he was the democratic caucus nominee for U. S. senator, but was defeated by Benjamin F. Wade by a majority of one. In 1856 Mr. Payne was the democratic candidate for governor of Ohio against Salmon P. Chase, and was defeated by a small majority. He was a warm friend of Stephen A. Douglass and stood by him in the Cincinnati convention of 1856, and again at Charleston in 1860. During the war he was an active and consistent union man. At the Baltimore convention of 1872 he favored the nomination of Horace Greeley.

In 1874 he was elected to congress from the Cleveland district by a majority of 2,500 over Col. R. C. Parsons, of De Golyer contract fame. Mr. Payne was the first democrat from that district and entered congress just in time to take part in the Tilden-Hayes contest. He was chairman of the house committee on the electoral vote, a strong advocate of the electoral commission bill and a member of the commission itself. He was also a member of the committee on banking and currency and the author of the bill for the gradual resumption of specie payments, which was adopted by the democratic caucus, but never enacted.

Mr. Payne will take his seat in the senate March 4th, 1885, concurrent with the inauguration of the next president.

From the National Capital.

Notes and Interviews by a Journal Correspondent.

There are many interesting facts developing in the land grant subsidies that makes very interesting reading, and I shall devote the greater part of the letter to the enlightenment of your readers on the subject. Very few people know that of which there has been lately so much said and written. Away back in '70 the Texas Pacific company secured a grant, which had they built the road would have secured for them nearly 14,000,000 acres of land. But they abandoned the work after petitioning aid in vain from congress, their chief argument before the congressional committee being that there ought to be a southern route to compete with the Union and Central Pacific. C. P. Huntington, the president of the Southern Pacific opposed any aid being given, assuring the committemen that his was a competing road, and would be built without subsidy. He engendered an anti-subsidy sentiment in the south in order to make it difficult for the southern members to vote for the Texas Pacific subsidy. He insisted that the Texas Pacific grant had already lapsed, and acting upon that basis he pushed forward the Southern Pacific, and built it on what he considered the abandoned grant of the former. If the Texas Pacific was really then alive, he must have been trespassing on other grants. The claim he set up that the Southern Pacific was a competing line to the Central Pacific was a gross fraud, but it sufficed to influence the voices of members against the Texas Pacific subsidy, and the latter company went down while the Southern Pacific pushed on over its ruins.

HISTORY OF THE TEXAS PACIFIC GRANT,

COLONEL TOM SCOTT

was then at the head of the Texas Pacific, and he made a heroic effort to construct the road on its merits after the government had refused aid, but after several years sustained operations his health gave way and he sold out to Jay Gould. It was then predicted the road would be pushed to rapid completion, but the enterprising Gould had only an eye to speculation, and he in turn sold to Mr. Huntington, for whatever profit he could make, the land grant to which he had no more title than Satan had to the real estate once offered by him from the top of a high mountain.

SOW COARSE INVESTIGATION

who slaughtered the Texas Pacific, and who, as long ago as 1876, scouted the idea that it had any rights, and insists that its forfeited estates are his and that the government cannot claim its own. He holds Jay Gould's order on the government for the 14,000,000 acres, but Huntington begins to see that Gould's order for land is not as good as Gould's check for money.

A SUMMARY OF LAND GRANTS.

There are some queer things about the following list of land grants, the order being just as the house committee on public lands intend to consider the various forfeitures. I give the list in full:

Texas Pacific: grant, 14,309,760 acres; miles of road built, none; land forfeitable all.

Oregon Central: grant, 3,701,700 acres; miles of road built, 197; land earned, 2,000,000 acres; forfeitable, 1,701,700 acres.

Ontonagon and State line: grant, 222,720 acres; miles of road constructed, none; land earned, none; forfeitable all.

California and Oregon: grant, 2,125,526 acres; miles of road built, 197; land earned, 1,154,000 acres; forfeitable, 661,926 acres.

Northern Pacific: grant, 48,215,040 acres; miles of road constructed, at 20 sections per mile, 228; at 40 sections per mile, 197 miles; total, 425 miles; land earned, 10,675,200 acres; forfeitable, 37,539,840 acres.

Atlantic and Pacific: grant, 40,690,650 acres; miles of road built at 20 sections per mile, 89; at 40 sections per mile, 36; total built, 125 miles; land earned, 2,050,800; land forfeitable 38,029,760 acres.

Southern Pacific: grant, 5,511,264 acres, miles of road built, 232; land earned, 2,449,450 acres; forfeitable, 2,061,814 acres.

New Orleans Pacific: grant, 903,218 acres but found to contain 1,500,000 acres; no road built; land all forfeitable.

Atlantic, Gulf and West India Transit Company: grant, 1,170,200 acres; miles of road constructed, 155; land earned 600,000 acres; forfeitable, 571,200 acres.

Pensacola and Georgia: grant 1,178,880 acres; no road constructed; all forfeitable.

Florida, Atlantic and Gulf Central: grant, 225,660 acres; no road built and all forfeitable.

Mobile and Girard: grant, 858,644 acres; no road constructed; all forfeitable.

Selma, Rome and Dalton; grant, 641,281 acres; miles of road built, 100; land earned 400,000 acres; forfeitable 241,281 acres.

Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas: grant, 725,760 acres; miles of road constructed, 94; land earned, 360,000 acres; forfeitable, 365,760 acres.

Sioux City and St. Paul: grant, 437,240 acres; miles of road built, 56; lands earned, 316,700 acres; forfeitable 175,540 acres.

From the above it will be seen there are 122,000,000 acres of land granted, of which only 21,000,000 acres have been earned, leaving 100,000,000 acres forfeited. Of this 100,000,000 acres of land 96,000,000 are claimed by three corporations, two of which are in possession, and are selling and mortgaging the land.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

THE days of fabulous rates of interest in California seem to be past. The savings banks in San Francisco are lending money on mortgages at 6 per cent, and paying the mortgage tax, and yet they cannot find a market for more than a third of their money.

FUNNY people over in St. Louis who have obtained intense enjoyment through the practice of prying their friends by telephone, will be obliged henceforth to desist from that amusement. Some victim of a practical joke perpetrated by the use of the wire failed to appreciate its exercising wit, and instituted suit for damages. Investigation brings to light a law which subjects the sender of a willfully fraudulent or unauthorized telephonic message to the liability of a good round fine in addition to a possible suit for damages sustained.

A WASHINGTON correspondent has discovered that President Arthur is passionately fond of the music of the hand-organ. If Mr. Arthur is cultivating the hand-organ under the impression that his popularity will be increased thereby, he is in error. It is not the hand-organ, but the cabinet organ which is the distinctively American instrument. Let the President set up a nice, shiny cabinet organ in his parlor, then let him learn, "We shall gather at the river," and "Peek-a-boo," if he wishes to make himself solid with the masses.

IN 1856 the Empress Eugenie lost a valuable diamond bracelet. It was found in a dirt heap by Collet, who, without knowing to whom it belonged, carried it to police headquarters. The next morning he was astonished by the receipt of an order to present himself at the Tuileries, and when he did so was still more astonished to receive the public thanks of his sovereign and the promise of a life pension of 600 francs. After she had her crown the Empress continued to pay this pension to Collet out of her private purse, and now that he is dead she is reported as having determined to continue it to his successor in seniority among the ragpickers.

JUDGE A. W. TUTTLE recently lectured in New York on "The Mission of the Dude," in which he said: "The dude was a product of American snobbery. His mission was the sping after aristocratic foreign models, and the general tendency to forget republican principles. It is not enough," the lecturer said, "that an American citizen, to be a citizen, should go up to the polls and vote. He should live his life through as an American citizen, be ready at any moment and in all seasons to do his political duty without fear or favor. Some people think it enough if they go and deposit a ballot on election day, and then they sit down and let the country take care of itself. This is the dude class, the ornamental but useless class, that let the things break in and ruin the government."

FARMER GROSBECK, of Tioga N. Y., thinking to play a joke on the village doctor, sent for him in great haste. As the doctor's carriage wheeled into the farmer's yard he asked hurriedly to be shown to the patient. The joker led him to the poultry-house, and pointed out a goose with a broken leg. The doctor, without a word, immediately set the leg, left minute directions for the care of the fowl, and, saying he would call again in the morning, stepped into his carriage and drove home. He kept up his attendance until the goose could walk as well as before the accident. In the mean time the farmer was having lots of fun telling his neighbors of the joke. But he ceased to spill the when the doctor sent in a good round bill. At first the former refused to pay, but when legal proceedings were talked of he compromised the case to the doctor's satisfaction.

MISS FANNIE ZIMMERMAN was a typical Baltimore belle, and was wise enough to realize the fact that it was quite handy to have two strings to her bow. In short, she pledged her heart and hand to two several young men and kindly set the same day and hour to wed each. So many bridegrooms have been spiking every stray mouse around that she made assurance doubly sure. Well, it happened that one got there before the other, and the girl became betrothed for the church, when number two came up. Taking in the situation at once he drew a revolver and tried to shoot the bride, but was prevented, and the bridal party went on to the place of sacrifice and were duly married. The young man's chagrin at not to save his rival can not be too highly commended, and it is to be hoped that his action will be properly recognized by the friends of the groom. It would be a trifle malapropos for the groom himself to present him with a gold-headed cane.

PRINCE BISMARCK'S favorite dish is bacon and eggs, so says his late cook. He dislikes white or fresh baked bread of any kind, and takes hard brown toast and black coffee for breakfast, after having had a "nip" of brandy and seltzer when he first gets up. He is very fond of coffee, and will take four or five cups when he has been working late the night before, while of midnight he invariably drinks a cup of tea. The cook declares that the Chancellor is a most unaffected and pleasant man in general, but when he is in a bad temper he keeps out of his way, from the servants to his wife, while when anything goes wrong in the Reichstag "he storms about the house like a fury."

SURGEON VANPELT is reported by the Paris Figaro as saying to a prisoner about to be executed: "You know that one of the most interesting questions of physiology is whether any eye of memory, vibration, or real sensibility survives in the brain of a man after the fall of the head. In the morning when the knife falls I shall be at your side, and your head will at once pass from the executioner's hands into mine. I will then cry distinctly into your ear, 'Cony de la Pommeraie, can you at this moment thrice lower the lid of your right eye while the left remains open?' The next day, when the surgeon reached the condemned cell, he found the doomed man pirouetting the sign agreed upon. A few minutes later the guillotine had done its work, the head was in Vanpeut's hands, and the question put. Familiar as he was with the most shocking and ghastly scenes, the surgeon was almost terrified when he saw the right lid fall, while the other looked fixedly at him. "Again!" he cried. The experiment, but they did not part. It was all over.

DENVER Tribune: A strange story of a mysterious death comes from Douglass Mountain, near Georgetown. G. A. Dilley discovered in a tunnel in the mountain the body of John C. Emmerson partially covered with snow. The throat was cut and gash'd in a terrible manner. It is believed that the man had committed suicide, and a coroner's inquest, which was held on the remains, concurred in this belief. Emmerson had lived in a cabin by himself, and was working all alone in the tunnel, in which he cut a lod that he worked himself. It is supposed that he left his cabin Saturday morning, taking his dinner with him, and, going to the tunnel to work, he commenced his labors by removing dirt, from a drift and dump, and, doubtless, did nothing else for his dinner was undisturbed. Even his tools were laid in a pile as he had left them. He had started in the tunnel toward the drift, pulling the wheel-barrow after him. The tunnel was not timbered, and the drift overhead was loose. He had not proceeded over ten feet from the mouth of the tunnel when the ground over him loosened and caved in upon him, and he was crushed to the ground. Some heavy rocks fell upon his feet and legs, breaking his right leg above the ankle. He doubtless took his knife out and endeavored to cut himself loose, as his boot was slit up and down and cut all to pieces, but he could not extricate his foot. He was wedged in and helpless. After long and helpless waiting, and vain endeavors to get out of the drift, he evidently cut his own throat, prefering not to die by inches in his helpless entanglement. The body had evidently been in the drift some forty-eight hours when found.

The Last Reply.

"See here," said an editorial writer, calling the editor-in-chief, "that fellow on the Big Bugle Sentry has produced an argument that I can not answer. What shall I do with him?"

"Let me see," mused the editor, looking over the argument. "I reckon he has left out a little lie or two in the controversy."—Arkansaw Traveler.

HERE is a pebble which everybody is flinging at everybody else. Some people are according to their means, others according to their resources.

THERE is a Mormon community in Smith county, Tex.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

The Rule.

"I think it would rain," said Farmer Gray,
As he sighed the week from his brow away;
"The rain, mamma, the green and gold,
Are the rule of the sky, and the rule of the mold."
"The dewdrop cupped in the lily's cup,
And all my labor, my children, shows
That rainbows are needing the showers into view."
Well! there still is hope in the by-and-by.

"Shall I long for rain?" the maiden said,
As she gazed on the sky with a pouting lip,
"I love long days where the blue of the skies
Through my sunbeams and laughing eyes
Looks down on me, and I sing and dance,
And the flowers the sun's as a gentle coat,
Wrapped in my beauty and indued and dyed,
Rose-pink and pale lo-the blushing bride."

Kind Heaven, send rain, for the maiden's sake
From the broad, clear blue and blather
The brook flows dry, it is sighing but,
Thirsty and sorrowful may Easter lose,
Dear Heaven, send rain! Let the sky be
May be crimson, purple and everything
And the earth, warm from the kissed her head,
With a silent prayer in her joy's behead.

As best it came! the refreshing rain,
And the stilled flowers revived again,
Lifted their heads, and the children now
In thankful meekness were crowed be joy!
The birds we fled, and the sunshine
And the hurt-small lives in the woods was saved.
But the children murmured that rainy day,
Because they were kept from their outdoor play.

—Lizzie Lane-Grose, in Youth's Companion.

Soap-Bubble Secrets.

Probably there is not a reader of Young People who has not at some time amused himself with a pipe and a bowl of soap-suds. But, I fear, few know all that a bubble can afford in the way of amusement at a slight outlay. Does my reader know how to make a giant bubble? Has he learned how to employ soap-bubbles as magic lantern slides? Did he ever see them used as a perfect cosmetic? In a soap-bubble in harness on every day thing of life? If not, he will find these uses of the bubble, described in the present article, and I would add that the experiments will prove interesting and beautiful to old as well as young.

We must learn how to make the giant bubble. This is the king of bubbles—the largest, the longest-lived, and the most beautiful. If you can imagine a bubble two or even three feet in diameter, with an existence measured by hours instead of seconds, glowing with colors five times as gorgeous as those of the ordinary bubble, you have just such a one in your mind's eye as you can make for yourself by carefully following directions.

Procure two ounces of palm-oil or Castile-soap; the former is preferable. Cut it in pieces the size of a pea, and place them in a bottle of clear glass with a pint of rain water. Slightly colored, the water has taken up as much soap as it will hold. You have now obtained a saturated solution of soap. Place it aside, and leave it for twenty-four to thirty-six hours, until it has settled, either perfectly clear or of a very light pearl-color. If after thirty-six hours the solution still remains clouded, pour off a little of the clear and add more. The time it will scarcely fail to settle as desired. Carefully pour off, straining through flannel, and add a pint of pure glycerine; and when the two have had time to mingle thoroughly, you are ready to blow a giant bubble.

To blow the very largest bubbles it is necessary to have a larger pipe than the clay pipe commonly used, though such a pipe will produce large bubbles. A glass funnel two or three inches in diameter, fitted with a piece of rubber tubing, produces enormous bubbles. There is a very ingenious apparatus used which should be employed instead of the tube, or the clay pipe. By this means fresh soap solution may be poured within the pipe, allowing one well-skimmed to the bubble, and enabling the experimenter to blow it to an incredible size.

These bubbles are distinguished not only for their size, but for their beauty and durability. I have known bubbles made by this method to last three or four hours in the open air, and from twenty-four to thirty-six during precaution being taken that the air of the room be pure and that no rough touch destroy their fragile lives. But now let us find out how we may examine the bubble with the greatest ease and to the best advantage.

Procure a pieced pine board about three inches square. In the middle of this fix a piece of iron wire free from rust, twenty inches in length. At about six inches' distance from the board bend the wire into a circle, the plane of which is parallel with that of the board, and with a diameter of five inches. Blow a bubble of six or seven inches in diameter, and gently place it in the ring; it will not break, and by tilting the pipe you may free it from the bubble. Thus placed, the bubble shows off the world's great enemy—the drift, he evidently cut his own throat, prefering not to die by inches in his helpless entanglement. The body had evidently been in the drift some forty-eight hours when found.

The Last Reply.

"See here," said an editorial writer, calling the editor-in-chief, "that fellow on the Big Bugle Sentry has produced an argument that I can not answer. What shall I do with him?"

"Let me see," mused the editor, looking over the argument. "I reckon he has left out a little lie or two in the controversy."—Arkansaw Traveler.

HERE is a pebble which everybody is flinging at everybody else. Some people are according to their means, others according to their resources.

THERE is a Mormon community in Smith county, Tex.

A Conductor's Reminiscences.

"Yes, sir," continued the conductor, "we railroad men have some funny adventures with the tramping fraternity. Nearly all of those who beat their money, and prefer to take the risk incident to stealing a ride than pay their fare. In an accident some years ago I was killed who had on his person over $500 and papers showing him to be the proprietor of a livery stable in California. It is remarkable the persistent some can do. Six of the unrelated themselves in the water tank of a Shoal engine that was being used in the middle of the freight train, and when discovered refused to come out and called the conductor that they would like to see him crawl in there and get them out. A better plan suggested itself, that of pulling the engine up to the tank and drowning them out. The expostulated, when about six inches of ice-cold water had been poured on them and all came forth like drowned rats with the exception of a big Irishman, who could not force himself through the hole until he had removed his clothes, and the engineer had lubricated him with black oil.

"The engineers on a Western division were compelled to blow their engine out quite frequently, owing to the bad water. This is done by opening a valve that lets the water and steam out on the ground under the cab. While one of the express trains was rushing along in the night, the engineer found it necessary to blow out, and opening the valve a most unearthly scream went up from under his feet. Jumping to the air brake and reversing the engine, the train was quickly stopped, and all hands rushed back to ascertain the meaning of that musical cry. There they found a tore to pieces by a sharp and scalded beyond recognition, were the remains of a man who had been stealing a ride on the brake beam of the engine tank, so as to be near the body of the fire box, and had received the full charge of steam and hot water in his body, and been blown from his secure seat without a moment's warning into eternity, adding one more to the great list of "missing."

"Bootlacks that are up to the times never pay fare. They wait until the train is under headway, then jump beside a car, catch on the irons of the door, swing themselves underneath in a comfortable seat on a brake beam, where they while away the time in picking cards and sleeping, and manage to shake off, by an hour, and afterward hold for three hours, after which they are cleaned to a standstill, and found in that condition all night long at some station, where they are dumped to a standstill, and found in that condition all night long at some station, where they are dumped to a standstill, and found in that condition all night long at some station, where they are dumped

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Feb 7, 1884.

Business Announcements.

The Eagle Clothing Store.

I have got the Eagle, a genuine North American, measuring seven feet from tip to tip. Come one, come all, and see him; and while you are in the store don't forget to price my stock. Overcoats, Heavy Underwear, Blankets, and all other winter goods closing out at cost, and many other clothing articles low in a good many styles, I am closing them out, getting ready to put in a large stock this spring. Don't forget, while in town, to call and see the great North American Eagle, and anything you may need in my line, in price it, for I know I can save you money. GEORGE W. MILLER.

"Wood! Wood! Wood!

200 cords of good dry birch and maple block wood for sale. Good measure guaranteed. Call at the office of

J. MILO EATON.

To avoid Dyspepsia, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, and other complaints resulting from the use of old and stale groceries, try Upright, Emrey & Co.'s new supplies.

If you are sick of old mul style groceries, give Upright, Emrey & Co. a trial. They receive fresh goods every Tuesday.

FOR SALE.—A second hand portable saw mill, with engine and boiler complete; also circular. Cheap. Inq. of J. MILO EATON.

Cash! Cash! Cash! Bring your Ties, Wool, and Furs to Upright, Emrey & Co.'s, and get the Cash for them.

For Sale.—Two or three good horses for sale cheap for cash or good security. J. MILO EATON.

Attention Consumers! Baxter Post No. 10 meets at Morgan's Hall, Turn-out, Upright, Emrey & Co. received a large supply of Groceries Tuesday.

One hundred and fifty suits of Clothes at wholesale, at E. M. Clark's.

Headquarters for Yarns, German Yarns, etc., at E. M. Clark's.

For bargains in Gloves and Mittens, go to E. M. Clark's.

The best 50-cent Tea in town will be found at R. Sea's.

Ladies' Ulsters and Circulars, at E. M. Clark's.

E. M. Clark is bound to undersell them all.

Fifty Overcoats at wholesale, at E. M. Clark's.

Dry goods—a fresh assortment at R. Sea's.

A genuine article in Butter at R. Sea's.

The Temperature.

The following is a record of observations of the thermometer at the JOURNAL office, at 7 a. m. and 2 p. m. each day, for the week ending yesterday, above zero in all cases unless marked with a (-):

	7 AM	2 PM
Thursday	*15	*10
Friday	8	22
Saturday	18	14
Sunday	6	12
Monday	9	17
Tuesday	—	24
Wednesday	11	18

Provision Market.

Retail prices to consumers, as corrected every Wednesday evening by UPRIGHT, EMREY & CO., general dealers.

FLOUR, per bbl, $6.00, $7.00, and $8.00.
BUCKWHEAT FLOUR, per cwt, $4.50.
CORN MEAL, per cwt, bolted $2.00, unbolted, $1.80.
HAY, per ton, $9@$.
OATS, per bu, 45c.
GROUND FEED, per cwt, $1.50.
APPLES, per bu, 40@45.
POTATOES, per bu, 60@65c.
ONIONS, per bu, $1.00.
BUTTER, per lb, 28@30c.
EGGS, per doz, 30@35c.
LARD, per lb, 10@12c.
HAMS, per lb, Shoulders, 8@9c.
SALT PORK, per lb, 8c; Beef, 8c.
CHEESE, 12.
WATER WHITE OIL, 25c.
FARMERS' PRODUCE in good demand; oats and potatoes wanted.

Fresh Meats from the Market.

MEAT, roast, 10@12c; pork roast, 9@12c; mutton, 8@12c; sausage, 15c; hams, 14c; shoulders, 12c.
TALLOW, 4@5c.

Local News Brevities.

Additional locals on eighth page.

A. R. Upright is expected home to-day.

Valentines.—a fine display at Dr. Crouter's.

When you have a little spare change remember the printer.

Don't fail to read Crouter's new card on the first page.

Tomorrow is school children are suffering with chicken pox.

"For heaven's sake, keep mum until after the JOURNAL comes out!"

A slight change in time was recently made on the G. R. & I. road.

Extensive repairs are being made to the schooner Sea Gem this winter.

Two cords of green block wood is too much for one small horse to draw.

H. B. Chapman, of Bay Springs, gave the JOURNAL a brief call on Monday.

Archy Dougherty, of Elk Rapids, visited friends in Charlevoix this week.

Rev. Mr. Morgan intends to hold a series of meetings at the church in Atwood.

E. W. Fuller, of Cheboygan, made himself visible on our streets last Saturday.

Mrs. J. T. Iddings started last Thursday afternoon for a visit to friends in Albion.

Ten names added to our subscription list in four days last week. And still there's room for more.

A little child of Mr. Geo. Wrisley has been quite sick for a week past, but hopes are entertained of its recovery.

There are numerous complaints that the Weekly Free Press failed to reach its readers in this vicinity last week.

W. F. Palmiter of the Enterprise, gave the JOURNAL a call yesterday. He says the paper will be out next week.

H. B. Chapman's new 16-rod dock at Bay Springs will be built entirely of cedar. He intends it shall be built to stay.

A social wherein gentlemen will be the entertainers, is one of the attractions of the M. E. church in the near future.

It has been decided to locate the new Burnard church on the land of Geo. Anderson, opposite Wm. Clark's residence.

An old horse took a tumble on Bridge street last Friday, and for a time it looked as if she would have to be dragged off.

If any of our readers know of a man wanting a first class farm we call their attention to one advertised in another column.

Members of the G. A. R. should not forget the regular meeting of the post next Monday evening. A full attendance is desired.

Have you seen Upright, Emrey & Co's new oyster advertisement? It's daisy. If you don't see it anywhere, ask them to show it to you.

The meeting at Black's school house last Sunday is reported as pleasant and profitable. Preaching next Sunday at 2 o'clock. Turn out.

"Eagle Clothing House" is the trade mark adopted by Geo. Miller, the popular clothier. See his announcement in another column.

H. B. Chapman will build a sixteen-rod dock in front of his Bay Springs property, to accommodate the increasing shipments from that live little town.

Joseph Pappin's cow broke through the ice near Nicholls' mill last Monday, and was drowned before she could be rescued. It will be a serious loss to Mr. Pappin.

The Ironton correspondence contains items of importance to the business interests of that burg. They evidently mean to do something up there next summer.

J. G. Peterson, of Ironton, passed through Charlevoix on Tuesday with a load of new goods. The iron company evidently don't sell all the supplies for that vicinity.

The enterprising Elk Rapids Progress gives names and a brief description of the character represented by those in attendance at a masquerade given in that place recently.

Charlevoix is at present without a photograph gallery. A good workman would get the trade which now goes to Petoskey and other towns outside. Who will establish one here.

The Algonah will not attempt to cross the straits again this winter. In fact she will have to be taken to Detroit for repairs before she runs at all, as she is now in the ice, helpless, with her machinery broken.

C. R. Bellinger has erected the necessary machinery to cut and polish agates, jaspers, and other stones and preparing as fast as possible for the summer trade. This seems to be a growing industry here.

An oyster supper and donation was held in Banks last Friday evening, several Charlevoix people being interested. The profits of the party were about $42, which were given to the pastor, Rev. Mr. Morgan.

We devoted a few minutes on Tuesday to a visit to the primary department of the school. Miss Severance has the management of 50 to 60 little folks, some but little more than babies and yet she maintains good order. Many of them are progressing rapidly in their studies.

J. Milo Eaton lost a valuable horse last Monday in the death of one of the cream colored matched team. It had been sick several days with some rumor of throat disease, and remedies applied failed to give relief.

In Geo. Millers clothing store is a fine specimen of our representative bird, the American Eagle, mounted by Mr. E. B. Bennvois. It was caught in a fox trap by Mr. B. and measured 7½ feet from tip to tip of the wings.

We have received from E. S. Barholomew, Westfield, N. Y., circulars advertising new varieties of early and late potatoes, said to be very productive, and having excellent qualities for home use or for market. Price list sent on application.

The Sunday evening service at the school house will commence at 7 o'clock hereafter instead of 6:30 as in the past. This change is made to accommodate those whose regular supper hour interferes with the prompt attendance at service.

It is reported that a 32 calibre bullet has been found in the person of young Bennett who was murdered in Chandler recently. This would indicate the use of some other firearms than the one which carried buckshot, and may upset the theory of suicide.

To answer the many questions concerning the latest revised engraving of Charlevoix, we will state that the work is completed and the electrotypes are daily expected to arrive. We have on our books quite a number of orders for printing waiting for them.

That was a fine tr at M. J. Stockman brought to the JOURNAL last Friday, saying, "See here; see what Iddings sent you." It weighed nearly nine pounds, and was caught with a spear in their fishhouse on Round Lake. Thanks, gentlemen; the favor will be remembered.

"Kyle's mammoth optographicon" consisting of lectures, canvas views, music, etc., is advertised for three exhibitions at the opera house next week, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings. It is under the auspices of the Good Templars lodge, and for their interests should be well patronized.

The Badger State Banner published at Black River Falls, Wis., comes to hand enlarged to 56 columns, and in better form and make up than heretofore. Its county news and correspondence shows that it is appreciated outside of its own town. On the whole it is an excellent local and family newspaper.

M. J. Stockman is credited with being the most successful winter fisherman in Charlevoix. The trout brought to this office last Friday shows proficiency in the art of spearing, for it was speared within two inches of the gills, two tines of the spear passing entirely through the body, one each side of the head.

"Box socials" are having a big run around Newport and Flat Rock. One young lady's lunch at the latter place was bid off at $5.—Evening News. Cannot the managers of church socials in Charlevoix get up something of this kind, to aid in raising funds for the church or Sunday school? It would be new to a large number who are spending their first winter here.

The report of the Ironton schools in another column shows the condition of that school under the superintendency of Mr. J. M. Harris. It is expected that this report will continue from month to month, and it will then be possible to see who makes the most progress. If any other schools in the county desire to make a similar report, the space will be granted.

The lecture of F. W. Smith on Tuesday evening was interesting, especially to those who know the facts from experience. The house was crowded, and the attention of every person was fixed on the speaker. Many of his illustrations and stories were laughable. The G.A.R. may feel proud of the lecture, and especially the fact that it netted them about $25.

A letter from Jas. C. Hambleton, now in Manitou, Colo., says that 6 degrees below is the coldest weather they have had. He is in a region where soda and iron springs are plentiful, he says, and it is an excellent place for the seeker after health. Notwithstanding the natural attractions of the place, Mr. H. still finds it desirable to have the JOURNAL with him regularly.

"The meetings being held at the M. E. church are a simple effort to emphasize the regular services; and so far there has been a pleasant realization of the desires of all. The Sabbath School is a very pleasant part of the work and the laborers are experiencing fair success. The sermons, for the few weeks to come may be anticipated. All who can come, will be welcome."

The T. T. F. E. club have organized and elected the necessary officers, and will give a select party at the Bridge Street house every two weeks, the next one being to morrow evening. The following are the officers: President, Dr. Preston; vice president, D. M. Chambers; secretary, A. F. Draper; treasurer, Fred Smith; executive committee, D. M. Chambers, Fred Smith, and Ben Weaver.

Mr. Robert Bowls was arrested and confined last Saturday on a charge of forging his brother's name to a note of $40 and selling the same to R. S. Hubbard, of Boyne. It is reported that other parties in Bay Springs, Petoskey and Charlevoix hold similar paper. He is a young man of fine appearance, and has an education and capacity to honor any legitimate calling if he chose to use it.

L. D. Bartholomew writes from Tampa Bay, Fla., that he does not like the place, but will soon go to Orlando, and afterward to Port Orange. He was in one fishing party where they were compelled to camp out all night, and where alligators were numerous. At Bartow he bought a lot, and sold his chance for $50 before the papers were executed. Thermometer, 80° in the shade.

Support home industries. Some do it by getting trusted at home and sending out of town to other dealers the little cash they can raise. Others do it by sending abroad for machinery or material that can be manufactured just as cheap at home. Leading business men of Charlevoix are guilty of the latter, and yet they assert they are doing all they can to build up the town. Home talent in all cases should be given the preference, especially if the cost be no greater.

Be careful how your children handle green cards. Our little Maud swallowed enough poison from one she had put in her mouth, to make her seriously ill for a few hours Tuesday evening, and an item in one of the Detroit papers stated that a child in Reading was almost fatally poisoned by drinking some milk in which a green colored milk ticket had rested a few hours. In our case, Dr. Carlstein rendered prompt assistance, and prevented serious results.

Mr. Harmon Wilson, manager of O. D. Wood's farm, 3 miles from Northwood, gave the JOURNAL a call on Monday. He has the care of 15 horses, 58 head of cattle, and 115 sheep, besides the exercising of a $1000 stallion, and a four-year-old colt that trots a mile inside of four minutes. Mr. Wood has 300 acres in one tract, said to be the best equipped with buildings, implements, etc., of any farm in Antrim county. He provides ions for watering and caring for stock is as complete as a man could wish.

A few weeks ago, in a conversation with a business man of this town, the question of the value of advertising was brought up. The latter said he had little faith in advertising; it did not pay in any such proportion as some represented, and he had almost determined to take his cards out of all newspapers. A few minutes later he admitted the value of advertising by denouncing in strong terms the policy of local newspapers in accepting advertisements from a rival town. The well worded enticing announcements of Petoskey dealers drawn away from Charlevoix a trade that legitimately belongs to the latter and thereby works an injustice to the home dealer, he says. Now does not this benefit the Petoskey advertiser? Would he advertise if it did not pay him? And Charlevoix dealers have a remedy. Give them back the same courtesies. If you have an article you can sell cheap, say so; and when you get a customer who legitimately belongs to Petoskey make prices to him that will bring him again, as well as his neighbors. To claim to fear such a competition is to admit your own weakness. To characterize advertising as a useless expense, or a charity to the printer, is to prove that you are not progressive, or that you are asleep and don't want to be disturbed. A few live men have found that it pays to advertise.

An enterprise of great interest to the people of this section has been undertaken by the well known publishing firm of H. R. Page & Co., Chicago. They contemplate bringing out a large and elegantly bound work, entitled "The Traverse Region, Historical and Descriptive." This work will give the history of this region from the earliest days and will be profusely illustrated with views sketched by artists employed for that purpose. The history of this county, its towns, villages, churches, schools, industries, general progress, biographical sketches etc., will constitute a part of the work. Gentlemen engaged upon this work will visit various portions of the county, gathering information and attending to the general interest of the enterprise. Mr. Geo. B. Pratt, one of the gentlemen engaged upon the work, is now in this village, looking after its interests. It is an enterprise that should receive general cooperation, that our village and county may be properly represented.

Mr. E. S. Bartholomew, who will be remembered by many of our citizens as trying to establish a canning factory here last summer, has by unusual hard faith in our village, though he is still unable to purchase the land he desires to transform into a small-fruit and vegetable farm. We have seen a letter recently, written in a vein of disappointment at not being able to get a foothold here. He wants to bring a small colony of farmers and gardeners with him and settle permanently. His product will not come into competition with any industry already established here, for he intends to erect the necessary buildings and machinery to prepare his goods for the wholesale market, thus creating a better market for those products than we now have. He is willing to pay a fair price for any land that will answer, and a good price for the right location. If there are parties in Charlevoix, or anywhere on Pine Lake, with ten acres or upwards of land suitable for the purpose, they may find a ready purchaser by addressing E. S. Bartholomew, Westfield, N. Y. Citizens of Charlevoix, here is a chance to add a new industry to our business interests. Will you have it here? Will you sell land at a price to permit him to come and settle and establish his colony of farmers and fruit growers?

Encouraging Words.

When a man is struggling against great odds in defense of what seems to be right, truth, and justice, and his surroundings are not promising, he generally feels that the world is cold and he is forsaken by friends. But when the world sees that he is battling for a principle, and that he is not to be driven from the contest by any amount of opposition, then the world sees that he is a man of principle, and that he is battling for a principle, and then the world sees that he is a man of principle, and that he is battling for a principle, and then the world sees that he is a man of principle, and that he is battling for a principle, and

THE ECONOMICAL DINNER PARTY.

BY E. V. BLAKE.

A wife (country) invites her husband to give a dinner, Who well upon the Nile,
Hoping (country wife) to give a dinner,
Economy, said he,
"I'll have it all with me,
And shall condescend to—as I'm a sinner,"

With pepper, pea, and pink,
He did bind a mummy's chine,
And, in a coffin, for his novelet;
The northern Wolf, who dwells
In rock, we'll dole
He begged off the Lynx, by blood united.

Then Mr. Fox, the shrewd—
No lover he of quail—
And Mooing Donkey, with his sober step and stately
And Mr. Frog, serene,
Or perhaps Frank green,
Who was dead base, and I here disavell entirely.

Sir Crocodile, conceal,
Too invitations send;
The day was come—his guests were all assembled
Up
The dinnerbell that none gave
Looked in his simple maybe!
Each on the other looked, and some what treacherously.

A lengthy time they wait;
Their hunger waxes great,
Yet, still, no sign of occasion dallies;
At last, the wife in a fear
With covered dishes in rend,
And—oh, in haste, the hungry party sallies.

But when—the covers raised—
On empty plates they gazed,
Each, with a face of wonder and dire intention;
Mr. Wolf looked sad at all,
And Mr. Frog was mute,
Sir Croc. swallowed hard, and made no mention.

Mr. Fox grew pale
And, as he gazed, his gaze
Fell upon the lady in her fine transgression,
He quickly let in issue,
Then, much to his chagrin,
By Mr. Lynx was taken in possession.

The Wolf, at first a pause—
Lest, with a Lynx, he should
Let nothing of his face to tell the story;
Th. Lynx—ah, ah! he!—
At the fabulous sum
Made mere mention of that wildest monster hoary.

Then Lynx asked his friend—
Wolf, if he had, in mind
To fill before the king (taken his dinner)
Then on the Leopard sprang
With much of claw and fang,
And said (a word upon that spotted sinner.

Then rose in sudden fire
Mr. Croc. (long drear,
And heard his spouse, with feelings of discretion,
"Sister, dear, you have crying,
Well called to your mind,
You only (a word in confidence) and shall it."

And a sly, a deal of guile
Lurked in his single smile,
And down his throat the morsel Lynx hastad.
"Economy, sir, my
Is chief of all," said he,
And I am glad to see them's nothing wasted."

THE CRUISE OF THE JEMIMA.

Charlie, my young brother, had been fagging at his studies; I had just passed the B. C. S. E., and was proportionately elate. We had earned our summer holiday, we thought; and nothing loth was I when Charlie, with a nap in his hand, pointed out a spot on the Cullinoes and said enthusiastically:

"Here we are! There we go! What say you, Frank?"

"Very good choice. Plenty of ozone, fishing, and boating; fashion at a discount. Nearest to the time-table?"

A primitive fishing village—all Clanhead—was quickly fixed upon; and after the usual delights of railway traveling we found ourselves in a place fairly selected by nature, but minus an inn.

A Highland cottage, however, proved a comfortable enough shelter; and after a night's rest and a hearty fish breakfast, we strolled off toward the sea.

In the one straggling street of Clanhead were yellow-haired children who stood in wide-eyed, innocent wonder and stared at us. Perhaps they were over-awed by the sight of our hideous brown sand-shoes; or it might have been that they were bewitched by Charlie's handsome face.

Charlie is the Adonis of our family; and I—well, I am an ugly young man with a marvelously wide mouth, eyesight so defective that I must pick up a sixpence without the help of my glasses, and an expression, to say the least of it, scared.

Such as we were, we stood the lads' and the lasses' scrutiny unalarmed, plodding on till we perceived a middle-aged man leaning on a gate, in, I imagined, a dolce far niente condition.

He turned, however, and moved toward us.

"Will ye no' be takin' a sail the morning, gentlemen?"

"Just what we want," cried Charlie.

"Aweel, tak ye the first turn to the east, an' I'll bring ye to the head o' the cliff. Some way back yell see the opening to a ravine. Gang awa' through the gap, an' ye'll be where the sea washes the cliff foot. Be ye canny, for the tide's high the noo, and the shallowest water there may drown ye. In five minutes I'll be comin' round wi' my boat an' my assie at your service."

The boatman touched his cap and moved off; we made for the ravine, passed down it, and came suddenly upon the most magnificent expanse of rolling water that our eyes had ever feasted upon.

Shortly after, I suppose, some shiverings took under the cliff, came along our little craft, the Jemima, with her mainsail spread and her master at the helm, while Donald, his mate, kept watch at the bow.

With a "Yo hoy! Steady! Yo hoy!" she was "brought to," and a scramble and a, neck or nothing.

We were scarcely seated before, emerging from the ravine, tolling on with the help of a crutch over the loose earth and boulders, came a girl with a sweet but very sad face. Evidently she was suffering in mind and body.

"Leh, Hinny! Hinny!" said our boatman, with a softened intonation. "Ye shouldna sae sae, my dear! When gentlemen hire the Jemima they dinna expect to tak her master's family aboard. Gang awa hame again, Mamie."

"Oh, be all means, take your friend aboard, Mr——"

"Ben is my name, sir, an' I thank ye for your kindness. Come, then, laird, an' look ye, dinna trust to your crutch wiam ye slippahoard. Shoild the boat pull, it may slip too under ye. Let me hey it down at the stern, an' gie me your hand. Now, steady, an' in ye aes!"

Ben guided the lass off, then turned to the girl again. "Eh, ay! fairane, nut sae mickle as a speck o' heal gone! an' they bits of fal-ial clothing dyin' about ye. Ye'll catch your death! Ye mun! hae my jacket on. Mebbe, sir, yell lie sae kind as to hand the tiller while I dress her cosy? There, now, Mamie, are ye no warmly lasskit?"

Off we were before the wind, our swelling mainsail hiding the man at the bow. The grand sea and sky threw Charlie and myself into ecstasies; Ben, used to such scenes, was quiet, and, I thought, sad, while the lassie looked decidedly sleepy.

"Eh, my dee," said Ben, "ye were cosy wi' the birds; I warndit ye wandin' your way to the cliff by the first glint o' the sun. Ye'lliem fra a wearyin' dearnie! Ye's aye wanderin'. Aweel, lay doun your head a while on my shoulder, and be takin' a wee bit nap the noo."

With his disengaged arm Ben supported the frail little body, and soon his clumpy was dozing as restfully as my weary child.

As she slept I copied a wedding-ring on her finger; and in response her face told a tale of mental and bodily suffering. Soon hazy colours, I thought, must have fallen upon her. Her childlike confidence in Ben and his kindness toward her were pathetic; and, altogether, my sympathy was won.

Presently I ventured to ask if she were not an invalid; and returned Ben.

"Oh, yes, sir; she is my only bairn. Pretty! Dee sae married ower early. At a week after, Tam, her lawful, called forth wi' his crew for the fishin'. Three months hae passed sin' the weds day, but nae word can we get o' boat or men."

"Then you think the vessel—"

"Went doun, sir, is what yo mean? There's no doot about it; for, miles awa along the coast, a piece of her sail was washed ashore. But my lamb knowna that; an' sae, 'ahead o' nothin' an widow's weeds, she aye says we's bound to find hinn; an' she watches the sea, an' question every fisherman she meets, till it's just pitifu' to hear her."

"She is nearly distraught," thought I. Then I gave Ben a warning note regarding the imperative need of trying to divert her mind from her trouble. Also I proffered a word of advice about her harmony, which, it appeared, from some recent injury done to the instrument, was not in tune.

"Ben was delighted to find that I was a doctor, and most grateful for my interest in him. Indeed, he was so anxious to pouring out his thanks when I volunteered to take Mamie's case in hand while I was at Clanhead, that a man at the bow (as half-brawl owned) became so absorbed and sympathetic listener; for Mamie and he had been playmates, and he felt rather down hearted, lest he be me, when Tam carried her off.

Deep in our subject, and entirely free from apprehension, we scudded pleasantly along; the manner all our thoughts were of healing; the next—crash! crash! crash! over our heads, under our feet, everywhere!

A swift glance at the mainsail, a wrench at the tiller, and a tremendous shout from Ben—

"How, there, bow! Are ye sleepin', man?"

The warning was too late. A large vessel was down upon us; our mainsail was pierced through by her bowsprit; our timbers were shivering under her bows. I heard shouting on the deck above me; I saw a man leap from the vessel's side; I saw Mamie wake up in an agony of terror, and throw her arms round her father's neck; I heard Ben say, "Now, dinna cumber me, but strike ye oot an' trust." I knew we were all in the water, for I was Ben supporting his child as he swam vigorously toward the man who had leaped over. I saw Charlie going down (neither he nor I was a swimmer); I clutched at him fruitlessly; Ben emerged from one of his "Keep your heads up!" "Here's a life-belt!" "Catch this rope!" and so on. But soon the voices sounded far away and indistinguishable. I knew that salt water was in my nostrils and mouth; there was singing in my ears, roaring in my head; I felt a mad impulse to rise; I did rise; again for a moment only. I heard eager voices near me, and caught a glimpse of the efforts that were being made to save me. In an agony I made an effort to keep up; it was futile. Then like! like! solid through my very brain; after that, darkness, deep darkness; a clear consciousness that the hand of death was on me, a very from my inmost soul to heaven, and—strange, quite calm.

The sun was going down in a flood of crimson glory. I lay upon a well-swabbed deck all alone. Where was I? Where was I going? What had happened? I clutched myself and felt the pain, and was still in the flesh. I tried my voice, "Hi! hallo! somebody!"

No one came. I sat up and took a speculative survey. The vessel was taut and trim, and she smelled of tar. Also, I felt sure, she was not of British build. As I cogitated—rather weakly, I must own—a foolsteep sounded on the deck, and along came a good-natured-looking seaman, fair and blue-eyed; he smiled his way to me and looked smilingly down.

"W.

"What ship is this?" queried I.

A shake of the head.

"Are you a German?"

Two shakes of the head.

"Dutch, man, in same tongue or other, will you?"

The word "speak" he understood, and obeyed with energy. But no word of any language could I pick out from his strange jabber.

Feeling, no doubt, that my understanding wanted arousing, he went off at speed and shortly returned with six other men; some strong, fair, and blue-eyed, like himself; the rest shorter, darker, but powerfully built, and all chattering the most unintelligible jargon.

As they bent their energies to make me understand something or other, I tried hard to discover their nationalities, for certainly they were not all of one nation. What—happy thought—came flitting through my brain the words:

And then the lion-eyed Norseman (ubi
A saga of the days of old)

"You are from Norway," I hailed I. "And you," to the darker men, "you are Swedes. Am I right?"

"Ha, Norrsmen! Norsk! Norge! Ha! ha! Norrkie! Ha! ha!"

The words were taken up like a refrain with boisterous satisfaction. But I only raised my eyes to the vessel's flag, I might have seen at first that she was called the Jarl Haken. But just then my wits were scattered. They began, however, to disentangle themselves, and thoughts of Charlie, Ben, and his trust crowded upon me. Where were they? Where was the lame girl, and where the Jemima?

It was useless to ask question, so I rose up and with rather unsteady step and head swimming, I walked across the deck and found my way to the Captain's cabin.

On one side lay Ben, with pain in every line of his face; in the Captain's berth, looking absolutely dead, was Charlie; stretched out on a bed was my brother. He, however, managed to mouth out "Brace!" when he saw me.

I went to the girl's side and felt her pulse. Then, "Where's the Captain?" said I to Ben's careless mate, Donald, who was standing close by, the picture of helpless distress.

"Here," came a ready answer from a mellow voice behind me.

I turned. There stood a portly, grey-headed man, with a trustworthy face. He spoke English; this was worth something just then.

"Have you a wife—a lady on board, sir, who will carry out my instructions respecting this patient?"

"Are you from a physician?"

"I am a member of the College of Surgeons, and am anxious to do my best in this emergency."

"I am heartily glad, sir. A lady—no, there is not one on board. But there is a man who would lay down his life for this child. He is burly, but desolate; he is not a nurse.

"Oh, her father? But he is sorry, pitiful, and he knows I am doing

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

Additional Local.

Mr. Slater, one of the carpenters injured at Chapman's hotel last fall, is able to do a little work.

Miss Annie Cooper has charge of the higher department and Miss Taff, of Lansing, the primary department of the Boyne City schools.

The advertising patronage of the Grand Rapids Tradesman has increased so that a full page supplement is necessary. That looks like success.

The Farm, Field and Fireside this year is larger and better than ever before, and claims to offer more good wholesome matter for one dollar than any paper in the world.

The Farm, Field and Fireside is a handsome monthly of 28 large pages, clear print, and finely illustrated. One dollar per year, and a prize to every subscriber. W. V. R. Povis, publisher, Chicago.

F. J. Smith, our mail contractor, will put a steamer on the route between Petoskey and Manistique next season, calling at different points on the line. We understand he will also put a boat on Pine Lake to run between here and Charlevoix.—Statesman.

A profile map of the G. R. & I. railroad, shows the contour of the land over which the road passes, and the elevation of every point between Grand Rapids and Mackinaw above the level of the water at Mackinaw. Grand Rapids is the lowest point on the map, 30 feet above the level.

It may be unnecessary to discuss the merits of so-called standard groceries, but in the question of baking powder, after trying various new brands, our domestic relations have become much more peaceful and satisfactory since going back to the old reliable "Royal," no other will equal it.

The Farm Field and Fireside is one of the leading papers of its kind in the world, pure in tone, with large and legible print, and with large sums of money spent for illustrations and good reading matter. It gives reliable agricultural news, from every quarter of the United States, adapted for north, east, south and west.

Summers hauling shipping wood into town are trying the capacity of their horses. Each is endeavoring to beat the other hauling the largest number of cords before the completion of the contract, and one would think each load would fill the hold of an ordinary schooner. In this case good roads and plenty of oats are "what makes the mare go."—Statesman.

Hello! the telephone is a fixed fact. The stock is all taken, and J. I. Atkins let the contract for putting up the lines on Monday night to Mr. Chas. H. Brown, who will arrive from St. Ignace with his assistants on Monday next and begin operations at once. It will take about ten days to put up the lines already subscribed for, but probably the list will be largely increased when the practical working of the line is seen. Subscribers who order a line this week will come in on the charter rate of $1.75 per month. All coming in after this week will be required to pay a rental of $2.00 per month for their service.—Record.

We regret to say that the white fish eggs have been removed from the hatchery here to Detroit to complete the hatching. Owing to the bad season of 1883 and the consequent scarcity of spawn the fish commission ers are anxious that every egg may be saved, and Supt. Marks determined that the fifteen million eggs must be transferred to the Detroit hatchery to save them. The reason for his opinion is as follows: While we always supposed the water pumped from the water works to be bay water filtered through a bank of clean gravel, investigation has just proved that the water supply comes mainly from veins upon the land side, and that it is wanting in some of the most marked characteristics of the bay water, and the mineral constituents held in suspension. As it is important to hatch the eggs and rear the fry in their native element, Mr. Marks does not care to run the risk of an experiment with our well water, and therefore the removal. Next summer it will be necessary to put a crib in the bay and run a pipe out to it, to furnish not only the hatchery but the city with the water we have up to this time supposed we were having, viz., the pure bay water. While everyone will regret the removal of this first batch of eggs, we will have arrangements made so that with an ordinary fishing season the hatchery can stock up with its full compliment of 45 millions of eggs next fall.—Record.

William White, formerly of Essex county, Ont, but more recently of South Arm, has formed a copartnership with R. E. Newville, well known here, and as a firm have leased the Boyne City mill and will go extensively into the business of manufacturing broom handles, it being their intention to put in what other machinery may be necessary to make it complete as a broom handle factory. This is an enterprise which will assist materially in the building up of our town, and Messrs. Newville & White will undoubtedly find it a paying business. Mr. White arrived Thursday with his family and now occupies the rooms recently vacated by H. A. Sinclair.—Statesman.

Notes and News.

In nineteen opinions recently delivered by the Supreme Court, Justice Sherwood dissented four times and Justice Champlin once.—Free Press.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of Catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unsurpassed. Full pounds on cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. x40

Congressman Belford has discovered a method of disposing of a portion of the surplus revenue in the treasury. He has offered to introduce a resolution allowing a clerk, at a salary of $1,200, for each representation in congress.

Traverse City sent to Chicago in 1883, 22,500,000 feet of lumber, and 6,181,000 shingles. Charlevoix shipped 8,500,000 feet of lumber; Frankfort, 8,544,000 feet of lumber and 13,000,000 shingles; Mackinaw City, 10,500,000 feet of lumber.—Free Press.

TOOTHACHE.—Money is a great cure for aching hearts, but a twenty dollar gold piece placed on an aching tooth don't seem to have the least effect. In fact, nothing is sure but Hamilton's Toothache Drops, which are warranted to cure in one minute. Price only 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Secure admiration. Who can help admiring a lovely face, a clear, smooth, beautiful complexion? These can be easily obtained by the use of Hamilton's Oriental Balm. It will surely remove Freckles, Tan, Pimples, and Blemishes of every sort and is in no way injurious to the skin, but is the most harmless and elegant preparation of its kind. Price 50c per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Beware! Coughs, colds, and slight Throat Diseases often develop into Bronchitis, Seated Cough, Consumption, etc., and should have immediate attention and be removed in the first stages. Not only public speakers, but all, are liable to throat troubles, and to obtain relief should use Hamilton's Cough Troches, which relieve Coughs and Hoarseness, making the irritation cease. Warranted to give satisfaction. Price 25c per box. Sold O. B. Weed & Co.

In an interview Gerald Massey said: I think the laboring classes in all countries are benefited by free trade. Certain industries may suffer pro tem., but the masses of the people will be benefited. I cannot see how the working classes can favor your protection laws. If the workingmen will only wake up to a thorough understanding of the real merits of the question they can't help seeing that it is manifestly for their interest to have free trade in this country

When a cure is guaranteed why will you refuse to be relieved of that cough which is liable to become seated on your lungs and to cause you many a suffering day and sleepless night? Your children are liable to be taken with Croup and die before a doctor can be summoned. Be wise and obtain a remedy that will not fail to give relief from Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Croup, and all other lung difficulties. Hamilton's Cough Balsam will do all this and costs but a trifle. Price 25 and 50 cents a bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

It is a humiliating confession—for the republicans—that the Chicago Tribune makes when it says: "There is great danger that the country may attach too much importance to the apparent demoralization of the lobbies in Washington and draw from it hopes of a political millennium of reform that will be most cruelly disappointed. Though the "agents and attorneys" of the Huntingtons and Gould, Brooks, the sugar monopoly, and all the other vested wrongs that have so much to fear if the wishes of the people with regard to their obliteration could be carried out, acknowledge that they are whipped in advance and will retire, it is an open secret that their apparent submission is but a ruse. They wish to beguile the people with a show of withdrawal while they are betaking themselves to a new line of defense. These monopolists have one sure resource—the senate. There they expect to thwart all the plans for bringing them to book."

Some of our fault-finding contemporaries are accusing the Republican of inconsistency for advocating the prohibition of intoxicants on the state fair grounds, and not favoring a prohibitory law in the state. The friends of temperance must capture the outposts before they can take the citadel of the rum power. There is public sentiment to exclude the sale of intoxicants from the state fair grounds, but in many places in this state there is no sentiment to enforce a prohibitory law. The Republican favors heavy taxation because it has reduced the number of saloons in our commonwealth nearly one-half since it first went into effect, and because there are nearly 100 less towns and villages in Michigan to-day with saloons than in 1875, when the tax law was first enacted. The temperance advocate who falls into the error of believing that law makes public sentiment is a dead weight to the advancement of a righteous cause. We care not whether a man is a prohibitionist or a friend of taxation, so long as he recognizes the fact that public sentiment makes and enforces law. The friend of temperance who reaches this frame of mind is in a condition to work for favorable practical results. One such worker is worth a thousand of the political prohibition Utopians who have been making Rome howl about "licensing an evil." The Michigan tax law was framed for the express purpose of regulating and crushing out the great curse, and has been much more effective in this regard than its most ardent friends had reason to expect. Our supreme court has declared the tax law no license, and we say stick to taxation so long as it will restrict, prohibit, and crush out. When it is no longer effective in this direction then take up the next best weapon which public sentiment will accept. But over and beyond all this stands the education of our children in the home circle and educational institutions. From childhood to manhood and womanhood they should be taught the soul and body destroying power of all alcoholic stimulants.—Lansing Republican.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Man the doctors had given up and said could not be cured. 75 cents a bottle. Sold by Dr. Crouter

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from NERVOUS DEBILITY, PREMATURE DECAY, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will, for the sake of suffering humanity, send free to all who need it, the recipe and direction for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Sufferers wishing to profit by the advertiser's experience, can do so by addressing, in perfect confidence, JOHN B. OGDEN, 42 Cedar St., New York.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, (free of charge,) with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE for COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. Parties wishing the prescription will please address, REV. E. A. WILSON, 194 Penn. St., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

LIVERY.

The undersigned has purchased the livery formerly owned by him, and installed

Geo. Durance, Manager.

There has been added a new stock of

Horses and Carriages

And a cordial invitation is extended to all old friends and patrons to call and see him whenever they need anything in that line.

GOOD SADDLE HORSES A SPECIALTY WITH THIS STABLE.

J. MILO EATON.

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds,

Imported and Domestic Perfumery,

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Bartlett's new

Opera Block

FOR SALE.—A second-hand portable saw mill, with engine and boiler complete. for sale cheap. Call soon. J. MILO EATON.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS,

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE MOST USEFUL BOOK EVER PUBLISHED!

A Book that should be in Every House.

The press, teacher, and professional people throughout the country pronounce it to be the BOOK OF BOOKS. It contains upwards of 50,000 WORDS, with their definition and pronunciation, according to Webster and other recognized authorities; a large number of additional words and definitions in general use. It contains a mine of information for everybody. This book is handsomely bound in cloth, containing 542 Pages Profusely Illustrated. We propose to send you one of these valuable books, by mail, all shipping charges prepaid, to any address, on receipt of only ONE DOLLAR.

Address M. STOLZ & CO.,

20 Park Place, New York.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL

A Progressive Local and Family Newspaper.

Published Every Thursday, at $1.50 a Year

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 31. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1884. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

Is published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

Office over T. D. Smith's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

PLUNKETT & GRIER, Attorneys at Law, Office in Bishop Block, Charlevoix, Mich. J. S. GRIER. C. J. SHERMAN.

JONES & KLEINHEIN, Attorneys at Law, East Jordan, Mich. 22

FRED T. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor, and Real Estate business promptly attended to. PROMPTLY TO LOAN.

H. L. ANDREWS, Attorney and Counselor at Law, office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

J. W. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

VORIS & KEAT, Attorneys at Law. Office in Spencer's Hotel, Boyne, Mich.

FRANK F. WISNER, Attorney and Solicitor and U. S. Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX, Capital Excess, $ Assign department. In position selected by depositors of paid-in capital, $50,000. Interest allowed on time deposits. Collections above monthly remittances. Foreign and domestic exchange. DAVENPORT & BROWN'S.

CHURCHES.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening. C. F. VAN ANDEL, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting Thursday evening at 7 p. m. J. H. HOOVER, pastor.

CHARITY NO. 1, CHOSEN AND READY LODGE, meets every the first and third Thursday evenings of each month, at the town hall. H. L. DOBBIE, Secretary.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. A. CRANSTON, M. D. Office at Mr. Ingleside.

L. DWIN, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office in Dr. Cheney's building, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. T. STANTON, M. D., Surgeon and Homeopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich. 25

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

ROBERT S. HARSHA, Notary Public, Real Estate Loan and Insurance Agt., Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

O. E. S.—Lodge Dist No. 18, meets second Monday evening at Masonic Hall. J. EVENS, Sec.

I. O. O. F.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 327, meets every Friday evening, in their hall.

I. O. G. T.—Pine Knot No. 157, meet Saturday evening at 7 o'clock in Old Fellows' hall.

MASONIC.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 292, meets Friday on or before full moon. Hall over postoffice.

A. BITTNER, President. A. R. EHRHART, Vice President.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

A GENERAL banking business transacted. Money loaned on approved security at reasonable rates. Drafts payable at Eastern cities. Interest allowed on time deposits. Collections promptly attended to. C. L. TOUSLEY, Cashier.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Prices reasonable. W. S. ROBINSON, Op. Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor,

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations excellent. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only simple room in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Entire new furniture throughout. Rooms to suit the traveling public. Best accommodations for the Petoskey and Pt. Aux Barques.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor.

Boyne City, Michigan.

Has been thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 76 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily (Morning)—By mail, $6.00 per year in advance. Weekly (Sunday)—$1.50 per year; 75 cents for six months; 40 cents for three months. Invariably in advance.

Address,

THE DEMOCRAT, Grand Rapids, Mich.

1872 1884

DR. G. W. CROUTER,

THE DRUGGIST.

Our Motto: P. P.

PURITY, POLITENESS.

WE MAKE IT A POINT TO SELL ONLY

Full Strength & Fresh Goods

OUR PRICES WILL ALWAYS BE AS LOW AS

STRICTLY PURE DRUGS

CAN BE SOLD.

Our Stock is the Largest in the County.

EVERYTHING

IN THE LINE OF

Furniture and Undertakers' Goods

CAN BE FOUND AT THE OLD RELIABLE HOUSE OF

HENRY C. COOPER, CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See Me Before Buying.

Advance Lumber Company

Are now prepared to do

CUSTOM SAWING

Promptly and on short notice. We have on hand a large quantity of

Hard and Soft Wood Lumber and Hemlock Timber.

GIVE US A TRIAL. ADVANCE LUMBER CO. ADVANCE, MICH.

C. W. SMITH,

ELECTRO-PLATER,

Manufacturing Jeweler and Lapidist.

Electroplating in Gold and Silver. Any article of jewelry made to order. AGATES AND LODESTONES cut to order.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at ten dollars each. Call soon and have your pick.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. S. WAY.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser has long been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, (free of charge,) with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE for COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. Parties wishing the prescription will please address, REV. E. A. WILSON, 194 Penn. St., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

HALL'S

Catarrh Cure

Is Recommended by Physicians!

$100 REWARD FOR A CASE HALL'S CATARRH POWDER FAILS TO CURE.

We manufacture and sell it with a positive guarantee that it will cure any case of catarrh in any stage, and we will forfeit the above amount in cash in a single instance.

It is unlike any other Catarrh remedy, is taken internally, acting upon the blood. If you will take Hall's Catarrh Cure according to directions, your health for it, and address, enclosing stamp, for a circular and testimonial, free to you, and we will forward medicine. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

Dr. Crouter, Agt., Charlevoix 29

ROBERT TODD LINCOLN,

Secretary of War.

Robert Todd Lincoln, secretary of war, is the oldest and only surviving son of Abraham Lincoln and was born at Springfield, Illinois, August 10, 1843. He received a good education in the common schools of that city but completed his preparatory course at Exeter, N. H. He entered Harvard college from which he graduated in 1864. After his graduation he received a commission as captain, and saw considerable service in the field, but because of his youth he was kept a close companion to his father at the white house the greater part of the time.

After the exciting scenes of his father's assassination he settled in Chicago, where he studied law, and in a few years admitted to the bar. He then began the practice of his profession in that city and secured the management of several large estates and many eastern insurance companies who loaned large sums of money on Chicago real estate. In attending to these trusts Mr. Lincoln developed superior executive ability. He married the only daughter of ex secretary James Harlan.

During the Chicago convention Mr. Lincoln was an ardent advocate of the nomination of General Grant, and presided at the immense Grant meeting held in Chicago a few days before the nomination for the presidency was made. Before that period his only active efforts in politics had been as a member of a citizens' committee formed in Chicago to effect a reformation and purification in local political affairs.

President Garfield's selection of Mr. Lincoln for secretary of war was due to a determination to honor the name of our great war president, and to satisfactory war his administration of the war department during President Garfield's incumbency that President Arthur retained Mr. Lincoln in the cabinet, and now finds him prominently mentioned as a presidential candidate. Mr. Lincoln disclaims any ambition for further political preferment, but his modest, unassuming manner only induces his admirers to more earnestly advance his claims.

Secretary Lincoln is one of the most popular officials that the war department has ever been under, and in social and political circles, regardless of his party affiliations, he is a universal favorite. In form and feature Mr. Lincoln has no resemblance whatever to his illustrious father, but in executive ability and an intuitive comprehension of public affairs he has certainly inherited the sterling characteristics of Abraham Lincoln.

From the National Capital.

Notes and Interviews by a Journal Correspondent.

Within the last few days special attention has been directed to the shipping bills, and the business interests involved are actively engaged in watching legislation. In this matter two antagonistic influences are at work, one urging subsidy as a panacea for our depressed shipping, and the other a "free trade" policy insisting that our merchants can avail themselves of the cheap vessels of foreign builders.

THE LAND FOR THE PEOPLE.

There is no longer any doubt as to the fate of the land grant grabbers. Mr. Hoar's sweeping resolution declaring that all grants are forfeited where the railroad companies have failed to comply with the terms, passed the house with only 18 dissenting votes. Each particular grant will now be declared forfeited as was the Texas Pacific the other day, and the one hundred millions of acres will revert to the people.

HUNTINGTON'S APPEARANCE

before the committee on public lands defending his interests only precipitated this coup de état and the California magistrate left the capitol in disgust, threatening to appeal to the courts against "this high-handed usurpation of power by congress."

A NEW CABINET OFFICER.

The indications now are that the department of agriculture will be created into a cabinet office, the committee on agriculture having reported the bill to the house favorably. The present commissioner Loving feels confident of the passage of the measure and expects soon to become one of President Arthur's advisers. The present congress has a large "granger" element in it and they rightly consider that the agricultural interests of the land are of sufficient magnitude to admit that bureau to the cabinet circle. The question has been agitated for several years and will now become a law.

EX-SPEAKER KEIFER IS A CORNER.

General Keifer is in ill luck. The committee on accounts which has been investigating his appointments made at the close of the last session called Mr. Keifer before it and asked him if it was true that he had demanded one Tyson, a stenographer to come in order that he, Mr. Keifer, could appoint his nephew, Gaines, to the vacancy. Mr. Keifer stated to the committee that Tyson resigned of his own accord. Mr. Tyson was then called in and made oath to the statement that ex-speaker Keifer came to him just before the close of the last session and demanded his resignation to which Tyson objected, but finally complied upon pain of dismissal. The question now is, has Keifer sworn to a lie or is Tyson seeking revenge? Other appointments are being investigated and the report of the committee is looked forward to with absorbing interest.

SENATORIAL CLERKS.

The senate has virtually decided to allow some thirty five of its body who are not chairmen of committees a private clerk with a salary of $6 per day during the session. These senators claim that their public correspondence is so large that they are compelled to spend half their salaries in supplying clerks while the chairmen of committees are the committee clerks for their private work. This step on the part of the senate will in all probability be followed by the house, adding about 400 to the present clerical force of congress

COST OF RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Some time ago the house requested the secretary of war to make a detailed statement of the expenditures of the government on rivers and harbors from March 4th, 1789 to June 30th, 1882. This statement will be of interest to your readers: These was spent on the northern and middle states, $35,540,000; on western states and territories, $6,353,000; on southern states, $14,622,000; miscellaneous, mostly Mississippi river) $38,349,000; repairs $4,000,000; surveys, $5,000,000; dredging machines, $1,115,000; grand total $105,000,000.

NEW BUSINESS

John C. New, Folger's second assistant secretary, has resigned his position and gossip runs high as to the impelling cause. It has been a well-known fact Mr. New and Mr. French the first assistant secretary, have not been in sweet accord for a year or more and especially since the investigation of Architect Hill, of which committee Mr. New was chairman. This investigation revealed the presence in the architect's employ of Secretary French's young son as a sculptor at a enormous compensation. It is said that Mr. New inserted in his report severe reflections upon this nepotism and that the report was finally toned down before given to the public against Mr. New's protest. Mr. New threatened then to resign, but sufficient influence was brought to bear to prevent his resignation at that time. Mr. New now quietly steps out and says "private business compels him to do so."

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year with Hall's Catarrh Cure, that the doctors had given up and said could not be cured. 75 cents a bottle. Sold by Dr. Crouter

The Detroit Times mentions a scheme to erect a $150,000 summer hotel on Mackinaw Island. Railroads and other transportation companies are pushing the matter.

Secure admiration. Who can help admiring a lovely face, a clear, smooth, beautiful complexion? These can be easily obtained by the use of Hamilton's Oriental Balm. It will surely remove Freckles, Tan, Pimples, and Blemishes of every sort and is in no way injurious to the skin, but is the most harmless and elegant preparation of its kind. Price 50c per bottle Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

The Dimondale News is a new paper in Eaton county, the first number being issued Feb. 2. It starts with a good local page, and a fair advertising patronage.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

MR. C. P. HUNTINGTON centrals 12,[illegible] miles of railway. He is 67 years old, and is very healthy. His fortune is estimated at $50,000,000.

IT is said upon good authority that in New Mexico alone not less than 5,000,000 acres of grazing lands have been "gobbled" by two syndicates of English capitalists, who have placed large tracts of it on sale in the London markets. This land has been occupied, too, in the face of a claim, in the proclaiming law which says that alien monopolists cannot hold, occupy, or possess the public domain either as farming, grazing, timber, or mining lands."

LET the American hog be vindicated. If his steamed and scraped and salted carcass is to be kept out of Germany, let the Americans prohibit the importation of German wines. They are general, sir. Let us make a war fine on them and say they must go. Or, more to the purpose, send out some. Our account with Germany for 1882 shows that we imported of her products $56,[illegible]88,742 of her products, while she took only $54,228,952 of ours, including pork, bacon, lard, etc. Let the vintners of California squeeze some sour grapes into their wines, and we will make Bismarck sick.

WHEN the Hon. Wm. D. Kelley was a young man his and Representative Randall's father were one day talking together with an eminent doctor in Paris. Health was the topic of conversation, and "young man," said the doctor, to Mr. Kelley, "if you will make it a rule never to get exhausted so long as a part of the day remains in which you have anything to do, you will live to be as old as I am." "I followed the advice," said Judge Kelley to a Cleveland Leader correspondent, "as far as I could, and I have already lived to be older than either the great-hearted doctor or 'Sam' Randall's father."

THE Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, publishes an article showing a remarkable increase in the cotton-manufacturing interests of the South during the last three years. The figures now show 314 cotton mills in the South, having 1,276,422 spindles and 24,873 looms, while in 1880 there were only 180 mills with 713,580 spindles and 15,222 looms. In 1880 the value of manufactured cotton produced was a little over $20,000,000. In 1883 it had risen to $35,000,000 or $40,000,000. During the last three years and a half about $20,000,000 has been invested in new and old cotton mills in machinery, the bulk of which was paid to Northern and Western machinery manufacturers.

THE following is a record of failures in the United States extending over twenty-seven years—from 1857 to 1883, inclusive.

Year.	Failures.	Amount of Liabilities.
1857	4,825	$291,750,000
1858	2,207	64,000,000
1859	3,913	91,000,000
1860	4,932	154,000,000
1861	5,935	207,000,000
1862	1,652	19,000,000
1863	520	7,500,000
1864	520	8,579,000
1865	530	17,000,000
1866	632	23,000,000
1867	1,505	63,000,000
1868	2,608	75,000,000
1869	3,551	88,000,000
1870	3,546	95,749,000
1871	2,915	85,152,000
1872	4,069	121,056,000
1873	5,183	228,499,900
1874	5,831	201,000,000
1875	7,740	191,117,000
1876	9,092	191,117,000
1877	9,092	201,060,000
1878	10,478	234,383,132
1879	6,658	98,149,000
1880	4,735	65,996,416
1881	5,582	81,155,932
1882	6,738	101,099,000
1883	9,184	191,809,000

KANSAS CITY Times: At half-past 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon Charlie Ford and Frank James met face to face at the Missouri Pacific depot for the time since Jesse James was assassinated, in April, 1882. Ford made the advances, requesting permission of the guards to see Frank James. As soon as Ford came in, James recognized him, and said: "How are you, Charlie?" "I am pretty well; how are you, Frank?" replied Ford. James was self-possessed, and greeted Ford very good-naturedly. The interview between the two was frequently interrupted by persons who came in to see Frank James. The latter said to Ford that he had no ill-feeling toward him, but it would be impossible for him ever to become reconciled to his brother, Bob Ford. Ford duplicated this assurance of goodwill, but to the reference to his brother he made no response. After remaining with James for minutes Ford went out. The latter informed a Times reporter that he met Mrs. Samuels on the street recently, and she spoke to him very pleasantly. Frank James, he said, has never mentioned his family, as he was a very different man from Jesse. Ford said that Frank James was looking better than when he last saw him.

THE last of the terrible Medoc, of Indian fame, a soldier in the Globe-Democrat says, dwell on a tract of Lytel acres near the village of Seneca, on the dividing line between the Indian Territory and Missouri. There are twenty-six families, numbering 107 persons. They are being thrifty, sober, character, and are becoming agriculturists, and in doing this they are still assisted by the General Government, which supplies rations and an instructor in agriculture. Most of them speak English. A Modoc woman, who is the tribe's best interpreter, cultivated five acres of corn without any assistance whatever, and got a yield of 200 bushels last year. The reservation has been surveyed into forty-acre lots, and the cabins are being rapidly erected, the latter in which they stood, and are long every family will live on its own forty-acre patch.

CHICAGO NEWS: Our esteemed contemporary, the Bloomington Eye, is in a power of trouble. A short while ago it invited a contribution from Mr. E. William Nye, the gentle humorist, late of Wyoming, but now moving a fiery, untamed article of spinal meningitis at Hudson, Wis. Mr. Nye responded with a characteristic sketch, in which he treated of the horrors of meningitis, and the divers alleged methods of curing that unpleasant complaint. In the course of this humorous article, Mr. Nye took occasion to pay his compliments to a certain Wyoming physician by the name of Dysart, who had professionally advised and treated him during the earlier stages of his sickness. In his quaintly humorous way Mr. Nye spoke of Dr. Dysart as a person who was the best friend the cemeteries ever had, and in divers and sundry other ways he lampooned and ridiculed the Wyoming Esculapius. The editor of the Eye innocently printed the article, never for one moment suspecting that Dr. Dysart, as quoted in Mr. Nye's contribution, existed anywhere save in Mr. Nye's imagination. The horror and grief, therefore, of that mild, unsuspecting editor may be imagined, if not described, when he found himself confronted by the irate Dr. Dysart, in propria persona, and a libel suit praying for damages in the modest sum of $20,000. Mr. Nye may be a pretty sick man, but we have a strong suspicion that the editor of the Bloomington Eye is much the sicker man of the two.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

"Mother Told Me So."

"Look to your little babe, Lady,
Now you have laid it down;
For you should know of a certain truth
She is a wayward, wilful creature,
She answered, "That's nothing to boast."

"Look to the color of the infant, Lady,
And look to the color of its eyes,
And look to the color of its hair, sir, too,
To hint to others how wise I am."

"But look to its feet by day, my child,
And look to its hands by night,
Look to the laughing lips, and look to the hands,
They are the tell-tales, I tell you."

"But if the infant is less wise than I,
Or, perhaps, even less than you,
Which, alas, she may well be, taking time,
Shall we, for this, be blind to it?"

"Mother Hubbard, the nursery rhyme
Has told us of a poor old dame
Who had a cupboard, and had not a bone
To put in it, for her child."

"But look to your cupboard, Lady, look
Lest it be bare, some day;
Look to your cupboard, Lady, look
Lest, when you need, it be found empty."

"But look to your babe, Lady, look
Lest it be wayward, wilful, wise."

"But look to your babe, Lady, look
Quite as hard, if not more, Lady, than
Look to your cupboard, Lady, look
Lest it be empty, when you need."

—Mary A. Dodge, in Good Cheer.

The Honey-Bees.

Nowhere in the working of natural law is the Deity more in evidence than in the wonderful exhibition of industry, ever approaching to intelligence, than in the common honey-bee. This little creature is truly "fearfully and wonderfully made."

Take, for instance, the fact of the common working bee. They exhibit at some and the same time a knack, a brush and a pair of pincers. One of these articles is used for a brush of extreme fineness, the hairs of which, arranged in symmetrical rows, are only to be seen with the microscope.

With this brush of fairy delicacy the bee continually brushes its velvet robe, to remove the pollen dust with which it becomes loaded while rifling the flowers and sucking up their nectar.

Another article, which is hollowed like a spoon, receives all the gleanings which the insect carries to the hive. It is a pantry for provisions. Finally, by grasping them one upon another, by means of a hinge, these two pieces become a pair of pincers, which render important service in the construction of the combs, and it is with them that the bee lays hold of the somewhat of wax below its abdomen, and carries them to its mouth.

The mechanism of the sting is no less extraordinary. This weapon consists of a sheath inclosing two needles, barbarts of exceeding fineness, placed side by side.

Toward the point they are armed with minute teeth like those of a saw, whence it happens that the bee is sometimes unable to withdraw this little javelin from the enemy it has pierced, for so powerful is the impetus of the sting that it will pierce even the thick human skin the twelth of an inch deep.

When the sting and its sheath, the useful poison is squeezed in from the bag near its base, the structure and process being nearly identical with that employed by some fangs of serpents. Only the females and neuters of working bees have these formidable weapons, the males, or drones, being defenseless.

Let us glance at some of the exhibitions of wisdom shown by these little fellows which make such a buzzing about our gardens and bedrooms, and stand among all the insects as the near of friends and familiars of man.

When an enemy little to be dreaded sneaks into a hive of bees, the first sentinels that see it pierce it with their stings, and as the twinking of an eye the corpse is tossed out. The work is not interrupted for a moment.

But if the intruder is a big, strong thing, or worse, if the weather has thrown into agitation. They all rally round the hive, and pierce the enemy with a hundred stings. But what is to be done with such a monster? Why,

The little fact of all the tribe would not suffice to stir the corpse, and the sentinels are at a loss how to deal with it or pass. Its putrid odors would, however, soon infect the colony, and develop the germ of some malady.

How are they to escape from this danger?

The little republicans take counsel, and come unanimously to just such a resolution as they would have done if they had thoroughly known one of the arts of ancient Egypt.

As under the Pharaohs men embalmed the corpse of mummies, with a religious view, or to preserve them from a decay—so all the bees now set to work to embalm the dead animal, the presence of which is a menace to them.

For this purpose the workers scatter themselves round the enemy in order to gather the resinous matter which clings to the buds, for this is what replaces the gums and balms used by the undertakers of the Nile.

The bees have, per envoy, the dead body with this, in the form of little fillets, and deposit all around it a thick, solid layer, which preserves it from putrefaction.—Gabriel Daryn.

Rotey Medlies.

Katey is my sister, and she medlies a good deal with me and mother. This story is about one of the times. It was a May-basket she meddled with.

Jimy and I hung the May-basket, Rosy is Aunt Esther's boy, and his name is Napoleon Bonaparte. There were two May-baskets—one regular mean, and one just jolly. One was for Rosy Lee. She's a beauty, Rosy Lee is, with blue—no yellow—silky hair, and large blue eyes, and a little girl's face like rolls of gold, only I never saw any of those, and blue eyes and red cheeks. And her father's rich as fury, but she isn't stuck up a mite. And all the boys want her to ride on their sleds, and to ride in her buggy.

The other one was a regular mean one, was for Jenny Brown, that we now call Brown Jenny, for she is so mean and ugly as a lo-lo-lo-cust and her father works hard, and I don't see why she ever had a big, stuck-up lot like her for.

Our afternoon the gal above Rosy and me and a lot more lays in a regular big time, and above little Rosy Lee, and she cried. I wish I hadn't gotten selfish, Rosy said, and we e-ployed to—

"Go to pay for oil?"

"Yes, I wish I had."

So we went home, and our day was ruined. And we got flat up to make us two May-baskets, one lumpy and with just a little, little, little, no, long, long and one out of an old newspaper, with wrapping-paper roses, for Brown Jenny. And we put lots of candy in the pretty one, and chips and carrots in the one that wasn't.

"What is that for?" asked Katey.

"Brown Jenny," answered I. But I didn't like the look of Katey's face.

"Then shame on you," said she. "I'm sorry I meddle-d." And she went out of the room and sat in the door-hard.

But we didn't care—Rosy and I—for Brown Jenny had no business to go above us and Rosy Lee, and make her cry. So we hung the May-baskets on to the door-knob, and we whopped one nearest the door, so we could tell them we was after 'em in the dark, and didn't mind a well what Katey said. We knew, after shed done a thing and said a thing, she wouldn't look out. That's the way Indians do, father says; but my sister Katey isn't.

When night came, it was as dark as the pocket in a black coat. Rosy and I had hugged ourselves to think of Brown Jenny chewing up those old chips.

We were going to hang hers first. We took it out of the closet and said—

"Won't she be mad?" said Rosy, when we were going along the road.

"Hopping!" said I; but I didn't feel first-rate about it, after all. For how could Brown Jenny help going above us if she had her lesson and we hadn't?

But I didn't say any more, nor Rosy, because we were almost there, and we didn't want them to hear. Oh, how dark it was! you could pretty near cut it with a jack-knife. Rosy said next day he visited hold in-night a slice home to make black ink of and sell it. And we stumbled two or three times, and once Rosy let a bear and sung out, "Oh!" That's pretty!

Well, we hung the May-basket on the door and knocked, and started to run. But we didn't go far, I tell you. The door opened quicker than you could say Jack Robinson, and out jumped Brown Jenny's big brother, Tom, after us. We thought he was, too, after us. And he caught us, too, in no time—his legs are so long. "Now, come back into the house, youngsters," said he.

Well, you could have knocked me over with a feather. I didn't dare look at Rosy, though I couldn't have seen him if I had looked, it was so dark. I squirmed and giggled, but I couldn't get away, nor Rosy. He said he couldn't, I guess, by a long shot. For Brown Jenny's brother, Tom, had hold of us—one in each hand.

And to think of that miserable May-basket, and what was in it! My face felt so red that I thought it might show in the dark. Rosy said, next day, his did, too. You better believe we stayed in. We didn't do it. Ever noticed that the very folks are apt to do about such mean errors?

But it didn't do any good to stay in. We were marched right along up, "Here they be," said Brown Jenny's big brother, Tom. And there we were in the light, by the candle and lamp, and "Good evening, boys," as pleasant as could be, said Brown Jenny's mother, by the table smiling at us; and there was the table was Rosy Lee's May-basket, with the pink ribbons rose and the candy dropping out of it!

"O, you dear boys," cried Brown Jenny, and you wouldn't believe that she was almost crying! "How did you come to hang it?"

But we only hooted, and Rosy said we came by the road; how else should we? And then they all laughed. We wouldn't say "was all a mistake—of course not, with Jenny and Rosy," and everybody looking so pleased. But Rosy looked as if he had gone in his own funeral, he was so astonished, and he said next day that I did, too.

But I knew it was Katey meddled. She changed the baskets over, and took the chips out of ours, and put candy to get it, and then didn't have any light in the parlor. Oh, I saw through it clear as morning water.

We stayed an hour, and ate raisets and hazelnuts and, layed dominoes. Then we started for home.

"I wish I could give for Brown Jenny next year," said Rosy.

"I wish I could, too," said I; and we racon to—a good one, too.

When I asked Katey if she changed 'em, she said—

But I knew.

P. S.—We didn't hang Rosy Lee one.—Mrs. J. C. R. Stoddard, in Youth's Companion.

To Bees.

WHOEVER is open, loyal, true; of gentle and affable demeanour, humble himself and in the judgment of others; faithful to his word as to law, and faithful alike to God and man—such a man is a true gentleman.—Hume.

A GREAT many ministers know when to begin a discourse, but not one in ten knows when to leave off. The man who has the genius to put his sermon in the right place is always popular.

DANA, REID, AND APPLETON.

The Three-Cornered Quarrel in These New Yorkers.

Whitelaw Reid and Charles A. Dana after having disposed and dispossessed each other for ten years, now dislike and are now as thick as two peas in a pod. Appleton and Dana, too, begin to see that it is a waste of time to be bold than to be a fool, and that the journalists salute each other on every time during the last half. All the suppressed energy wasted during a decade of years is now to increase the grit of the terrier.

But the kindred quarrel of the three and the Appletons is not to be by any means; and I know why. The true story of that quarrel, which is by no means nasty, as rumors, should not now be told.

Very well, Empress, Reid, as news sworn enemies, and Mr. Dana was. After being removed from the managing editorship, not because he had clamored "Pure Richmond," he turned his attention to the paper and everybody needed with it. He regarded his property, Sidney Howard, as a mild contempt; Mr. Gaston, young, was, he thought, to cower with colonn, Mr. Dana, he felt, loyally; and the comparatively young and fond connection Cincinnati and the old desk, Mr. Dana, he confidently, and attended to him intently. Mr. Dana was of the Tell I and the Young Man of the Mind, and Jay Gould's Young Lion, I understand, was, indeed, directed that matter. Sir, as it should ever be mentioned in Tribune. Indeed, he was, in fact, the only person who, at the time when the market began, and watching the quotations as closely as a Wall street broker. Then they would run off to give their orders. There has been a suspicion, too, that bills have been introduced to bull or bear the market, and it used to be quite a sight on bull day to see the rush of the speculative members to the telegraph office to buy or sell on the strength of a bill. Two years ago there was a postal telegraph bill put in one morning, which explained to the New York brokers why they had received so many orders two hours before to sell Western Union. Now, I know any bill Congressmen are getting very shy of Wall street. Too many of them have been badly bitten, and too many have lost all faith in Wall street human nature." It is only a very unsophisticated Congressman who wastes his time and money in Wall street operations nowadays. A man is about as likely to make a fortune in that thoroughfare of robbery as he is of reducing a sixteen. The Congressman's surest road to wealth is via the appropriation bills, or the lobbies of railroad and other companies. Dana was in his prime at the time of the Tweed ring, and, I believe, he was in the habit of reducing a sixteen

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Feb. 14, 1884.

Business Announcements.

Miller & Miller, Cow Dentists. Tightening Cows' Teeth a specialty. ☞N. B. —Wanted—A smart, active boy to act in social and learn the trade. One who understands how to clean up a stable who has been troubled around the barn by a forbiss one preferred.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

200 cords of good dry birch and maple block wood for sale. Good measure guaranteed. Call at the office of

J. MILO EATON.

Pickles! Pickles! Pickles!
Onions! Onions! Onions!
Green Apples! Green Apples! Green Apples!
At Upright, Emrey & Co's.

Go to Gunson's if you want your rubber goods repaired neatly with cement, and not nailed on.

Ten pounds of Granulated Sugar for $1.00, at E. M. Clark's.

500 bushels of Oats; and 300 bushels of Potatoes wanted at Upright, Emrey & Co's

FOR SALE.—A second-hand portable saw mill, with engine and boiler complete, for sale cheap. Call soon. J. MILO EATON.

Eleven pounds C Sugar for $1.00, at E. M. Clark's.

Fog's Fat Family Oysters, at Upright, Emrey & Co's.

For Sale.—Two or three good horses for sale cheap for cash or good security. J. MILO EATON.

Clocks and Dolmans at cost, at E. M. Clark's.

Upright, Emrey & Co. received a large supply of Groceries Tuesday.

A genuine article in Butter at B. Sue's.

Who is selling Scotch Caps at 50 cents cash? E. M. Clark.

Upright, Emrey & Co. want to see you at their store.

The Temperature.

The following is a record of observations of the thermometer at the JOURNAL office, of 7 a.m. and 2 p.m. each day, for the week ending yesterday, above zero in all cases unless marked with a (*):

	7 A.M.	2 P.M.
Thursday	7	12
Friday	16	23
Saturday	11	20
Sunday	*10	15
Monday	4	16
Tuesday	14	17
Wednesday	9	15

Provision Market.

Retail prices to consumers, as corrected every Wednesday evening by UPRIGHT, EMREY & CO., general dealers.

FLOUR, per bbl, $6.00, $7.00, and $8.00.
BUCKWHEAT FLOUR, per cwt. $4.50.
CORN MEAL, per cwt, bolted 2c50; unbolted, $1.80.
HAY, per ton, $8@9.
OATS, per bu, 45c.
GROUND FEED, per cwt, $1.50.
APPLES, per bu, $1.40.
POTATOES, per bu, 45@50c.
ONIONS, per bu, $1.00.
BUTTER, per lb, 28@30c.
EGGS, per doz, 30@35c.
LARD, per lb, 14@16c.
HAMS, 16c; Shoulders, 12½c.
SALT PORK, 10c; Beef, 8c.
CHEESE, 20c.
WATER-WHITE OIL, 25c.
FARMERS' PRODUCE in good demand; oats and potatoes wanted.

Fresh Meats from the Market.

MEAT, beef steak, 20@22½c; pork steak, 8@10c; roast, 8@12½c; sausage, 12c; hams, 16c; shoulders, 12½c.
TALLOW, 6@7½c.

Local News Brevities.

More snow this week.

The business card of B. Suffield will be found in this issue.

Ask Mike Lihway how he likes a winter bath in Round Lake.

Jeff Weikle, of East Jordan, gave the JOURNAL a call on Monday.

M. J. Stockman speared five large trout in two hours last Thursday.

J. A. Cameron, of Boyne City, gave the JOURNAL a call on Wednesday.

Three dances for the benefit of Charlevoix people last Friday evening.

Mrs. C. F. Van Anken has gone to Eaton county for a brief visit with friends.

James O'Connor, of Ironton, spent Sunday in Charlevoix, the guest of Dr. Preston.

Rev. C. F. Van Anken goes to Northport to-day, to be absent about ten days.

Jeff Brown broke through the ice on Round Lake last Friday, and got wet to the waist.

The event of the season,—the "man supper" at the Bridge street house to-morrow evening.

Mr. I. A. De Lamarter, of the firm of E. T. Brown & Co., Grand Rapids, gave the JOURNAL a call last Saturday.

Tickets for the "man supper" 25 cents, for sale at the door, at the Bridge street house tomorrow evening.

Lewis Reynolds went to Detroit on Tuesday, to attend the meeting of the grand encampment, in session this week.

G. W. Crouter went to Detroit on Tuesday. He will be in attendance at the meeting of the grand lodge I. O. O. F. next week.

L. W. Shimer, now in the employ of Dexter & Noble, at Elk Rapids, has an office to take charge of a furnace in Alabama.

The party given by the T. T. F. F. club at the Bridge street house last Friday evening was a success, social ly and financially.

Rev. W. H. McCartney, of Banks, occupied the M. E. pulpit last Sunday morning and evening and the congregation were well pleased.

Last Friday while drawing a load of ties, one of Alpek Measday's horses fell down sick, but after awards recovered sufficiently to be led away.

Our Ironton correspondent calls attention to the need of more wood chippers by the iron company, in order to keep the furnace running.

Rev. G. W. Puddifoot, general missionary of the Congregational church, will preach at the school house next Sunday morning and evening.

The ladies of the M. E. church propose to have some fun. If you don't believe it go to the "man supper" at the Bridge street house to-morrow evening.

Our readers will not fail to find Geo. Miller's new card. George has inaugurated a new era in the clothing business here, and deserves the success he has.

Railroads are built where they are wanted, and the actions of the communities is all the companies have to judge from as to whether there is any desire for them.

Rev. C. F. Van Anken has closed his meetings in Fairgrove. Over fifty have made a start in religious life and work since the inauguration of the meetings.

The pastor of the M. E. church had a rest last Sunday, and his congregation and friends will find him at his post of duty and may expect a vigor ous sermon next Sunday.

The annual hand-book of the Charlevoix Summer Resort Association has been delayed somewhat, in order to give extra railroad information, but will soon be issued.—Ex.

Frank Wood announces that his barber shop will be closed on Sundays, commencing with further notice, so if you want a clean face for church you must get it Saturday night.

The Lansing pleasure association, which owns a summer resort at Harbor Point, has sold 400 feet square thereon to the government as a lighthouse site. Price $2,500, spot cash.

A fire was started under a stove in Schlanbs's store at Boyne City on Tuesday, and for a time threatened to destroy all connecting buildings but by prompt action on the part of the citizens, it was put out.

We request our correspondents not to write any offensive personals, or "insinuate so" against anyone. An indictment of good humor will hurt no one, but we shall prune everything of an offensive nature.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin will address the people of Charlevoix on the subject of temperance, on Thursday evening, Feb. 21st. Lecture to commence at 8 o'clock, in Bartholomew's opera hall. She comes highly recommended; turn out and hear her.

The committee of management of the "man supper" expect to present a tableau during the evening, entitled "mustacat." We presume there are others blue enough who do not know what sort of a show it is, but it must be a fine thing, judging from the whispernings going on.

Wm. M. Miller, Joseph Cooper, and Wm. Withers have formed a co-partnership for the purpose of erecting and operating a sawmill in Jno. Ward's neighborhood, township of Marion. The machinery was purchased of E. T. Brown & Co., of Grand Rapids, through Mr. I. A. DeLamarter, one of the firm. This firm is selling considerable new machinery in this county, and have the credit of selling first-class goods at fair prices.

The young people of Norwood had a candy pull at C. Wells, last Wednesday evening, and all seemed to enjoy themselves. Of course O. D. Hilton was there to add his share of the sport. It has been intimated that Norwood takes the lead in this class of entertainments.

Mrs. John Beattie, a former resident of Charlevoix, now in New Orleans, writes that they are doing well. Their interest in Charlevoix is such that they want a Charlevoix paper to keep them posted. They expect to visit here during the coming summer.

Last Saturday afternoon Chas. Masou cut a gash in his left leg 6½ inches long on the outside of the leg, the axe passing through the leg, splitting a piece off the bone, and making a gash three inches long on the inside of the leg. It will lay him up some time. Dr. Lewis is attending the wound, and says it is doing well for so large and ugly a gash.

There was an interesting and successful surprise party and dance at Leonard Whitmore's, last Friday evening, attended by numerous Charlevoix people. Twenty-seven couples joined the dance. The only interruption of the fun was when someone's baby exercised its lungs, and all the ladies rushed into the room where it was to see if it was their own "little darling."

"The Lansing, Alma, Mt. Pleasant & Northern railroad company was organized Tuesday evening, and the first five per cent payment of stock subscribed was made. The directors elected are: A. W. Wright, president; Wm. N. Brown, James Gargett, I. N. Shepherd, W. S. Turck, John A. Harris and Geo. D. Farton." With but little variation from a straight line this road could be made to strike Charlevoix, and pass through a large section of country not otherwise provided with a road.

H. B. Chapman, proprietor of Chapman's hotel, Bay Springs, Charlevoix county, never tires of extolling the virtues of that blessed region as a health resort. He has a location in miles up Pine lake above Charlevoix where one can look down over Charlevoix, Round lake and Pine lake, and he will give 10 acres of good land to the association that will build thereon 10 good cottages and paint them with two coats of paint. Free will baptists, congregationalists or universalists have the preference.—News.

The Charlevoix Sentinel thinks that the advent of a railroad would make that a great ice shipping point. We get the impression from Bro. Strange of the JOURNAL, that it was never cold enough up there to make ice. May be we are mistaken.—Cedar Springs Mail. You should read the JOURNAL more carefully. While it is cold enough here to make clear thick ice, we have not had such extremely cold and windy weather as some of our southern neighbors have complained of. And another thing; while several of our exchanges from southern Michigan say that sleighing is gone, our January thaw only settled the snow and made sleighing better.

In a communication to the Kalkaskian, A. G. Drake asked the following question: "Is it not time that we awoke to the necessity of making an effort to draw the attention of one of the two railroads, which are projected to Mount Pleasant, to the advantage of the country from that point through here as the most profitable route, and to Charlevoix as the most desirable lake port for a terminus?" Discussing the same subject, the editor of the Kalkaskian says: "As we cannot build a road alone, we would like to hear from other villages and sections of country through which it will pass if it decides to make Charlevoix its terminus, which it surely will, if the people along the line will do even half what they ought to do. The attention of the managers might easily be attracted if a few of the county seats and other prosperous towns which will be touched by the road would hold meetings, get up a little feeling in the matter, form estimates of what their citizens will do by way of assistance and then let them know the result. And, although the road will not be located for some time yet, the sooner they are made acquainted with the unsurpassed advantages of this route, the better will be our prospect for getting it."

The supreme court has taken the very first opportunity it had to declare the bankrupt law of 1883 unconstitutional. This law provided that securities given and conveyances made by persons who were insolvent should be void if within four months thereafter the insolvent debtor should make an assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors, or provided two of the creditors whose debts equaled $200 should petition the court and have a receiver appointed within 30 days after the securities may have been given. This decision, however, does not effect the rules governing common law assignments which have been on our statute books since the revision of 1846, but may have a bearing on some of the many assignments made recently.

"Kyles optographicon" consists of views of persons and places in different parts of Ireland and China, with a few comic pictures for variety. These pictures are made by photography, and are as nearly perfect as a picture can be made. The operator uses a Drummond light, which is excellent in power only by the electric light, and with his well constructed instruments is enabled to place the views on the canvass in a most satisfactory manner. Some of the "wandering views" are quite laughable. These entertainments are of interest and value to young people, especially to those studying the history of either of the countries named. A portion of the views were in colors, and when shown on the canvas had all the appearance and richness of the finest paintings—they were real works of art.

Most of our readers have doubtless read the story of the dog which threw himself under a moving train of cars with all the appearance of a case of suicide, because he was superseded in the affections of the family by a younger and handsomer canine, but it was left for a Charlevoix dog to attempt the most common method of suicide,—that of drowning. It seems that a family of motherless children have been living in humble quarters a little out of town, with only such care as a poor father and charitable neighbors could give them, and it having been decided to break up the family and find homes for the children among our good-hearted citizens, they were brought to the home of a prominent gentleman on the north side, to be cleaned up and dressed in a manner suitable for entrance into the new homes. Of course there was more or less grief and sorrow among the members of the family, but the saddest of all was the poor dog. He seemed to realize the full magnitude of the proceedings, and every remedy or soothing, failed to assuage the poor canine's grief. At length he took advantage of an unguarded moment of watching and ran and jumped into the well, as the surest and quickest relief from his mental anguish. Every effort was made to rescue him, until at the end of three hours, when his body was brought up, poor dog, like many a human sufferer, was glad to be restored to life and usefulnes.

East Jordan.

Our hotel registers show a large increase in transient trade.

Mr. J. C. Gleim is back from the southern part of the state.

Our new paper will probably make its appearance Thursday, Feb. 14.

Another voter for East Jordan. This time at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Ramsdell, Feb. 9th.

Stoepel & Co. have already begun to make preparations for next seasons sawing, by way of extensive repairs and improvements in their machinery and engine room.

John Chamberlain has removed to his rooms over his new store, and those vacated by him will be rearranged and occupied by the I. O. G. T's, for a lodge room.

Our town is being quite thoroughly "crammed" by traveling salesmen, from all parts of the country, who persist in saying that business will soon begin to "boom."

Regular pay day at Stoepel & Co's. last Friday. Result: a lot of happy boys,—some of them so badly affected that they could hardly walk, after being down town a little while.

The band gave a sleigh ride and dance at Boyne Falls, Tuesday evening, Feb. 5th, and judging from the reports of those in attendance, it was most enjoyable event. The weather and sleighing were both perfect. They were joined by quite a large and jolly party from Boyne City.

A first-class play is being prepared by first class amateurs of East Jordan, and will probably be put on the boards in a few weeks. Look out Do you hear anything drop!

Mr. Willer Sweet, of the firm of H. W. Sweet & Son, has returned from the southern part of the state, where he has been visiting for four or five weeks; the new Mrs. Sweet did not come with him.

The Odd Fellows are recovering rapidly from their recent loss by fire, and are already quite well established in their new hall, at the Jordan River house. They report the lodge in a very healthy condition.

The Silver family gave their usual fine concert at the Hulbert house last Wednesday evening, after which they furnished music for the Leap Year party gotten up by the ladies of East Jordan, making the whole a grand success.

Before Justice Stone, Feb 9th, Alfred G. Little vs. William S. Hillier, assault and battery, resulted in a judgment of five dollars and costs for the plaintiff. The case was ably tried by Fogg & Aldrich for the plaintiff and Norton & Kent for the defendant. A lively interest in the case was manifested by the people living in the vicinity where the affray took place.

F. B.

South Arm.

The Echo school has again commenced.

The bankrupt sale at Munroe's draws crowds of customers.

Thermometer registered 58° below zero on Thursday morning.

Mrs. Blake was seriously ill on Saturday last, but is getting better.

Alfred Wilson, of Echo, boasts of a young son and Will Lanway a daughter.

Rev. R. Tyndall still continues the religious work at Echo with some success.

James A. Kent, Esq., school inspector has been visiting the schools in the township recently.

John Gillispie's sale was a success. About 100 persons were present. He intends starting for Canada soon, for a short visit.

The prayer meetings in the Nicky district are not very well attended for some reason. The innocent(?) amusement of "tripping the light fantastic toe" interferes with religious efforts.

A donation was held in Hipp's district for Elder May, on Friday night. Rev. P. Blake preached two funeral sermons last week, besides preaching at the Intermediate school house on Saturday evening.

Two gentlemen from Charlevoix came up to South Arm recently, noting calls at Ironton, Thorp's Mill, etc. Mr. Editor, please do not "give it away," as the storm at home might be fiercer than these worthies could bear.

The saloons on both sides of the lake seem to be in prosperous condition. Coarse language and fighting seem to be the order of things on the streets, especially on Saturday nights. An enforcement of the law would remove some of the disgrace from the villages.

F. A. N.

Ironton.

Mr. John Otis, of the Mancelona furnace, is in town.

The iron company have 25 teams constantly at work drawing wood to supply the kilns.

Henry Sheldon's mother died suddenly last week, of apoplexy, this being the third stroke.

The Ironton brewery has come to a halt, until Mr. Box's mill can saw more lumber for it.

Mr. Box has had a force of men repairing his saw mill and commenced running again Monday morning.

Mr. John Goss, a machinist of Charlevoix, has earned many commendations by a recent job of work for the iron company.

The iron company want more wood choppers. James Fried went to Cheboygan last week, and again this week, to try to engage men. Wood they must have, or business must stop.

J. J. Conner, bookkeeper and telegraph operator for the iron company, has been indisposed for the past few days, and has gone to Cheboygan for medical treatment by Dr. Preston, un der whose skillful management we shall expect a prompt recovery,—at least sufficient to "attend church Sunday evening." ANGUS.

The Liberal Club.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—On Monday evening, the 18th inst, the Liberal Club will give another of their entertainments at Bartholomew's opera house. A very interesting programe will be presented on that occasion, consisting of music, both instrumental and vocal. Prof. Ross will have charge of the musical part of the entertainment. Messrs. Wheat & Carr will be present with their violins to enliven the occasion with duets and solos. Col. O. F. Wisner has consented to be the speaker and has announced as his subject "The Persian Queen." The speaker and the subject that he has chosen guarantees an interesting and instructive discourse.

The ladies cornet band will furnish an important share of the musical feature of the programe. The club will be called to order at half past seven when the feast will commence, to which the committee cordially invites all who will come.

ROBERT MULLER,
Chairman of committee.

Feb. 11, 1884.

"We Are of the Opinion"

That it is not according to the "eternal fitness of things" that servants who brave the conglomerated elements of this clime should be treated to the contents of coal scuttles.

That the managers of the proposed Petoskey and Charlevoix, and all other telephone exchanges, public and private, should not wait four months to decide on getting out the cedars necessary for the construction of the lines.

For you see they might be

L. E. F. T. 2.

Charlevoix, Feb. 13, 1884.

Historical Society.

Notwithstanding the storm of Tuesday evening, about forty persons assembled at the parlors of Byron See and listened to the following program: Piano solo, Mrs. Loveday. Historical reading, "Marine engagements during the Revolution," E. H. Green. Vocal solo, Mrs. Mayne. After intermission a guitar solo by Al. Washburn. Reading, Mrs. Bradley. Biography and selections from Lord Bacon, by F. W. Mayne. Vocal duet, Mrs. Bradley and Al. Washburn. The next meeting of the society will be held at the parlors of John Nicholls next Tuesday evening.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by Penoyar Bros., real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Feb. 12, 1884, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Joseph C. Gleason and wife to Eugene Burdick, lot 1 of 1 South Lake, $150.

Aaron Lewis to Charles Indian, s w ¼ of s w ¼, 19-34-5, $600.

Jesse Hopkins to Henry Woodward and wife, s w ¼, 13-32-4, $800.

Edward H. Green and wife to Anson S. Bickford, s w ¼ 8-33-5, $180.

Mary McLeod et al to A. J. McLeod, part of lot 2, Charlevoix, $1000.

Adam G. Miller to Joseph J. Miller, n w ¼, 2-34-5, $600.

Anson Bos to Fred F. Hodgins, n w ¼ of s e ¼, 16-32-7, $700.

Francis Andrews Sr. and wife to Francis Andrews Jr, s e ¼, 10-33-4, $700.

Notes and News.

The Detroit Evening Journal is prospering. It has a third sole at its heels.

The Chicago Tribune defends the Morrison tariff bill as a fair, conservative measure looking toward commercial freedom, while the Times declares that it does not go far enough in that direction.

The Cincinnati Enquirer, which secured the defeat of Senator Pendleton and the election of Mr. Payne, sneers at the Morrison tariff bill as a "jumble which benefits free trade, revenue reform nor protection."

It takes money and scissors and years of hard and anxious laboring to establish a newspaper, and build them a town. The man who is willing to take advantage of these efforts without even furnishing a whisper of advance progress is a hog.—Montana Inquiry.

The protectionists at Washington are already denouncing the Morrison tariff bill and explaining how its passage will ruin all the industries of the country. But as none of the industries out below the Mason and Dixon line and as the total of production is only about that recommended by the late tariff commission—which was made up wholly of dyed-in-the-wool protectionists—the Democrats thinking on the part of these protection gentlemen seems to be without any particular justification. They ought to rather congratulate themselves, for it is probably only because of the hopeless prospect of getting any more thorough reform bill through the republican senate and safely past the presidential veto that has caused Mr. Morrison to let go his bill so easily. The Morrison bill does not go quite so far in the reduction of duties as the Democratic bill hoped, but it is a step in the right direction, and, if the bill passes the house by a proportionally unanimous democratic vote will set the party squarely facing toward that commercial freedom which most because the policy of the country before its industries and trade, both domestic and foreign, can be placed on a permanently prosperous basis.—G. R. Democrat.

The proposition to give a clerk to each member of congress not a chairman of committee, who stripped naked of the emoluments by which it is surrounded, merely a salary of $1,000 a year to measure salaries, is a silver grab—nothing more or less. When brought said a majority were in favor of it but dared not vote for it, lest any have been right; and for might as well have charged his colleagues with being thieves, who were deterred from stealing only by fear. If the bill passed, each member would simply transfer to the government in the borders he now hears himself, of supplying some worthless son, nephew or other relative.—News.

When the Forty-ninth Congress passed the act cutting the output against the desires threatened of that the price should not be reduced, and for years an effort was made to retain, through a soulless combination, the charges which legislation had interfered with. The monopoly was successful for a time, but has now come to grief, owing to the copious supply of the drug which its increase has large for round. For years in the celebration has been followed by a drop in the wholesale price of the drug about 37½ per cent, and still further reductions are looked for. As quinine is one of the necessary drugs we add to remark that the necessities of life, and as it is every where in use as one of the most valued remedies, the future is sure to a legislation and keep up prices is a source of wide rejoicing.—Detroit Post.

Mr. Hobson, the great economist of the house, does not look for any reform that would seem to be needed. He means to abolish the salaries of lifting stenographers by the year to act as stenographers of committees. There are several of these gentlemen in the employ of the house, and they have about as soft a thing, to use a favorite phrase, as the traitor man could wish for. They hang about the capitol when congress is in session, and when a committee needs a stenographer one is assigned. The work they do is light, often a sinecure, and never continuous. When congress adjourns they go about their business, and, as their pay is $6,000 a year, drain a pension during the recess, for which they render no service whatever. It does not need the economic eye of Hobson to see that this is a source of money. The salaries of appointment at the ordinary were both fixed with stenographers of ability were scarce. That day has gone. There are hundreds of skilled shorthand writers now where there were dozens twenty years ago, and $2,000 is too much to pay any individual for a few weeks' actual service in that capacity before the congressional committees. To report the congressional proceedings requires the very highest skill, and the labor is exacting. Therefore, the salary for such stenographers is not wrong, but for the ordinary committee work the compensation is glaured. The Hobson idea is that all the committee stenographers should be abolished, and only hired at the customary rates when their service is needed. The reform is needed, and it will break up one element of nepotism and favoritism that had become so ineradicable as to be wound down.—Herald.

Charming Hospitality of the Dutch Boers.

When a traveller arrives at a Dutch farmer's, he alights from his horse, enters the house, shakes hands with the men, kisses the women and sits down without further ceremony. When the table is spread, he takes his place among the family without waiting for an invitation; this is never given, on the supposition that a traveler, in a country so thinly inhabited, must always have an appetite for some thing. Accordingly, "What will you make me eat?" is generally the first question. If there is a bed in the house, it is given to the stranger. If none, which is frequent by the case among the graziers of Great Bryuel, he must take his chance for a form, or bench, or a heap of sheep skins, among the rest of the family. In the morning, after a solid breakfast, he takes his leave, or plays of lonely, or away," as the storm at home might be fiercer than these worthies could bear.

The Rattlesnake.

In favorable localities rattlesnakes swarm in amazing plenty, and the stories to be heard in every State of Jersey, where they write in countless numbers and dreadful intimacy, have some foundation. De Kay cites an instance where two men, in Warren County, N. Y., about 1840, slaughtered 1,100 rattlesnakes in three days on the eastern side of Tongue Mountain. In 1877 a farmer killed seventy-six in an open space in a cranberry marsh of Crawford County, Ohio, where are still hatched many serpents disappearing elsewhere. Some swamps and cranberries in the far south swarm with the dreaded cottonmouth and local species occur in thousands on parts of the plains and Rocky Mountains, particularly in the lofty craters or warm springs, in Utah. But perhaps the most approach to the "den of the asp" in sensational pictures is an island in Pyramid lake, Nevada, where, during the warm months "it is absolutely dangerous to walk about those parts of the island where they are not noticed."

This animal is easily killed or disabled, however, and has its, in an its placable enemy, not only directly but in many indirect ways, yet there are few localities favorable to him where he has been exterminated. You can find rattlesnakes in plenty, for example, within five miles of the center of New Haven. It is doubtful if any of the several species will ever suffer extinction.

Scales being undistensible and never falling out to be replaced, like hair and feathers (with which they have no homology), serpents get room for growth and renew their coats periodically by sloughing off the entire skin, underneath which a new external skin has formed and separated itself from the now faded and husky outcrop. This process occurs during August in the adult, two or three changes happening in a single summer with youngsters, who outgrow their vestments very speedily. It is a popular idea that this midsummer sloughing occupies a considerable period, during which the serpents are harmless, because blind. It is quite supposable that this might be so, since the outer layer of the corneas of the eye peels off with the slough, and during a few preceding days the eye has a dull and filmy appearance. But captive snakes, given native mice at this time, attack them without hesitation or mistaking. After the moult the eyes gleam bright and cold like a jewel, but with a sullen, ferocious and relentless expression, for it is overhung by the bony penthouse of the brow, giving superportable beauty that give a fulcrum for the powerful muscles of the jaws. This cruel eye and its fixed stare introduces the same vexing question of fascination; but before discussing it, some account of the food and feeding habits of our subject will be well.

The disposition of the whole family is sluggish and opposed to any active movement and even in taking its prey, beyond the one lighting swift blow that matches it down—so startling a contrast to the ordinary lethargy! The successes, to be sure, is somewhat an exception, since he is a good swimmer and chases in their element frogs, water snakes, tadpoles, and the less agile fishes, like the catfish.

The most rapid exertions of rattlesnakes are aroused in fleeing from danger, yet, when doing their best on open ground, their pace can easily be equaled by a child, without running, as I have seen on the plains, so that a blacksnake or a Estimate. Did not only overtake and circle round and round them. Their plan in fleeing, then, is not to pursue their prey, but to lie in wait for it and strike before their presence is suspected. Protected by his color, a lizard accumulate him to the haunts he most frequents, whether woods or rocks, as in the eastern crotaly, or the barren uplands chosen by the far western species; the scaled moccasin threaded by the dark-skinned massasauga; the lush meadows where the copperhead lurks, the stream-bank or river-ridge where the cottonmouth plunges into the water, or the yellow weeds under whose mottled coldness the little ground rattlers lie coil. Unlike—hidden, and motionless for hours together in one or another of these courts, the crotalus calls in patient vigilance. "Though aware of the passenger's presence, he either lies quiet or glides away to a more retired spot." Its course is that of the darkey who was urged to follow one into the thicket and kill it: "Massa, I neber bodders muffin' wot don't bother me; I makes it a rule." Here again, nevertheless, an exception must be noted for the copperhead, and more especially for the cottonmouth, vicious reptiles, taking little provocation before inflicting their deadly wound. Holbrook says the moccasin attacks everything that comes within its reach, erecting its head and opening its mouth for some seconds before it bites." All other snakes put in a range with it show the keenest terror. Its species of crotalus, however, will follow the object of its rage as do some of the most venomous serpents

Such are facts respecting the food-habits of the rattlesnake, while those of other serpents would furnish as quality, provide explanation; yet, the idea that the small, beast-like eyes, and tongue darting forked flame from black, eye, exerted a charm or fascination upon smaller animals, luring them within reach of the fatal stroke, is as old as the fabled basilisk—older, indeed, or to it, no doubt, the very lineage of the asiliak owes its origin. Traveling eastward, it came to America with the first backwoodsmen, and was at once attached to our subject and to the black snake. "Birds have been seen to drop into its mouth," wrote Pennant; "squirrels descend from their trees, and reptiles run into its jaws. Terror and amazement seem to lay hold on those the animals," etc., etc. "All agree," says old Cassedy, of South Carolina, who confesses he never witnessed the phenomenon of fascination for himself "all agree in the manner of the process, which is that the animals, particularly birds and squirrels, incessantly snake than they skip from spray to spray, overtop and approaching gradually nearer the enemy, regardless of any fear danger, but with distracted gestures and outcries, descend though from the tops of the loftiest trees, to the mouth of the snake who opens his jaw takes them in, and instantly swallows them."—Ernest Ingersoll, in The Magazine.

PERHAPS the deepest coal-mine on this continent is at Pottsville, Pa. The shaft is 1,976 feet deep—nearly a third of a mile. Every day during the busy season 200 cars, containing four tons each, are sent from below to the upper world, the time of each trip being a little over a minute.

HOMEOPATHIC PHARMACY.

B. SUFFIELD, Homeopathic Medicines, Books, Domestic Cases, etc., Charlevoix, Mich.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan: The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. Archibald Buttars, Adelbert E. Wright, and Ingersoll Buttars, plaintiffs, vs. John Munro and James Matthews, defendants. Notice is hereby given that on the 26th day of November, A. D. 1883, a writ of attachment issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, at the suit of Archibald Buttars, Adelbert E. Wright, and Ingersoll Buttars, the above named plaintiffs, who are doing business in the village of Charlevoix, under the firm of Buttars & Buttars, against the goods, effects and moneys of John Munro and James Matthews, the defendants above named, for the sum of five thousand dollars, which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of January, A. D. 1884.

Dated February 4th, A. D. 1884.

CHURCHMARK & GRIER,
Attorneys for plaintiffs.

IMMENSE CUT IN PRICES

—OF—

All-Wool Goods,
Overcoats and Suitings,
Boots and Shoes.

I have a large stock of Clothing and Boots and Shoes which I shall close out at actual cost, as I wish to make room for spring goods. All my goods I will warrant

First-Class,

And will be pleased to show them to all parties whether they intend to purchase or not. Remember, I have marked these goods down at actual cost, and they are

Big Bargains.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Feb. 12, 1884.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL

A Progressive Local and Family Newspaper.

Published Every Thursday, at $1.50 a Year

GEO. W. MILLER,

Buttars Block,

CHARLEVOIX.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand at his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

FARM FOR SALE.

Consisting of 160 acres, six miles from Charlevoix, on main road. Soil, clay loam. A good frame house, and two frame barn barns. About 35 acres cleared, balance good beech and maple timber. Will sell on time, or exchange for good city or village property. Inquire of the undersigned, or address, Box 1, Charlevoix, Mich.

PIMPLES.

I will mail (Free) the recipe for a simple vegetable balm that will remove tan, freckles, pimples and blotches, leaving the skin soft, clear and beautiful; also instructions for producing a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, enclosing stamp, Mrs. Helen Harris, Box 2, Charlevoix, Mich.

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at O. B. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

LIVERY.

The undersigned has purchased the livery formerly owned by him, and located

Geo. Durance, Manager.

There has been added a new stock of

Horses and Carriages

And a cordial invitation is extended to all old friends and patrons to call and see him whenever they need anything in that line.

GOOD SADDLE HORSES A SPECIALTY WITH THIS STABLE.

J. MILO EATON.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds,

Imported and Domestic Perfumery,

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Bartholomew's new

Opera Block

THE GROCER.

The grocer loved a willing girl,
As lovers are the day;
He wondered if she loved him too,
And said, "Let Song she sing?"

And straightway to her house he went,
Her mind to know,
Exclaiming, "Ah! I know full well,
That I love the girl I love."

The girl was very kind, and
Said she she very glad
To think there, fled in a remarked
What a bad Cupid had

And soon they got most intimate,
She to him also her heart,
Yet, ere to be made of marriage, said,
"Oh, do as I bear in mind."

The grocer's cheeks felt at this,
Or, like a Douglas red,
Are limited it sensible,
"Why, my dear, indeed exactly,
You ever hear, you didn't suppose
Of a Scotch man's purse
He ever in the house goes?
Or, even up the 'Sports.'"

But you know we are off near enough
To the latter son their kiss,
Add, to the grocer's great chagrin, and said,
"Why I asked you at this?"

And thus ended, to some extent,
It hardly need be said;
Nor, confusing matters then in the state,
Whether it did his head.

"Oh, father, you are crazy to Do exactly handle so?"
"Tis a sporting the land, and tells a sable—
"I think I'm Cousin so."

Even blushed when he saw
Her father, who, in fact,
Had, when the grocer's low treatment heard,
My daughter, Sam I.

"Why, keep your lover, dry your eyes,
He's here to marry me;
I'm sure I love the man, but my Father doesn't seem so."

The two were wed, and made a pair,
He was a happy bridegroom!
And happy ever after were,
For I personally reported.

THE BURGLAR'S STORY.

When I became 18 years of age my father, a distinguished begging-letter impostor, said to me: "Reginald, I think it is time that you began to think about choosing a profession."

These were ominous words. Since I left Eaton, nearly a year before, I had spent my time very pleasantly and very idly, and I was sorry to see my long holiday drawing to a close. My father had hoped to have sent me to Cambridge (Cambridge was a tradition in our family), but business had been very depressed of late, and a sentence of six months hard labor had considerably straitened my poor father's resources.

It was necessary—highly necessary—that I should choose a calling. With a sigh of resignation I admitted as much.

"If you like," said my father, "I will take you in hand and teach you my profession, and in a few years, perhaps, I may take you into partnership; but, to be candid with you, I doubt whether it is a satisfactory calling for an athletic young fellow like you."

"I don't seem to care about it particularly," said I.

"I'm glad to hear it," said my father; "it's a poor calling for a young man of spirit. Besides, you have to grow gray in the service before people will listen to you. It's all very well for a person in old age, but a young fellow is likely to make but a poor hand at it. Now, I should like to consult your own tastes on so important a matter as the choice of a profession. What do you say? The army?"

"No, I didn't care for the army."

"Forgery? The bar? Cornish wrecking?"

"Father," said I, "I should like to be a forger, but I write such an infernal hand."

"A regular Eaton hand," said he. "Not plastic enough for forgery; but you could have a writing master."

"It's as much as I can do to forge my own name. I don't believe I should ever be able to forge anybody else's."

"Anybody's else, you should say, not anybody else's. It's a dreadful bothersome Eton English."

"No, said I, "I should never make a fortune at it. As to wrecking—why, you know how seasick I am."

"You might get over that. Besides, you would deal with wrecks ashore, not wrecks at sea.

"Most of it done in small boats, I'm told. A deal of small boat work. No, I won't be a wrecker. I think I should like to be a burglar.

"Yes," said my father, considering the subject. "Yes, it's a fine, manly profession, but it's dangerous—highly dangerous."

"Just dangerous enough to be exciting, not more."

"Well," said my father, "if you've a distinct taste for burglary, I'll see what can be done."

My dear father was always prompt with pen and ink. That evening he wrote to his old friend Ferdinand Stonehegh, a burglar of the very highest professional standing, and in a week I was duly and formally articled to him, with a view to ultimate partnership.

I had to work hard under Mr. Stonehegh.

"Burglary is a jealous mistress," said he, "she will tolerate no rivals. She exacts the undivided devotion of her worshippers."

And so I found it. Every morning at 10 o'clock I had to present myself at Stonehegh's chambers in New square, Lincoln's Inn, and until 12 I assisted his clerk with the correspondence. At 12 I had to go out prospecting with Stonehegh, and from 2 to 4 I had to devote to finding out all the particulars necessary to a scientific burglar in any given house. At first I did this merely for practice, and with no view to an actual attempt. He would tell me of a house of which he knew well all the particulars and order me to ascertain all about that house and its inmates—their coming and going, the number of their servants, whether they slept in the basement or not, and other details necessary to be known before a burglary could be safely attempted. The lie would compare my information with his own facts and compliment me thereon, as I might deserve. He was a strict master, but always kind, just, and courteous, as befits a highly polished gentleman of the old school. He was one of the last men who habitually wore breeches.

After a year's probation I myself had an opportunity of showing my acquired skill, and I had the happiness to believe that I was of some little use to him. I aided him eventually in the stomach, mistaking him for the master of the house into which we were breaking. I had locked my dark lantern, and he died on the grand piano. His dying wish was that his compliments might be conveyed to me.

I now set up on my own account and engaged his poor old clerk, who nearly broke his heart at his late master's decease. Stonehegh left no family. His business—about £12,000, invested for the most part in American railways—he left to the Society for Providing Microbiologic, and his lectures, diaries, memoranda, and papers generally he bequeathed to me.

As the clerk is required furnishing I set my time in commencing my professional office. I looked through the books for available house to begin upon, and found the following attractive entry:—

Thursday.—Game—No. 102.

House—Belgrave.

Occupants—John Lacey, bachelor.

Occupation—Gentleman's gentleman.

Agency—Mr. Jeremiah Jones.

Physical Peculiarities.—Very feeble; excessively timid; extremely nervous.

Servants—Two house-maids, one cook, Jem—Attempt.

Particulars of servants—Pretty be-ooman called Bertie Jewers. Jem is a strapping fellow, get her boy at parlor, answers. Fully mentioned in Bertie's Journal, Jem's, open to attentions; answers. Elderly cook; Friend to Bertie, open to attentions; answers.

Fastenings—Chubb's lock on street door, chain, and bolts. Bars to all basement windows. Practicable approach from third room, garden, back, which is shuttered and barred, but the bar has no catch and can be unhooked from outside.

Valuable contents of house—Presentation plate from grateful tenantry, Cellar well stocked. Melancholy evidence—Two diamond rings, complete edition of "Lothair" bound in morocco, and one watch, copper deep gold.

General—Mr. Davis always leaves the front servants on third floor. Bertie goes to bed at 10. No one on premises at nights with bowlers; otherwise exercises house, too gorgeous.

This seemed to me to be a capital house to try single-handed. At 12 o'clock that very night I pocketed two crowbars, a bunch of skeleton keys, a centre-bit, a dark lantern, a boy of silent matches, some putty, a life-preserver and a knife, and set off at cover for Thurloe Square. I remember that it snowed heavily. There was at least a foot of snow on the ground, and there was more to come. I (or Stonehegh) particulars were exact in every detail. I got into the third room on the ground, floor without the least difficulty and made my way into the dining-room. There was big presentation plate, sure enough—almost 800 ounces, as I reckoned. I collected this and tied it up in a table-cloth. I took off my coat and threw it to him (Stonehegh, never the fool).

"Bertie," said he.

I threw the waistcoat to him.

"Bertie," said he.

"Here, sir, here," said he.

"Come, come! Bertie, I'm surprised I bring. The idea of your being out of the room! Bertie, I'm ashamed of you. With all his accuracy, the old gentleman was a man of his word. He had the Bertie, and, if there any receiver, such happened to be, he never thought of it.

"Now the seal to your answer."

I threw him the seal of my drapery. He tied up the plate in the table-cloth, and, telling me that he would be back in a few minutes, made for the door with the bundle under his arm.

"Bertie," said I. "What is to become of me?"

"Really, I hardly know," said he. "You had better wait for my return, I suppose."

"Certainly," said I.

"Well, I shan't be long. I'm in a hurry to-night, and I'll leave you in the care of the house. Bertie, I'm Protestant, turned toward the door.

"Bertie," said he, stopping frantic of facts to get away, "The Professor shot a burglar last night."

"Indeed!" said I, with a sinking heart. "Where?"

"In the house examined from side to side, and the cracker again let the fellow go. Bertie, I'm in a hurry, and I'm going to 'show him.' After having taken off their coats and vests, the wood was prized off the door, and, in a few minutes, there we were standing, each with a dark lantern in the central hall, at the end of which time the long legs of Hagerson, the Professor's assistant, who I chose as my companion, for reasons which will be hereafter explained, crouched in a handsome, elegant, and he not land me to take five to ten in one of the drawing-rooms, and, indeed, the idea of my prospects for recovery were not very flattering. I raised myself on my handkerchief

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

The Veteran, published at Lansing is the only official organ of the G. A. R. order in the state, and it a good one too.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of Catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by dr. Crouter.

It is reported that Cadillac is recovering from her unfortunate financial difficulties, and times in that city are becoming much improved.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parsons's Condition Powders unequalled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co. 8-80

The only possible way to revive American commerce is to permit Americans to buy their ships where they please.—New York Times.

TOOTHACHE.—Money is a great cure for aching hearts, but a twenty dollar gold piece placed on an aching tooth don't seem to have the desired effect. In fact, nothing is sure but Hamilton's Toothache Drops, which are warranted to cure in one minute. Price only 25 cents. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

Mr. Morrison accordingly steps squarely upon Mr. Morrill's platform of 1861, and compels extremities either to admit that his measure is tolerable, or else that the industries of the country are more in need of protection to-day than they were twenty three years ago. The dilemma is obvious. —St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Beware! Coughs, colds, and slight Throat Diseases often develop into Bronchitis, Seated Cough, Consumption, etc., and should have immediate attention and be removed in the first stages. Not only public speakers, but all, are liable to throat troubles, and to obtain relief should use Hamilton's Cough Troches, which relieve Coughs and Hoarseness, making the articulation clear. Warranted to give satisfaction Price 25c per box. Sold O. R. Weed & Co.

Mr. Hawley offered a resolution, which was agreed to, directing the committee on public printing to inquire into the economy and feasibility of the publication of an official gazette of the United States, to contain the advertisements or proposals for contracts—the general orders of heads of executive departments, the more important appointments, and such other subjects as are now published by government advertisements and in special official sheets.

When a cure is guaranteed why will you refuse to be relieved of that cough which is liable to become seated on your lungs and to cause you many a suffering day and sleepless night? Your children are liable to be taken with Croup and die before a doctor can be summoned. Be wise and obtain a remedy that will not fail to give relief from Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Croup, and all other lung difficulties. Hamilton's Cough Balsam will do all this and even but a trifle. Price 25 and 50 cents a bottle. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

For a great many years sugar has been protected by a considerable duty, yet its production in the United States has decreased. Of late years Louisiana has averaged a crop of only about 550,000,000 pounds yearly, while thirty years ago it reached over 307,000,000 pounds. The fact indicates that it is one of those articles so poorly adapted for production in this country, as compared with others, that protection can do little for it.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

The Cincinnati Enquirer makes light of the Chicago Herald's demand that a senatorial committee shall be sent to Ohio to investigate the lawlessness everywhere rampant in the state, but The Herald rests its case on the telegraphic dispatches. Murders, lynchings, threats by masked bands, terrorism, assaults, and whippings make up the record. There has been nothing in Virginia to equal it since the retreat of Lee from Petersburg. Mr. Arthur should see to it that that state be given a republican form of government.

Rules of the School.

There have been numerous complaints concerning the goverment of the school, and for the benefit of those who do not know the rules now in force, we give them a place this week:

Section 1. No pupil shall be admitted to any department of the School until five years of age. Pupils are required to commence attendance promptly at the beginning of each term, to be regular and punctual, to conform to the regulations, and to yield prompt obedience to all directions of teachers.

Sec. 2. Each pupil shall be required to pursue at least three of the regular studies, and no pupil shall take extra studies or discontinue any in which he is engaged, without special permission from the Principal.

Sec. 3. Any pupil who is habitually tardy, or truant, or guilty of open disobedience or insubordination, or who indulges in the use of profane or improper language, or makes use of tobacco in any form during school hours, or whose general conduct is injurious, may be suspended by the Principal, and readmitted only by permission of the Board.

Sec. 4. Any pupil who shall injure or deface any school property, shall pay all damages or be suspended, and readmitted only by permission of the Board.

Sec. 5. Every pupil who shall be absent in the Grammar and Intermediate Departments four half days, and in the Primary Department six half days in four consecutive weeks without satisfactory excuses from the parent or guardian, either in person or by letter, that the absences were caused by sickness of the pupil or in the pupil's family, shall forfeit his or her seat in the school, and the teacher shall immediately notify the parent and the Principal that the pupil is suspended. Pupils thus suspended shall not be restored unless the parent or guardian shall give to the Principal satisfactory assurance that the pupil's attendance in the future shall be regular and punctual.

In application of this rule, two tardinesses, two dismissals, or leaving school without permission during school hours, shall be regarded equivalent to one absence.

Absence or dismissal for religious instruction, or during days held sacred by parents, shall be exempt from the above discipline at the written request of the spiritual adviser of the family, sent to the Principal.

Sec. 6. Concerted absence or truancy from school, or from any regular exercise, may be punished by suspension at the discretion of the Principal.

Sec. 7. Each pupil must be supplied with books, slate, and other utensils required by the class of which he is a member, and no pupil without such necessary supplies shall retain connection with any grade after reasonable notice by the teacher. Indigent pupils in cases of necessity, may be provided for by application to the Board.

Sec. 8. Each class shall have its regular course of study for each term, as prescribed by the Board, which each member shall be required to pursue; the Principal may, in case of necessity, on application of parent or guardian, excuse a pupil for a time from a study or studies; all the studies of a course, however, must be completed before graduation.

Sec. 9. All non resident pupils shall pay tuition at the rate of $5.00 per term, in advance, and no non-resident pupil shall be received by the teacher, except on presentation of receipt for tuition for ensuing term.

Morrison's Entering Wedge.

There are a good many people who will not be satisfied with the Morrison tariff bill. It will not please the extreme free traders. It will not be even a sop to the large and voluminous class of admirers and students who have exposed the glaring inequalities of the present tariff act, for it retains most of them. It will not suit the protectionists, who look upon any reduction of duty monopoly taxes as paid them as ruinous, and who would oppose the slightest interference with their tariff enriched interests as strenuously as they would a proposition to wipe out the entire impositions system. It will satisfy the country of one thing, however. Its presentation and consistent advocacy on the floor of the house will be an emphatic notice that the intelligent and progressive element in the democratic party is determined that taxes shall come down; that the government shall not take from the people annually millions of money for which it has no legitimate use; that the monstrous wrong of imposing burdens on one class and another and much less numerous class may be pampered into wealth shall be done away with, and that as speedily as possible the laws which have destroyed our merchant marine, fostered monopolies, and impoverished millions shall be repealed. Doubtless Mr. Morrison's only object at this time is to give the country an earnest of what he and many others of like reasoning among the leaders of his party would do if they had the power.

It would be a mere waste of time and labor with congress as at present constituted to propose a bill which would correct all the evils of the existing tariff laws. Their name is legion. Such a measure might not pass the house. It certainly would fail in the senate. The bill prepared by Mr. Morrison, proposing a horizontal reduction of 20 per cent in the duties levied, will be opposed with as much vigor as a more elaborate one would be. It may pass the house, but it can go no further, for it will be confronted by a senate and a president committed to the maintenance of war taxes. Having run its course it may be dropped, but the issue which it will have created will live. That is the object of the present bill, and as such it will be accepted by tariff reformers everywhere as the entering wedge which in time must rend asunder the system of deception and wrong known as protection. It makes the issue plain and forcible. It is a stop, albeit a short one, in the direction of right. It recognizes the necessity of action to the end that the people may be relieved of taxes which they have long borne uncomplainingly and for the levying of which there is now no further need, and in the most expeditious manner possible it provides for their reduction. It will do to begin with. The finishing touches, the lopping off of this or that overfed monopoly, may be attended to later. The discussion of this question cannot fail to be beneficial to the country. It will infuse new life in politics, send harmless demagogues to the rear, eliminate the bloody-shirt sectionalism, and raise the statesmanship of the country above the level of the Malones and Kelfoes and Eliza Pinkstons. Whether the Morrison bill meets its death in the house, in the senate, or at the hands of the president, will now make little difference. The democratic party must stand or fall by the demand that taxes shall be reduced; that they shall be so imposed as to rest equitably upon all, and that the delusive idea of a tariff for protection shall be renounced once for all.—Chicago Herald.

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

Joseph Hyland,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Heavy Sheet Iron Work of all kinds, and Repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card in effect January, 1884.

GOING NORTH.

STATIONS.	No 1	No 3	No. 5	No. 7
Cincinnati, lv.		7 00am	7 15pm
Richmond	2 50pm	10 32	11 00
Winchester	3 51	11 27	12 00
Dalgreen	4 11	11 52	12 20
Fort Wayne, ar.	4 45	12 25pm	1 00am
Fort Wayne, lv.		2 35	3 02	9 17
Kendallville		3 05	3 32	9 47
Wolcott		3 41	4 08	10 23
Vicksburg		3 51	4 18	10 33
Kalamazoo, lv.		6 32	6 55	12 05pm
Kalamazoo, lv.		7 00	7 15	12 35
G R Rapids, ar.		9 02	8 32	3 57
G R Rapids, lv.	7 15am		10 05	5 05
G H & M cross.	7 50		10 05	5 05
Howard City	8 41		11 00	6 22
Big Rapids	9 43		12 10pm	7 27
Reed City	10 45		1 17	8 15
Cadillac, ar.	11 25		2 00	9 00
Cadillac, lv.			2 30	9 50
Traverse City, ar			5 35
Kalkaska, lv.			4 17	12 00am
Grayling			4 47	12 35
Roscommon			5 07	1 00
Houghton Lake			6 24	3 14
Harrison			7 15	4 30
Marlcloud City			8 00	5 00
Mackinaw			9 00	6 00
Cheboygan			7 00am	5 00pm
Negaunee, ar.			9 12	7 08

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No. 2	No. 4	No. 6	No. 8
Negaunee, lv.			5 15pm	7 30am
Marquette			6 00	8 20
St. Ignace			8 40am	6 15pm
Mackinaw City			9 00	6 30
Harbor Springs			10 00	7 30
Petoskey			10 40	8 10
Boyne Falls			11 18	12 27am
Mancelona			11 39	1 11
Kalkaska			11 55	1 30
Traverse City, lv			4 15am
Cadillac, ar.			7 00	5 20
Cadillac, lv.		3 30pm	11 25	5 50
Reed City		4 32	12 22pm	7 16
Big Rapids		5 12	1 01	7 50
Howard City		6 08	2 05	8 47
G H & M cross		7 25	3 48	10 05
G R Rapids, ar.		7 40	4 00	10 20
G R Rapids, lv.	6 30am		6 00	12 30pm
Kalamazoo, ar.	8 32		8 02	2 34
Kalamazoo, lv.	9 07		8 32	3 30
Vicksburg	9 22		8 52	3 52
Scotts	10 01		9 16	4 32
Kendallville	11 16		10 32	6 42
Fort Wayne, ar.	12 02pm		11 20
Fort Wayne, lv.	12 05	5 30am	12 00am
Dalgreen	1 32	7 16	1 23
Winchester	1 58	8 16	2 35
Richmond, ar.	2 22	8 45	3 05
Cincinnati, ar.	7 40pm	12 50pm	7 20am

C. L. LOCKWOOD, Asst. G. T. Agt., Grand Rapids, Mich.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from NERVOUS DEBILITY, PREMATURE DECAY, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will for the sake of suffering humanity, send free to all who need it, the recipe and direction for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Address, JOHN B. OGDEN, 42 Cedar St., New York, N. Y.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

AT COST!

All kinds of

Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Ever brought to Charlevoix.

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.

They have no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY.

And Satisfaction Guaranteed.

L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House

CHARLEVOIX

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS.

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 32. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1884. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

is published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

Office over T. H. Stubbs's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

SHURTLEFF, BANK & CRIER, Attorneys at Law. Office in Bohlers' Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

A. S. SHURTLEFF, BANK. J. CRIER.

FOSKETT & ALDRICH, Attorneys at Law, East Jordan, Mich. 22

FRED W. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor. Real Estate business promptly attended to. MONEY TO LOAN.

H. A. JEREDY, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

J. M. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

NORTON & KEAT, Attorneys at Law. Office opposite U. S. Hotel, Boyne, Mich.

OSCAR F. WISNER, Attorney and Solicitor, and U. S. Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX.—Capital $50,000. Savings department. Deposits secured by pledge of government bonds, real estate mortgages, and other securities worth double the amount deposited. Loans on first mortgages. Foreign and domestic exchange. REYNOLDS & BROWN.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. in the church hall. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7, in the school house.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer and praise meeting Thursday evening at 7.

J. T. HOBBS, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOOK AND READY FIRE COMPANY meet the first and third Thursday evenings of each month, at the town hall.

E. F. BISSET, Secretary.

HOMEOPATHIC PHARMACY.

B. SUFFIELD, Homeopathic Medicines, Books, Pocket Cases, etc., Charlevoix, Mich.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

J. A. CARLSTEDT, M. D., Office at the Ingleside.

L. LEWIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office in the Ingleside, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. W. PRESTON, M. D., Surgeon and Homeopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich. 19-

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HORACE S. HARSHA, Notary Public, Real Estate, Loan, and Insurance Agt., Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

G. A. R. Baxter Post No. 113, meets second Monday in each month, at Odd Fellows Hall.

I. O. O. F.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 327, meets every Friday evening, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Round Lake Lodge No. 203, meets every Wednesday evening, in their hall.

I. O. G. T.—True Blues No. 157, meet Saturday evenings at Good Templars' hall.

MASONIC.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 292, meets Tuesday on or before full moon. Hall over postoffice.

A. BUTTARS, President. A. R. URQUHART, Vice President.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

A general banking business transacted. Money loans on approved paper at reasonable rates. Deposits received. Collections given early attention and remittances made promptly.

G. S. THOMAS, Cashier.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Prices reasonable. W. S. JOHNSON,

Opp. Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations excellent. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only simple room in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, - Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public. Best accommodations for the Pelosky and Elk Rapids stages.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

House thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY

Has purchased the

Ladies' and Children's

Furnishing Goods,

Lately owned by Fisher & Lawood, and will be pleased to retain all the old customers, and gain as many new ones as possible. Call and see my stock and prices.

1873 DR. G. W. CROUTER, 1884

THE DRUGGIST.

Our Motto: P. P.

PURITY, POLITENESS.

WE MAKE IT A POINT TO SELL ONLY

Full Strength & Fresh Goods

OUR PRICES WILL ALWAYS BE AS LOW AS

STRICTLY PURE DRUGS

CAN BE SOLD.

Our Stock is the Largest in the County.

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

at his store near the bridge.

All kinds of fruit and vegetables in their season. Nuts, candies, pop, ginger ale, etc., always on hand. Call and see me. West side Bridge St.

C. R. BELLINGER

carries the largest and finest stock of

JEWELRY,

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Optical Goods in Charlevoix county. Agent for the celebrated ROCKFORD WATCH, the best time-keeper sold for the money. Watches and Clocks warranted for six months are subject to sale for changes.

O. W. SMITH,

ELECTRO-PLATER,

Manufacturing Jeweler and Lapidist.

Electro-plating in Gold and Silver. Any article of jewelry made to order. AGATES AND JASPERS cut to order.

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card in effect January, 1884.

GOING NORTH.

STATIONS.	N - 1	No. 3	No. 5	No. 7
Cincinnati, lv		7 00am	7 15pm
Richmond	2 50pm	10 32	11 00
Winchester	3 51	11 27	12 00
Dalgreen	4 11	11 52	12 20
Fort Wayne, ar.	4 45	12 25pm	1 00am
Fort Wayne, lv.		2 35	3 02	8 05am
Kendallville		3 05	3 32	8 17
Wolcott		3 41	4 08	8 53
Vicksburg		3 51	4 18	9 03
Kalamazoo, lv.		6 32	6 55	12 05pm
Kalamazoo, lv.		7 00	7 15	12 35
G R Rapids, ar.		9 02	8 32	3 57
G R Rapids, lv.	7 15am		10 05	5 05
G H & M cross.	7 50		10 05	5 05
Howard City	8 41		11 00	6 22
Big Rapids	9 43		12 10pm	7 27
Reed City	10 45		1 17	8 15
Cadillac, ar.	11 25		2 00	9 00
Cadillac, lv.			2 30	9 50
Traverse City, ar			5 35
Kalkaska, lv.			4 17	12 00am
Grayling			4 47	12 35
Roscommon			5 07	1 00
Houghton Lake			6 24	3 14
Harrison			7 15	4 30
Marlcloud City			8 00	5 00
Mackinaw			9 00	6 00
Cheboygan			7 00am	5 00pm
Negaunee, ar.			9 12	7 08

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No. 2	No. 4	No. 6	No. 8
Negaunee, lv.			5 15pm	7 30am
Marquette			9 00	8 20
St. Ignace			8 40am	6 15pm
Mackinaw City			9 00	6 30
Harbor Springs			10 00	7 30
Petoskey			10 40	8 10
Boyne Falls			11 18	12 27am
Mancelona			11 39	1 11
Kalkaska			11 55	1 30
Traverse City, lv			4 15am
Cadillac, ar.			7 00	5 20
Cadillac, lv.		3 30pm	11 25	5 50
Reed City		4 32	12 22pm	7 16
Big Rapids		5 12	1 01	7 50
Howard City		6 08	2 05	8 47
G H & M cross		7 25	3 48	10 05
G R Rapids, ar.		7 40	4 00	10 20
G R Rapids, lv.	6 30am		6 00	12 30pm
Kalamazoo, ar.	8 32		8 02	2 34
Kalamazoo, lv.	9 07		8 32	3 30
Vicksburg	9 22		8 52	3 52
Scotts	10 01		9 16	4 32
Kendallville	11 16		10 32	6 42
Fort Wayne, ar.	12 02pm		11 20
Fort Wayne, lv.	12 05	5 30am	12 00am
Dalgreen	1 32	7 16	1 23
Winchester	1 58	8 16	2 35
Richmond, ar.	2 22	8 45	3 05
Cincinnati, ar.	7 40pm	12 50pm	7 20am

C. L. LOCKWOOD, Asst. G. T. Agt., Grand Rapids, Mich.

HALL'S

Catarrh Cure

is Recommended by Physicians!

$100 REWARD FOR A CASE IT FAILS TO CURE!

We manufacture and sell it with positive guarantee that it will cure any Case, and we will refund the money if it fails in a single instance.

HALL'S CATARRH CURE is a local remedy, acting upon the blood. If you are troubled with this distressing disease, ask your Druggist for it, and accept no imitation or substitute. If he has not got it, send to us and we will forward immediately, on receipt of price, one bottle.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

DR. CROUTER, Agt., Charlevoix. 26

Bay note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at O. R. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

the splendid intellectual powers, the fierce defiance of public sentiments, if against him, are fresh in the country's recollection. His sympathies with humanity were unbounded. his hatred of oppression in all its forms, and of shams in all their phases intense, his grasp of the future possibilities of American civilization far-reaching, and the world, in spite of any mistakes that he may have made was the better for his living.

In personal appearance Mr. Phillips was a man of fine and commanding presence. He was one of the most complete and polished orators on the American platform. Although the associate of the cultured and aristocratic, he was a man of the simplest habits and the least ostentation. He lived for forty years in a modest two-story brick house built by himself in Boston and which he rented most unwillingly in 1882, the property having been "condemned" for street improvement. In the death of Mr. Phillips the little band of surviving original abolitionists loses its most heroic and striking figure. Doctor Furness and Robert Purvey, of Washington and the veteran poet Whittier of Massachusetts, and a few others of less note still survive to mourn the death of their silver-tongued leader, but the ranks of the heroic men and women who faced obloquy and persecution for the sake of the friendless black man are growing thinner each year.

WENDELL PHILLIPS,

THE GREAT AGITATOR AND REFORMER.

With the death of Wendell Phillips, the last of the great pioneers and original apostles of abolitionism in the United States is gathered to his reward. He was born in Boston on the 29th of November, 1811. At the age of nineteen he graduated from Harvard College, began at once the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in 1834.

His sympathies were strongly aroused by the persecution of the early abolitionists, more particularly during the Boston mob in October, 1835, when Garrison, the leader of the abolitionists narrowly escaped with his life. The following year Phillips gave up the practice of law because he was unwilling to set under an oath of allegiance to the Constitution of the United States, and publicly joined the abolitionists. In 1865 he succeeded William Lloyd Garrison as president of the anti-slavery society, which position he held until the dissolution of the organization in 1870.

In his time Wendell Phillips espoused many causes, such as prohibition, abolition of interest on money, communism, agraginanism, greenback fiat money, the election of Gen. Butler to the presidency, woman's rights, the abolition of government and all penal laws, the restriction of ruffians and criminals by the power of love only, the abolition of slavery and of the American constitution as "a covenant with death and a league with hell." He opposed bitterly the formation of the anti-slavery political party. He was candidate for governor of Massachusetts at one time but he received only a small vote. During the war he dropped all his views of no government and non-political action against slavery, and became an advocate of the most extreme measures for its suppression. Thus twenty-five of the best years of his life devoted to the agitation of an anti-slavery sentiment, culminated in success with the issue of the emancipation proclamation and amidst a mighty shock of arms.

With the extinguishment of slavery the activities of Mr. Phillips' mind sought new directions, and whatever subject he discussed, the magnetic eloquence, the never-failing courage, his reform civil service ideas by reason of his failure to be returned to the senate. He has just introduced a bill proposing such an amendment of the constitution of the United States as will provide for the election by the people of postmasters, marshals and district attorneys, thus abridging the president's appointing power and removing the possibility of using this vast patronage for political prestige. Mr. Pendleton has confidence that the resolution will yet become a law, but I have not found a single senator who would vote for its passage. The senator, in speaking of his late contest with Payne in Ohio, says that his party will suffer more than himself individually because the action was virtually an endorsement by the Ohio democracy of the spoils system that the democracy at large will not endorse. When asked what he thought of Payne as a presidential candidate he replied with a laugh: "Should Mr. Payne be nominated the democratic party would suffer the greatest defeat in all its history." But there is not the remotest danger of his selection."

"HIS EXCELLENCY."

Considerable discussion has existed in official circles here as to the proper manner of addressing a communication to the president. Thinking to enlighten the general public on this point of etiquette I looked over the records of the first congress and found that one of the first subjects it took up was, "what style in titles it will be proper to annex to the office of the president of the United States." It was referred to a joint committee who reported in favor of addressing the president as "his excellency," but this was rejected in the senate. A conference committee then reported in favor of "His Highness, the president of the United States of America, and protector of their liberties." This smacked to much of autocracy, and a resolution in favor of the plain address: "To the president of the United States," was adopted, and that remains in force. There is therefore no legal authority for the custom often indulged in of addressing the president as "his excellency."

FRED. DOUGLASS AND HIS BRIDE.

There are quiet rumors flying around in the city that Fred Douglass is having an unpleasant honeymoon. Mr. Douglass is the father of a daughter but a few years the junior of his new wife, and it is said the daughter will not be reconciled in having a white step mother. Miss Douglass is employed in her father's office, Mr. Douglass being recorder of deeds for Washington. What termination the affair will have it is hard to tell.

SENSATION IN REAL ESTATE CIRCLES.

Hon. Lorin Blodget of Philadelphia made things lively among real estate owners in this city last Tuesday by filing a suit for possession of nearly the whole of the northern portion of Washington. Mr. Blodget is the trustee of the late Samuel Blodget, of this city, who came here from Boston, where he was an East India merchant in 1791, and paid $200,000 in solid silver for about five hundred acres of land known as the "Jamaica" tract, the greater portion of which was and now is included within the limits of the city of Washington. There are over seventy-five blocks or squares of private residences now on this tract for which possession is sought. The ground was given to our government in trust, the conditions being that it should be devoted to the purpose of founding a capitol city before 1810. The violation of this condition is the ground of suit, and among the defendants are General Grant, W. W. Corcoran, Senator Don Cameron, ex-Postmaster General Creswell and many other prominent and wealthy men who own expensive residences and rental property on the disputed tract. The case will be hotly contested, but Mr. Corcoran laughs at the whole affair and calls it a "blackmail scheme."

A FLUTTER AMONG THE MORMONS.

Private advices received here from Utah state that Senator Edmund's bill for the suppression of polygamy reported the other day by Mr. Hoar from his committee and recommended to be passed by the senate, has caused great excitement in Salt Lake City. If enacted in its present force and sternly enforced, it is hard to see how the evil of polygamy can longer exist. The provisions of the bill are so many and lengthy that I can not include its scope in a miscellaneous letter, but should it pass will send you for publication its full text.

THE GOVERNOR OF UTAH.

Eli Murray, is under a hot fire from various sources charging him with dishonesty while U. S. marshall of Kentucky. These charges, it is claimed are resurrected at the present time by polygamous influences in order to secure Murray's removal as governor of Utah, or to prevent his re-appointment next June, as Gov. Murray is one of the strongest anti-polygamists in the country and has caused the mormons all the trouble he possible could in his official capacity.

PENDLETON STILL ALIVE.

Senator Pendleton has lost none of

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, — MICHIGAN.

THE committee appointed to investigate the Ischia earthquake fixes the number of persons killed at 2,313, and of the seriously wounded at 762. Seven hundred barracks of wood covered with corrugated iron, housing 9,000 persons, have been constructed by the Government provisionally. It has been decided that the most promising means of providing against the recurrence of similar catastrophes will be found in constructing all edifices, public and private, on a frame-work of stout elastic timber; and all other constructions will be prohibited.

FREDDY GERRARDT is out in the cold. He is left. After all his persistence the poor fellow deserved a better fate. He imprecates his optics as if all women are not just the same—"they'll lead a fellow on till he's made a fool of himself and then throw him overboard." He likes the reputation he has had, but cannot fling off the air of a disappointed man. But he is not heart-broken—oh, no! He will shake himself together again after a while. As for Mrs. Langtry, she laughs merrily and plays her play, and affirms that she has never been in Teeff before.

MISS MOLLIE WILLIAMS, a young lady living near St. Joseph, Mo., has just finished making a silk quilt, the blocks of which are filled in with pieces of the dresses of more or less distinguished women throughout the country. The pieces in the quilt go up into the thousands. Among the ladies who kindly furnished her specimens are: Mrs. Grant, Mrs. Sartoris, Mrs. Gov. Kasdi, Mrs. Langtry, Fanny Dayenport, Ellen Terry, Clara Morris, Maggie Mitchell, Kellogg, Isembardi, Lotta, Anna Dickinson, Mrs. Hendricks, Phoebe Couzins, Mrs. Fletcher, Mrs. Medill, Mrs. Story, Thos. C. Fletcher, Mrs. Carlisle, Mrs. Watterson, and Mrs. Crittenden.

THE late Joseph Arnold, who was for many years cashier of the Birmingham (Ct.) bank, had a prodigious memory. The Sentinel, of Ansonia, says that after he had heard Mrs. Kimberly read "Hiawatha" he repeated the entire poem. He lost his temper to the point of profanity just once: A farmer had called to deposit some money. Mr. Arnold counted it, and found it $5 short. The farmer persisted, and the cashier counted it again, with the same result. "Well, there was that same 'ten' you took it!" the farmer broke out. The cashier stopped, looked his customer square in the eye, and retorted, "Do you suppose, sir, that I would be such a blanked fool as to steal $5 when I could step right back there (pointing to the vault) and steal $100,000?"

Detroit Free Press: Mr. Stanley Matthews gave a dance to the President the other night, and a Washington paper prints the bill of fare, every line of which is in French. This seems to be a wholly useless piece of affectation. Some dishes being French in origin their names cannot, perhaps, be translated into intelligible English. Even this cannot be done in the frequent diffusion. But when it comes to oysters on the shell, lettuce, roast beef, partridges, cake, coffee, it is perfectly absurd to print them in anything but English. The French never print, when they can help it, the name of English dishes. In fact they do not set many. It is a sign of servitude to the French art of cookery that so many dishes are designated in French, but when an English a dish as roast beef, or American dishes as oysters on the shell and ice cream are put into French, even the American eagle has a right to show its claws and scream out a protest.

THOMAS H. WILLIAMS, JR., of Stockton, Cal., having begun to buy oats with the purpose of raising them, the gophers that are laying waste the fields of alfalfa on Union Island, the Sacramento Union tells a pertinent cat story: Shortly after the discovery of the Comstock mine an old gentleman was unable to meet a mortgage of $1,500 on his place on Mormon Island. A stranger, stopping at his door, saw several pretty kittens playing in the yard. He said: "Those cats, if you had them on the Comstock, would bring you $20 apiece." The old man saddled his horse, and for the next fortnight rode from house to house, farm to farm, and village to village, begging and buying cats. He got 500 and sold them on the Comstock mine, and after he paid off his mortgage and put in ban's $5000 for himself he told his neighbors why he wanted cats. They no longer deemed him crazy on cats.

A BOSTON paper is responsible for the following, which is an illustration of the prevailing ignorance in regard to the new postal law: We saw, one day this week, three whole sheets of the long-familiar green stamps, 300 stamps in all, pasted up on the wall in a certain country store not twenty-five miles from Boston in answer to our query, "Why is this?" the storekeeper replied "Well, I got kinder stuck on these; I didn't know the law was going to be changed, and I took those stamps at face value from a cigar peddler six weeks ago. Now they ain't worth anything, and our postmaster will not change them for 2 cents, so I've stuck them up there to remind me what a fool I am." We fully coincided with him in his conclusion, but were at some pains to convince him that the process by which he reached it was wrong, and we finally left him trying to soak his $3 worth of stamps off the wall by means of a wet sponge.

A ROBBERS' roost was discovered by Mr. and Mrs. James Guthrie, of Denver, recently, in a gulch near Webster, Colo. Returning from a visit to their daughter, whose home is at Grant station, they lost their way. They travelled until after nightfall before they found a cabin. In it was a rude table, some chairs, a large open stove and a good supply of fuel, and on a shelf were six loaded revolvers, several cartridge belts filled with ammunition and three pair of spurs. Mr. Guthrie stabled his horses in the dark, and reentered the cabin and fastened the heavy door with a huge bolt that fitted into slots in the logs. At about midnight Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie were awakened by sounds outside. A man said: "I wonder who in —— is there! Shall we force the door?" The answer was: "Don't no use; that door will stand as long as the cabin itself." Then the voices faded away. Mr. Guthrie by until long after daybreak ere he ventured out. Then, on going to harness his horses by daylight, he found in the barn six mail bags that had been opened, and other evidences of highwaymen's operations. The Rocky Mountain News says that United States officials are searching for the robbers.

THE following report of Chief Nimmo, of the Bureau of Statistics, covers about 97 per cent. of the immigration of the whole country:

TWO WEEKS ENDED DEC. 27.

Customs Districts.	1883.	1882.
Baltimore	96,964	90,679
Boston	44,074	82,556
Detroit	1,405	1,405
Huron	10,208	10,907
Minnesota	1,145	1,208
New Orleans	5,887	4,291
New York	367,954	412,068
Pennsylvania	7,856	5,258
Philadelphia	24,618	33,281
San Francisco	1,458	1,524
Total	564,191	717,344

The great falling off at San Francisco was caused by the exclusion of Chinese. The returns from Huron indicate the number of Canadian emigrants through that port. This table gives the number of aliens by nationalities:

TWELVE MONTHS ENDED DEC. 26.

Countries.	1883.	1882.
England	52,270	72,182
Ireland	50,035	71,715
Scotland	14,181	16,410
Wales	11,052	15,586
Germany	195,602	226,027
Italy	29,416	24,017
Norway	15,575	20,232
Sweden	28,868	29,329
Dominion of Canada	65,124	80,126
All other countries	65,231	105,926

The influx of English and Scotch largely exceeds the Irish at present, but the German newcomers surpass the whole number of immigrants from England, Ireland and Scotland.

Artificial Oysters in Paris.

Artificial oysters are now manufactured in large quantities by several oyster factories recently established in the neighborhood of Bordeaux. This new product, the making of which is kept a secret from the uninitiated, imitates the real oyster very perfectly in point of appearance, and the main difficulty in the business, the fixing of the spurious product to the oyster shell, upon which it takes the place vacated by its prototype, is said to have recently been got over with perfect success. It is urged that all who eat the real oysters should carry away and destroy their shells, thus preventing them from being dressed into the service of this new alimentary fraud. To imitate oyster shells would be too costly a process, and if all the shells of the favorite bivalves could be kept out of reach of the oyster-makers the dishonest trade would receive its death blow. But as that is an unattainable result, it is to be feared that lovers of oysters have an uncomfortable prospect before them.—Montreal Herald.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

Holy's Letter.

He's in the casket you may behold
Something more precious to me than gold,
For the crumpled scrap of paper there,
Holding a few of my baby hairs,
Is all we have left us, darlingie,
Where not an idea did his Holyship
Struggle to make himself an hexpress.

A world of odors, on I fancy, and song,
Seems part of a baby's curls, don't you see,
He's just as sweet as a baby can be,
To think the darlings—you needn't laugh—
Worked their way into his nice new staff,
Well, he blessed our little dimpled hand,
And wished us luck in a—no, Hexchard.

His words still low, he seems less sad
The lilting one by his pillow—
But the love in his all-seeing hexes,
Beyond expression is hever so much.
Three crumbs crooks and sickness nudges,
Are hidden—hidden—but grandma gives
To the storms of chickenpox of our darlings.

And what was ever more plain than this
Upon the unclean parchment "A kiss"?
A sequence of hole's new summary,
Hexpressing his hexpressiveness.
This letter shows what as a heavenly ray
The angel child of our home was.
And—mama, I tumble a great lump in my throat
On the sound so suggest of Harchard.
If you weigh.

Purpose, and No Purpose.

"Look here, Alf, I've got something to amuse you. Don't bother any longer with that tiresome stuff."

"Thank you, Mark, but I'm interested in this thing, and I want to finish the job this afternoon."

"O, come on! To-morrow I'll do just as well. I've got a box of tobacco. Let's have a quiet little game. The cash is off your mother-in-law, my aunt."

Alf was a very humdrum piece of business that the two boys—Alfred Reed and Mark Frame—were trying to amuse. The scene was the basement of the dry-goods establishment of Wigan, Dennett & Co. Alfred had just opened a box of Russian crash, and was proceeding to take from it the pieces of varying size the number charged in the invoice. It was a rainy afternoon in the dull season. The senior partner was the only member of the firm about the premises, and he was reading the paper in his office upstairs. The older clerks and salesmen were hanging here and there, or making pretexts of business in the other departments of the store. Mark flourished his box of dominoes in Alfred's face; but the boy was firm, and confident he did off the jobs to him self with provoking monotony. At length he hastily jotted down some figures upon a bill of paper and compared them with the invoice. A shade of annoyance appeared upon his face. He turned to his comrade:

"Now, Mark, you have budgeted me into a blunder. I've got to begin over for the present. If you like, I will come to your house this evening and try a game at dominoes, or whole year or anything. But just now I have something more important at hand."

At this appeal Mark turned away, muttering to himself what a solemn old stick Alf Reed was.

And here, let us look at this point a minute and see what sort of a "stick" Alf was. Briefly, his story is that two boys were fair samples of two sorts of clerks that may be found in almost any summer resort. Alfred entered the employ of Wigan, Dennett & Co., about six months before the date, Mark being then the "boy" or junior clerk. The task of sweeping out the store, dusting the counters and shelves, and arranging the goods, was divided between the two—the boxes goods and woolens falling to the charge of Mark, and the white goods and domestics to Alfred. It did not take long for young Reed to discover that Mark was a thoroughly idle, slip-shod, careless and obsequious manner in the presence of his employers, but when out of their sight he did as little as possible.

On the contrary, Alfred entered the store, as he said, to work, and to learn the business. Consequently, he never wasted a minute, but did all his work promptly and thoroughly. He had not held his position many weeks when Mark proposed that he should do the work of both. By way of compensation Mark offered him one half of his pecuniaries, which in those days yielded quite a handsome amount of pocket money to the boys. Alfred accepted the offer, and thereafter made his appearance at the store one hour earlier than before, while Mark lounged in just in season to escape detection by his superiors.

The members of the firm had not failed to notice the superiority of the new boy over his predecessor, and for a short time previous to this date had shown him a special mark of confidence. He was permitted to take the store keys to his own house at night, whereas shiftless Mark had been compelled to make a long journey out of his way to leave them at the house of the junior partner.

Now to return to the humdrum matter of the crash. It was required of the boys, that in opening packages of goods they should examine the contents and compare them with the invoices. But Mark had always helped upon crash as a special bore. To begin with, the pieces were chalked with mysterious symbols, which denoted Russian measures of length; those had to be transcribed into English yards, and set down on the goods. This being accomplished, Mark had fallen into the lazy habit of omitting to foot up the total.

"Oh, crash is of no consequence!" he said, and so proceeded without delay to check the bill as corrected.

It happened that the crash which Alfred was opening was a sample lot from a new manufacturer. Mr. Dennett had flattered himself on getting it he had done a good thing. After Mark walked away, Alfred became absorbed again in his examination. His first footing of the yards had proved incorrect. As soon as he was left to himself he went over them again. To his surprise, he found the figures agreed with his former total, being about fifty yards short of the invoice. If again reviewed his work with the same result.

"Perhaps the wrong yards are entered for this bale," he muttered to himself; "I'll try another."

He opened a second bale, and an exclamation revealed a similar discrepancy. Alfred was puzzled, and carefully compared the bill and the marks upon the bales. There could be no mistake. The goods were short. Then a new idea struck him. He seized a yardstick and began measuring the pieces. As he had begun to suspect, every piece fell short.

"Ah, Mr. Russian!" Alfred chuckled, "did you think you were going to take Wi. D. & Co. in?"

He started up stairs in search of the book-keeper, and had Mr. Wigan, who was making a tour of inspection about the store. To reply to an inquiry what he was doing, Alfred related his experience with the crash. Mr. Wigan at once became interested. He went below with Alfred and superintended a fresh examination, which gave the same results as the former one. Then he ordered a third bale opened, but this proved to be short as the others.

"Hm, hm," muttered Mr. Wigan, as he slowly returned to his desk "you that crash aside, Reed, till further orders."

By Jove!" cried the jolly Mark, who had hippened around just at the time, "you have been a fine strike with old Wigan, Alf, and he won't forget it. He does hate dreadfully to be cheated."

Now the upshot of this little transaction affair, which was too petty altogether for lofty and high tragedy, was this: The goods were speedily refurned to the agent, and, as the invoice was a heavy one, the firm was spared not little loss and vexation.

A few days afterward, Mr. Dennett, who was standing near the woolen counter, beckoned to Alfred.

"Reed, see here," he said, "are you a judge of woolen goods? Can you tell which of these is the best?"

Alfred, rather hesitatingly, expressed a preference for one of the pieces.

"Yes, yes; you are correct," said Mr. Dennett; "that's as good a piece as we have in stock. Just cut off enough for a coat-pattern, sell you, and find something to match it for vest and trousers. Take anything you like. Davis can make up at Smithers's and charged to the firm. I think, Alfred," he added, slowly, "that you are a very likely lad." And, after this wonderful outburst of commendation from the dignified Mr. Dennett, that gentleman walked away with an approving nod of the head.

It is not the object of this narrative to trace the subsequent career of the two boys in detail. The thoughtful reader can easily guess where they came out. But if you want to see Mark to-day, you can find him in the army of cheap and inefficient clerks who never rise above a certain unimportant grade. And, furthermore, if you care to meet Alfred Reed, you will go respectfully to well-known office, over the door of which his name figures in a firm that is held in the highest honor in all commercial circles.—Golden Argosy.

Rulmer's Gypsy Lore.

The recently published autobiography of Edward Bulwer-Lytton furnishes some interesting facts about that peculiar character. Before leaving Cambridge he had enriched his experience with some novel adventures, including an encounter with a highwayman, a night in a lonely cottage when an attempt was made to murder him, and an amour with a pretty young gypsy, in whose camp he spent over six days of romantic dalliance.

Now the gypsy, she was unusually silent and reserved. I asked her, reproachfully, why she was so cold.

"Tell me," she said, abruptly, "tell me truly, do you love me?"

"I do, indeed," said my thoughtless heart.

"Will you marry me, then?"

"Marry you?" I cried aghast. "Marry? Alas! I would not deceive you—that is impossible."

"I don't mean," she cried impatiently, but not seemingly hurt at my refusal—"I don't mean as you mean—marriage according to your fashion; I never thought of that; but marry me as we marry."

"How is that?"

"You will break a piece of burnt earth with me—a tile, for instance, into two halves."

"Well?"

"In grandmother's presence. That will be marriage. It lasts only five years. It is not long," she said plendrily. "And, if you want to leave me before, how could I stay you?"

"Poor, dear child—her child, after all, she was as much a child in mind—how charming she looked then. Alas! I went farther for a wife and fared worse."

Hasty Marriages.

Hasty marriages of young persons in extreme Arctic regions seem to not need to prevent it. The trouble is far back of marriage, and even of acquaintance. Girls never were left more to themselves than now. Family connections and boundaries are not considered into. Late hours are allowed. Parties, picnics, church fairs, and all sorts of entertainments are visited without supervision. Sunday school acquaintances are not always safe. Parents should not put too much trust in their children's judgment. Novels and daily papers simplify to the love of adventure. Stern restraint will not suffice. The mother must be more of a companion to her daughter; the father, the confidential friend to his son.—Christian Advocate.

PUGNACIOUS BIRDS.

Gentlemanly Creatures That Knock Down to Hold Their Own in a Fight.

"There's a bird," said the collector, "that I shot in South America last year that has more fight in it for the size than any animal living. It is falcon. The first time I ever saw them I was fowling in the harbor of the Falkland islands. I was sitting in the quarter deck with the quartermaster, when one of these falcons darted in between us, and, seizing the quartermaster's shiny hat in its talons, flew away. My companion seized a gun, fired at long range, and made the hat jump the hat; but before it reached the water another bird had it, and I was soon high in the air and out of sight.

"They seemed to be attracted by anything bright, and it was almost impossible to keep anything lawsuit on the ship. They would tear the pennant into shreds and peck at the gilt balls on the mast. I watched one one day darting at some small fishes. The next moment it disappeared under water suddenly, then came up screaming and flapping its wings, only to go down again, and then I saw that it had been snabbed by a small man-eater; so they got their desserts sometimes.

"I've seen four or five standing about a valiant hole with their eyes fixed on it, ready to grab the moment it came out. It came out. Darwin saw one dart at a hole while it was lying motionless of him asleep. He said it was impossible for the bird to see any more. After 12 the girls continue their studies at home, and submit to mamma's match-making. The boys go away to the gymnasium, or course their cultivates seven years, and fits the youth for a professional course at the university.

THE Roman Catholic cathedral at Westminster is to be commence a fortnight. It is to form the center of a vast quadrangle, comprising the site of the Tothill Fields prison, recently purchased for £115,000 from the Metropolitan Magistrates, and a site adjoining long in possession of Cardinal Manning. As a frontage to this vast square houses are to be built in architectural keeping with the building and of a character to adorn the neighborhood. The cathedral itself, which is to cost something like $3,500,000, is to be 500 feet in length by 250 feet in width. Westminster Abbey is 511 feet in length by 207 feet across the transepts. The plans of the new cathedral are borrowed from Germany, for Sir Tatton Sykes purchased the design of the Votive Church, in Vienna, from the architect, the late Baron von Ferstel.

CONGRESSMAN AND MRS. DAVIS, says the Washington correspondent, had a dozen suckers and a thirty-pound trout purchased in a fish market, he makes himself solid in that quarter. The engagement can then be announced in the Polynesian society papers.

MILLIONS of crows roost every night in the Pamphkuvine Creek region, near Catersville, Ga., and their cawing is the Cartersville Free Press says—almost deafening. Their weight breaks off large limbs of the trees, and their voracity threatens the crops for many miles around. At about sunset clouds of these birds begin their flight from the lands on which they have been feasting toward their roost, and their flight is continued until about two hours after sunset.

LIEUTENANT in Boston upon "Education in Russia." Dr. Theodore Vetter said that the Russians' reputation as linguists is due to their peculiar instruction in childhood. The infant has a French nurse for a sole attendant till it is 6 years of age. By that time it has learned to speak the French language. Then the German governess comes in, and is the child's constant companion. Later the English tongue is acquired in the same way. After 12 the girls continue their studies at home, and submit to mamma's match-making. The boys go away to the gymnasium, or course their cultivates seven years, and fits the youth for a professional course at the university.

THE Roman Catholic cathedral at Westminster is to be commence a fortnight. It is to form the center of a vast quadrangle, comprising the site of the Tothill Fields prison, recently purchased for £115,000 from the Metropolitan Magistrates, and a site adjoining long in possession of Cardinal Manning. As a frontage to this vast square houses are to be built in architectural keeping with the building and of a character to adorn the neighborhood. The cathedral itself, which is to cost something like $3,500,000, is to be 500 feet in length by 250 feet in width. Westminster Abbey is 511 feet in length by 207 feet across the transepts. The plans of the new cathedral are borrowed from Germany, for Sir Tatton Sykes purchased the design of the Votive Church, in Vienna, from the architect, the late Baron von Ferstel.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, — MICHIGAN.

HENRY B. PAYNE.

The Lies About the New Ohio Senator.

(From the New York World.)

A melancholy wail goes up from the Republican press of the country over the defeat of Mr. Pendleton in the Ohio Senatorial contest. He is pointed out as a Democratic sacrifice to the glorious principles of Civil Service Reform. The election of Payne is ascribed to corruption and the power of monopoly. One or two Republican organs have gone so far as to express a doubt about the ability of the American Republic to survive such a blow. We find these sad words in the Troy Times:

The choice of Mr. Payne as senator from Ohio is one of the greatest scandals ever developed in the political history of the country, but it stands to account the sin of the spirit of the political organization to which he belongs.

When Ingalls defeated old Pomeroy for the Senate out in Kansas there was talk of the use of money, but the Republican press expressed its agony. When Sabin bought the seat in the Senate that Windom held there was no level of despair. Neither did the Republican press lose faith in humanity when Jones and Sharon purchased a seat in the Senate; likewise Bowen and Tabor. "The Republican press stifled its sorrow when the Credit Mobilier scandalous came out, and it turned its back to the wall and wept in silence when Blaine's letters came out. Recently, when Huntington's letters were published, detailing a great Republican money king's methods of dealing with Congress, the Republican press saw no reason to lose faith in the purity of system of government. We turn an idea that even our depressed neighbor of the Troy Times, which is so shocked by the elevation of Mr. Payne to the Senate, will be able to take a cheerful view of life in a day or two. Mr. Pendleton lost his seat in the Senate simply because he was in no sense qualified for leadership; solely because he failed to attach men to his political fortunes because his aristocratic surroundings were distasteful to many Democrats; because he incurred the hostility of a powerful newspaper, and because he was unable to protect himself against the organized effort to defeat him. The story about corruption originated with his followers, who felt that they were forced to explain their weakness on natural grounds, and it has since been repeated by the Republican press for partisan reasons. Mr. Payne is a pure and honorable man of the old school.

(From the New York Sun.)

In the first place, we are convinced that Mr. Payne has no part or interest in the Standard Oil company. He is not a stockholder, and has never in any way been connected with its affairs. His son is a stockholder, and, no doubt, has profitably increased his, his father's election; but we do not believe that a single cent of money or any other corrupt influence was either employed or tolerated by Henry B. Payne in the canvass which resulted in his election. Mr. Payne is emphatically the kind of a man. His past life is a guarantee of his integrity, and that guaranty is not to be put aside upon any vague suspicion, or without the clearest proof. Besides, the magnitude of Mr. Payne's property in this case precludes the idea of corruption. There may always be a few loose men hanging about the Ohio Legislature, but it is impossible to believe that the men of a party so corrupted. In the Democratic caucus Mr. Payne was nominated on the first ballot, and, after the balloting of about 15, Mr. Ward, Mr. Booth, and Mr. Cobden! Mr. Payne's majority of 14 votes, and it could not have been procured by base methods. Moreover, Mr. Payne is a fine, alert, manly, sober, steady, more competent, and more honest than the average man he succeeds. The election of such a man is in the interest of good government, and we rejoice at it accordingly.

Civil Service.

We are told by Republican organs that they are in favor of what is called "Civil Service Reform," a policy which, discarding political predilections or affiliations, seeks only for qualifications suited to official employments under the control of the Federal Government. All men, who know anything at all about Republican managers and the Republican party, know the assertion to be as devoid of truth as the statement which we have quoted from the Albany republican concerning Mr. Payne is not the semblance of truth in it—a vicious falsehood from rind to core, insid and out. A lie so easily connected and repeated for the purpose of catching the unwary, and for manufacturing political capital. In his recent speech at Columbus, Ohio, Henry B. Payne, United States senator-elect, said:

"For twenty-three years the dispensation of Federal patronage had been in the hands of the Republican party. The public offices, numbering in the aggregate more than 100,000, had been supplied from one party, while nine-tenths of that party and the entire Democratic party have been, and are now, absolutely proscribed and deprived of the public service. During this period money by the thousand millions has been collected and disbursed, and the books kept by these partisan agents, furnishing an opportunity and a temptation for peculation, fraud and concealment to which I should dread to expose, even the frailest integrity of Democrats. Inevitably, corruption and great abuses have crept in and have been covered up favoritism; proteigism, nepotism, imbecility and senility have obtained secure lodgment; demoralization has followed, and the public believes that a fetid miasmatic exist, permeated with rottenness and gangrene. Now, can this service be reformed, and how? I answer, yes. And the process is, First, by electing a Democratic President, and that is assured the present year, unless madness and madness from the gods are permitted to block the way. Secondly, by a pitiless and radical overhauling and purging of the present service. An Augean stable cleaned (be thrown with a fourth brush). You must turn on the hose, ply the hickory broom and scrub brush, disinfect the premises and give them a wholesome atmosphere for the honest incumbents. Then let care be taken that same lot such as lose the Jeffersonian stamp of honesty and capacity be allowed to enter, and those only from the Democratic party, until the full retable share active to guard and protect the public interest. If publicans office be a sacrificial burden, all citizens should be compelled (by conscription if need be) to share their portion. If, on other hand, as I firmly believe, it is a privilege and a blessing, instead of three-fourths of the whole population should not be excluded from enjoying their just and fair share of it. By this means reform is practicable, and, until accomplished, no statesmanship of the question can be obtained."

The declarations made by Mr. Payne are absolutely true. The Republican party, with a hundred thousand of its pimps and hale in office, talks glibly of civil service reform, talks of justice to the people, talks of fair play to opposing aspirants, talks of qualification for the test of appointments to office—when all and know every word is false. By such pretenses, characterized by civil emphasis and such odious by red tape, it may be possible for a Democrat to obtain Government employment, but the Republicans do not now, nor did they ever, intend that any form of civil service should be adopted which, to any appreciable extent, should diminish their power to control the spoils which they hold belong to the victors. The hundred thousand offices in the gift of the Government are filled by Republicans, and it would be as reasonable to suppose that St. Peter would admit Dorsey and John Sherman into heaven as to expect a Democrat to obtain Government employment under a Republican administration. Civil service reform will be inaugurated when the Republican morals are turned out, and when a Republican boss organ asserts that the Republican party favors civil service reform it is only required to respond "you lie."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Republican Statesmanship.

The statesmanship of the Republican party is remarkable. The Secretary of the Treasury is bewildered by the enormous surplus revenue and the manner in which money flows into his coffers from by the millions. Like the miser in the "Chimes of Corneville," he clutches at the gold and seeks to hide it away, only to find it scattering almost faster than he can gather it from every side.

The Secretary calls it bonds. But that is a title. He still cries for relief. The people are decrease our burdens. Take off the taxes on the articles we consume in our daily lives. Let us have cheap necessaries, cheap food, cheap clothing. Cease paying off the debt. Decrease the heavy expenditures of a prodigal Government. Let the toilers of to-day have the benefit of the surplus and give the said vigor to the business of the country by ceasing to lend to these hundreds of millions to the Treasury as a fund for extravagance and corruption.

What says the Republican statesmanship through its organs? It is true we have an unwieldy and troublesome surplus revenue, but don't decrease it by reducing taxation or tariff. There are two ways of cutting down the revenue, they say—one by reducing customs duties on articles not produced in this country; the other by taxing them so high as to reach prohibition and stop importation. The latter they avow to be the remedy that commends itself to Republican statesmanship.

Let us see where this Republican policy leads.

By levying prohibitory duties we certainly stop the increase of revenue, for no one imports and no duties are collected.

We encourage false invoices, forgery, perjury and smuggling. With Canada lying along an extended open border, the new Republican policy would compel us to keep up a vast revenue army, or allow ourselves to be overrun with smuggled goods.

One of the first principles of legislation is to so arrange taxation that it will not injuriously affect our trade with other countries. Republican statesmanship reverses this and proposes so arrange taxation as to shut off our trade with other countries. It seems incredible that a great and intelligent party can seriously advocate such an imbecile and ruinous policy.—New York Herald.

Physiology of Smoking.

There are three points to consider—first, the local effects of the vapor from the burning leaves; second, the immediately contingent effects of tobacco; and third, its remote or secondary effects. Each of these would call for special study in an exhaustive investigation of the subject. We cannot, on the present occasion, do more than suggest the line of inquiry to be pursued. As regards the local effects, it is especially desirable to be observant. There can be no question that the influence exerted on the mucous membrane of the lips, mouth, tongue, palate, epiglottis, larynx, and fauces by smoking, is important. There is first dryness, then hypergemia of the membrane itself, next venous excitation of the nervous filaments distributed throughout the region, with direct irritation of the centers, and reflex stimulation of the glands. In consequence of this last mentioned set of effects, we get either increased secretion or very prompt emptying of the salivary glands, and other waste of the saliva, or the passage of that fluid into the stomach—probably at the time supty.

The saliva is, moreover, to some extent impregnated with the oil derived from the smoke of the tobacco. It is easy to see how local disturbances, such as epithelial growths, increases or modifications of the same and the like, may be induced by smoking; how the nervous disturbances with the various nerves distributed to the mouth, tongue, and fauces may be effected; how the salivary glands may be overstimulated and exhausted, and how the stomach may be disordered. The passage of salivary fluid into an empty stomach may help to appease the appetite, but it can scarcely improve the digestion. Other local effects might be mentioned, but they will suggest themselves. Next come the immediately contingent effects of smoking. These may be either stimulating, sedative or toxic as the quantity of the nicotine actually introduced into the system—a very difficult point to settle—varies, or the idiosyncrasy of the smoker may determine. The sum of the investigations that have been made in connection with this phase of the subject would seem to show that nothing short of direct experiment in any particular case can supply the requisite data for determining how the smoking of tobacco is likely to affect an individual.

And the deduction which may be hastily drawn from a few experiments will need to be qualified by further consideration that the susceptibility of the organism for influence of tobacco smoking varies in a very special degree with those changes of state to which all systems, and especially those of the class of persons who require or desire the use of tobacco, are subject. One man can smoke with the best results when he is hot; another when he is cold; one needs to have a full stomach, while another requires his smoke first in the early morning, or when he is hungry; one will take his pipe or cigar to relax or be has to think; another must be idle to profit by it, and so on. With every change of temperature, and condition of health, the susceptibility to tobacco varies. It is useless to try to lay down any precise law as regards its action. The use of the "weed" is in every case experimental, and its immediately contingent effects are incapable of prediction.

As a rule, however, we believe they are, in the moderate use of tobacco, soothing to the individual taste, good instead of evil; but the patient rather than the doctor is the judge of results, and it is policy on the part of the latter to refrain from dogmatizing on the subject in any special case. The remote or secondary effects of tobacco smoking are certainly, but cumulative. There is not a particle of evidence which can be legitimately pressed into the services of the assumption—sometimes seriously and unscientifically made—that they are so. A man may exhaust the strength of his nervous system, and thus lower its tone, or he may impair his digestion by habitual excess in smoking, but these results are in no sense cumulative, nor has the agent by which they have been produced been cumulative in its energy. The disastrous effects of tobacco smoking—when too much is smoked or the tobacco is too strong—are those of persistency in the use of an injurious article, and a piling up of its effects.

This is especially indicated by the state of the pulse in habitual smokers to excess. The sphygmograph shows a depressed state of the vessels while the smoking continues, and for a short time after a pipe, but the effect generally passes off when the use of the thing is abandoned for a few hours. So with the disturbance of digestion produced by excess in tobacco smoking, and with its other "evil consequences," which have been much exaggerated. There is very little, if anything, to be said against the moderate use of tobacco in an average state of the organism. Those who are unfavorably affected by it should abstain, and it is wholly unadmissible in youth. We would go so far as to say that no young man should smoke before he has attained his majority, and it would be well if he deferred the use of tobacco altogether, and in every form, until the extreme limit of development, which may be placed at the age of 26.—London Lancet.

How are you like my discourse?" asked Parson Goodgoneth of Deacon Lightweight, the village grocer, as they walked home from church. "Too long, brother, too long," replied the frank deacon; "I believe in having everything short." "Yes, I've noticed that in your weights, deacon," said the sarcastic parson.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

Payne's Weakness.

Mr. Payne, the Senator-elect from Ohio, is not a member of the Standard Oil Company; neither is he the attorney of that great monopoly. The confusion on this point arises from the fact that Mr. Payne's son, Colonel Payne, naturally an ardent supporter of his father, is one of the leading spirits and beneficiaries of that concern. The charge has been freely that Mr. Payne owes his recent election to the corrupt use of money. In many quarters, republican and democratic, this charge is believed to be true. But it has not been proven, and fair-minded persons are inclined to believe it. Still, it has gained so much currency that it must militate against Mr. Payne's success as a presidential candidate, a post for which his friends are now pushing him. The Sun is in the right when it says: "One thing becomes clear from these accusations and from the discussion they have occasioned: Mr. Payne cannot in any event now be available as the democratic candidate for president."—Chicago Herald.

Senator Blair's Scheme

Senator Blair reported from the committee on education a bill securing the benefits of common-school education to all children in the U. S. and providing that there shall be appropriated annually for ten years a sum of money beginning with $15,000,000 and diminished by $1,000,000 in each succeeding year, which sum shall be paid out to the states and territories in proportion to their illiterate population. This measure will provoke one of the liveliest debates in the senate this session as there are several of the leading senators preparing speeches for and against it. The south would derive the largest share of the money under the provisions of the bill.

Notes and News.

The Kalamazoo Telegraph has 24 carriers. Most of them charge 10 cents per week in the support of widowed mothers and two have bank accounts of over $100.

Meredith, Clare Co., "the El Dorado of the lumber woods," is a little over a month old, already has three hotels, five or six stores, shops, offices and other buildings, and will, of course, soon have a newspaper.

A fire in the press room of the British Free Press last Friday morning temporarily dismantled the large Hoe press on which the paper is printed. By the generous offer of the Post and Tribune company the Free Press was printed on their press.

There are three times as many sturdy laborers out of work in Boston to-day as there were a year ago in mid-winter season, says the Herald of that city. About nine months hence these sturdy laborers will be exposed in sole for the republican tariff, because, in the language of the last campaign, "it means plenty of work and high wages."

We have just received from the office of the New York Sun one of the finest colored lithograph advertisements for that paper we have seen this year. It is a combination of 24 distinct chrome lithograph views, of a large size, showing the place and who reads it. The Sun has a circulation of 60,000,000 papers a year, —over a million a week. It ranks among the cheapest and best.

Kansas papers claim that prohibition is that state does prohibit. The secretary of the Kansas temperance union gives figures to show that of 708 saloons in operation when the law took effect in 1881, there remained 243 now in operation, 166 of these being located in Leavenworth. In less than two years prohibition has closed 465 saloons, while the population of the state has increased 12 per cent. Prohibition has driven the saloons out of 43 counties in which they existed under the license system.

The Morrison bill is not free trade, and opposition will it not in any decent sense the support of protection. The bill is, in fact, a moderate and conservative attempt to deal with the actual and and pressing needs of the business of the country. By treating it fairly and intelligently the republicans can serve the country with no harm to their own party, and no desired advantage to their opponents. By blind adherence to the tariff as it is, exclusive and oppressive, partisan and unjust, they can do themselves great injury, and greatly help their opponents.—New York Times.

Substituting the votes of all the Representatives from provinces that were involved in the rebellion, and also those of all the "border" provinces (Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky and Missouri), the bill to reduce Porter's his-del rum in the army was passed by a sufficient majority. It is not only the decision of the country, therefore, that reverses and annuls the sentence against Porter, but it is the decision about the same part of the country that, twenty years ago, applauded the delivery of that sentence, and declared out of its passion rather than its judgment that the responsibility for the wretched failure of Pope's Virginia campaign should rest upon the shoulders of a subordinate officer.—Chicago Times.

The First Globe and other protection papers are expecting the very, but the farmers of Michigan lost $50,000 on wool in consequence of the reduction of the tariff. It is about 22 cents to each farmer about 24 cents on each sheep in the state. As for remittance party reduced the duty on wool, we suppose they will advise their readers to vote against that party hereafter and "for shelters" the papers know that the change in the tariff caused a loss on each fleece of wool of 22 cents? Where are the statistics upon which they base so free a "reform tariff?" As there has not been a year in the last fifty years, when the value of wool did not vary more than that amount from the price of the preceding year, how do those papers know that the tariff caused a change of 22 cents on each particular sheep in Michigan 11 years? Let us have the numbers showing total wool acreage in each county, geodetically, and exactly. And while you are about it, tell us how you know that the tariff affects the price of wool at all.—Detroit Leader.

Announcements.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year with Hall's Catarrh Cure, that the doctors had given up and said could not be cured. 75 cents a bottle. Sold by Dr. Cramer.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and keep up the system you will find Parsons's Condition Powders invaluable. Full pounds 25 cents, sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 8-40

SCIENCE admiration. Who can help admiring a lively tongue, clear senses, beautiful complexions? These can be easily obtained by the use of Hamlin's Wizard Oil and Pills. It will surely remove Freckles, Tan, Pimples, and 100 maladies of every sort and is in no way injurious to the skin, but is the most luxurious and elegant preparation of its kind. Price 50c per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

TOOTHACHE. Money is a great curer for aching hearts, but a twenty dollar gold piece placed in an aching tooth doesn't seem to have the same effect. In fact, nothing is sure but Hamlin's Toothache Drops, which have supplanted all else. Try the delicacy. Mr. Hamlin's Wizard Oil cures in one minute. Price only 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Beware! Coughs, colds, and slight throat diseases often develop into incurable ills. Scores of Coughs, Consumption, etc., and should have immediate attention and be cured at the first stages. Not only pulmonary sufferers, but all who have throat troubles, should find immediate relief upon using Hamlin's Cough Troches, which relieve Coughs and Hoarseness, making the vocalists clear. Warranted to relieve and satisfy. Price 25c per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

When a cure is guaranteed why will you refuse to be relieved of that cough which is liable to become chronic on your hands and lay you aside a suffering invalid—hopeless? Your children are liable to catch cold with Croup and the before a doctor can be sent for, they may be strangled to death. Why not, and full bottle of Hamlin's Wizard Oil, Wonderful cough, Croup, and all other throat diseases. Hamlin's Cough Balsam will do the work and costs but a trifle. Price 25 and 50 cents a bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss. At a court held at the village of Charlevoix, in said County, on the 12th day of February, A. D. 1884. In the matter of the attachment of Frank Moore, plaintiff, vs. John Moore, defendant. Notice is hereby given that on the 12th day of February, A. D. 1884, a writ of attachment was issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in favor of Frank Moore, plaintiff, against the property of John Moore, defendant, for the sum of Eight Hundred Dollars, which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1884.

Dated February 12th, A. D. 1884.

CHURCHMAN & CHIPP,
32-38 Attorneys for plaintiff.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss. At a court held at the village of Charlevoix, in said County, on the 12th day of February, A. D. 1884. In the matter of the attachment of Wm. Bedford, plaintiff, vs. John Monroe and James Matthews, defendants. Notice is hereby given that on the 12th day of November, A. D. 1883, a writ of attachment was issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in favor of Wm. Bedford, plaintiff, against the property of John Monroe and James Matthews, defendants, for the sum of three hundred and twenty-five dollars, which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1884.

Dated February 12th, A. D. 1884.

CHURCHMAN & CHIPP,
32-38 Attorneys for plaintiff.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss. At a court held at the village of Charlevoix, in said County, on the 12th day of February, A. D. 1884. In the matter of the attachment of Wm. Bedford, plaintiff, vs. John Monroe and James Matthews, defendants. Notice is hereby given that on the 29th day of November, A. D. 1883, a writ of attachment was issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in favor of Wm. Bedford, plaintiff, against the property of John Monroe and James Matthews, defendants, for the sum of Three Hundred and forty-six dollars, which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1884.

Dated February 12th, A. D. 1884.

CHURCHMAN & CHIPP,
31-37 Attorneys for plaintiff.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, Tuesday, Judicial Circuit, Charlevoix County. In the matter of the estate of Martin L. Sisler, Mortgagee, vs. Mortgagor. Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, at Charlevoix, on the 19th day of February, A. D. 1884, in the cause pending between Martin L. Sisler, the defendant, Martin J. Sisler, in chancery, upon bill filed the 19th day of February in the state of New York, on motion of Cook & Cook, complainant's solicitors, it is ordered that the said defendant, Martin J. Sisler, cause his appearance to be entered herein within four months from the date of this order, and in case of his appearance that he cause his answer to the complainant's bill of complaint to be filed, and cause the same to be served on said complainant's solicitors, within twenty days after service on him of a copy of said bill, and notice of this order, and that in default thereof said bill be taken as confessed by said defendant, Martin J. Sisler. And it is further ordered that within twenty days the said complainant cause a notice of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Journal, a newspaper printed, published and circulated in said county, and that said publication be continued therein at least once in each week for six weeks in succession, which he considers is the best way to serve the process served on said non resident, defendant, at least twenty days before the time thereof prescribed for his appearance.

OSCAR E. WISNER,
Circuit court commissioner.

CHURCHMAN & CHIPP,
Complainant's solicitors.

A true copy, attest,
OSCAR WRIGHT,
32-38 Deputy Register.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with full directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. Parties wishing the prescription, will please address, Rev. EDWARD WILSON, 187 Penn. St., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

PIMPLES.

I will send (free) the recipe for a simple COMPLEXION BALM that will remove TAN, PIMPLES, FRECKLES, and MOTH PATCHES, leaving the skin soft, clear and beautiful; accomplish a wonderful change in a blemished complexion; and is the best article ever used upon the face. Address, Mrs. V. MERRIMAN & CO., 12 Barclay St., N. Y.

GEO. W. MILLER,

Buttars Block,

CHARLEVOIX.

Joseph Hyland,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Repairing of all kinds, and Repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds.

Imported and Domestic Perfumery.

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Hardware's new

Opera Block

John Nicholls

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades,

WAGON TONGUES, SHINGLES, LATH, ETC.

LUMBER SAWED AND BILLS FILLED TO ORDER.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand at his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

Advance Lumber Company

Are now prepared to do

CUSTOM SAWING

Promptly and on short notice. We have on hand a large quantity of

Hard and Soft Wood Lumber and Hemlock Timber.

GIVE US A TRIAL. ADVANCE LUMBER CO.
ADVANCE, MICH.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

AT COST!

All kinds of

Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Ever brought to Charlevoix.

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.

They have no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY.

And Satisfaction Guaranteed

L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House
CHARLEVOIX

IMMENSE CUT IN PRICES

—OF—

All-Wool Goods,

Overcoats and Suitings,

Boots and Shoes.

I have a large lot of Clothing and Boots and Shoes which I will close out at actual cost, as I want to make room for spring goods. All my goods I will warrant

First-Class,

And will be pleased to show them to all visitors whether they intend to purchase or not. Remember I have marked these goods down at actual cost, and they are

Big Bargains.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Mich., 1884.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL

A Progressive Local and Family Newspaper.

Published Every Thursday, at $1.50 a Year

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will for the sake of suffering humanity, send free to all who need it, the receipt and full directions for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Sufferers wishing to profit by the advertiser's experience can do so by addressing in perfect confidence, John B. Ogden, 42 Cedar St., New York.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at the old late rate. Call soon and have your pick.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED
D. S. H'LY.

Business Announcements.

Upright, Emrey & Co., will have a special lot of groceries arrive by special stage from Petoskey this week.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

$50 cords of good dry birch and white birch wood for sale. Good accounts required. Call at the office of

J. MILO EATON.

Fresh! Fickles! Pickles!

Corner Cucumber Vinegar.
Sweet Cucumber Vinegar.
Sweet Apple Cider Vinegar.
At Upright, Emrey & Co's.

500 bushels of Oats, and 200 bushels of Potatoes wanted at Upright, Emrey & Co's.

FOR SALE.—A second hand pump, in good order, with engine and boiler complete, for sale cheap. Call soon. J. MILO EATON.

Pop's Fat Family Oysters, at Upright, Emrey & Co's.

For Sale.—Two or three good horses for sale cheap for cash or good security. J. MILO EATON.

Upright, Emrey & Co. received a large supply of Groceries Tuesday.

A genuine Article in Butter at B. Inch.

Upright, Emrey & Co. want to see you at their store.

Fresh oysters again at Upright Emrey & Co's Friday.

The Temperature.

The following is a record of observations of the temperature at the JOURNAL office, of 7 a. m. and 2 p. m. everyday, for the week ending yesterday, show, ready to all cases unprovided with a.

	7 A.M.	2 P.M.
Thursday	8	10
Friday	+10	21
Saturday	20	26
Sunday	22	30
Monday	16	36
Tuesday	42	50
Wednesday	6	18

Provision Market.

Small prices to consumers, as corrected every Wednesday evening by UPRIGHT, EMREY & CO., general dealers.

FLOUR, per bbl, $5.00, $7.00, and $8.00.
BUCKWHEAT FLOUR, per bbl, $4.00.
CORN MEAL, per bbl, bolted $2.00, unbolted, 1.90.
HAY, per ton, $20.
OAT MEAL, per 100, 3c.
OATS, per bu, 50c.
GROUND FEED, per cwt, $1.50.
APPLES, per bu, $1.00.
POTATOES, per bu, 40@50c.
ONIONS, per bu, $1.00.
BUTTER, per lb, 20@30c.
EGGS, per doz, 20@30c.
LARD, per lb, 10@12c.
HAMS, 16c; Shoulders, 12½c.
SALT PORK, lb, 8@10c.
CHEESE, 20c.
WATER WHITE OIL, 25c.
CARMELITE PHOSPHOR, in good demand, sells and pleases well.

Fresh Meats from the Market.

BEAT, beef steak, 12½c; pork steak, 12½c; roast, 8@10c; sausage, 10c; hams, 14c; shoulders, 12½c.

TALLOW, 6@7c.

Local News Brevities.

"Mostacat." Did you see it?

Masquerade to-morrow evening.

Give the fire department a benefit.

G. W. Jefferies went to Clare on Monday.

Mrs. Ruth Bedford returned home from Traverse city this week.

J. Milo Eatons has lot of plants were nipped by the frost Tuesday night.

The Boyne Statesman says that the Faxton will run there regularly next summer.

Remember the lecture of Mrs. A. S. Benjamin at the opera house this evening.

Remember the masquerade at the opera house. The fire department deserve support.

Mrs. Wm. Tower, of Charlotte, arrived on Tuesday, for a visit with her daughter, Mrs. C. J. Grier.

The Barnard church was crowded last Sunday evening, and Rev. Mr. Morgan gave an excellent sermon.

There will be preaching at Black's school house, by Rev. J. T. Iddings, next Sunday afternoon, at 2 o'clock.

Among the entertainments contemplated by the ladies of the M. E. church is a full dress Chinese wedding, to be given in the near future.

It is probable that a railroad meeting will be held at Kalkaska in a few weeks, and delegates will be invited from Antrim and Charlevoix counties. —Breeze.

A "man social" is under way in Charlevoix, of which the gentlemen are expected to do the cooking, and the ladies, poor things, to eat the stuff with which the tables are to be set forth.—Herald. The social was held accordingly to appointment, and the tables were provided with plenty of something good, too.

The rain bagas brought to this office last week by Mr. Edwin Cook proves that this vegetable can be grown in this county, as large, solid, and sound as anywhere in Michigan.

The fire department filled the boiler for the manufacturing company on Tuesday, and fire was started on Wednesday morning. Mr. See expresses the opinion that they will be ready for business about April 1st.

The "man social" at the Bridge street house last Friday evening was a success, netting the ladies about $23. The gentlemen waiters were very attentive, and seemed to vie with each other as to who would return the most tickets.

Long before the hour of service last Sunday morning and evening, the school house was crowded to its utmost, and many were unable to get inside. There seemed to be a great desire to hear Rev. Pudlifat and those fortunate enough to get seats give an excellent report of the services.

C. B. Bellinger has just finished a ring for O. D. Hilton, with an agate set, which is one of the handsomest we have seen for some time. The stone was found on the beach of Lake Michigan. Mr. B. is getting an enviable reputation for work of this class, and Mr. Hilton's ring adds much to his jewelry reputation.

M. Wright, proprietor of the opera graphoscope, was so well pleased with Pedoscopy that he thinks strongly of engaging in business here and making this place his home. He is a genial, enterprising man and would make a good citizen.—Democrat. He expressed a similar opinion of Charlevoix and his intention for the future. He will come again next summer.

One of the most sudden changes of weather this winter occurred last Tuesday afternoon and evening. At 2 o'clock Tuesday the thermometer indicated 50°, at 4:30 it was down to 28°, and at 7 o'clock Wednesday morning it indicated zero. At 4 o'clock Tuesday the wind and snow storm was so severe that it was almost impassible for a person to walk in the street.

Boyne City will take the biggest been next summer yet known in its history. Four or five brick block are surely to be erected, and as many have talked of going to work in the business in build which preparations are now being made. Then there is the railroad. A standard gauge himself from the main line of the G. R. & I. will be built early in summer.—Statesman.

While the papers in the different towns throughout northern Michigan are complaining of hard times, Boyne City is flourishing. There is lots of business and wages are good. We are led to quote the words of Mr. J. M. Fuller, who has been absent for some time, that "the town will soon have to move back in order to make room for the wood, logs, ties, being hauled to the beach."—Statesman.

The Western Transportation Company, having sold its fleet of propellers, among which are the Idaho and Fountain City, which ship here regularly during the season of navigation, running between Buffalo and Chicago to the Western Transit Co., for $120 each, "and other valuable considerations," went out of business December 31st. Two elegant new steel steamers are being built for their line.—Chebogan Democrat.

Some of our citizens do not seem to understand the ringing of the fire bell. Several times, when the department has been called out for practice, people have run out to see where the fire was, and returned disgusted when told the facts of the matter. For a fire the bell will ring constantly some minutes, but for practice, after a few taps it will cease for a few seconds, and then the few taps repeated. A little observation will obviate mistakes.

Money is not the only capital required for successful business, but many merchants, forgetting, perhaps, their own early life, look askance at the beginner with small means. One of the prominent and wealthy men of Boston, when his commenced business for himself, had little capital, and calling on a well-to-do lumber dealer for credit, was curtly asked to come again next day, and the man of means and boards "would see." Promptly the next day the young man called, found the lumber merchant standing on a pile of his merchandise, and was thus addressed: "Well, young man, I cannot find that you have anything but a pair of hands." Looking the other in the eye, the young merchant replied: "Yes, I have a pair of legs to take me out of your confounded old lumber yard!" And he marched out, and with him went thousands of dollars' worth of business to other parties, in his already upward progress to the continued chagrin of the man who had so underrated his capacity.

Complaints from our subscribers of failure to get the JOURNAL regularly are becoming more frequent, and we cannot understand it, unless it be some of the "explanations." After addressing a page of names, the names and pile of papers are counted, and if they do not agree they are compared and the error corrected before turning to the next page, and it seems impossible that so many would be missed as report to us. Further than this, men have come to us whose names we recollect distinctly of having written. Having done this, and deposited them in the post office, we can do no more, and failure to be promptly delivered is not the fault of this office. We hope there will be no occasion to refer to this matter again.

Where is the blame?

MICHELL, OTT., Feb. 15th, 1884.

C. J. Strang, Esq.

Your paper has not come to us for three weeks. Before that it came quite regularly for about a month. This trouble does not seem to be in your office. Please forward it if you can, as we enjoy it. WM. FRANCIS.

Mr. Francis' JOURNAL is directed as carefully as any name on our list. This is not the first complaint from him as we have been served every week to say that the address was correct. On a former occasion we interviewed the postmaster here, who said his own paper suffered in the same manner, showing that the fault was not here. An occasional loss might be explained on the theory of an accident of some kind, but continued failure three weeks in succession indicates a looseness in the service or a malicious destruction or misarriage of papers that should be investigated, and would be if there was an idea of hope of success in bringing the offenders to justice.

Historical Society.

Reported for the Journal.

Although the visible as well as invisible elements were combined to an extent that would cause the spirit of a Dakota blizzard to murmur, a company who were bound to make the best of the occasion, enjoyed the wide-souled hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. John Nicholls.

Those who stayed at home missed one of the jollicst meetings recorded in the annals of the society. While under the stimulating influence of a bountiful supply of delicious apples, a program was improvised, and Miss Maud Lowsley opened the exercises with a well-executed guitar solo.

Miss Ella Barry and R. E. Mason each gave select readings, the former from Peterson's magazine, and the latter from the Pickwick papers, full of good humor. Both did his part well, and scored perfectly at home with his selection.

Mr. John Nicholls added gravity to the meeting by a reading which aroused of drought, and did not fail to leave its mark.

Robert O'Neil and Al. Washburn each gave selections.

A new feature in entertainment greatly applauded was a whistle duet, which closed the exercises.

The society will meet at the same place next Tuesday evening.

The Liberal Club.

Other engagements prevented our attendance at the meeting of this club at the opera house last Monday evening, but by the kindness of the secretary we are able to give a report.

The reading of Mr. Wisner we have heard, and think it refutes the story of the Bible in an admirable manner. Long as it is, it may yet find a place in the columns of the JOURNAL.

The following is the report furnished by the secretary:

EDITOR JOURNAL:—The Liberals were called again Monday night. Whatever may be their views about religious matters, it is certain that their views of freedom of thought and conscience are ever the same. Free thought and free speech in matters of opinion are sentiments which they fully endorse, and are ever ready to sustain. The hall was pretty well filled, and the programme quite interesting. The opening and closing pieces were by the ladies' cornet band, assisted by Prof. Bies, and their performance was creditable to themselves and their instructor. Several single pieces were sung, with violin and organ accompaniments. Two duets by Messrs. Wheat and Carr, showed their superbly communal of the bow, while Sammy Baxter's comic song made the audience smile quite unlaudably. The lecture and poem by O. F. Wisner was a vivid picture of Queen E. ther and the Persian monarch. The usual criticisms and reply followed the delivery of the lecture. The reading of W. C. Newman, a tribute to the Michigan soldiery, was well delivered. Altogether it was a pretty good time. E. F. B.

East Jordan.

Mrs. P. S. Hulbert is sick.

The blacksmith shop is last Saturday but we haven't seen the dead yet.

H. R. Stoquel and Mr. Watson, his partner, are out of town on business.

Messrs. Smith and Jerome are cutting a large quantity of first-class ice.

Mr. Pickard, father of A. E. and Will Pickard, arrived in town last week.

Miss Celia Nicholls was in town this week, the guest of the Misses Stone.

A heavy load of snow and ice caused the bowling alley building to red lapse. No one hurt.

The gentlemen are loud in their praise of the way in which they were entertained at the recent leap year party.

The band has selected Mr. Frank Cutter as their leader, with John Jordan, president, and Thos. Nelson, secretary.

Donation and oyster supper at the Eagle hotel last Washington evening. A very enjoyable time was reported. Proceeds for the benefit of the Methodist society.

Stevens Post, G. A. R., established only a few weeks ago, already is about 60 members, and "still there's room for one more." Their camp is at the Hulbert house.

James Hobern is making preparations for an extended trip to the north western states. He has not made known his object in going at this time of the year.

Hugh R. Brown has already completed his large contract with Stoquel & Co., cutting and getting out over a million feet of logs. Hugh is indeed an industrious and enterprising young contractor.

Mr. Van Arsdale, of Dewitt, Clinton County, went through East Jordan last Friday, on his way to Kelso, on a prospecting tour. We are informed that he will locate with a saw mill in a few weeks.

When going to bed the other evening one of our merchants locked his place of business, on returning he found a back window badly smashed, and thinking a burglary had been committed, tried to create a sensation. The boys let it go for a while as a good joke, then told him one of the neighbors had accidently fallen against it. E. B.

Hayes.

The warm weather is settling the snow.

Rev. Mr. Pudlifat preached to a large audience at Lakeview last Sunday.

Rev. C. E. Van Auken has closed the revival meetings at the Lakeview school house.

Several citizens on the sick list; bad colds, sore throat, etc., seem to have all come this way.

A literary entertainment at the Fairgrove school house, March 5th. A good time is anticipated.

Four teachers of this township close their winter term of school next Friday. Two of them in this township, and the balance in adjoining township.

"Surprise parties" are all the "go" at present; at the rate of one a week. Don't surprise us for we are timid, we might never recover from the shock.

There are indications of a saw mill being located near Mr. Bacon, on the shore of Pine Lake soon. Would not learn the names of the parties who contemplate putting up the mill. Different parties are now drawing logs ready for sawing, we are informed.

Mr. Lorenzo Curtis, director of school district No. 2, Springvale township, was in Hayes last Friday, to engage a teacher for the summer term of five months, in his district. J. ZEBE.

Ironton.

The skirmish for more wood choppers continues.

Another dance at Scheffer's hall last Thursday night.

The Iron Co. got their kilns full on Friday last, the first time since last fall.

Frank Noyes, who is at work in Charlevoix, was at home on a visit a few days last week.

Dr. Youngs, of East Jordan, was in town on Friday. He reports business good in that village.

Rev. Richard Tindall preached at Ironton school house last Sunday, and the audience were well pleased with the discourse.

Mr. John Morehouse, who has been employed by the Pine Lake Iron Co. for the past two years, has gone to Newberry, to work in the furnace there.

Our streets are quiet except on Saturday. That being pay day for the Indians, they manage to get enough "fire-water" to make themselves noisy. ARGUS.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by UPRIGHT BROS., real estate abstracters.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Feb. 19, 1884, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Isaac L. Lyon and wife, to J. C. Schaub, n ½ of s ½, 10-32-6, $200.

Henry Cunningham and wife to Byron See, lot 32 of Upright's addition to Charlevoix, $100.

I. L. Lyon and wife, to Thomas Phelps, n w ¼ of s w ¼, 11-32-6, $200.

C. W. Fortney to J. K. Feick, n ½ of n ½, 21-34-5, $480.

Norman E. Warren and wife, to Charles Kelly, part of lot 20, blk 13, Charlevoix, $150.

S. M. See et. al. to Greening & Gelken, lots 16 and 17, blk 19, Newman's addition to Charlevoix, $1,180.

D. C. Lowsley and wife, to Melissa A. Keene, w ½ lot No. 7, in blk No. 1, South Lake, $300.

Chandler.

Plenty of snow.

Samuel Hughes one of the first settlers of this part of the county, was buried on Monday of last week. He was 70 years old and leaves a wife and seven children. The whole community sympathize with the grief-stricken family.

I see in the Sentinel of last week that there were two issues in the county, and that one was "J. L. Reigle, of Chandler, and ought to be put on the ticket." The other is Wilford A. Smith, of Charlevoix township, and should be put on the near side, being the longest eared and smallest (in principle). I hope the two extremes will come together and see how they will work. SEMPER AVE.

M. E. Quarterly Conference.

The quarterly conference of the M. E. church will be held next Saturday and Sunday. Presiding Elder Stinchcomb is expected to be present. There will be preaching at 2 o'clock, and conference meeting at 7 in the evening. Love feast at 9:30 Sunday morning, followed by preaching and the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

FARM FOR SALE.

Consisting of 84 acres, six miles from Charlevoix, on main road. Soil, clay loam. A good frame house, and barn frame lumber. About 35 acres cleared, balance good growth and mixed timber. Will be sold at a bargain, and on long time if desired. Inquire of the undersigned, or address, Terms, three thousand seven hundred dollars, with not less than two thousand down; balance to suit purchaser. For further particulars apply to DAVID H. FRANCIS, Charlevoix, Mich.

LIVERY.

The undersigned has purchased the livery formerly owned by him, and installed

Geo. Durance, Manager.

There has been added a new stock of

Horses and Carriages

And a cordial invitation is extended to all old friends and patrons to call and see him whenever they need anything in their line.

GOOD SADDLE HORSES A SPECIALTY WITH THIS STABLE.

J. MILO EATON.

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at O. B. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

OVERWORKED.

BY ELLA WHEELER.

"Up with the birds in the early morning—
The dreadful early morning, I call it now;
Remembering that in the old days dawning
But she's never a moment to lie in bliss.
The men are wanting their breakfast early;
She must not linger, she must not wait;
Lest they think that she sleeps and looks that are ugly
Are what the men give when the meals are late.

Oh, glorious orders the clouds are timing,
If she would but look out little and three!
But she must be dressed, and sit in the chamber
When the sun is up in the sky.

These things always must hold in thine.
The world is filled with the wine of beauty,
If she could but pause, and drink it in;
But opportunity knocks, must wait for duty,
Neglected work grumbles.

The day grows hot, and her hands grow weary;
Oh, for an hour to rest her!
Only with life thoughts and woods and clover,
But she must sit indoors and make her bread.
The boys in the fields are working,
Yonder she sits, sitting with the bread,
Wearily, wearily, and all the world is glorious
And she grows cold make them and regard.

They do not know that the heart within her
Hungers for beauty and things sublime,
They only know that they want their dinner,
Want it, and now, jus. 'on time.

Up from the meadows, up from the meadows,
And dinner dishes are all put by,
Slowly and wearily, for he will be asking,
The time for supper and "chores" drags slow.

Her boy is at school, must look like others,
She sees, and her heart aches for hole tricks and hose;
Patching and darning, and cutting over clothes
For the least weakest of her numerous children,
Her hose and comes from the field of labor,
He gives her a minute to worry with;
Then dole on leaves than has her neighbor;
"Go to bed or still complaining off—

But after the stalls and weary tasks
With life is done, and the fire at rest,
The mother's brain and heart and needles
Are hers and sleep—shall all her blest.
And I trust she is awarded for of heaven,
The reward of her patient life,
And the blessed crown—God will be given
Unto the weary worn farmer's wife.

THE TWO MRS. TUCKERS.

BY LOSE TERRY COOKE.

"You can make the fire while I put the boss out," said Amasa Tucker, as he opened the back door of a gray house, set on top of a treeless hill, bucked here and there with paths the geese had made in their daily journeys to the pond below, and only approached at his back by a lane to the great red barn, and a rickety board gate set between two posts of the rail fence.

This was wealthy Ann Tucker's home-coming. She had married Amasa that morning at her father's house in Stanton, a little village twenty miles away from Peet's Mills, the town within whose wide limits lay the Tucker farm, and had come home with him this early spring afternoon in the old wagon behind the bony horse that did duty for Amasa's family carriage.

Mrs. Tucker was a tall, thin young woman, with a sad, reticent face, very silent, and capable; for the last traits had been her chief recommendation to her husband. There was no sentiment about the matter. Old Mrs. Tucker had died two weeks before this marriage, but Amasa was "force-handed," and his sister-in-law, who had lived the long had improved his opportunities and been "sparkin" Wealthy Ann Minor all winter, in judicious provision for the coming event of his solitude.

He had bought the thing all over, and concluded that a wife was cheaper than a hired girl, and more permanent; so when he found this alert, firm-jointed, handy girl living at her uncle's, who was a widower on a great farm the other side of the village, Amasa made her acquaintance as soon as possible and proceeded to further intimacy. Wealthy liked better to work for her uncle than for a step-father with six secondary children, but she thought it would be better still to have a home of her own; so she agreed to marry Amasa Tucker, and this was the home coming.

She opened the door into a dingy room with an open fireplace at one end, a window on the north and one on the south side, small, paned with old, green and imperfect glass, and letting in but just enough light to work by. One corner, to the south, was petitioned off to make a pantry, and a door by the fireplace led out into the woodshed. The front of the house contained two rooms. One opened into the kitchen and was a best room, furnished sparsely enough; the other was a parlor, with high-backed rush-bottomed chairs against the wall, a round table in the middle, a fireplace with brass andirons, and fire-irons, a family Bible on the table, and a "mourning piece" painted in ground hair on the mantel. Green paper shades and white cotton curtains, a rag carpet fresh as it came from the loom—if its dinginess could ever be called fresh—and a straight-backed sofa covered with green and yellow glazed chintz, made as dreary an apartment as could well be imagined. Wealthy shut the door behind her quickly, and went to the shed for material to make her fire. It was almost sundown and she was hungry; but she found only the emptiest supply of wood, and a few dry chips of kindling. However she did her best, and she had brought some provisions from home, so that she managed to lay out a dry cut supper on the rickety table, by the time Amasa came stamping in from the barn.

He looked disapprovingly at the pan, the biscuit, the sliced beef, and the jelly set before him.

"I hope ye ain't a waster, Wealthy," he growled. "There's vittles enough for a township, and the ain't but two of us."

"Well, mr. folks sent 'em over, and you no need to eat 'em," she answered, classily.

"I ain't goin' to; don't you break into that jell, set it up; sometimes or mother somebody may be a comin', and you'll want of it."

Wealthy said no more; they made a supper of biscuit and beef, for the pie she was ordered "set by."

She was used to economy, but not to stinginess, and she excused this extreme thrift to her husband more easily for the reason that she had always been poor, and she knew very well that he was not rich, to say the least. But it was only the beginning.

Hard as Wealthy had worked at her uncle's, he also found harder burdens; she had to draw and fetch all the water she used from an old-fashioned well, with a heavy sweep, pumpers use to see, but were unused to this; wood was scarce, for though enough grew on the limited acres that Amasa owned, he grudged its use.

"I ain't got down more than is really needful," he said, when she urged him to fetch her a load; "wood's allers a growth when ye don't cut it, and a makin' for lumber; and lumber is better to sell, at sight, than cord wood. Ye must get along somehow with a broad; mother used ter turn hers to ashes."

She did not remind him that his mother was bent double with rheumatism, and died of the fifth attack of pneumonia. Wealthy never wasted words

Then there were eight cows to milk, the milk to strain, set, skim, churn, or make into cheese, and nothing but the simplest utensils to do with. A cheese hoop of the size of the pail served for a skimmer, the pails themselves were heavy wood, the pans old and some of them leaky, the holes stopped with bits of rag, often to be renewed; the milkroom was in the shed, built against the chimney that it might not freeze there in the winter, only aired by one small slatted window; the churn was an old wooden one with a dasher, and even the "spadkin" with which she worked her butter was whittled out of a maple knot by Amasa himself, and was heavy and rough.

Then belonged to her the feeding of the pigs—gaunt, lean animals with sharp snouts, ridge backs, long legs and thin flanks, deepest eyes, sunk glassed with malice and never-satisfied hunger. Wealthy grew almost afraid of them when they clambered up on the rails of the pen in their fury for food, and flapped their pointed ears at her, squealing and lighting for the scant fare she had brought. For Amasa always said and overworked everything that belonged to him.

Then there were hens to look after—the old-fashioned barn-door "creepers," who wanted food, too, and yet catered for themselves in great measure, and made free with barn and wooded lot for want of their own quarters, and were due indeed every season by hawks, owls, skunks, weasels and foxes, to so much of the little chickens on which crows and cats worked their will if they dared to stray beyond the ruinous old coop contrived for them by Amasa's ingenious genius out of sticks and stones.

Add to all this the cooking, washing, baking and sewing, the insufficient supply of pots, potatoes and tough pies, the "blind dinners" when strangers came, and cats worked their will if they dared to stray beyond the ruinous old coop contrived for them by Amasa's ingenious genius out of sticks and stones.

Then came a heavy blow. Lorana, a girl of 15, fresh and pretty as a wild rose, and tired of the plodding economy, the penurious work, and grinding life of the farm, ran away with a tin peddler and broke her mother's heart; not in the physical sense that hearts are sometimes broken, but the weary woman's soul was set on this bright, winsome child, and her life lost all the scant savor when the bright face and clear young voice left her forever.

"I don't blame her none, Amasa," she sobbed out to her boy, now a stout fellow of 22, raging at the news; "I don't feel to blame her. I know the mare's a girl and hear to take this way. I've had to, but it's been dreadful hard—dreadful hard. I've sighed more'n once I could ha' laid down along with the little babies out there on the hill, ever since I was married, but there was you and Lury wanted me, and so my time hadn't come.

"Amasy, you're a man grown now, and if you should get married, and I suppose you will, men folks seem to think it's needful, whether or no, do kinder make it easy for her, poor creature! Do, I grind her down to death just as hard, like me, dear; isn't just right. Do more'n I did, and think of a woman than of she was a horned critter, and she's your wife.

"Mother, I never will," answered the son, as energetically and solemnly as if he were taking his oath.

But Wealthy was nearer to her rest than she knew. Her strength had fled in dirt, neglect, poor food, constant toil and care, and the want of every winsome and pleasant influence in her mind or body, and when least expected a scrape down and then its head on the in the isolated farmhouse no less than in the crowded city slums, the scourge of New England, typhoid fever, broke out in the Tucker homestead.

Wealthy turned away from her weekly baking one Saturday morning just as the last pie was set on the pantry shelf, and staggered on the kitchen floor, where Amasa the younger found her an hour after, muttering, delirious and cold.

What he could do then, or the village doctor, or an old woman who called herself a nurse, was all useless; but the least of any kind word would have been equally futile; she was never conscious again for a week, then her eyes seemed to see what was about her once more, she looked up at her boy, laid her wan cheek on her hand, and died.

Hardly had her wasted shape been put away under the evergreens and hard back when her husband came from the layfield smitten with the same plague; he was badly delirious for three weeks of alternate burning, raving and chills ended at last in the gray and grim repose of death for him, and another Amasa Tucker reigned alone on the old home on the hill.

It is not to be supposed that in all twenty years Amasa Tucker ever had been blind to the charms of the other sex; he had not "been with" every girl who went to school with him, or when he met at singing schools, spelling matches, or who smiled at him from her Sabbath place in the meeting, "held up his end" in the village chorus.

He had been faithful always to the shy, delicate, darkeyed girl he married, was his school sweetheart, and, ever since to Mary, he had hoarded to ask her to share his life and home. He had intended to take a farm on shares the next summer, and work his way slowly upward to a place of his own; now he had this 100-acre farm, and, to his great surprise, he found $3,000 laid up in the bank at Peet's Mills, the slow savings of his father's fifty years, and he came once to set his home in order; he needed a housekeeper, and Mary's advice restrained him, so he did his best with this; the cobwebs were cleaned and whitewashed with his own hands, cleaned its one begrimed window and set two more, so that it was sweet and light; the house was scrubbed from one end to the other, a bonfire made of the old dirty comfortables and quilts, the kitchen repainted a soft yellow, and set with clear large glass set in place of the dingy old sashes; the woodhouse was filled with dry wood and good store of pine cones and chopped brush and kindling. A new milk-room was built but a little way from the back door, over a tiny brook that ran down the hill north of the house, and longer the slatted floor kept up a cool draught of fresh air, covered passage connected it with the kitchen, and a door into the old milk-room made of that a convenient pantry, while the removal of the old one from the kitchen corner gave that apartment more room, air, and light. A new stove, with a set boiler, filled up the hearth of the old fireplace, but further improvements Amasa left for Mary.

A different home-coming from his mother's she had indeed, on just such a spring day as Wealthy came there, but he was a proud man, and the big bowl of pink arbutus blossoms made its fragrance and dim light seem as rich to was had ready for her to light, the shining teakettle filled, and the pantry well stocked and then its head on the knowledge of household wants could suggest; flour, butter, eggs, sugar, all were in abundance, and no feast of royalty ever gave more pleasure to its guests than Amasa spread and his bride Mary made and baked for their supper, the stewed dried apples, the rich full cheese and the fragrant tea gave Amasa this happy evening. Next day they took their wedding trip to Peet's Mills in the new and sensible farm wagon Amasa had just bought, with a strong, spirited horse to draw it.

"I want you should look around, Mary," he had said the night before, "and see what is needed here. I expect most everything is wanting, and we can't lay out for finery. But first of all get what'll make your work easy. Your wedding present will come along to-morrow; they will lay necessities."

Mrs. Peet had sent her only girl empty-handed to the new house, good mattresses, two pairs of blankets, fresh, light comfortables, and some cheap, neat, white spreads; a set of gay crockery, a clock, and a roll of bright ingrain carpeting had all come to the farmhouse soon after the bride's arrival; her ample supply of sheets and pillow cases, strong towels and a few tablecloths had been sent the day before, so this sort of thing was not needed, but there was a new chest brought and altogether new furnishings for the dairy, several modern inventions to make the work of a woman easier, a set of chairs, a table, and an easy lounge for the farmer, some extreme covered with apple blossoms and white thorn clusters and pails, brooms and trivets that would have made Wealthy a happy woman, crowded the over-full wagon box when they turned homeward.

The old house began to smile and blossom under the new dispensation, and the new mistress smiled too.

Amasa milked the cows for her, and lifted the heavy pails of milk to strain into the bright new pans; he filled the wood-box by the door twice a day, put a patent pump into the old well, and placed above the house, on a pole down into a sink set in the woodshed, and so put an end to the drawing and carrying of water.

The fat, round, placid pigs that now enjoyed themselves in the new pen he took care of himself.

"Don't work for women folks," he said. "Don't do nothin' for 'em, if there's the garden you'll have an eye to, and the chickens, if you're a mind to; I'm going to build a hen house and a yard to it right off, that'll be good enough for them. Don't be afraid of them, and I want you to promise if my time the work gets a little heavy and a varies you don't speak right out to me, I'm afraid to have everything else worn out rather than my wife."

Really, it paid. It does pay, my sons, to be good to your wife, and a kindly word now and then. If you hand down a offender, or your father had in the past, the reflex of women never would have neglected or hurd you as they do now, or unnerved and made strident and clamorous that half of creation which is and always was unreasonable enough to have tender hearts. Try it and see.

Amasa was wise also his generation. He had seen in a mother suffer, and learned a lesson. Mary never pined for a little oppression of her sex, and kept the house in such order and so well ordered that it was a pleasure to come home to it. Hearty, healthy, cheerful, she was a new man's delight, and altogether new furnishings for the dairy, several modern inventions to make the work of a woman easier, a set of chairs, a table, and an easy lounge for the farmer, some extreme covered with apple blossoms and white thorn clusters and pails, brooms and trivets that would have made Wealthy a happy woman, crowded the over-full wagon box when they turned homeward.

The old house began to smile and blossom under the new dispensation, and the new mistress smiled too.

Amasa milked the cows for her, and lifted the heavy pails of milk to strain into the bright new pans; he filled the wood-box by the door twice a day, put a patent pump into the old well, and placed above the house, on a pole down into a sink set in the woodshed, and so put an end to the drawing and carrying of water.

The fat, round, placid pigs that now enjoyed themselves in the new pen he took care of himself.

"Don't work for women folks," he said. "Don't do nothin' for 'em, if there's the garden you'll have an eye to, and the chickens, if you're a mind to; I'm going to build a hen house and a yard to it right off, that'll be good enough for them. Don't be afraid of them, and I want you to promise if my time the work gets a little heavy and

PLAT OF

J. Milo Eaton's Addition

TO THE Village of Charlevoix.

Lots 7 to 30, inclusive, have a frontage of 49 to 79 feet on the street. Lots 31 to 40 and 43 to 50, inclusive, contain one acre each. Lots 41 to 44, inclusive, contain one-half acre each. There is a terrace about 20 feet high, on the line of the lots between Lake and Terrace streets, and another about 20 feet high on the west side of Terrace street.

This Addition is situated on the shores of Pine Lake, just south of the Kalamazoo Resort, and is finely located with reference to the Resort and the village proper. May street is a main thoroughfare from Stover's Mill near the cemetery to the new planing mill, and shortens the distance to a five-minute walk from the addition to the postoffice, most of the way over a fine sidewalk. The lots are all cleared and in grass, and most of them perfectly level. Anyone wishing to get a lot large enough for a residence and garden cannot find a better place to locate than this addition. For terms, address the proprietor

J. MILO EATON, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

EVERYTHING

IN THE LINE OF

Furniture and Undertakers' Goods

CAN BE FOUND AT THE OLD RELIABLE HOUSE OF

HENRY C. COOPER, CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See Me Before Buying.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Judge Folk, of Brownsville, Tenn., has invented a spiral windmill, which will run street and railway cars.

—A Suspension Bridge inventor is at work on a boat with which the ascension of the whirlpool rapids of the Niagara is to be made.—N. Y. Times.

—An Atlanta (Ga.) man has invented a wheel for wagons in which, if a spoke breaks, neither tire nor rim is removed to put in a new one. The invention has been patented.

—Up to 1876 the standard capacity of freight cars was 20,000 pounds. In 1877 a few were built to carry 30,000, and since 1879 the standard cars, both of the East and West, have been built to carry 40,000.

—Soda springs have been found at the head of Ahtanum Valley, some twenty-six miles from Yakima City, Washington Territory. Good bread has been made by simply mixing flour with water from the spring, using no other ingredient but salt.—Denver Tribune.

—A correspondent of the British Medical Journal states that he has found the application of a strong solution of chromic acid three or four times by means of a camel's hair pencil to be the most efficient and easy method of removing warts. They become black and soon fall off.

—It has been ascertained by Mr. C. O. Bonnella that the magnesium light, as used by the United States Coast Survey, is an effective night signal for distances as great as forty-five to seventy miles. Even the ordinary student lamp with a parabolic reflector may be seen as much as forty miles away.

—Mr. R. H. Wadlow, a Brooklyn (Ga.) man, after three years' hard work and study, has finally invented and patented a new method of making shoes. The entire uppers of these shoes are of one piece, with no seams that touch the foot. They are made with an adjustable instep, and fastened with buckles; his own invention.

—The London Lancet tells how to cure a bone felon. As soon as it is felt put directly over the spot a fly blister the size of your thumb nail. Let it remain for six hours, at the expiration of which time directly under the surface of the blister may be seen the felon, which can instantly be taken out with the point of a needle.

—Pine sawdust, highly compressed, has been successfully used to make up center frames of carriage wheels. It is said to be so solid that it will bear a pressure equal to twenty-three tons per square inch. Ax sawdust has also been used for partitions and bricks, its application to the production of complex carvings and mouldings does not seem to be far off. This opens up quite a new market for sawdust, which has hitherto been a comparatively waste product.—Boston Post.

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BYGONE YEARS,

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 33. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1884. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

is published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

OFFICE OVER T. D. SMITH'S GROCERY,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

BURKSHIRE & CHIEF, Attorneys at Law, Office in Bullard's Block, Charlevoix, Mich. A. B. CHIEF. W. O. BURKSHIRE.

JOHN C. ALLDRICH, Attorney at Law, East Jordan, Mich. 22

PETER W. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor at Real Estate Agent promptly attended to. EAST JORDAN.

H. J. JUDSEY, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

J. M. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

NORTON, KEAT & MARTIN, Attorneys at Law. Office opposite U. S. Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

OSCAR F. WISNER, Attorney and Solicitor, and U. S. Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX.—Capital $50,000. Savings department, loans, real estate, and pledge of government, county, and city bonds. Not over $1,000 for more than twelve months. Money to loan on first mortgages. For this and domestic exchange. REYNOLDS & BROWN.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7, in the school house. C. P. VANSCHOICK, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7. J. T. HODGINS, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOOSIER AND READY FIRE COMPANY meet the first and third Thursday evenings of each month, at the town hall. C. F. BISSELL, Secretary.

HOMEOPATHIC PHARMACY.

H. SCUTELLE, Homeopathic Medicines, Books, Domestic Cases, etc., Charlevoix, Mich.

LIVERY STABLE.

J. MILO EATON, Proprietor. Tony, Dagmar, Maude, Dexter, Jerome, Horses and Stages kept. Good Saddle Horses a Specialty.

PHYSICIANS.

J. A. CARLISLE, M. D. Office at the Ingleside.

L. LEWIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office in the Lewis block, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. M. CRANDON, M. D., Surgeon and Homeopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich. 19

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HORACE S. HARMON, Notary Public, Real Estate, Loan, and Insurance Agt., Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

G. A. R.—Barker Post No. 132, meets second Monday in each month, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. G. T.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 587, meets every Friday evening, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Round Lake Lodge No. 281 meets every Wednesday evening in their hall.

F. & A. M.—Free Mason Nic. 107, meet Saturday on or before the full moon, in Odd Fellows' hall.

MASONIC.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 283, meets on Tuesday on or before full moon. Hall over postoffice.

A. BUTLER, President. A. H. UPHAM, Vice President.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

A general banking business transacted. Money to loan on approved security at reasonable rates. Drafts sold on Chicago and Detroit. Collections given careful attention and remittances made promptly.

G. S. THOMAS, Cashier.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Fitzen's Restaurant. W. S. JOHNSON, Op. Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations excellent. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only sample room in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public. Rates reasonable. Hot Tub, Shower and Cold Bath Rooms.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor.

Boyne City, Michigan.

Stages from each train. Rates reasonable. Good livery in connection. Sample rooms free.

1672 | 1884

DR. G. W. CROUTER,

THE DRUGGIST.

Our Motto: P. P.

PURITY, POLITENESS.

WE MAKE IT A POINT TO SELL ONLY

Full Strength & Fresh Goods

OUR PRICES WILL ALWAYS BE AS LOW AS

STRICTLY PURE DRUGS

CAN BE SOLD.

Our Stock is the Largest in the County.

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

at his store near the bridge.

All kinds of fruit and vegetables, in their season. Nuts, candies, pop, pickles, etc., always on hand. Call and see me. West side Bridge St.

C. R. BELLINGER

carries the largest and finest stock of

JEWELRY,

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Optical Goods to be found in the town, and is prepared to sell them at the LOWEST MARKET RATE, the best time-piece ever made. All goods left for repairs and not called for in six months are subject to sale for charges.

O. W. SMITH,

ELECTRO-PLATER,

Manufacturing Jeweler and Lapidist.

Electro-plating in Gold and Silver. Any article of jewelry made to order. AGATES AND JASPERS cut to order. 29

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card to take effect January, 1st.

GOING NORTH.

STATIONS.	No. 1	No. 3	No. 5	No. 7
Cincinnati, lv		7 40am	7 15pm
Richmond	2:37pm	10 32	9 52
Winchester	3 15	11 37	10 00
Ridge Hill	4 11	12 37	11 21
Muncie, ar	4 45	12 55pm	11 50
Fort Wayne, lv		2 25	2 05	6 42am
Kendallville		3 05	3 02	7 17
Sturgis		5 13	4 14	8 20
Vicksburg		6 11	5 12	11 48
Kalamazoo, lv		6 45	5 45	12 20pm
Kalamazoo, ar		7 00	6 00	12 35
Allegan, ar			7 32	3 37
G R Junc., ar	2 15am		10 05	5 45
DH H & M Junc	5 30		10 05	5 45
Howard City	6 40		11 15	7 00
Big Rapids	8 15		12 10pm	8 25
Reed City	10 15		2 12	10 20
Cadillac, ar	11 25		3 20	11 30
Traverse City			5 30	8 50
Petoskey (E C R R)			8 17	12 00am
Kilkaven, lv			8 47	12 30
Marquette			8 47	2 25
Boyne Falls			5 47	2 25
Pelonk Spur			6 15	3 00
Ellsworth			6 35	3 20
Bellaire (C&G)			9 00	6 05
St. Ignace			7 00	2 00
Marquette			7 45pm	5 00pm
Negaunee, ar			9 12	7 05

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No. 2	No. 4	No. 6	No. 8
Negaunee, lv			5 15pm	7 00am
Marquette			8 00	9 30
St. Ignace			5 45am	8 15pm
Mackinaw City			6 10	8 35
Harbor Springs			7 00	4 20
Petoskey, lv			7 25	4 50
Bay View			7 35	5 00pm
Conway			9 13	5 11
Walloon			9 19	5 18
Traverse City, lv			9 35am
Cadillac, ar			11 45	5 30
Cadillac, lv	3 30pm		11 45	5 50
Reed City	5 05		1 10pm	7 10
Big Rapids	6 10		2 10	8 40
Howard City	6 50		2 35	8 47
DH H & M Junc	7 40		3 25	9 05
GR Rapids, ar	7 40		4 05	10 25
GR Rapids, lv		6 40am	4 22	12 30pm
Kalamazoo, ar		8 32	6 32	2 34
Kalamazoo, lv		8 47	6 47	2 49
Vicksburg		9 35	7 35	3 35
Sturgis		10 01	8 16	4 12
Kendallville		11 18	9 35	5 31
Fort Wayne, ar		12 30pm	10 52	6 42
Fort Wayne, lv	12 52	5 30am	12 05pm
Ridgeville	3 09	7 56	2 35
Muncie	3 49	8 38	3 15
Richmond, ar	4 37	9 37	4 05
Cincinnati, ar	7 05pm	12 50pm	7 20am

C. L. LOCKWOOD, Asst'g. G. P. Agt., Grand Rapids, Mich.

HALL'S

Catarrh Cure

is Recommended by Physicians!

$100 REWARD FOR A CASE IT FAILS TO CURE!

We manufacture and sell this positive remedy, and guarantee that it will cure any case, and we will forfeit the above amount if it fails in a single instance.

It is unlike any other Catarrh remedy, as it is taken internally, acting upon the blood and mucous surfaces. Send for circulars, testimonials, and your druggist for it. DO NOT ACCEPT NO IMITATION OR SUBSTITUTE. If he has not got it, send to us and we will forward a bottle free. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

DR. CROUTER, Agt., Charlevoix. 29

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at O. R. Ward & Co.'s drug store.

MATTHEW STANLEY BLACKBURN.

J. C. S. BLACKBURN,

THE COMING SENATOR FROM KENTUCKY.

Hon. Joseph C. S. Blackburn, who will succeed Senator Williams of Kentucky, March 4, 1885, is in the 46th year of his age, having been born in Woodford county, Ky., October 1st, 1838. Mr. Blackburn commenced the practice of law at Lexington, Ky., in 1858, but in a few months moved to Chicago. In 1860 he returned to Kentucky, and at the breaking out of the war entered the confederate army as a private. He afterwards joined the staff of Gen. William Preston, as aide-de-camp, and distinguished himself for daring and bravery in several engagements.

At the close of the war Mr. Blackburn settled in Arkansas, but, in 1868, returned to his native state and county, where he engaged in farming, and also the practice of law. He was elected to the state legislature in 1871 and 1873; was then elected to the 45th, 46th, and 47th congresses and was re-elected to the 48th congress as a democrat, receiving 16,700 votes against 5,602 votes for Hord, republican.

Mr. Blackburn has been a conspicuous figure on the floor of the house, being recognized as one of the strongest and readiest debaters in that body. He had announced himself as a candidate for the speakership of the present house, but withdrew in favor of his colleague, Mr. Carlisle, and threw his influence in that gentleman's favor. Mr. Blackburn now represents the Kentucky district represented in bygone days by Henry Clay, John J. Crittenden and John C. Breckenridge. He entered the late senatorial contest in his state with but twelve votes pledged to him, whilst Senator Williams had fifty. Blackburn increased to forty-five, never lost a vote, and finally succeeded in carrying off the prize. He will continue to serve as a representative until March, 1885.

The Democratic Position.

There can be no question but that the advocacy of a "tariff for revenue only" commits the democratic party to an enforcement of the doctrine of free trade. There is not any doubt about that. The country understands that it is the ultimate design of the democracy to make international trade perfectly free. No true tariff reformer will deny that.

But the country should also be made to understand that the only object of the democracy is not to tear down. It desires rather to build up. It will therefore not undertake to make sudden and radical innovations in the industrial system and commercial regulations of the United States. Its efforts will be directed to attaining the desired end by gradual and easy reductions of tariff as the circumstances of the case may seem to require or warrant. It will seek first to cut down the immense surplus which is now rapidly accumulating in the treasury to invite the despoiling hands of the jobbers and the subsidy lobby. It proposes to curtail the princely revenues of the government and compel a return to the simple and economical methods of the early statesmen of the republic.

The great labor-employing industries of the nation will not be disturbed by the democratic policy. But gradually freed from the restrictions of the tariff, and infused with the quickening impulses of liberated trade, they will grow and expand until they shall make America the work shop of the world.—Cheboygan Democrat.

A Voice From The Kitchen.

While farmers' wives and hired hands are talking about woman's work, it is in order for somebody to say a word for hired girls "of whom I am which." A housekeeper can order her work, if she has any brains at all, so as to favor herself Sundays and get time to rest and go to church, but a girl has to do as she is told by the powers that be, and if they order a good dinner Sundays, and most of them do, Bridget must get it and do all the work that good dinners make, whether it is a broiling hot day in summer when it is all a body wants to do to keep still and breathe, or a short day in winter, when it gets dark before the work is half done up. Now I will tell you a little story. When I was working once on a time, it happened one Saturday morning I was busy in a room next to one where the lady of the house and a caller were talking. I wouldn't have you think for a moment that I was eaves-dropping, but I couldn't very well put my fingers in my ears and keep at work, too, so what could I do but hear? Says the caller: "I'm boiling a piece of ham to-day, so as to have cold meat for dinner to-morrow. I always plan to have something for dinner Sunday, that will make just as little work as possible." Says my lady with a toss of her head: "It makes little difference to me what I have for dinner, so that it's something good. I don't have to get it." Do you know what happened? It was real curious, for I'm as stout as an ox generally, but it wasn't two days before I felt so bad I had to go home, and I never got well enough to go back either. It was too bad, for Mrs. ——— expected company that very week from outside, summer visitors to stay a month, and girls were awful scarce that season, but, "it made little difference to me, I didn't have the work to do." Hateful was I? Maybe, but then hired girls do have feelings, just the same as folks, and there isn't any body perfect you know. A HIRED GIRL.

When a cure is guaranteed why will one refuse to be relieved of that cough which is liable to become seated on your lungs and to cause you among a suffering day and sleepless night? Your children are liable to be taken with Croup and die before a doctor can be summoned. No wise and reasonable man will fail to give relief from Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Croup, and all other lung difficulties, Hamilton's Cough Balsam will do all this and costs but a trifle. Price 25 and 50 cents a bottle. Sold by O. R. Ward & Co.

The "Free Thinkers," so-called, have been holding a convention ostensibly to defend that freedom of thought which so far from being threatened is upheld by every religious thinker of the age. To expand every energy to maintain freedom of thought to-day is entirely superfluous. As one of our contemporaries remarks: "Too much that is complacently called free-thinking by the men and women that indulge in it is simply loose thinking, or odd thinking, or reckless thinking or vague thinking. It certainly differs from the common run of thinking, but not because of its greater freedom." The real substance of free thinking, according to those persons, is in their opposition to the Bible, and is indicated by a resolution of this convention which states that "Free Thinkers" aim by criticism and argument to weaken the confidence of our fellow-citizens in the Bible as purely an inspired revelation from heaven." Here we have in a word the whole doctine and purpose of "Free Thinkers. They seek simply to overthrow the faith of those who believe in a divine revelation.—Messenger.

Beware! Coughs, colds, and slight throat diseases often develop into Bronchitis, Scated Cough, Consumption, etc., and should have immediate attention and be removed in the first stages. Not only public speakers, but all, are liable to throat troubles, and to obtain relief should use Hamilton's Cough Troches, which relieve Coughs and Hoarseness, making the articulation clear. Warranted to give satisfaction. Price 25c per box. Sold by O. R. Ward & Co.

Every woman, married or single, who needs to enter a profession, or object, should be so trained that she can enter one, or at least preform some useful service for which society will recommend her. Every girl should know that she can support herself if she desires to do so. If this were the case, women would have greater independence and freedom in choosing their husbands than they now have, and the knowledge that there is an alternative open to them would cause them to enter married life on a footing of greater equality than is now accorded to them. There would then be fewer of those unhappy marriages into which young women allow themselves to be hurried for fear of falling a burden upon their father or their brothers; fewer of those cases in which a woman says "yes" at the alter when her whole soul means "no." Selected.

Secure admiration. We can help admiring a lovely face, a clear, smooth, beautiful complexion. These can be easily obtained by the use of Hamilton's Oriental Balm. It will speedy remove Freckles, Tan, Pimples, and blemishes of every sort and be in no way injurious to the skin, but is the most harmless and elegant compound of its kind. Price 50c per bottle. Sold by O. R. Ward & Co.

An important Michigan industry is the business of getting out cedar lumber, which is used almost exclusively for telegraph poles. The chief advantage of cedar for this use is its remarkable durability, there being now lines of poles in this state which have been in service for thirty years, and are still in good condition. Other merits are its lightness, which renders it easy of transportation, and its softness, makes the poleesey and safe for the line men to climb. Michigan cedar is in demand for this purpose in many states, especially west, and the demand steadily increases.—Herald.

TOOTHACHE.—Money is a great cure for aching hearts, but a twenty dollar gold piece placed on an aching tooth doesn't seem to have as good effect. In fact, nothing is sure but Hamilton's Toothache Drops, which are warranted to cure in one minute. Price only 25 cents. Sold by O. R. Ward & Co.

Two boys aged about 16, giving their names as Walter Rooke and Chauncey Raby, were arrested, at Niagra Falls, on suspicion. They arrived by the Grand Trunk Atlantic express from the west, and believed they were in the United States. Three loaded revolvers, a supply of ammunition, and a book, "Adventures and Exploits of Frank and Jesse James," were found in their possession; also some money which they acknowledged having stolen at Berlin, where a confederate was arrested.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Hundreds have given up and said can't not be cured. 75 cents a bottle. Sold by Dr. Croutier.

Spurgeon, in preaching on "Confession," said: "Having searched the Bible through, I can only find one man mentioned who ever confessed, that is, Judas Iscariot; and you will remember, my brethren, that he immediately went out and hung himself."

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Pheneline Stock Powders unexcelled. 1 full pound package, sold by O. R. Ward & Co.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

For a firm can afford to pay $26,250 for the privilege of selling pools at two racing meetings in Kentucky, how much chance is there for the man who puts his money in the law?

A JAPANESE correspondent of the London Daily News having assumed that the Mikado was unpopular because he received no cheers while passing through the streets in state on his birthday, a Japanese gentleman writes to explain that cheering would be regarded there as disorderly. He further explains that the act of a young lady who wrapped up a piece of cake and put it in her sleeve at the Foreign Minister's reception, is quite "good form," and is accepted as an indication of a high satisfaction which she wishes to make those at home to share.

IMMIGRATION depends greatly upon national prosperity. British and Irish emigration is now seeking Australian fields. In 1882 we took 181,893 from the United Kingdom. In 1883 we took thence 192,016. In 1884 Australia took but 22,682 from the United Kingdom, but in 1885 the number rose to 71,329. But for this increase in Irish emigration in 1885 there would have been a great falling off in the emigration from the United Kingdom to the United States. The increase of emigration thence to Australia is said to be caused by the present prosperity of those colonies.

THE scene of the battle of Pittsburg Landing was visited the other day by a correspondent of the Call, of Peoria, Ill. He says that farmers still gather lead and iron in the field, and that one merchant shipped over 3,000 pounds of bullets last year. The other day a child found a shell that exploded after it had been buried for twenty-one years. Of the 3,500 soldiers whose remains lie in the cemetery, 2,361 were unrecognized. Two large iron cannon serve as columns at the gate of the cemetery. The grave nearest them is that of the "Drummer Boy of Shiloh." Albert Sidney Johnson died under a large tree that stood near by; but of the tree there is only the stump remaining, and the spot is marked by a young evergreen.

THE prize of $5,000 offered by the French Academy of Medicine for a cure for diphtheria was demanded at their last meeting by all sorts of people, among whom were a glass-maker, a machinist, an iron-founder, a hotel-keeper and a Justice of the Peace. Two women applied for it, one a lawyer's wife and the other the wife of a veterinary surgeon. One man proposed that the patient be beaten until he expelled the membrane, and another that he be exposed to scarlatina as a counter-irritant. There were several who wanted their expenses paid to Paris, so that they might explain their method of cure, and a large number who refused to disclose a secret before receiving the $5,000. No one had found the infallible remedy.

SENATOR VANCE tells this story: When Judge Tourgee was on the bench in North Carolina an old chum of his was brought before him on some trifling charge. During the trial the prisoner said something that highly displeased his Honor. "Do you mean, sternly said the Judge, "to bring this court into contempt?" The prisoner smiled and said: "Judge, you have known me for many years, and we have been friends, haven't we?" "That is a fact," said the Judge. "You would do me a favor within reason, even now, would you not?" "Very likely," responded his Honor, all gratuitous and good-humor; "but what is it?" "Well," retorted the scamp, "do not press my lord on the point of contempt this morning!"

THE most recent authority on white elephants, Mr. Carl Bock, tells us that the sanctity of a white elephant dates from the earliest period of Buddhist history. One of the proudest titles of the King of Siam is "Lord of the White Elephant." Not very long ago a real white elephant, who excelled all his fellows in beauty, was brought into Bangkok with all the pomp and ceremony of an emperor. According to Mr. Bock, he was quite an albino, the whole body being of a pale reddish-brown color, with a few white hairs on the back. The iris of the eye, the color of which is held to be a good test of an albino, was a pale Naples yellow. He was blessed and baptized in the presence of the King and the nobility. One of the high priests presented him with a piece of sugar cane, on which was written the elephant's name in full, and which he very readily ate. The following is a translation of his description, painted on a red tablet, hung over one of the pillars of his stall: "An elephant of beautiful color; hair, nails and eyes are white. Perfection in form, with all signs of regularity of the high family. The color of the skin is that of lotus. A descendant of the angels of the Brahmins. Acquired as property by the power and glory of the king for his service. Is equal to the crystal of the highest value. Is of the highest family of all in existence. A course of power of attraction of rain. It is as pure as the purest crystal of the highest value in the world." The elephant has for a companion a white monkey.

THOSE who have never seen the much talked of dynamite explosive will be interested to know that it looks very much like moist brown sugar. Nitro-glycerine, which is formed by the action of nitric acid upon glycerine, at a low temperature, is the active agent in dynamite, but is mixed with some absorbent substance to render it safer to handle than the liquid glycerine. The absorbent material thus used is silicious earth—the white powder composed of the remains of infusoria, and resembling powdered chalk; this takes up two or three times its weight of the nitro-glycerine, without becoming pasty, and the ingredients are easily mixed, leaden vessels and wooden spoons being used to avoid dangerous friction. When flame is applied to this mass it burns with a strong flame, without any explosion; but when ignited by a detonating fuse, or even by a sudden blow, its explosive force is tremendous.

BISHOP HENTHORN is out in an indictment of the public school system, on the score of its alleged inability, as things are managed now, to impart to the rising generation anything like moral education. "The supreme individual and national good," says the Bishop, "is character. Character implies elements that are moral and religious, as well as the intellectual; it includes conscience, affection, and will. Morality, as well as religion, gives way before the idolatry of the brain, and we are thus brought to confront the vast defect of our public school system." As to Sunday schools, the Bishop has but little respect for them as moral agents, while as to parents, "they are not moral themselves, or they lack the care, skill, and ability to discharge this chief parental trust." The conclusion evinced is that the Christian life is inseparable from Christian dogma, and that religious freedom does not mean freedom from religion.

SOME official tables, which have just been printed, says the New York Sun, set forth in a striking form the steady increase of demands for legislation in Congress. Among these is the following statement of the number of bills and joint resolutions introduced into the House of Representatives from the Thirty-eighth Congress to the Forty-seventh, inclusive:

Congress.	Bills.	Res.	Total.
Thirty-eighth	1,360	97	1,457
Thirty-ninth	1,256	105	1,360
Fortieth	2,151	179	2,330
Forty-first	2,601	222	2,823
Forty-second	4,075	304	4,379
Forty-third	4,867	262	5,129
Forty-fourth	6,307	321	6,628
Forty-fifth	7,186	429	7,615
Forty-sixth	7,257	449	7,706
Forty-seventh	9,455	517	9,972

This, it must be noted, is the record of the House alone. A like increase in Senate bills and resolutions brought the aggregate for the last Congress to more than 10,000; but for the present purpose, that of showing the degree of increase, the statistics of the House are sufficient. But while the number of bills and resolutions introduced into Congress, the number of petitions and memorials favoring or opposing them, and the number of reports of committees have so greatly increased in twenty years, it strongly happens not only that the relative number of bills passed has diminished, but even the absolute number has of late fallen off. This will appear from the following official summary for the Senate and House aggregated:

Congress.	Bills.	Acts.	Per cent.
Thirty-ninth	1,616	511	32
Fortieth	2,509	731	29
Forty-first	3,341	949	28
Forty-second	5,311	1,115	21
Forty-third	6,035	806	13
Forty-fourth	6,596	712	11
Forty-fifth	8,325	738	9
Forty-sixth	10,067	725	7
Forty-seventh	10,885	627	5

THE Deputy Sheriff of Texarkana, Tex., owns a game-cock and is so confident of his numerous cock-fights at that place as the most prominent sports.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

Two Roses.

Two roses grew upon a bush,
Where tender was the air;
The one was but just beneath blooms,
Yet hardly could it be said
But one stretched out to meet the light,
And made the glad sun
And all its petals ripening swelled
Before the other one.

The other one within the shade
Continually remained
Its bloom was lighter, but with time
A richer strength had gained
And when the sheet richer fell
The wind from off the hill
The center one the petals caught
That had upon her kissed.

Ah, like these roses twain were there—
Two girls that once I knew;
Two maids that dwelt upon a farm,
Near by a river blue.
Neither outshone ever tired
The other in beauty;
Yet were their mothers prouder care
Their bonnie, father's pride.

But Annie was the sprightlier girl,
Of the two sisters twinning river,
And Mollie, though not which fair
Was the prettier of the twain,
Full Annie grew to be in time
The belle of all the place,
While Mollie stayed at household tasks,
With beloved and charming grace.

Two suitors were in one house inside,
The one a careless youth,
Twenty of city fashions,
The other plain in truth,
Still a man of stalwart sort,
As true and tried as steel;
Yet Mollie favored the latter's form,
And worked with honest zeal.

Sweet Annie, too, not long were
The city man old charm,
Her heart from him was far for style
And wanted of the farm.
He was a fine, fine gentleman were
Her fashions and her ways,
And went away into the town
To learn grand display.

But Mollie would not from her home
A fashion-plate engage
And there, beside the deep old hearth,
Her lover came to
For her to city mansion fared,
To wedding fine and grand
A simple file she led with him
To Hymen's altar stand.

The story of the roses twain
Was premature here
The wind of fortune, never safe,
Veered round ere many a year,
There came a pale in the home,
Where Mollie ruled queen
And Annie's sweet fallen and died,
And left her widowed, alone.

Back to the deep old home she came,
Her father long was dead,
And Mollie's husband, once a "hand,"
Had taken the farm instead
And there, within that simple home,
Poor Annie found a nest,
Where she in time grew
Upon her sister's breast.

—E. L. Wakeman, in Good Cheer.

Practical Poverty.

My information on the subject is not very extensive, to be sure, but I know that every man, woman or child who plants a turnip in the right place is a patriot, because the action is a benefit to the country. I was taking a walk one day in summer under the grand old elms that shade the streets of New Haven back like the aisles of a great grand cathedral, when I saw three boys curiously watching an old gentleman who was filling a bag with elm seeds. I came up just in time to hear the old man ask the boys to finish filling the bag for him, as bending over so long was tiresome for one of his age. The three bright-looking, good-mannered fellows, and there were more than he had filled to the mouth to the beach where the tired old gentleman had taken a seat. As they put it up by his side, one of them asked what he wanted of such worthless stuff.

"I will tell you willingly," said the gentleman, "and perhaps you will be interested enough to ask me to tell more help. I went through the far Western part of our country last year, and found some very valuable trees. There are no trees that I thought I would do what I could to introduce, but this I really is a very serious want. Now, I am going to send some canvas bags of these seeds to all the postmasters in that way and see if they cannot get some one to plant the seeds and see everywhere else they like."

"What a good idea!" said one of the boys. "Where do you get the bags?"

"That is easy," was the answer; "I have four frightened little grand-daughters, and they have each an intimate little friend, and all this afternoon the eight bright-eyed girls have been hard at work making the little bags."

"Oh," said the biggest boy, "that's the bag party my sister Susie and cousin Kitty have gone to; I didn't know what they meant when they talked of it."

"That must be it," said the old gentleman; "I don't believe there is any other party of the kind. The girls are going to fill the bags and sew them up and tacks on the tags I have written addresses on. Then they will write some postal cards addressed to the same offices."

"How will they know what to write?" said one of the boys.

"They will copy this," said the gentleman; "taking a card out of his pocket, and putting on his spectacles to read it—"Mr. Postmaster, will you give the bag of elm seeds you receive with this to anybody in your town who is enterprising enough to plant them?"

"What makes you take all this trouble?" asks one of the boys.

"Do boys and girls, my boy, ever you tell what that means?"

"Yes, sir, for the good of the public."

"That is it. I love my country, and I love the people in it. If I were a rich man, I should do what I can for the public; but even if I am comparatively poor, I am not willing to the world out doing some good work, so I am going to leave my native country a legacy of trees. Every year that I live I mean to send a supply of seeds to the West."

One of the boys shouldered the bag to carry it home for the old gentleman, and the party moved off, when I went slowly across the park thinking that I would suggest to boys and girls that they do a little of this kind of forestry.—Indoors and Outdoors.

Mayne Reid in the Mexican War.

The Castle of Chapultepec, commanding the great road to Mexico, was successfully stormed by our troops on the 13th of September, 1847.

Reid was in command of the grenadier company of New York volunteers and a detachment of United States marines, with orders to guard a battery which they had thrown up. The morning of the 13th was fixed for the assault. The batteries were ordered to cease firing at 11 o'clock, and the attack began. Reid and the artillery officers, standing by their guns, watched the advance of the line with intense anxiety, which became apprehension when they saw that about half-way the slope there was a halt. "I knew," he says in his account, "that if Chapultepec was not taken, neither would the city be; and feeling that, not a man of us might ever leave the valley of Mexico alive."

Asking leave of the senior engineer officer to join the storming party with his men, he obtained it with the word, "Go, and God be with you!" He was off at once, with his volunteers and marines. After a quick run across the intervening ground, they came up with the storming party under the brow of the hill, where it had halted to await the scaling ladders. "At this point," says Lieut. Marshall, of the Fifteenth infantry, "the fire from the castle was so continuous and fatal that the men faltered, and several officers were wounded while urging them on. At this moment, I noticed Lieut. Mayne Reid, of the New York volunteers; I noticed him more particularly at this time on account of the very brilliant uniform he wore. He suddenly jumped to his feet, and calling upon those around to follow, and without looking around to see whether he was sustained or not, pushed on almost alone to the very walls."

Reid's action was not quite so reckless as this account of an eye-witness would make it appear. The outer wall of the castle was commanded by three pieces of cannon on the parapet, which, loaded with grape and canister, fearfully decimated the ranks of the Americans at every discharge. To advance seemed certain death. But death seemed equally certain, whether the assailants retreated or remained where they were. Such is his own explanation of his conduct.

"Men!" he shouted out, in a momentary lull of the conflict, "if you don't take Chapultepec, the American army is lost! Let us charge up the walls!"

Voices answered: "We will charge if any one will lead us!" "We're ready!"

"Come on! I'll lead you!" shouted Capt. Reid, as he sprang from cover of the scarp that had temporarily sheltered them, and made the charge, as I only described.

There was no need, he says, to look back to see if he was followed. He knew that his men would not have been there, unless prepared to go where he led. Absorbed in his aim, he saw the parapet crowded with Mexican artillerists, on the point of discharging a volley. He avoided it by throwing himself on his face, receiving only a slight wound in his scalp, and another slashing his clothing. Instantly on his feet again, he made for the wall in front of which he was brought down by a Mexican sword-ball tearing through his thigh.

All the testimony goes to show that he was the first to reach the top of the parapet. Reid's Lieutenant, Hypolite Dardouville, a young Frenchman, jumping the scaling ladders with the foremost, tore down the Mexican flag from its staff.

Before this, however, Reid was observed by Lieut. Cochrane, of the Voltigeurs. Cochrane was pushing his way easily with his men, when before him, fifteen or ten yards from the wall, a sergeant of infantry and a corporal were down and fell. "They were the only two at the time," he says in his statement, "whom I saw in advance of me on the rock upon which we were especially falling."

Reaching the wall, Cochrane ordered two men "to go back a little way and assist the ladders up the hill." As they passed the spot where the wounded of their by he raised himself with evident pain, and sang out above the din and battle of musketry, imploring the men to stand firm:

"Don't leave that wall," he cried "or we shall all be cut to pieces. Hold on, and the cards win!"

Cochrane answered, to reassure him: "There is no danger, Captain, of our leaving this! Never fear!" Then the ladders came, the rush was made, and the battle fell.

"The wounded officer," Cochrane continues, "proved to be Lieut. Mayne Reid, of the New York volunteers."

Lieut. Marshall, to whom we are indebted for that "bird's-eye view" of the coming officer in "his brilliant uniform," describes the shock produced by the exploit—all those who witnessed or knew of it pronounced it, "without exception, the bravest and most brilliant military feat performed by a single individual during the campaign."—Lieut. F. Trowbridge, in St. Nicholas.

THE world had its childhood, and when it was a child it spoke as a child, it understood as a child, it thought as a child; and, I say again, in that it spoke as a child, its language was true, in that it understood as a child its religion was true. The fault rests with us, if we insist on voicing the language of children for the language of men. If we attempt to translate literally ancient into modern language, original into accidental speech, poetry into prose.—Muller.

A ST. PETERSBURG PICTURE.

St. Isaac's Cathedral—A Structure Which Cost $14,000,000.

This (St. Isaac) is an illustration of the fact that when Russia really puts forth an effort she can and does compete the modern world in the splendor of her architecture; since the Czars of her dynasties are extinctless, and the shell of her legislature unscuttled. It is, however, unfortunate that there is no continuance in the city on which St. Isaac could be long placed, or at the distances it is impossible to see to advantage the magnificent flight of steps leading to its portico. Yet, I am one, each of these steps is grander, worthy of the Egyptian temple of Karnak. Moreover, the portico itself is supported by stupendous columns of the same materials, sixty feet in height and seven in diameter, and polished like the mirror surface of a mirror.

"Well," you perhaps exclaim, "that is there to remind us that this portal to distinguish it from others?" But look along these columns for their lines of pointing. You will discover none. They are monolithic. Yes, every one of them one solid stone of beautifully polished stone! With the exception of Pompey's pillar in Egypt and the Alexander column they are the largest of the monoliths which the hand of man has ever quarried, turned and polished. Now, ordinarily, a temple is content with one such portal as this; but rebel that this magnificence is here repeated on each of the four sides of the edifice.

Moreover, from the center of the structure the mighty dome rises to the height of 226 feet, and is itself also surrounded by thirty monolithic columns, while the roof, which gleams like a mountain of silver, is said to have cost gold worth $250,000. What wonder then that the cost of the whole cathedral was more than $14,000,000, $10,000,000 having been expended in merely driving into the soil a perfect forest of piles to make a sufficiently strong foundation for the enormous mass!

Now for the interior.

Before its gilded altar seven entire columns of malachite thirty feet high, and columns of lapis-lazuli, each of which cost $20,000. This exceeds every other display of these marvelous stones which the world knows. We are accustomed to regard a small fragment of either of them as a valuable ornament, imagine what sensation we should feel if times as high as ourselves! Yet this is only in keeping with the entire building; for we tread there a pavement of variegated marble; we see and steps of polished jasper; we ascend flights of alabaster; we are surrounded by walls gleaming with pieces of gasper, verde antique porphyry and malachite set in various designs and exquisitely polished, and adorned here and there with vast mosaic portraits of the saints, and shrines of gold incrusted with gems. The whole is, in fact, so magnificent as to seem incredible till you actually see it.—Stoddard's Indefinite Days Abroad.

Anglicisms in American Literature.

I believe it was Mr. Higginson who first set the fashion of using a hundred words to eliminate the lark from American literature; but there are several other words which we have adopted, and unlawfully inherited from our English ancestry. I have lately found myself much disturbed with Italy and the Mediterranean sea, because the skies of one and the water of the other failed to keep up their time-honored reputation for unmixed blueness. I do not need to explain that English writers have commented from century to century upon the intense azure of the Italian atmosphere and their own disappointment thereat. The art of forgery is the choice weapon of Anti-Shakspeare. But more than books, or Italy, or even the revolutionists, Bismarck depended on the curious heritage they which paralyzed the action of Prussia, and, indeed, most of the German States. It is easy to understand how he must have felt among their stupid diplomats who at once put on their official visage if I merely begin a light for my cigar." But, concluded the young man, writing from Frankfort in 1852: "If ever I come to stand on our own legs here, I shall either cease my field of weeds or go home again—more than suddenly."

THE Nihilists, borrowing an idea from the famous press law invented by Napoleon III., and adopted in Russia, have sought to shift responsibility from themselves to the Czar, by making it a crime, before finally suppressing him, "Ere warning," a second "warning" being equivalent to sentence of death, for which it may at any moment be followed. Several warnings have lately been issued, and formal sentence of death have been addressed to the Minister of the Interior, Count Tolstoi, the public prosecutor, Muravieff to assist, and the chief of the gendarmerie, Orjeski. What precautions Orjevski proposes to make have not yet been made known. But it is announced that the Count Tolstoi will surround himself with a body-guard of thirty men; whereas Muravieff, with what at first sight looks like reckless bravery, will continue to go about unattended. Its whether Muravieff or Tolstoi be the more courageous, it will probably appear that the former is the wiser of the two. Muravieff, properly disguised, may pass through many a crowd undiscovered, if not unseen. Count Tolstoi, on the other hand, will proclaim his presence everywhere by his body-guard of thirty men.

GEN. GORDON, of the British army, known in history as "Chinese" Gordon, who has just been detailed by the Khalifa to assist in the guilty parties to the Soudan, is a remarkable man and has had a most remarkable career. No Englishman of modern times, says the Chicago Herald, has had more influence in guiding the affairs of semi-barbaric people than this same quiet, self-sacrificing soldier of unevilized thought and action. His career in China almost stamps the genius of the man. Called in 1860 by the influence of Li, the Governor General of the Kiang provinces, to command the army operating against Tien Wang, the commander of the Taipings, he at once displayed qualities of statesmanship and generalship which won him a world's applause. His operations were one unbroken success. He took command when the Imperialists were in a desperate plight—their army had been disorganized and their spirit broken. For this distinguished service Gordon refused reward from the Chinese Government. He would accept no salary, no compensation of any kind, and he left China poorer than he entered it. He returned to England and courted neither the smallest publicity, or even preceded him, but he refused to be lionized. He detested publicity; he refused to have his biography written; he ceased to read newspapers which praised him; he entered upon a life of rigorous self-repression. In 1865 he was appointed Royal Engineer at Gravesend, and remained six years in seclusion. Decorations and medals he refused invariably. The Empress of China sent him a gold medal. He traced the inscription, sold it for $50, and sent the proceeds anonymously to Manchester for the relief of the sufferers by the cotton famine. All his leisure was devoted to the poor of Gravesend, he gave to the ragged schools of Gravesend. He lived for others, his purse was always empty, and he held the belief that money should have more of anything than enough for his bare needs. He was at once a medieval ascetic and a Cromwellian Puritan. Gordon was urged for the command of the Ashantee expedition, but he scorned political influence, and Wolseley was sent in his stead. It was not until 1874, he being then British Commissioner to superintend the dredging of the mouth of the Danube, that Gordon came into prominence. He was permitted by the Government to take service with the Khedive, succeeding Sir Samuel Baker as Governor of the Equatorial provinces. He was offered a salary of £10,000 a year, but he refused to accept more than £2,000—just enough for his personal expenses. He remained six years in the Khedive's employ, and had a varied experience. He broke up the infamous slave trade of the Upper Nile, won the confidence of the natives, established lucrative trades, restored the Khedive's authority in Bahr Gazelle, which had been usurped by the slave-dealer Sebehr, disbanded peaceably 5,000 Bashi-Bazouks who were used as frontier guards, but who were invariably bribed by the slave-dealers, and finally built up a flourishing trade and secured a fair revenue in the wildest anarchy in the world. His career as Governor General of the Soudan, which ended with the accession of Tewfik, was a wonderful success, and disclosed the same dauntless courage, habitual self-confidence and military sagacity which had been displayed elsewhere. Gordon met with a hearty welcome in England, but, as usual, declined all honors. Lord Ripon invited him to go to India as his Secretary, a place which Gordon accepted, but resigned when he got to Bombay. Subsequently he was called to China to "do all Gordon did." He goes round the Government in reference to the war then impending with Russia. Tso and Prince Chun were the leaders of the war party; Li and Prince Kung were in favor of peace; the issue between the factions was doubtful. Gordon turned the scale. He conferred with Li and met the great satrapa of the empire, and earnestly advised a pacific policy. The adoption of this policy was perhaps the greatest triumph of his life. He then returned to England and the Government made him a Major General and sent him to South Africa, but there was little here for him to do, and in five months he asked to be recalled.

LONDON has a company which insures against bicycle and tricycle accidents.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY OUGHT TO GO.

Republican Journal Gives Reasons That Are Conclusive.

Take the star-route frauds as an example. The vast majority of the people of the United States are convinced that many millions of dollars were stolen by a combination of mail contractors and public officials. They witnessed no attempt to bring the guilty parties to justice. The exposition of the frauds made it clear beyond the possibility of a doubt that there were groups of contractors, numbering in all more than a baker's dozen of individuals. After a year's preparation, with all the resources of the Government supposed to be at the command of the officers of justice, only one of the smallest of these different groups was brought to the criminal bar. More than a year was consumed in the trial of this group, during which the Government ransacked in lawyers' fees alone more than two-thirds as much as the conspirators were alleged to have stolen. Long before the trials were concluded it was apparent to every intelligent man, woman and child in the country that the so-called prosecution was farcical, and the acquittal of the accused was not unexpected. It is public address of Attorney General declared that during two years more than $4,000,000 had been stolen from the public treasury by these lands of plunderers, and two years have since elapsed without a dollar of the money being recovered or a single thief being punished. Has there been any public exposure of the miscarriage of justice? Have there been any evidences of popular discontent at the manifest incompetency, to use no harsher term, of the public prosecutors? How is this supineness with the people to be accounted for? Only upon the theory—the all-pervading conviction—that the Government is the legitimate prey of all who can successfully rob it of millions. The Government is an abstraction to the people in times of peace and general prosperity. They vaguely recognize the fact that they are the Government, and that they have been robbed—not in the abstract of an infinitesimal sum. A series of whole-sale robberies, by highwaymen or burglars, in a community, would cause intense local excitement, and rouse every man to exertion, and if the public authorities failed to do their duty a vigilance committee would speedily set Judge Lynch at work.—New York Times.

A Government of Monopolies.

A bill is before the United States Senate the object of which is to secure the debt owed to the Government by the subsidized Pacific railroads.

The commission appointed by the office of the Commissioner of Railroads, in the Department of the Interior, show that the Union Pacific owes the debt owed to the Government by the subsidized Pacific railroads.

The commission appointed by the office of the Commissioner of Railroads, in the Department of the Interior, show that the Union Pacific owes the indebtedness of those corporations to the United States was $16,225,000. Under the loose policy pursued by Congress in all matters involving the interest of the corporations, the Government has yielded little by little the security it should have held for this large debt, until it finds itself with nothing more than the general lien creeping in from the rear of the mortgages. When the subsidy bonds were authorized they were to be the first lien on the roads. But the corporations subsequently obtained legislation authorizing the issue of mortgages ahead of an amount equal to the subsidy bonds and giving the holders of the latter as first mortgage bonds.

When the subsidies were voted it was thought that the cheapness of transportation would speedily diminish the subsidies of the roads to the United States, and it was supposed as a matter of course that the total transportation service would become a set-off against the debt due the Government. But the lobbies and the sharp, thrifty Republican Congressmen took care that the loss should be so drawn as to be susceptible of a different construction. The railroad corporations soon began to demand payment of heavy bills for Government transportation, and a Republican Court of Claims decided that the Government could not withhold from the roads their earnings, except for transportation over the subsidized portion of their lines. The interpretation of the law has compelled the United States for years to pay to the corporations large sums of money, although the latter are indebted to the Government in an enormous amount, the eventual recovery of which is very doubtful.

In one instance the thoughtful Republican Congress so framed a bill as to enable the Republican courts to uphold the construction placed upon it by the railroads, and to compel the Government to pay the interest until the principal becomes due!

While Allen G. Thurman was in the Senate he procured the passage of an act requiring 5 per cent of the net earnings of the subsidized roads to be applied to the payment of the debt. But the constitutionality of this law is contested by the companies, although it is now in operation. Besides, the corporations forbid the investment of the sinking fund of United States bonds, as the Thurman act provides, on the plea that they lose the premiums which the bonds may command at the time of purchase. Thus over $8,000,000 of the Union Pacific's money and as much of the Central Pacific's, collected under the Thurman act, remains in the treasuries of those corporations to-day, and the Supreme Court, with its packed and purchased judgments, will no doubt be prepared to pronounce the Thurman act unconstitutional and to refund the accumulations under it to the corporations.

In plain language, the venal Republican Congresses and administrations of twenty years past have given the people over to the railroad corporations, bound hand and foot. When the subsidized companies choose to go into bankruptcy the Government will be forced to become a purchaser under foreclosure, subject to the first mortgage bonds, or will see the property pass into the hands of the Huntingdons, Dillons, and Goulds, with the whole debt due to the United States wiped out.

Even if the Thurman act should be enforced, the accumulations under it, together with all sums in the sinking fund and a credit of the whole Government transportation service, would still leave $75,000,000 due to the United States when the subsidy bonds fall due. No wonder the Commissioner of Railroads says that the Government is at the mercy of the roads.

This has been the mission of the Republican party since its old issues died out, when the patriotism of the whole people had crushed rebellion and rebellion had killed slavery. In place of a government of the people, by the people and for the people, they have built up a government of monopolies, by monopolies, and for monopolies!

The bill now proposed in the Senate would secure the payment of the large amount due from the subsidized roads, and would prevent the corporations from stealing the public money. In addition to grabbing the public lands. With a Republican Congress and President it is probable that a law will be enacted to this purpose.

A Shameful Record.

The history of the United States Navy department for the last twenty years is one of jobs, steals and criminal waste and extravagance. After annual appropriations, ranging from $19,000,000 to $48,000,000 for two decades, then United States, which, with the proper disbursement of this vast sum of money, ought to have the finest and most numerous and effective navies in the world, possesses a so-called navy unworthy to be compared with those of several insignificant South American Governments. The records of the Navy department of England, whose navy is, perhaps, the most costly and formidable in the universe, reveal no such liberal appropriations as these, yet the United States navy is the laughing stock of every naval power in the world.

In spite of expenditures of an even $100,000,000 by bureaus of construction during a period of eighteen years, the only vessels built within the last dozen years were eight wooden ships built under the act of 1873; two torpedo vessels, the Intrepid and Alarm, of which the former is a confessed failure, and the latter by no means a success; and the five unfinished monitors and the four steel ships begun last summer. Concerning the thirty-seven armored vessels afloat, Secretary Chandler a year ago reported: "They are of low speed, their engines are not modern, only fourteen being compound, and their steam maneuvering and destructive powers are inferior to those of the present warships of other nations." Of these thirty-seven ships, one, the Oneida, was sunk in February; two, the Alaska and Tuscarora, were sold for junk a few weeks ago at Mare Island navy-yard and brought $25,000 and $12,000 respectively. The following is a list of vessels built since the war:

	Tons displacement.
Alarm, iron	1,875
Adams, wood	1,375
Alert, iron	1,875
Alert, wood	1,020
Amphitrite monitored monitor, iron	3,990
Antietam ironclad, iron (but, wood)	4,050
Boston (offered for sale—no bids), wood	1,375
Enterprise, wood	1,375
Essex, wood	1,375
Intrepid, iron	1,875
Juniata, wood	1,020
Monadnock monitored monitor, iron	3,990
Monadnock (unmonitored), iron	3,815
Nipsic, wood	1,020
Passaic monitored monitor, iron	3,990
Pawtuxet, wood (partially sunk)	1,020
Saugus, iron	1,020
Swatara, wood	1,020
Talapoosa, wood	1,375
Tallapoosa, wood	1,020
Tecumseh monitored monitor, iron	3,815
Tuscarora, wood	1,375

Some of the figures showing the expense of the navy-yards, the cost of repairs, wages and salaries of seamen and officers, may perhaps interest the American patriot who, seeing no navy, wonders where his money has gone to. The whole cost of the nine navy-yards up to June 30, 1882, was $54,227,722.67. The expenditures of yards and docks for fifteen years ending June 30, 1882, was $23,945,176.80, and for the five years, 1877-81, there was expended at the navy-yards, except Mare Island, for support of yards, $10,714,792.55; labor, $5,463,054.77; material, $6,525,919.38. At the navy-yards Nov. 16, 1882, there were 2,326 commissioned and warrant officers, 2,561 enlisted men and marines, and 4,416 employes, whose wages that day were $11,319.57. The only work going on was the manufacture of stores and the repairs on the old vessels. The bureaus of construction and repairs, steam engineering, equipment and recruiting, and ordnance spent during Robeson's eight years at the head of the Navy department $74,206,183.98.—Washington cor. Chicago Times.

LOOKING the field over it is not hard to answer the query as to where we are to find those who will take the place of the professionals who may leave us. If there are some Democrats who do not yet understand this, the Republicans do, as is proven by their frantic efforts to divert the contest from practical to sectional and sentimental grounds.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE COMING METAL.

Discovery of a Cheap Process for Making Aluminum—The Revolution It is Likely to Work in Many Manufactures.

Aluminum, with one exception, is the most abundant metal known. The material, alumina or clay, from which it is produced is not confined to any locality or country. It is found everywhere. It is more than half a century since the eminent German chemist, the late Friedrich Wohler, who for fifty years was Professor of Medicine and Director of the Chemical Institute at Gottingen, discovered aluminum and that it could be produced from common clay and from alum, and still it is among the least familiar of metals. Its usual price is $20 per pound and until the past year it has only been known as "aluminum gold." After many experiments extending over a series of years, its manufacture was abandoned except in one instance, to the French, who only produced it in inconsiderable quantities. After more than thirty years' labor and at a cost of more than £250,000, the eminent English chemist and metallurgist, James Webster, has discovered a method of making aluminum by burning or roasting alum, instead of making it in the old and tedious way by precipitation. By the new process it takes only one twenty-fourth of the time required by the old method and costs less than one-tenth as much. Instead of producing the alumina powder by the old and slow method of precipitation, Mr. Webster turns the alum with potash in a calcining or roasting furnace, prepared expressly for this purpose, the product being a great ash or powder, in appearance much like the ashes of cinders from an engine furnace. This gray powder, according to all scientific authorities, is no more or less than burnt alum. By another process this ash is converted into another product, which contains from 34 to 35 per cent. of the alumina, having left behind it several impurities, which nearly pay the cost of working. The alumina thus produced is better than that by the old method of precipitation, in that it is much finer in texture and almost entirely free from silica. The discoverer has been producing 200 pounds of alumina per week for more than a year, the value of which is $4,000 or $20,000 per annum, the result of which has been that at the present time a manufactory which covers more than one-half an acre is kept busy, night and day, with orders ready for more than fifteen months' work. The present output is twenty tons of aluminum metal per week. From the results already obtained by the aluminum works factory (near Birmingham, England,) it is plainly evident that in a very short time this almost rare and peculiar metal, which never oxidizes or corrodes, and which never tarnishes under any circumstances, to which can be given the color of gold, silver, bronze or purple, and which differs from all other metals in that it is never produced direct from ore, but only by a long and elaborate process, will become an important factor in the manufacture of jewelry; and not only so, but that almost every article made from metal, from the screw-propeller or armor of the largest steamship down to the tiniest tenspoon, must be manufactured from it, or its alloy or bronze.

The chief value of aluminum, at present, is in tempering or giving strength and a surface or body to alloys, bronzes, or metals, so that they will not corrode. To copper, tin, or zinc it gives such properties as can be obtained by no other means, softening their nature while increasing their real hardness and strength, and enabling them to resist all the tests applied to gold or silver, preserving them from corrosion and rendering them more durable and refined, and giving them a surface and body that withstands the chemical action of the elements. As a result of this new process of making aluminum, all plated goods, nickel or silver, watch cases, cups, savoys, spoons, knives, forks, gun and pistol barrels, pistol handles, gun, harness, carriage and saddle ornaments made of brass, nickel, German silver, bronze or silver, and give way to those made of aluminum or bismuth' bronze. Piano-forte wires made from it will vibrate ten seconds longer than the best now in use. The tensile strength of aluminum or bismuth bronze being the same, only in the latter a 1-16th part of bismuth is added, had been proved, by repeated tests, to bear a strain of forty-two tons to the square inch, or fourteen tons more than gun metal, and twelve tons more than the best tempered steel. Whenever and wherever there is need of a metal, and one is demanded that cannot crystallize or corrode under any circumstances, a metal that combines great strength and flexibility, it is plain that aluminum must be used. In the tools already made with propeller screws, blades, journal bearings, and heavy ordinary made from aluminum or bismuth bronze, as against those made from the best gun metal, the ship builders decided in favor of the former, as the strength was so much greater and the weight so much less, being only one-fourth as great.—Springfield Republican.

A SCIENTIFIC man says great noises will make milk sour. They will also make the average citizen pretty sour especially if they come at night when he wants to sleep.

THE organ was known in France in the time of Louis I., 814, when an Italian priest constructed one. They were brought to western Europe from the Greek empire about the middle of the seventh century.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

National Democratic Convention.

The National Democratic Committee having met in the City of Washington on the 22d day of February, 1884, has appointed Tuesday, the 8th day of July next, at noon, as the time, and chosen the city of Chicago as the place for holding the National Democratic Convention. Each state is entitled to a representation therein equal to the number of its Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States. The Democrats of each organized territory and the District of Columbia are invited to send two delegates, subject to the decision of the convention as to their admission.

All Democratic conservative citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political associations and differences, who can unite with us in the effort for pure, economical, and constitutional government, are cordially invited to send delegates to the convention.

Notes and News.

Brookfield, Eaton county, has a man over 70 years old, who never used tobacco or whiskey, and always voted the democratic ticket.

The tri-weekly edition of the Detroit Free Press has been discontinued, and subscribers will get the daily instead. The price of the daily has been reduced from $10 to $7 and with the better mail service the tri-weekly is no longer a necessity.

Some people complain because governor Begole does not spend more time at Lansing. Don't he spend as much time as he can afford to for $1,000 a year? Give a man year pay, and he is apt to stick his work, whether as dittebugger or governor.

We believe democratic principles should predominate and we believe the party should take a manly, straightforward course, and if the democracy of any state is so feeble democratic, that they will but anything that does not suit them, then the sooner a new party is organized the better.—Adrian Press.

Prominent Grand Rapids democrats unite in expressing feelings of disappointment at representative Hosmer's course in denouncing the Morrison tariff bill. Some of the gentlemen are lumbermen, and therefore vitally interested, and while they admit that the profit will be slightly reduced, they have no fear of any general disaster resulting from a reduction of the tariff, or of putting lumber on the free list.

The next campaign is going to have for its issue the bloody shirt and the tariff. A serious mistake begin to see that tariff does not help them, but that they are at the mercy of the wealth of capitalists who import pauper labor to compete with home workmen. Protection to home industries has got to yield to protection to American laborers, and the party that boldly champions the cause of the workingmen and the farmer, by relieving them from the robbery of protective tariff, and heavily, substantially meets the "outrage" policy will sweep the country.

The following extract from a private letter was not intended for publication, but it presents the issue so fully, and so forcibly points out the necessity for active, earnest work in the right direction, that we give it a place: "What do you think of the presidential outlook? Trust you are in sympathy with the tariff reformers, such as Morrison and Carlisle. It is the coming question, and I hope the democrats will have the sand to make it the issue in this campaign. The working people of this country are protectionists simply because they have not studied the question out before them, to set them thinking. And I believe free trade would sweep the country. I don't mean absolute free trade,—that cannot be,—but a sweeping change in the tariff as now administered."

The destruction of life and property by storm, flood and accident has been something unprecedented during the past month. It is doubtful if the war in Africa has during this time been more fatal; it has certainly not been more destructive of property. The floods of the Ohio and its tributaries have been followed by the most terrific cyclones that ever swept the country. Georgia, South Carolina and Kentucky three states full a thousand miles from east to west, have suffered simultaneously. In Georgia alone the storm is said to have killed 400 persons and destroyed 5,000 houses. On the heels of this follows a fearful coal mine explosion in the Pittsburg region, which blows over 60 men into eternity in an instant. The year 1883 opened with a series of calamities that made it memorable, but all the calamities of 1883 have been eclipsed by the first two months of 1884.

Having seen how easily the bill appropriating $500,000 for a new post office slipped through congress, fearing it has long been kicking herself that she did not ask for more, Congressman Mayburry and Senator Palmer are doing their level best to induce congress to reconsider the matter and give $1,000,000. This is more than the state capital cost and is an "item for the old flag and an appropriation, with a vengeance. However, we digest once, but rather chope Detroit may get the sum and expend it honestly. There is now over $300,000,000 in the U. S. treasury, and it is accumulating at the rate of $10,000,000 per month, and if not stopped will create a most terrible panic, and if congress is going to be too cowardly to cut down the tariff, we say spend the surplus in internal improvements, in building government buildings where it is needed, improving our water routes and harbors, etc., so the money can again go into circulation and avert the threatened panic.

Hand-Sleigh for Sale.

Inquire Bling for Darling. Inquire at this office.

Our New Picture.

Above is shown the Revised Birds-eye View of Charlevoix. The Revision was made by Mr. F. S. BLANCHARD. It contains many buildings not shown in any other, notably the many new residences on the Upright & Hurlbut, the Mason, and the Dixon Additions. Our readers will not fail to notice other improvements over all former views. Those who appreciate these improvements will show it by ordering their printing at this office, or buying Printed Stationery at O. B. Weed & Co.'s.

NOTICE.

A meeting of voters who are friends to the cause of temperance will be held at the old town hall, for the purpose of considering the propriety of placing in nomination a temperance ticket, to be supported at the coming election. All who are friendly to the cause are cordially invited to be present, in the evening, at the commencement of the meeting. The meeting will be called to order promptly at 8 o'clock, Saturday evening, March 1st.

ROBERT MILLER AND OTHERS.

Feb. 29th, 1884.

FOR SALE.

SECOND HAND

Stationary Engine and Boiler

Size of cylinder, 10x24 in.; Boiler 12 feet long, 42 in. diameter, 48 flues. The engine has been thoroughly overhauled, and is practically as good as new. Price and terms low. Enquire of

S. M. SEE.

Or of Washburn & Ackert, at the Machine Shop.

NOTICE OF ELECTION

The annual village election of Charlevoix village, will be held at the village hall, in the building lately occupied as a school house, in said village, in the village of Charlevoix, on the second day of March, A. D. 1884, at which time the following officers are to be elected: A village President, to succeed Byron Sears; a village Clerk, to succeed Epher L. Hunter; a village Treasurer, to succeed Jacob Smith; a village Assessor, to succeed Samuel M. Row; and three trustees, in place of Henry Cooper, John Nicholls, and A. E. Pinkham, whose terms of office expire. On the said day of election, the polls shall be opened at eight o'clock in the morning and shall be kept open until eight o'clock in the afternoon, at which time said polls shall be finally closed.

The board of registration for said village will be in session at the law office of F. W. Mayne, in said village, on Saturday, March 8th, 1884, from 9 o'clock a. m. to 4 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of registering the names of electors.

Dated Charlevoix, Feb. 26th, A. D. 1884.

FRED. W. MAYNE, Village Clerk.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan: The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. The Fourth National Bank of Grand Rapids vs. William G. Adams. Assumpsit. Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of attachment was duly issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, at the suit of the Fourth National Bank of Grand Rapids, the above named plaintiff, against the goods, effects and chattels of the above named defendant, William G. Adams, the above named plaintiff, for the sum of one thousand one and 8-100 dollars ($1,001.08) which said writ was returnable on the fifth day of February, 1884. Dated this 11th day of February, 1884.

BLAIR, KINGSLEY & KLEINHANS,
Attorneys for plaintiff.

32-36

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan: The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. Lewis Reynolds, Walter D. Brown, Archibald Bulliers, James Matthews, defendants. Notice is hereby given that on the 6th day of December, A. D. 1883, a writ of attachment was issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, at the suit of Lewis Reynolds and Walter D. Brown, against the goods, effects and chattels, moneys and debts of John Maurice and James Matthews, the defendants above named, for the sum of six hundred and ninety-three dollars, which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1883.

Dated February 9th, A. D. 1883.

CHRUCKSHANK & GRIEB,
Attorneys for plaintiffs.

32-36

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan: The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. Archibald Bulliers, Adelbert B. Upright, and Benjamin Upright, vs. John Maurice and James Matthews, defendants. Notice is hereby given that on the 20th day of November, A. D. 1883, a writ of attachment was issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, at the suit of Archibald Bulliers, Adelbert B. Upright, and Benjamin Upright, the above named plaintiffs, against the goods, effects and chattels, moneys and debts of John Maurice and James Matthews, the defendants above named, for the sum of six hundred and ninety-three dollars, which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1883.

Dated February 9th, A. D. 1883.

CHRUCKSHANK & GRIEB,
Attorneys for plaintiffs.

31-36

STATE OF MICHIGAN, Thirteenth Judicial Circuit, in chancery. Joseph C. Green, complainant, vs. Martha J. Sisley, Martha J. Ayers, Mary H. Wood, defendants. In the Circuit Court for the county of Charlevoix, in Chancery. It appears to the satisfaction of the undersigned, that the defendant, Martha J. Ayers, is not a resident of this state, but resides at Ellenburg in the state of New York, on motion of Chrucksham & Grieb, solicitors for complainant, it is ordered that the said defendant, Martha J. Ayers, cause her appearance to be entered herein within four months from the date of this order, and in case of her appearance that she consider answer to the complainant's bill of complaint, to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on said complainant's solicitors within twenty days after service on her of a copy of said bill, and notice of this order, and that in default thereof said bill will be taken as confessed by the said Martha J. Ayers. And it is further ordered that within twenty days from the entry of this order the complainant cause a notice of this order to be published in the Charlevoix County Herald, a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county, and that said publication be continued therein at least once in each week, for six weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non-resident defendant at least twenty days before the time she is required to appear and answer.

OSCAR F. WISNER,
Circuit court commissioner.

CHRUCKSHANK & GRIEB,
Complainant's solicitors.

A true copy, attest,

OSCAR F. WISNER,
Circuit court commissioner.

32-36

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY

has purchased the

Ladies' and Children's Furnishing Goods

Lately owned by Fisher & Inwood, and will be pleased to retain all the old customers, and gain as many more as possible. Call and see my stock.

JOSEPH HYLAND,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Firebox.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Heavy blacksmithing of all kinds, and Repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

JOHN NICHOLLS,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Car Blades,

WAGON TONGUES, SHINGLES, LATH, ETC.

LUMBER SAWED AND BILLS FILLED TO ORDER.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand a this

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at ten dollars each. Call soon and have your pick.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. S. WAY.

EVERYTHING

IN THE LINE OF

Furniture and Undertakers' Goods

CAN BE FOUND AT THE OLD RELIABLE HOUSE OF

HENRY C. COOPER, CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See Me Before Buying.

Advance Lumber Company

Are now prepared to do

CUSTOM SAWING

Hard and Soft Wood Lumber and Hemlock Timber.

GIVE US A TRIAL. ADVANCE LUMBER CO.

ADVANCE, MICH.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

AT COST!

All kinds of

Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Ever brought to Charlevoix.

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.

They have no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY,

And Satisfaction Guaranteed.

L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House

CHARLEVOIX.

THE MOST USEFUL BOOK EVER PUBLISHED!

A Book that should be in Every House.

The press, teachers, and professional people throughout the country pronounce it to be the BOOK OF BOOKS. It contains upwards of 50,000 WORDS, with their definition and pronunciation, according to Webster and other recognized authorities; a large number of additional words and definitions in general use. It contains a mine of information for everybody. This book is handsomely bound in cloth, containing 642 Pages Profusely Illustrated. We propose to send you one of these valuable books, by mail, all shipping charges prepaid, to any address, on receipt of only ONE DOLLAR.

Address M. STOLZ & CO.,

26 Park Place, New York.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Feb. 29, 1884.

Business Announcements.

New goods just received, at E. M. Clark's.

A genuine article in Butter at B. Bell's.

Headquarters for canned goods at E. M. Clark's.

New Cottons and Prints this week. Before buying old and shelf worn goods, give us a call. Upright Emrey & Co.

Any amount of Sap Buckets at bottom prices, at L. D. Bartholomew's.

500 bushels of Oats; and 300 bushels of Potatoes wanted at Upright, Emrey & Co's.

All wool flannels way down, at E. M. Clark's.

We have just opened up a choice lot of green apples of every description, which we guarantee at 50 and 60 cents per peck, at Upright Emrey & Co.'s.

FOR SALE.—A second-hand portable saw mill, with engine and boiler complete, in fair shape. Call soon. J. MILO PATON.

Ladies' Dolumns at cost, at E. M. Clark's.

It is not wind pudding, but a guaranteed fact, that we sell the best cookers for 25 and 35 cents per can ever offered in Charlevoix. Upright Emrey & Co.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

200 cords of good dry birch and maple block wood for sale. Good measure guaranteed. Call at the office of

J. MILO PATON.

Two thousand dollars in Gloves and Mittens, at cost at E. M. Clark's.

If you want a good potato give Upright Emrey & Co. a call. They have just received a new supply.

For Yarns, Zephyrs, Fancy Goods, and all kinds of goods, go to E. M. CLARK'S.

Provision Market.

Retail prices to consumers, as corrected every Wednesday evening by UPRIGHT, EMREY & CO., general dealers:

FLOUR, per bbl, $6.00 $7.00, and $8.00.
BUCKWHEAT FLOUR, per cwt, $3.50.
CORN MEAL, per cwt, bolted $2.00, unbolted $1.90.
HAY, per ton, $8@9.
OATS, per bu, 30c.
GROUND FEED, per cwt, $1.60.
FEED, per ton, $18.
POTATOES, per bu, 50c.
ONIONS, per bu, $1.00.
BUTTER, per lb, 24@30c.
EGGS, per doz, 20@25c.
LARD, per lb, 14@16c.
HAMS, 10c; Shoulders, 12c.
SALT PORK, 11c; Beef, 6c.
CHEESE, 20c.
WATER WHITE OIL, 15c.
FARMERS' PRODUCE is good demand

Fresh Meats from the Market.

WEAT Best steak, 12½c; roast pork steak, 9@10c; roasts, 8@10c; sausage, 10c; hams, 10c; shoulders, 12½c.
TALLOW, 6@7c.

Local News Brevities.

Rain and snow on Monday.

G. W. Crouter is home again.

T. D. Smith is building a new scow.

O. D. Wood returned home last Friday.

Mrs. Lewis Reynolds returned home last Thursday evening.

Jas. O'Brian, of Inwood, was among our callers last Saturday.

H. A. Jersey, of Boyne, gave the JOURNAL a call on Tuesday.

J. Mills Eaton is getting brick from Boyne for his handle factory.

For a live team of horses on short notice, go and see Geo. Durance.

H. H. Finney, of East Jordan, gave the JOURNAL a call on Saturday.

Rev. G. W. Howe, of Boyne city, gave the JOURNAL a call yesterday.

Mr. Chas. Hitchcock, of Ionia, was in Charlevoix last week prospecting.

L. W. Skinner, now of Elk Rapids, visited friends in Charlevoix last week.

H. H. Vannorman has so far recovered as to be able to ride to town last Saturday.

In the case of the People v. Robert Bowles, forgery, the jury found a verdict of guilty.

E. S. Hawkins has a handsome writing desk for sale. Can be seen at B. See's store.

The Clara Belle has been announced to run between East Jordan and Petoskey next season.

The ladies aid society of the M. E church meet with Mrs. Oscar Upright next Wednesday afternoon.

Rev. C. F. Van Aiken writes that he will be at home in time to occupy his pulpit next Sunday morning.

He who grumbles at the staying qualities of the snow would remember that most people would prefer five or six weeks more of winter to the same length of time in rain and mud.

Mrs. Benjamin's lecture was a departure from the stereotyped arguments usually presented.

J. G. Peterson, of Ironton, is about to erect an addition 16x24 feet to his store building, to accommodate his large and increasing trade.

Sheriff Dickenson and Pat McCarty, of Harbor Springs, were in town this week with some fast stock,—while here were the guests of Geo. Durance.

A republican gentleman, a farmer, said last week that he could not find a newspaper in all his acquaintance to equal the Detroit weekly Free Press.

The 22d was celebrated by a large and a jolly party of masquerders at the opera house. The fire department netted a fair amount of cash for their investment.

The manufacturing company started their new engine last Friday afternoon. It moved along with very little friction for a new machine. It is 60 horse power, and there is every reason to believe it will do good service.

The East Jordan Enterprise is out again, with an outfit of new, clear type, and much improved in appearance. This first number is well filled with local news, and if the boys keep it up they will certainly have success in getting subscriptions.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin was listened to by a crowded house last Thursday evening. That portion of her lecture devoted to the work of the W. C. T. U. shows that the society has had a remarkable growth, and seems to be accomplishing much good work.

The iron furnace at Elk Rapids had been shut down for a few weeks for repairs. It went into blast again last Saturday, and on the third day made a run of 45 tons of iron. This is considered a big run, as very few furnaces in the country can make so large a cast in 24 hours.—Ex.

Don't fail to read Geo. Miller's new advertisement in this issue. George claims to lead the trade in his line, and a careful observation of his stock will convince you. He has ordered a large stock of spring goods, which will be put on the shelves in a few days. Go and see them.

A. J. McLeod has rented his meat market to Mr. J. W. Armstrong, of Cheboygan, who will take possession March 12th. Mr. McLeod will remain in town, and engage in buying and selling fat stock, and will supply butchers in this region with the best he can find in the country.

The egg famine is over. The hens have settled down to business and made short work of the corner in their product. Eggs have dropped from 40 cents a dozen to 25, and housekeepers are happy.—Ex. Wish the hens here would get to business again soon, so that the price of eggs would take a similar drop.

The remedy for dull times is to keep up confidence and work, and pay every man living wages as he may earn them. The way to bring financial gloom and despondency to talk about an impending panic. That has just the effect of bringing on one by making the timid hoard their wealth for fear the country is going straight to the bad and they will come to want.

Religious services began last Saturday, in the M. E. Church, with the second quarterly meeting service. The presiding elder being sick, Rev. G. W. Howe came in his stead. The preaching has been attended with great power. Sunday, Monday Tuesday and Wednesday nights have witnessed a constant increase in the power and interest of the meetings. The prospects are so far encouraging, as that the meetings will continue until Sunday, at least.

Last Saturday afternoon about 30 little girls and boys, of the ages of four to ten years, gathered at the family residence to celebrate the seventh birthday of our oldest daughter Cora. The services of Misses Lulu Washburn and Sadie Miller were engaged to assist in the entertainment, and for three hours these little busy bodies enjoyed themselves to their utmost, playing games, singing songs, and in a hundred other ways appreciated only by the little ones. Candy, nuts, and orange were served, and the guests dispersed apparently well satisfied with their visit.

The only way in which to stop the paper is, first to pay for every copy you have taken from the office and then notify the publisher by postal that you wish it discontinued. If, after so doing, he continues to send the paper, then refuse to take it out of the office. Even though you never subscribed for it you are holding for every copy you receive and the publisher can collect his pay.

There is a prospect of our having plenty of telephones. We understand that Mr. S. E. Watson, Supt. of the Telephone and Telegraph Construction Co., will be here next week to prepare for the construction of lines between Charlevoix, Petoskey, the various resorts around the bay, Mackinaw and Cheboygan; making a northern Michigan circuit. The phones need by this company are the Bell patent.—Record.

Upright Emrey & Co. have filled all available space on their own dock, and the vacant lot north of Mrs. Bradley's, with ties and posts, and are now filling the lot in rear of Mason's store. With six weeks more of good sleighing they will have the town well filled. They are also buying large quantities of wood. They advertise to pay cash for ties, posts, and wood, as well as all other kinds of produce a farmer has to sell.

The Grand Rapids Trade Journal, an organ of the liquor interests, suggest one way to suppress drunkenness, and consequent crime, is for solicitors to organize among themselves and refuse to sell liquor to any man liable to get intoxicated and to prosecute any dealer so doing. If this idea should be acted on and carried out in good faith it would certainly do much good, and would in a measure remove one of the great causes of the odium that attaches to liquor selling.—Ex.

Last Saturday evening about five o'clock, thirty three teams came into town together, with sleighs loaded with wood. The amount drawn being ninety nine cords. The largest load brought in was four and a half cords of green four foot wood. This was drawn by Eugene Hill's team—the driver of three miles and a half. This amount of wood would last the farmer about one day.—Progress. Mr. L. W. Skinner, our former townsman, has charge of this gang of men and teams. The net results of his winter's work is 5,300 cords of wood cut, and 4,800 drawn.

"There is too little co-operation on the part of dealers on the dead beat question," said a prominent local retailer, "and I see no reason why the project you propose should not benefit every one who sells on credit. For instance, a dealer gives a dead beat a bad pay customer, who leaves him and begins running up an account at a neighboring store. Nine times out of ten the dealer who is first victim of the bad pay will not inform his neighbor of the true character of his new customer, but will allow him to be duped, too. On the other hand, a prompt report made in all cases of delinquents would be the means of warning dealers against the parties, and be of direct benefit to the dealer making the report, as it would compel the debtor to settle his bills, before he could secure further credit."

In two cases recently decided by our supreme court the statute of 1881, regulating the sale of liquor has been given a rigid construction. It holds, (Campbell, J. dissenting) that the clause directing saloons to be closed on Sunday, requires the proprietor to see to it, at his peril, that they are not opened every by those in their employ. In one case it was decided that the offence was committed as well by opening it for scrubbing out as opening for the sale of liquors; and in such cases the rule that the crime consists in the intent of the offender does not apply. The offence consists in the negative act of not keeping the saloon closed. In another case the court held that the statute against the sale of liquors without having a bond applies to a single sale, and no proof is required that the accused party was a regular dealer in liquor.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by UPRIGHT BROS., real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Feb. 26, 1884, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Isaac L. Lyon and wife to B. B. Chapman, n e ¼ of s e ¼ and n w ¼ of s w ¼, 11-32-6, $400.

William W. Smith and wife, to Elizabeth Hicks s ½ of s w ¼, and s w ¼ of s e ¼, 26-34-6, $1200.

Richard Williams and wife, to Wm. E. Inwood, part of lots 1, village of Ironton, $250.

Freeman Cope and wife, to Frank C. Barnett, south ½ of s e ¼ of n e ¼, 13-31-7, $1,000.

Jos. F. Mason et al to D. C. Loveday, lot 6, blk 2, Mason addition to Charlevoix, $250.

Nicholas Morgan, to Charles Dewell, 40 acres s w ¼ of s w ¼, 29-35-6, $315.

Serious Accident.

Our Ironton correspondent gives the following particulars concerning an accident to Mr. James Otis, vice president of the Pine Lake Iron Co.:

Last Friday evening there was something the matter with the elevator, and Mr. Otis went under it to investigate. The "top filler," not knowing the danger, let it down, and it caught Mr. Otis, doubling him up, nearly crushing him, and he was taken out more dead than alive. The elevator weighs a ton or more, and it is a wonder that he was not crushed beyond recognition. At last accounts the attending physician thinks he will recover.

Circuit Court Proceedings.

The following are the cases reached up to the time of going to press:

People v. Burgess, murder. Arraigned, and case continued.

People v. Bowles, forgery. Verdict of guilty. Not yet sentenced.

Smith v. Fox, assumpsit. Motion to set aside justice court proceedings granted.

Eagle Iron Works v. Foote, replevin. Continued.

Gorman v. Alex, assumpsit. Verdict for plaintiff $20.

Gurles & Nash v. Gunet, replevin. No cause of action.

Martin v. Beach, assumpsit. Stricken from the calendar.

Jackson v. Jackson, assumpsit. Continued.

Austin v. McGlashan et al. Motion to set aside default denied.

Harding v. Kinner, et al. Decree of foreclosure granted.

Mosenar v. Mosenar, divorce granted.

Miller v. Miller, divorce, granted.

Von Platten v. Box, motion to amend plea granted.

Thier v. Addis, assumpsit. Given to jury this morning.

Burgess.

The wife of Hezekiah Willis was buried one day last week.

J. A. Facet is still confined to the house, although able to sit up some.

Zilpah Gibson went to Vanderbilt one day last week to meet her husband.

The tax collector should have a portable safe in which to store his wealth.

The friends of Mrs. Scott will be pleased to learn that she has regained her health.

The rising generation of Hayesites have been pretty well Chewed up this winter.

Mr. Josiah Gibson, who is visiting friends in Louisville, Ky., fell down stairs and was injured.

Wm. Scruggy went to the lumber woods some time ago, and as his mother has not heard from him, she is somewhat worried.

We have here a lively little burg, consisting of three private houses, a hay stack, and a "corner grocery," also a United States postoffice. At the corner grocery the inhabitants congregate freely to talk over the political situation, and lay plans for the ensuing campaign. They keep on tap pipes, tobacco, red herring and crackers, also a stock of patent medicines. It will be seen that we are progressing and will soon become a "city." Uno.

Hayes.

The sleighing is splendid.

Lorin Hamlin has returned home from the lumber woods.

Quite a number of our citizens are working at Ironton at present.

Miss Sophia G. Ross has closed her winter term of school in Evangeline township.

The tax collector's countenance is becoming familiar, as he may be seen going his rounds.

A spelling school at the Lakeview school house next Friday evening. Everybody invited.

We are informed that seven Indians were buried here last week; some of them died at Ironton.

Rev. McLellan, of Northport, filled Rev. VanAuken's appointment at Lakeview last Sunday.

Mrs. Maggie Wolverton, of Eastport, Antrim county, is spending a few weeks visit at her parents, Alex. Ross.

The mill yards throughout the township are well filled with logs, which will make a boom in the saw mills, when spring opens.

A. W. Chew has closed a term of four months school, in district No. 1. E. C. Chew has closed a term of three months school in district No. 4. There are now but two schools in session in this township.

J. ZEBE.

South Arm.

School has closed in the Nicloy district.

Mr. N. F. Churchill and family passed through here to Ironton recently.

Thermometer 9° below zero, Feb. 24th, but weather somewhat milder at present.

Supervisor Hipp's youngest child, five months old, died last week of lung fever.

An oyster supper for Elder Blake, was held at South Arm last week; net receipts $11.00.

Mr. Jas. Cameron, of the firm of Cameron Bros., Torch Lake, passed through here recently.

The Bennett M. E. class held an oyster supper at Mr. H. Vance's, for Rev. R. Tyndall, recently. A good time and $13.00 realized.

Mr. Melbourne Wilson is soon to start for southern Illinois, where he expects to remain five years. Mrs. W. plans a visit to Canada for the summer, then to join him in the fall.

Rev. H. G. Scofield was called over to Jordan to preach the funeral sermon of the youngest child of John and Susan Wilks. The discourse was listened to by a large and attentive audience.

F. A. N.

Ironton.

The skirmish for wood choppers continues.

Mr. Williams returned with eighteen wood-choppers.

Miss Shaubut was in town visiting friends last Saturday and Sunday.

The tax gatherer is seen on our streets almost every day. It looks as if another extension would be necessary.

A large stock of New

Spring Goods

on the way, and every day expected to arrive. Come and see the

NEW STYLES.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds,

Imported and Domestic Perfumery,

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and pure drugs. "All best wishes, Weed's one you well." Our store is in Bartholomew's new

Opera Block

RENUNCIATION.

Both bird and cage were fair,
And both belonged to me;
Yet ever with heartful eyes
The bird looked over the sea.
Within their tender bars
Its wings were fettered;
Close against the bars
It beat its beautiful breast.

I said, I will make its cage,
Its lightest, and glad, and gay,
With all that love can do,
Or fancy can devise or pay.
It hears! With all my art,
Still it was plain to me
Then even with beaming eyes
My bird looked over the sea.

Then I said, I will but hold it close—
Surely it is my own—
I will keep this prize one thing,
If not by love, by might.
In vain! Through mine the power
To hold or set it free,
Not mine to hold its heart
That could escape from me.

Then I said, Be free, O bird,
To spread your beautiful wings.
Who cares for a thing unless
It's also the heart that sings?
Yet I felt a pang of eyes that shine,
Of thinking of eyes that pine,
For the mangled breast, if we'by
It beat with the pulse of love?

While I opened the door:
But I turned my face away,
Lest I should see the beautiful
Whatever he would say.
A thrill of joy rang out
From a happy, rested breast—
A flesh of wings—alas!
My heart tell all the rest.

My bird will never come back:
Not who should I weep or sigh,
If only the thing I love
Has ceased to pine day?
Twill never come back, I know;
But what, life here to prove,
Is willing to be forgot,
Hands on the heights of Love.

ICHABOD TURNER'S MISSION.

"Crooked! crooked! crooked!" rang out the sharp, peculiar, discussed voice, and the tall thin figure in seedy garments and flapping hat swayed to and fro on the stump that had been selected for a rostrum. "All things have gone crooked in this world, and I've come to set 'em straight—to undo the snarls, give the power where it belongs, and put men in their places. Oh—h—h, my friends! The world is topsy-turvy; the top's at the bottom and the bottom's at the top, and I've come to turn things right end up."

The 6 o'clock whistle had sounded the close of another day's work at the shops, and the men, pouring out from the various smoke-stained archways, paused to listen. It was a motley group—some bedecked with many colors from the paint-rooms, some with grimy hands and faces from foundry or machine shop, while further back on the long platform that extended along the track were gathered, that inevitable adjunct of any crowd, the boys, and a sprinkling of women—some of the latter with children in their arms. The speaker's excitement seemed to deepen as his audience increased. The keen eyes under the old hat darted lightning-like glances here and there; its gesticulated wildly and his voice rose to a still higher pitch.

"Oh—h, yes! Look at me! I'm Ichabod Turner, and the mission I'm sent on is to mend all crookedness and turn things right end up!"

The men seemed to find a grim pleasure in the harangue. They laughed as they exchanged comments.

"Chosen a good point to begin at, eh, Jack?" questioned one.

"I should say so! He'll have a tough contest, even if he doesn't extend his territory."

"Goin' to set all things straight? I'll take a mighty keen interest in you to do that job. I wish to mercy he'd begin in earnest!" murmured an old woman on the platform, as she picked up her bundle and trudged on again.

The two men looked after her, and the elder shook his grizzled head.

"Poor soul! No doubt things seem crooked enough to her—her low was crushed between the cars last year. Does seem as if somebody might invent a way to get along with killing fewer trackmen."

Jim Barclay, sauntering down the long walk, stopped beside a bright young girl who had paused for a moment on the outer edge of the crowd.

"If that fellow would begin his work by altering the days and nights a little, or by means of enjoying them, I'd be obliged to him," he laughed.

The girl turned with a little start of surprise and pleasure.

"Why, Jim," then a glance at his lunch-basket brought the swift question, "You're not going out to-night? It's not your run."

"I guess I make it, though, they say. It's an extra train, and they are short of men, somehow—off or disabled. I feel considerable disabled myself."

"You were out last night?"

"And the night before, and nearly all yesterday. I didn't get in to-day until afternoon, and I was scarcely settled into a comfortable sleep before I was called. I'm not fit to go, that's a fact. Don't worry, Dell."

He broke off his sentences abruptly, as he saw the shadow of anxiety on his companion's face. "I don't happen so often. They're short, you see."

"It ought not to happen at all," insisted Dell, indignantly. "I wouldn't go."

"Then my head would come off at short notice," laughed Jim. "We can't afford that."

Pretty Dell flushed really. She knew so well that that meant. There was a little house talked over and arranged in every detail of its simple furnishing, for which the two were planning when Jim should obtain his hoped-for promotion.

"No, I won't insure my necks to-night, but I'll take the risk of crushing a few other people's heads rather than the certainty of losing my own," laughed Jim. "It's a pity that fellow, who is so sure of his mission, couldn't turn my brains right side up; they feel crooked enough. But don't worry, Dell," he repeated, hurriedly.

The crowd began to thin. Hungry men, swinging their empty dinner pails, presently found the prospect of supper more alluring than the stranger's proclaimed millennium. Jim looked at his watch and found he had not even five minutes to spare for a part of the homeward walk with Dell. He parted from her with a reluctant good-by, and she walked away alone. She had gone but a few steps, however, when she turned and looked back.

"You'll be careful, Jim? Don't let anything happen."

"Why, Dell!" He laughed, half touched, half wondering. "I might try to have talked such nonsense. Don't be uneasy."

She smiled in answer, and the cloud slowly faded from her face as she walked on. A call for extra service was no cause for serious trouble—all these exigencies were so familiar to her. Bell and whistle, messenger and dispatch, with their always imperative and often unavoidable orders, were part of her daily life. Jim would be tired and worn out, of course. That had happened often, and would doubtless happen again, but her thoughts turned to pleasanter pictures of the future, to so ravaging once more that tiny house with its dainty rooms, which should in a very haven of rest to one who came home weary. She paused on the long bridge and looked down on the network of tracks below, crossing and interlacing in a seemingly inextricable tangle.

The gray twilight of the short autumn afternoon was already creeping toward night, and the headlights of the engines passing and repassing as they changed from one track to another, shone out brilliantly. Men were running here and there, waving their signal lanterns and shouting hoarse orders that to one unaccustomed ear seemed confusedly with the heavy breathing of the locomotives and the clanger of bells. Further back, housing in rugged outlines against the faint rose of the western sky, were the great shops, grim and silent. The brown eyes watching from the bridge presently discovered the figure they sought winding its way in and out among the trains. He did not look up, and the girl smiled at the thought of watching him, herself unobserved. Then her face grew grave and sweet, with a passing fancy that as from their height above the din and turmoil, the unseen angels looked down upon our mortal life.

"Only, I suppose, all the tangles and bewilderment look so clear to them, as I am sure they do not to me," she added, with a little sigh. "And their shaking is of some use, while mine cannot help your Jim."

He had some need of help as the evening wore on, though he but dimly realized it. Getting everything in readiness for starting was harder work than usual. There was a dull pain in his eyes and a throbbing in his temples.

"This trip's rather rough on you, Jim?" remarked a fireman, half questioningly, half commiseratingly.

"Rather!" Jim laughed faintly. "I'm stiff and tired, too. I'll get over it when we're fairly off, I expect."

When the station, with its dim and dancing lights, was left behind, however, and the long line stretched away into the night, his occupation became a mere routine, so treacherously familiar that it would scarcely hold his eyes or thoughts. It could easily be attended to his engine, with his mind straying far away from it to Dell, and then running oddly into a continued succession of its spaces at the depot, until the swift movement of the polished rods before him seemed the monotony of goading pain and the sound in his ears resolved itself into a unmeaning repetition of meaningless words. "Crooked and straight; right side up."

"Hello! Caught myself napping. I do believe! Jim Barclay, what are you about? Sees here, Bill"—to his fireman—"just keep an eye on me, will you?"

"The young engineer shook himself, looked about him and stood stiffly erect. He whistled a tune vigorously to assure himself that he was wide awake. What a drowsy, rocking motion the train had! Even the jar and rattle seemed to lull and stupify, though he had slept about his past. He was glad this sort of work was nearly over, for he did not see how the desired promotion could be much longer delayed, and then such calls as this would be fewer. He was looking anxiously forward to the day when he could carry the lunch-for tidings to Dell. Dear little girl, how her face would brighten! What a cozy, happy home she would make! And she said the curtains wouldn't cost anything, and the hammock on the porch to rest in. Lights? Queer where the lights came from, unless—why, yes, almost to a station, of course. Dell must have put a bright light in the window.

Jim Bill had climbed back over the tender to look after a suspected hot-box on the after track.

Shrick after shrick of warning from a steam whistle aided the flashing signal lights, and at last forced some meaning upon the benumbed brain. With a low cry of horror the engineer awoke, but too late to avoid the crash that followed as the two freight trains were piled upon each other in common wreck.

"What possessed you to run in that fashion, man? Were you drunk or crazy?" demanded more than one rough voice, as Jim stood by the track. But he only gazed, with bloodshot eyes at the scene before him, and answered them nothing.

"Fortunately—almost miraculously, it seemed—no one was seriously injured," as the morning papers said, in chronicling the occurrence. Under the sensational headlines they also commended the promptness of the company in dismissing "the engineer whose criminal carelessness caused the disaster, and who, as nearly as can be learned, was comfortably sleeping at his post, and so neglectful of all signals!"

These were the failings that reached Dell, instead of the glad word for which she had waited.

"What they say is true, after a fashion," said Jim, simply and sadly, "I was to blame for it—more than they knew, for I was not fit to make the run, and I told them so."

There was no one to chronicle his years of faithful service, or the "criminal carelessness," if not crowning, which had placed him in such a position; but those things were well understood among the many workers on that iron road town, and they acknowledged to each other, with rough but helpless sympathy, that it was "rough on poor Jim."

Rough it surely grew as the long days came and went, and the hope of reinstatement, if not speedy

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Feb. 26, 1894.

From the National Capital.

Notes and Interviews by a Journal Correspondent.

The Mississippi river and its tributary improvements promise to become a nucleus for western political campaigns judging from the action of the Mississippi and Ohio river convention which was in session in this city last week. The convention was composed of several hundred prominent business men representing the territory and sentiment of over 20,000,000 people interested in the development of western commerce. They want congress to appropriate about $40,000,000 for western rivers and harbors and they send to congress, "Give us what we ask and need, or our people will relegate you to private life."

WHAT WILL CONGRESS DO ABOUT IT?

Previous to the assembly of this convention the house committee on rivers and harbors had informally discussed the appropriation for the coming year, and the majority of the committee seemed to favor a $10,000,000 limit, and expressed themselves as desirous, if possible to confine it within $9,000,000. The estimates of the engineers having in charge the improvements of rivers and harbors amount to $35,000,000, and the convention endorsed and urged the expenditure of even a greater sum than this. But the famous river and harbor steal of '81 is still fresh in the minds of congressmen, and the probabilities are that not over $12,000,000 will be appropriated this year.

THE EFFECT OF MORRISON'S TARIFF BILL.

Democratic senators and representatives are cautious in what they say on the Morrison tariff bill, but it is clear that the proposed horizontal reduction awakens no enthusiasm and is not satisfactory to a large wing of the party. It is now to be considered in committee, and we are assured it can not come back to the house inside of a month at the earliest. This will throw over the discussion well into the spring when the political caldron will be boiling and the appropriation bills are under full headway. Hence the bill has a stormy career ahead even in the house while its prospects in the senate are so small as practically to dismiss the whole scheme to the domain of speculation rather than legislation. As a battle-cry the bill can serve its purpose as well whether adopted or not, and it is in this direction that its chief importance lies.

HOW MUCH IT REMOVES THE TARIFF.

The horizontal reduction of the bill decreases the taxes about $28,600,000, and when you add to this the abolished duties on the increased free list the sum total swells to $20,000,000. It remains to be seen whether the bill can pass the house, but eight democratic senators have publicly declared that they will vote against the measure, therefore it can not pass the senate.

CHECKMATING JAY GOULD.

Some months ago when a little war began between the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and the Union Pacific roads, it was here published that Jay Gould was beginning, with this war, to carry on his plan for wrecking Union Pacific, causing it to be sold on the first mortgage, buying it in himself, and thereby wiping out over $100,000,000 indebtedness to the United States, which is only secured by second mortgage. Mr. Anderson, of Kansas, introduced a bill in the house the other day which will save the government from such loss. It provides that when either of the railroad companies indebted to the United States on second mortgages shall fail to keep up the interest on their first mortgage bonds, the attorney general shall apply for a receiver, who shall thereafter manage the road under the direction of the secretary of the interior, until the debt to the United States is all paid. There are a great many people who think that the Pacific railroad companies never intended to pay the U. S. when they borrowed this money, but if Mr. Anderson's bill becomes a law, the easy, and at present the only visible method of "freezing out" Uncle Sam as a creditor will be eventually shut off.

BANKERS AND SILVER LEGISLATION.

A member of the banking and currency committee of the house says that there is but little doubt that a bill will soon be reported providing that national banks may increase their circulation to the full par value of such United States bonds as they have deposited in the U. S. Treasury to secure their notes. He also states that there is little prospect of any silver legislation, except perhaps with regard to the trade dollars, and that these will be retired for recoinage upon strictly just terms to the holders.

SECRETARY CHANDLER CURTAILED.

There is a strong flavor of economy in the forthcoming naval appropriation bill. The estimates were over $22,500,000 and the amount allowed will be less than $14,500,000. The sum asked for the four steel cruisers is granted, but the poor old monitors are left out and Chandler is cross about it. The committee seems to think that the building of a new navy is a matter of time as well as money, and that the government's wiser and safer policy is to go a little slow on both.

THE DANVILLE RIOT.

Although summoned to sit with open doors the senate committee to investigate the Danville anti-election riot was quite a difficult body for a stranger to find when it commenced its sessions. The room occupied is without a sign on the door, which was kept closed during the first day, but opened thereafter by Mr. Sherman because of several very loud complaints. The evidence thus far produced is only a repetition of that presented before the citizens committee which investigated the matter in Danville a week after the riot. The report of the committee will be in accordance with Mr. Sherman's wishes, as the republicans have the majority. A minority report is predicted by many, and the democratic contention for its adoption will give Sherman, Mahone and other "bloody shirt" senators an opportunity to create "campaign documents" at the public expense. The report of the committee will hardly reach the senate before the 1st of March as the investigations here and in Mississippi will not be concluded for another week or more.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS.

The bill introduced in the senate by Mr. Voorhees to punish government employees who admit to political assessments aims a blow at the worst evil in our politics. It is true, as Mr. Voorhees says, that so long as officials are permitted by law to hand their money over to campaign committees means will be found to compel them to do so—"voluntarily," of course. The civil service law prohibits assessments, but the law is ingeniously evaded by the republicans. I will give you an instance: The state election in Ohio cost the republicans a large sum of money and at the close of the campaign the state committee found themselves in debt nearly $15,000. Now, the Ohio republican association of this city is composed of government officials and clerks from Ohio, with Judge Wm. Lawrence, the first controller of the treasury as its president. At the request of the Ohio state committee Judge Lawrence called a meeting of the Ohio association and requested subscriptions to liquidate the aforesaid deficiency, and over five hundred clerks "paid up." Burt Francisco, son of Andy Francisco, editor of the Toledo Telegram, and a member of the Ohio association and a clerk in the government printing office, said to me that when a demand came from this source every member invariably contributed money, knowing that a failure to so do would result in his being "spotted." All the important states have these associations and they are officered and managed by government officials high in position.

The debate in the senate on Mr. Voorhees' resolution was not a fortunate incident for all who took part in it. In fact, it was notably unfortunate for Mr. Harrison, of Indiana, and a would be president, who, giving way to impulse, uttered sentiments that would be applauded only by that element of his party which was supposed to have been crushed in 1882, when the people rose in their might to put down Hubbelism. Whether this bill will become a law cannot be surmised.

TOO HONEST IN THE HOUSE.

The various railroad companies interested in land grants, for the forfeiture of which bills are pending, seem to have abandoned my idea of stemming the tide of sentiment against them in the house, but they hope to accomplish something over in the senate. The representatives of the railroads say that the senate is a more temperate body than the house, and proceeds more judicially and regardless of public sentiment in disposing of important matters. They will make their fight before the senate, and they claim that they will win; but should they fail there, it is intimated that the validity of forfeiture legislation will be tested in the courts. It is a well known fact that many of the leading senators are financially interested in these railroad companies, and will do nothing inimical to their own purses.

EXTENSION OF THE LETTER CARRIER SYSTEM.

It is now probable that all towns of 2,000 inhabitants and over will enjoy the convenience of letter carriers. The house committee on post offices have agreed to report such a bill, as also one for the issue of a special 10 cent stamp, which, when attached to a letter, will secure its immediate delivery at any letter carrier office from 7 a. m. to 12 midnight. These two measures would be favorably received by the public.

SPENDING $500,000,000 TO PREVENT $50,000,000.

Mr. Morrison's committee is besieged by various interests antagonistic to his tariff bill. A number of Louisiana politicians are now in the city to convince Morrison that the duty on sugar ought to be retained. One of these protectionists said to me yesterday, in relation to the duty on sugar: "It is the most burdensome tax which the American people have to pay. It is a tax of $10 a year on every family in this country. We use $10,000,000 worth of sugar every year. Of this amount our own sugar plantations produce a little $10,000,000 worth. The other $80,000,000 is imported, and we have to pay a tariff equal to about 53 per cent of its value. It amounts to a tax of $50,000,000 to protect a $10,000,000 industry, and we could better afford to bound every sugar planter and all his laborers at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. But, you see, we are bound to protect them, for they spent their money in improving their plantations and refreezing refineries under an implied agreement that the country would protect them, and if this democratic house don't do it, the republican senate will."

BREWSTER'S INSECTIVE TREACHERY.

Some time ago I promised to say more about the retirement of Corkhill. The investigation of Brewster by Springer's committee will bring out the facts, and I may as well give them in advance. The president had determined to re appoint Mr. Corkhill, when Brewster made a personal appeal against it. "If Corkhill is reappointed I am ruined," was the substance of this imploration. "I can only justify the employment of special counsel in the star route cases, and the enormous expenditures attending it, on the plea that Corkhill was incompetent to try them. To reappoint him is to refute such an argument. I shall be disgraced and ruined by the investigation in such an event." Notwithstanding this talk to the president, up to the very last day Brewster pretended to Corkhill that he was friendly to him and had recommended his retention.

When temptation appears, and we are almost persuaded to wrong, how often a mother's word of warning will call to mind vows that are rarely broken. Yes, the memory of a mother has saved many a poor wretch from going astray. Tall grass may be growing over the hallowed spot where all her earthly remains repose; the dying leaves of autumn may be whirled over it, or the white mantle of winter may cover it from sight; yet the spirit of her, when he walks in the right path, appears, and gently, softly, mournfully calls to him, when wandering off into the ways of error.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of Catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

PIMPLES.

I will mail (Free) the recipe for a simple VEGETABLE BALM that will CLEAR YOUR SKIN, SCALP, PIMPLES and ERUPTIONS, leaving the SKIN SOFT, CLEAR and BEAUTIFUL; also tells how to AbsorbPROFITS, Secure Patronage, Gain Health, Success, Happiness, Wealth, Power, Position, Influence, Knowledge, Magnetism, Vigor, Vitality, Manhood, Love, Marriage, Etc. Address, Prof. Ward & Co., 1 Bowdoin St., Boston, Mass.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

IMMENSE CUT IN PRICES

—OF—

All-Wool Goods,

Overcoats and Suitings,

Boots and Shoes.

I have a large stock of Clothing and Boots and Shoes which I will close out at actual cost, as I wish to make room for spring goods. All my goods I will warrant

First-Class,

And will be pleased to show them to all comers whether they intend to purchase or not. Remember, I have marked these goods down at actual cost, and they are

Big Bargains.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Feb. 12, 1894.

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS,

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 34. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 1894. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

Is published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

Office over T. D. Smith's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

CROSSMAN & GRIEG, Attorneys at Law, Office in Bishop's Block, Charlevoix, Mich. A. D. CROSSMAN. W. E. GRIEG.

LONG & ALGER, Attorneys at Law, Port Huron, Mich. 22

FRED W. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Real Estate bought and sold. Money to loan. Office in Dexter Block.

H. L. JENKS, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

J. M. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

WEDDIGEN, MAY & MARTIN, Attorneys at Law. Office opposite U. S. Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

OLIVER P. WINNIE, Attorney and Solicitor, and U. S. Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX. Capital $50,000. Charlevoix, Michigan. Interest paid on time deposits. Collections made, and money or government bonds loaned. Drafts sold payable in any money market of the world. Exchange on Europe always for sale. REYNOLDS & DOWN.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 12 m. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7:30 p. m. Seats free. C. P. VANSCOY, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 12 m. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7 p. m. J. J. HODGSON, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOSE AND HOOK AND LADDER COMPANY meets the first and third Thursday evenings of each month. Small, chief engineer.

HOMEOPATHIC PHARMACY.

HOFFMAN Homeopathic Medicines—Boericke & Dunham's Cases, at Grand Rapids, Mich.

LIVERY STABLE.

J. MILO EATON, Proprietor. Horses, Buggies, Carriages and Harnesses for Sale or Hire. Good Saddle Horses always available.

PHYSICIANS.

J. A. CROUTER, M. D., Charlevoix, Michigan.

L. LEWIS M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office and residence, Bridge Street, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. M. PENNOYER, M. D., Surgeon and Homeopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich. 20

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HERBERT S. HARRIS, Notary Public. Real Estate Loan and Insurance Agent, Charlevoix, Mich.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

F. & A. M.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 416, meets second Monday in each month, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Beaver Island Lake Lodge, No. 296, meets every Wednesday evening in their hall, Beaver Island.

I. O. O. F.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 357, meets every Saturday evening in their hall in Odd Fellows' hall.

MASONIC—Charlevoix Lodge No. 416, meets second Monday on or before full moon in each month. Hall over postoffice.

A. BITTNER, Proprietor. A. B. PERRIGO, Vice-President.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

Approved banking business transacted. Money to loan on approved paper at reasonable rates. Drafts on Europe. Collections given special attention and remittances made promptly.

C. E. TOBIAS, Cashier.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Prices reasonable. C. E. JOHNSON, Opp. Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor,

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations excellent. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only simple rooms in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public and headquarters for the Petoskey and Elk Lake Stages.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CURNS, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

Have thoroughly refitted and refurnished

1672 1894

DR. G. W. CROUTER,

THE DRUGGIST.

Our Motto: P. P.

PURITY, POLITENESS.

WE MAKE IT A POINT TO SELL ONLY

Full Strength & Fresh Goods

OUR PRICES WILL ALWAYS BE AS LOW AS

STRICTLY PURE DRUGS

CAN BE SOLD.

Our Stock is the Largest in the County

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

at his store near the bridge.

All kinds of fresh fruit and vegetables to be in season. Nuts, candy, cigars, tobacco, oysters, always on hand. Call and see us. Week ends Friday night.

C. R. BELLINGER

carries the largest and finest stock of

JEWELRY

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Optical Goods in Charlevoix County. I AM THE ONLY REGULAR JEWELRY WATCH, the best time-piece made. All goods sold by me will be found as represented or satisfaction and free exchange.

O. W. SMITH

ELECTRO-PLATER,

Manufacturing Jeweler and Lapidist.

ENGRAVING in Gold and Silver. Any article of jewelry made to order. AGATES AND JASPERS cut to order.

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card in effect January, 1894.

GOING NORTH.

STATIONS.	No. 1	No. 3	No. 5	No. 7
Cincinnati, lv		5 40am	7 10pm
Richmond, "	2 37am	8 25 "	11 00 "
Winchester "	3 12 "	9 00 "	11 36 "
Eldorado "	4 41	10 37 "	1 12am
Fort Wayne, ar	6 40	12 30pm	3 10 "
Fort Wayne, lv		2 45	3 20 "	8 00am
Auburn "		3 16	3 54 "	8 37 "
Garrett "		3 38	4 16 "	9 14 "
Butler "		4 15	4 53 "	10 49 "
Waterloo "		4 33	5 11 "	11 08 "
Kendallville "		4 50	5 28 "	11 26 "
Ligonier "		5 02	5 42 "	11 37 "
Kalamazoo "		7 02	7 37	1 37
Allegan "		8 02	8 37	2 37
Otsego "		8 16	8 51	2 51
Plainwell "		8 23	8 58	2 58
Otsego "		8 33	9 08	3 08
Gun Prairie "		8 41	9 16	3 16
Allegan "		8 53	9 28	3 28
Douglas "		9 11	9 46	3 46
Saugatuck "		9 18	9 53	3 53
Holland "		9 35	10 10	4 10
Zeeland "		9 45	10 20	4 20
Jenison Jct. "		10 13	10 48	4 48
Grand Rapids, ar		10 25	11 00	5 00
Grand Rapids, lv	7 15am		3 40pm	10 45pm
Ionia "	8 11 "		4 36 "	11 42 "
Saginaw, ar	11 25 "		7 45 "	2 55am
Saginaw, lv	12 05pm		8 00 "	3 15 "
Bay City, ar	1 10 "		9 05 "	4 20 "
Alma, ar	1 55 "		9 45 "	5 05 "
Ashley, ar	2 13 "		10 03 "	5 23 "
St. Louis, ar	2 25 "		10 15 "	5 35 "
Alma, lv	2 35 "		10 25 "	5 45 "
Mt. Pleasant, ar	3 15 "		11 05 "	6 25 "
Farwell, ar	3 35 "		11 25 "	6 45 "
Clare, ar	3 50 "		11 40 "	7 00 "
Reed City, ar	4 45 "		12 35am	7 55 "
Cadillac, ar	5 25 "		1 15 "	8 35 "
Traverse City, ar	8 00 "		4 00 "	11 15 "
Petoskey, ar	8 45 "		4 45 "	12 00m
Mackinaw City, ar	10 25 "		6 25 "	1 40 "
St. Ignace, ar	11 00 "		7 00 "	2 15 "
Newberry, ar	1 40pm		9 45 "	5 00 "
Marquette, ar	5 00 "		1 00am	8 15 "
Ishpeming, ar	5 45 "		1 45 "	9 00 "
Negaunee, ar	5 55 "		1 55 "	9 10 "

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No. 2	No. 4	No. 6	No. 8
Negaunee, lv			5 15pm	7 20am
Marquette "			5 40pm	8 00 "
St. Ignace "			10 00 "	1 15pm
Mackinaw City "			7 00 "	1 15 "
Petoskey "			7 38 "	11 21 "
Boyne Falls "			8 15 "	12 05am
Mancelona "			8 35 "	12 25 "
Kalkaska "			8 50 "	12 40 "
Grayling, arr			9 15am	1 10 "
Grayling, lv			12 00	2 25
Cadillac, ar	3 20pm	11 45am		5 50
Reed City "	4 20 "	12 50pm		6 45
Big Rapids "	5 12 "	1 44 "		7 37
Howard City "	5 35 "	2 07 "		8 00
Edmore "	5 49 "	2 21 "		8 14
Carson City "	5 59 "	2 31 "		8 24
Stanton "	6 10 "	2 42 "		8 35
Greenville "	6 20 "	2 52 "		8 45
Lakeview "	6 35 "	3 07 "		9 00
Shelby "	6 44 "	3 16 "		9 09
Hesperia "	6 54 "	3 26 "		9 19
Newaygo "	7 10 "	3 42 "		9 35
Montague "	7 20 "	3 52 "		9 45
Whitehall "	7 30 "	4 02 "		9 55
Cedar Springs "	8 05 "	4 37 "		10 30
Sparta "	8 15 "	4 47 "		10 40
Kent City "	8 25 "	4 57 "		10 50
Lowell "	8 40 "	5 12 "		11 05
Saranac "	9 00 "	5 32 "		11 25
Ionia "	9 20 "	5 52 "		11 45
Portland "	9 35 "	6 07 "		12 00m
Grand Rapids, ar	10 15 "	6 47 "		12 40 "
Grand Rapids, lv	7 00am		2 00pm	10 00pm
Jenison Jct. "	7 32 "		2 32 "	10 32 "
Zeeland "	7 59 "		2 59 "	10 59 "
Holland "	8 09 "		3 09 "	11 09 "
Saugatuck "	8 26 "		3 26 "	11 26 "
Douglas "	8 33 "		3 33 "	11 33 "
Allegan "	8 51 "		3 51 "	11 51 "
Otsego "	9 03 "		4 03 "	12 03am
Plainwell "	9 08 "		4 08 "	12 08 "
Otsego "	9 16 "		4 16 "	12 16 "
Gun Prairie "	9 24 "		4 24 "	12 24 "
Allegan "	9 36 "		4 36 "	12 36 "
Douglas "	9 54 "		4 54 "	12 54 "
Saugatuck "	10 01 "		5 01 "	1 01 "
Holland "	10 18 "		5 18 "	1 18 "
Zeeland "	10 28 "		5 28 "	1 28 "
Jenison Jct. "	10 55 "		5 55 "	1 55 "
Grand Rapids, ar	11 25 "		6 25 "	2 25 "
Grand Rapids, lv	7 15am	2 45pm	3 40pm	10 45pm
Ionia "	8 11 "	3 42 "	4 36 "	11 42 "
Saginaw, ar	11 25 "	7 45 "	7 45 "	2 55am
Saginaw, lv	12 05pm	8 00 "	8 00 "	3 15 "
Bay City, ar	1 10 "	9 05 "	9 05 "	4 20 "
Alma, ar	1 55 "	9 45 "	9 45 "	5 05 "
Ashley, ar	2 13 "	10 03 "	10 03 "	5 23 "
St. Louis, ar	2 25 "	10 15 "	10 15 "	5 35 "
Alma, lv	2 35 "	10 25 "	10 25 "	5 45 "
Mt. Pleasant, ar	3 15 "	11 05 "	11 05 "	6 25 "
Farwell, ar	3 35 "	11 25 "	11 25 "	6 45 "
Clare, ar	3 50 "	11 40 "	11 40 "	7 00 "
Reed City, ar	4 45 "	12 35am	12 35am	7 55 "
Cadillac, ar	5 25 "	1 15 "	1 15 "	8 35 "
Traverse City, ar	8 00 "	4 00 "	4 00 "	11 15 "
Petoskey, ar	8 45 "	4 45 "	4 45 "	12 00m
Mackinaw City, ar	10 25 "	6 25 "	6 25 "	1 40 "
St. Ignace, ar	11 00 "	7 00 "	7 00 "	2 15 "
Newberry, ar	1 40pm	9 45 "	9 45 "	5 00 "
Marquette, ar	5 00 "	1 00am	1 00am	8 15 "
Ishpeming, ar	5 45 "	1 45 "	1 45 "	9 00 "
Negaunee, ar	5 55 "	1 55 "	1 55 "	9 10 "

C. L. LOCKWOOD, Agt. G. P. Agt., Grand Rapids, Mich.

HALL'S

Catarrh Cure

Recommended by Physicians

$100 REWARD PAID TO CURE!

We manufacture and sell this medicine, and know that it will cure any case. We will furnish the customer with a single instance.

It is unlike any other Catarrh remedy, as it is taken internally, acting upon the blood. If you are troubled with ringing disturbances of the ears, hawking and spitting, offensive breath, impaired hearing, and gradual loss of sense of smell, you should use this remedy.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

DR. CROUTER, Agt., Charlevoix. 23

Buy note paper and envelopes with view of Charlevoix, at O. R. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

W. S. SCHLEY.

WHO WE CLAIMED THE GREELY RELIEF EXPEDITION.

We this week present our readers with the likeness of Commander W. S. Schley, of the United States Navy, who will have charge of the expedition that will soon sail for the Arctic regions in search of the Greely party. From the sad fate of a host of Arctic explorers and relief parties who have gone to the frozen regions of the north never to return, it will be readily conceived that to volunteers his services to penetrate that icebergy cemetery of heroic explorers in search of lost humanity or their remains, is a mine of that purple bravery which commands the admiration of the whole civilized world. Upon the tablet which bears the names of a score of valient Arctic heroes will now be placed that of Winfield S. Schley, and time will invest it with either the brilliancy of a successful human accomplishment, or the sad halo of another sacrifice of human life for fellow humanity.

Winfield S. Schley was born in Maryland in 1839, and is now in his 45th year of age. He was appointed to the naval academy in 1856, and graduated in 1860. At the opening of the civil war in 1861 he was attached to the frigate Potomac as master, and stationed at Ship Island. In 1862 he was transferred to the steam gunboat Winona of the west gulf blockading squadron, and was in all the engagements which led to the capture of Port Hudson, La. So conspicuous was his bravery during this conflict that on the 16th day of July, 1862, he was promoted to a lieutenancy. Soon he was transferred to the gunboat Genesee, of the Pacific squadron, in which he served for two years, during that period being commissioned as a lieutenant commander. In 1865 he was assigned to the naval academy, where he remained an instructor until 1871, when he was transferred to the Bernicia in the Asiatic fleet. After several foreign tours he again returned to the naval academy, for three years, and on July 19th, 1874, was promoted to commander. He then commanded the Essex on the south Atlantic station during 1877 and 1878, and since that time has been variously assigned. At the time of his selection to command the Greely relief expedition he was under service in the naval bureau of equipment and navigation.

Commander Schley is now actively engaged in selecting and organizing the crew of 150 that will accompany him, and expects to sail on his mission early in April. The expedition will be composed of three vessels, and will be equipped for a two years absence. Mr. Schley will leave behind him an anxious wife and interesting family of children, and a nation that will bid him and his brave comrades a God-speed and safe return.

From the National Capital.

Notes and Interviews by a Journal Correspondent.

Mr. Morrison, "the pusher" of the house and the head of its most important committee, is working diligently, and it he don't prove an acceptable orator in tariff reform, I shall be much disappointed. And of one or the other house committees, Mr. Springer has a fairer opportunity than any other man in the house to supply his party with campaign thunder out. For his, his work, well it hum or a lasting and ringing fire on Cleveland, Attorney General." If he does all that he can do, and that is now promised, you will hear of more unscrubbed official imbecility and rascality than has been turned up in Washington in the memory of man, the utter and incomprehensible insufficiency exhibited and practiced in the department of justice for the last two years has been more scandalous than any one will believe till the very naked and homely truths are dragged to light. This, you may depend upon it, Mr. Springer will do most gracefully. And the leads me to a topic of general interest.

ARTHUR'S PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDACY.

The weakest of the weak points of Mr. Arthur's administration is, unquestionably, the efficiency (or want of it) of the cabinet. This fact will have severely against him in his candidacy for nomination at the Chicago June convention. He has but two men in his cabinet, Lincoln and Chandler. The war and navy are manned, only. I have only intimated a point or two about the attorney general; much more will be developed. But the state department, far more prominent than an equally snobbish, imbecile and far more fossilized head. Secretary Frelinghuysen seems to be simply and only ambitious to be called secretary of state, and the duties of his office he seems to comprehend only in about the same degree that the wooden Indian figure at the tobacco store does understands the price and virtue of a Havana cigar. He takes England's insults, Bismark's snubs, and the general run of foreign nations' jeers with as much agreeableness of manner as though they were paying our nation the highest compliments. He is perfectly satisfied if he can hob up once a week at the president's or Mr. Secretary so and so's state dinner, and particularly so if Mrs. Frelinghuysen can be placed on the president's right hand and then the Misses F. consecutively distributed down the table in their regular order. This to him is "greatness."

Secretary Teller's office may not be so far gone in incompetency, but the congressional inquiries will find solid meat there if they get all the facts. Some of the most fragrant, but most carefully hidden schemes will be uncorked in this interior department if all shall be made known, of western land operations, railroad connections and the like. No doubt the secretary himself is a sound business man, but he has clerks and secretaries who have led a wild dance for him in more regards than one. But enough of republican remissness for one letter.

GERMANY VS. UNITED STATES.

Tom Ochiltree has at last succeeded in identifying himself with the United States either by intent or accident. Bismark's return of the Ochiltree-House Lasker resolution is now the great theme of speculation as to whether our foreign relations are not now passing into a stage of hostilities. It is urged and conceded that when Herr Eisendecker, the German Minister, officially presents the resolution to our government, its return will be refused peremptorily. This action must be taken to maintain the dignity of the United States, and the result will be the recall of the respective ministers—a very serious state of affairs between two governments. The next week or ten days will develop this matter into a grave question.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of Catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

General Sherman has been officially placed on the retired list of the army. There are now on the retired list 64 colonels, 32 majors and 63 captains.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Had two doctors and gave up and said could not be cured. It costs a trifle. Sold by Dr. Crouter

A bill has been introduced in the house providing for the election of three vice presidents as another solution of the succession problems.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and cure in the system general and particular Consumer Powders unequaled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by Crouter & Co. 8-52

The Kentucky delegates in congress are jubilant over Gen. Hancock's election to the senate. It was an old fact that was one of the delegates favored Senator William's re-election.

Blood! Blood! Blood! Is a necessity and without it no one can live from disease. Blood must be pure. There is no doubt but Burdock's Blood Bitters can do this by ridding out all impurities and building up the system by adding additional vigor. Burdock Blood Bitters cure all diseases of the blood, such as boils, blotches, humors, pimples, erysipelas, &c. Do not wait but prevent it by using Burdock Blood Bitters. Large bottles, 100 doses, $1. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

We do not believe that Henry B. Payne was elected senator "mainly on account of his money." In point of high character and solid abilities he has long been recognized as the peer of Ohio's ablest political leaders. For thirty years the consistency of his attachment to the democratic party and the undoubted disinterestedness of his political actions have made him one of the most honored of the chieftains of the democracy.—Lansing Journal.

Stock growers all agree that for general use in their business no powder is better calculated to give satisfactory results than those manufactured by E. M. Parmelee, because they really contain the valuable remedies claimed, and do and fail to act quickly and effectively in coughs, colds, epizootic, foul blood, stoppage of water, and poor digestion, &c., in horses. For cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry, they are invaluable. Full pounds only 25 cents. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

It is only necessary to go to Cleveland to ascertain the falsity of the statement that "Henry B. Payne has no sympathies in common with the people." He is esteemed at home as a courteous, generous, kindly, public-spirited gentleman. He is a liberal giver, and some of his warmest friends are to be found among the laboring classes of the city. The Cleveland Penny Press, the organ of the labor unions, supported him for United States senator from the outset of the campaign. The workingmen of Cleveland do not want a more alert or faithful representatives at Washington to look after their interests than Henry B. Payne.

Incipient consumption, coughs, colds, bronchitis, &c., yield to the results of neglect or exposure, and must have prompt and active remedies to remove them. Croup and whooping cough cause great suffering because no effective remedy is put at hand. Why then leave yourself and children exposed to danger and death, when Hamilton's Cough Balsam will relieve all of these and prevent diseases, such as pneumonia, inflammation of lungs, and consumption. All lung difficulties are removed by this remedy. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

NEWSPAPERS do not meet the popular demand, after all. During the Matt trial, at Pittsburgh, not one could be found willing to defile its columns by printing the Dukes letters in full. An enterprising man filled the want, however, by printing the letters with all their indecent details and sending them out to be sold by boys on the streets. Thousands of the sheets were snapped up eagerly by all classes of citizens, and the enterprising man reaped a pocketful of what might have been honest, but were certainly dirty, pennies.

DURING the past seven years the German Empress has conferred a gold cross, with an autograph diploma, on no fewer than 1,027 female servants who have remained uninterruptedly in the same family for forty years. In other words, such honorable service is made honorable in a very acceptable and tangible manner. The idea is a good one, for any honest labor is honorable, and no one in limited circumstances need be ashamed of serving "third girl." Better that, with the attendant comforts, than even marriage to a man who is not able to provide and incapable of love.

JOHN HARRIS, the Cornish poet, the author of a thousand pieces of rhyme and prose, which were highly praised by Longfellow, has just died at Falmouth, aged 63. The son of a miner, he often, in his early days of poverty, used ink made of the juice of blackberries. In 1864 he got the prize for the best poem on the tercentary of Shakspeare. "Although," he says, in his autobiography, "my life has been one of hard struggles, I have been content. A crust and sonp are better than a sirloin and grouse." Six years ago Lord Beaconsfield secured him a grant of $1,000 from the royal bounty fund, but most of it was lost by the suspension of the Cornish bank. Mr. Gladstone then made him a grant of $500 from the civil list.

AT the last meeting of the Academy of Sciences in Paris, M. Paul Bert gave the results of some researches which he has recently made respecting the administration of chloroform, particularly to persons of weak heart, in surgical operations. M. Bert is of opinion that the quantity of an anæsthetic is less important to observe than the tension of the vapor inhaled and the proportion of air with which it is mixed. He has constructed an apparatus with which he administers a proportion of eight grammes of chloroform to a hundred litres of air. Experiments which he has made with this have shown that not only is a saving of chloroform effected, but the danger is considerably lessened. The pulse of the patient inhaling the mixture is calm, and the temperature of the body is not sensibly lowered, while in only four cases out of twenty-two was the slightest appearance of nausea produced.

EDWARD NIEDERMEYER, who lately died at Memphis, of water on the brain, was quite a character, notable chiefly for his experiments and success with the game of poker. He was a Swiss by birth, but was taken to New Orleans when a boy. He was one of the few survivors of the Nicaragua expedition, and in the war of the rebellion was in the Commissary Department of the Confederate army. In 1863 he was sent on a secret mission to England, and on his return was made Chief of the Secret Service. After the war he conducted a saloon business until he had made a fortune, devoting the greater part of his time to poker. It is put down among his remarkable exploits that he once bet $10,000 on a hand he held, his face in the meantime being perfectly immovable. He rarely lost at the game, and such was his luck he drew three royal prizes in lotteries. He died at the age of 62 years, his life being insured for $60,000.

FOOTBALL is made rather a brutal sport under the rules of Rugby, England, in what is known as the "mass." A player is allowed to take the ball in his hands and run with it toward his goal, but his opponents are also permitted to pounce upon him to regain the ball the best way they can. The consequence often is the meeting of twenty lusty young men in a pack of struggling, pushing rivalry for the ball in their midst. When the "mass" dispenses it frequently happens that some one of the players is crippled or badly hurt. A few days ago, in a match between university clubs, a young man died from injuries sustained in one of these terrible scrambles, and the Coroner's jury very justly passed vigorous condemnation upon the rule permitting such a perilous rush. All sports that are worth manly pursuits have an element of ringliness in them, which makes it all the more desirable that there should be precautions against extremes, and rules should be made accordingly.

Chicago Daily News: A few years ago the death of Wendell Phillips would have been a calamity to universal liberty. Now he can go, and freedom only suffers as children suffer who see the aged head of a fond father laid low—a father who has been their guide, protector, and friend, but whose days of labor are past. The great work of Wendell Phillips was completed when he saw the race for which he had so long striven manumitted and enfranchised. The years that have followed have been years of honor to him, and years of usefulness also, but the edifice was reared, and less cunning hands could place the finishing touches upon it. And so he has been only waiting, ready to go, his accounts ready, his life-work finished, his labor done. Without official position he fills one of the principal niches in the history of his country. Without the spur of public place and the ambition of men seeking rewards and recognition at the hands of others, he stands in the lands of his fellows, his words live among the most eloquent utterances of his contemporaries. He spoke without price, he labored without pay, he battled without fee or reward, save what came from an approving conscience. And whether he spoke amid applause or jeers, with approval or frowns, it was all the same to him. He began by saying, with Lincoln, "if slavery is not wrong nothing is wrong," and that rock he builded for posterity. Others who strove with him were great; some of them have reared above their tombs the lofty shafts that tell of a nation's love and admiration; but none among them all battled for liberty more unselfishly, more devotedly, or more effectively than Wendell Phillips.

"DUKE MIKE, Nilsson commencing singing as soon as she enters the theater before a rehearsal," reported Mary Kaschmann when a Chicago Herald reporter put a question to that effect. "Why, certainly. We all sing before the performance in our dressing-rooms. You know one cannot risk to open the mouth after a long silence only after appearing on the stage. One is very likely to hit a false note, and if that should happen at the very opening of an important part it would not only confuse the singer himself, but the others also. We always sing a few bars while waiting in the wings for the sign of a prompter. There, of course, we have to do it sotto voce; but in the dressing-rooms we sing right out, to have the voice clear and ringing when our time comes. We don't do that because we like it, but as a matter of necessity." "Do singers ever rehearsa during a performance?" inquired the reporter. "I have heard that Wachtel sats dried prunes, and Mme. Lucca numerles figs," said the singer, "but I can't say whether that is true. The great Niemann, of the Berlin Opera, always has half-and-half—that is, porter and champagne—ready for him when he does the heavy parts in Wagner's compositions. Coffee, either with or without the yelk of an egg, and hot water, is much liked by some singers. Others take coffee with an addition of strong liquor; but I do not believe in any concoctions. It may stimulate the voice for the time, but a reaction is sure to follow. The best thing in the world is continual training and practicing, and a good protection and care of the throat while the voice is not in use."

PIKE COUNTY, GA., claims the largest grape-vine in the world. It is 18 years old, 34 inches in circumference at the base, and is a quarter of a mile long. It bears five wagon-loads of grape, which are said to be very fine, being of some English variety.

"I HATE not," the Bishop of Liverpool writes, "the smallest sympathy with the anti-Jewish movement, and I cannot understand it. To me it appears the greatest blot on the German election."

THERE is an old Gaelic saw which runs thus: "If the best man's faults were written on his forehead it would make him pull his hat over his eyes."

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

Three Three.

The night, was cold, was a night cold to Dolly Jack and Jim, and so I sae—three three—
Dolly, each in her cot, was fast asleep,
Jim, from the chest of his mother's linen,
And bled away to the cold city streets
Dolly, the chief, Jack, the thief, Jim, the Dolly, in the city streets, search'd and sought,
Jim, in the chest, slept, and Jack, he
Dolly, Jack and Jim met out of the darkness
Dolly, the lady, Jack, the knight, Jim, the
Dolly, the lady, Jack, the knight, Jim, the Dolly, the lady, Jack, the knight, Jim, the

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG:

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

The daily average circulation of the Detroit Evening News is getting larger.

The cold wave swept the whole country, and in some places was the severest of the winter.

The Cedar Springs Mail starts its second year with every appearance of being a financial success.

Dan Holcomb and Jud Crouch have been arrested for the murder of the Crouch family near Jackson.

Forty to fifty columns of choice reading matter for two cents is what you get in the Detroit Sunday Times.

Last Saturday's Detroit Free Press contained a four page review of Lansing, its business and institutions, with a cut of the state house.

It has been announced that A. P. Swineford, now of the Marquette Journal, will take editorial charge of the Cleveland Plaindealer, which is to be run in Henry B. Payne's interest.

"All the news for two cents," is the best recommend we can give the Detroit Times; its news department represents the whole world, and is condensed to meet the wants of the business man or mechanic who has but little time for reading.

Arrangements have been definitely concluded for the publication of the new temperance organ the Union Light. The paper will be printed from the office of the Adrian Weekly Press, and the first number is expected to issue Friday, March 7.

Armour, Kent & Bensley took out a permit for a 12 story office building, 174x172 feet, at the corner of Van Buren street and Pacific avenue, Chicago, to cost $1,000,000. The building will cost more for its construction than has any buildings of like character in the city, and will also be distinguished, when completed, as the highest building in Chicago, for the roof will also be 176 feet from the sidewalk.

A Washington dispatch credits Gen. Cutcheon with saying that he will have a hearing before the river and harbor committee in a few days, to talk on the subject of a harbor of refuge near Manistee. He says the cost of half the vessels wrecked on that coast in one season would more than pay for the expenses of the harbor. Gen. Wright, chief of engineers, was before the committee last Friday and gave his personal recommendation to the scheme.

The jury in the trial of Wilson for murdering policeman Ballard, of Detroit, returned a verdict of murder in the second degree, with a recommendation for mercy. Judge Swift paid little attention to the recommendation for mercy, and when asked by defendant's counsel to postpone sentence, replied that the moral effect of the punishment would be lessened in a postponement, and he thereupon proceeded to sentence Wilson to hard labor in the state prison for life. The Detroit Journal applauds this sentence and says: "When we have more such judges and more such sentences we shall have fewer murderers." The Journal might have added that to make such sentences effective the governor should be forever enjoined from exercising the pardoning power.

The Politics of the Detroit Times.

"The Detroit Times wants a fair open fight in congress on the tariff question. Which sale would that sprightly journal champion?"—Gratiot Journal. The side that supported the Morrison bill. If anybody could letter that bill in any particular, in the way of lessening the trade restriction without disproportionately reducing the revenue to be derived from the importation of the article in question, the Times would say amen to the amendment. But, inasmuch as prompt action is desirable, the Morrison bill as it stands is to be preferred to what it might be after the defenders of various interests had finished "trading." The Morrison bill is designed to reduce the revenue about $35,000,000, while it relieves the consumers of the county of the payment of six times that sum in the way of bounses to favored enterprises and practical monopolies. That's why the Times is pretty well satisfied with the measure.—Detroit Times.

Whatever may be the opinion of the Times as to the old issues, we are glad to see it on the side of economy and reduction, of taxes in whatever form.

Tariff Reform.

A private telegram received in this city yesterday from congressman Houseman contained positive assurance that the Michigan Democratic delegation in congress will act in harmony on the lumber question; are a unit in favor of the Morrison bill as it at present stands, and will support any amendments made to it by the ways and means committee.

Michigan democrats are perhaps no more interested in free lumber than they are in free iron ore, free copper ore, and free raw materials generally, and they demand that they all be put on the free list by this congress, as far as they can be without jeopardizing to an unwarrantable degree the immediate interests of any protection but home industry, and without of course curtailing the revenue to a figure below the necessary expenses of the government. Mr. Hewitt recently showed, through the mouths of protectionists, that such tariff enormities as the iron and copper ore duties ought to be sloughed off entirely. In the same way the land devastating and flood breeding lumber bounty ought to be removed. The position Mr. Houseman was reported to have taken is that placing lumber on the free list would destroy the interests of manufacturers and owners of lumber in Michigan. This is mere assumption. It is an error. There can be no mistake about this. The lumbermen of Michigan can compete with the lumbermen of Canada and make money. There are hundreds of men in this city who will remember a speech made by John C. Blanchard of Iosco in the campaign in which Mr. Houseman was elected, when Blanchard, discussing this question of duty on lumber, said, in substance, that he had made about $12,000 in manufacturing less than five millions of feet. He had a large quantity of pine lands, and was in favor of duty on lumber, because it put $2 per 1000 extra into his pocket. It was a mistake, he said, to suppose that any part of this went to the laborers. He employed his labor where he could get it the cheapest and pocketed the whole of the tariff swag. He would have manufactured, he said, the same amount of lumber had there been no tariff, and would have made money. "But," Mr. Blanchard said, "I think I can stand the tariff on lumber as long as the consumers can stand it." Were the duty removed it might slightly diminish the profits of manufacturers, but would still leave them a margin highly remunerative. An examination of the books of any lumber firm in this city will disclose the fact that the profits range from five dollars to nine dollars per thousand feet, according to the grade and location of the place. What justification is there, with these facts admitted by leading lumbermen, in continuing this tax? Mr. Houseman can be relied on, the Democrat believes, not to place himself in open antagonism to democratic principles and policy, and with direct interests of an overwhelming majority of the people who elected him, for the benefit of a few who fear, with much reason, that to put lumber on the free list would reduce their profits to a pay cent that other business men are glad to get on their investments.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

RAMS of choice breed fetch from $1,000 to $2,000 in Australia, while first-class mutton sells in Adelaide and Sidney for 37 cents the stone—fourteen pounds.

Jersey Justice.

Speaking of "Jersey justice," a Baltimore lawyer declares that New Jersey "has won all her high praise she gets for prompt, unswerving and merciless justice to lawbreakers. Criminals are in that State condemned and punished without difficulty or delay. This is all the more remarkable, he thinks, when it is considered that at the ends of New Jersey lie the two largest cities of the new world—New York and Philadelphia. However, it is to this very fact that Jersey justice owes its origin. "For half a century," he explains, "Philadelphia and New York have sent marauders into New Jersey. Either as roistering excursionists, hay tumpis, or professional thieves, they come read for mischief. When caught they are aligned always without money or friends to hinder punishment, the justice society of which there is nobody but themselves to dispute. These cases long ago insinuated our courts in celerity, and that is what led to the establishment of the much-vaunted Jersey justice. I don't know that our officials are better men than the average in other States, but it is certain that they do better work from habit."—N. Y. Sun.

NEW GOODS.

I am pleased to say that my

Spring Stock

is ready for inspection. Come and see them, and when you want a suit of clothes that are JUST IN STYLE, you will know where to find them. My stock is full of the

LATEST STYLES,

AND

Price to Correspond With the Times.

GEO. W. MILLER.

JOSEPH HYLAND,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Heavy blacksmithing of all kinds, and Repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds,

Imported and Domestic Perfumery.

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Bartholomew's new

Opera Block

EVERYTHING

IN THE LINE OF

Furniture and Undertakers' Goods

CAN BE FOUND AT THE OLD RELIABLE HOUSE OF

HENRY C. COOPER, CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See Me Before Buying.

Advance Lumber Company

Are now prepared to do

CUSTOM SAWING

Promptly and on short notice. We have on hand a large quantity of

Hard and Soft Wood Lumber and Hemlock Timber.

GIVE US A TRIAL. ADVANCE LUMBER CO. ADVANCE, MICH.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

AT COST!

All kinds of

Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Ever brought to Charlevoix.

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.

They leave no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY.

And Satisfaction Guaranteed.

L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House

CHARLEVOIX.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.; HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL

A Progressive Local and Family Newspaper.

Published Every Thursday, at $1.50 a Year

Hand-Sleigh for Sale.

Just the thing for Traveling. Inquire at this office.

A. J. McLEOD

Keeps on hand at his

Meat Market

Everything usually kept in

A First-Class Establishment.

The highest market price in cash paid for

Hides, Pelts & Fat Stock.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

THE JOURNAL

CHARLEVOIX, Mich., March 6, 1884.

Business Announcements.

A genuine article in Butter at B. Bart's.

New Cottons and Prints this week. Before buying old and shelf worn goods, give us a call. Fyfield Embry & Co.

Any amount of Soap Buckets at bottom prices at L. D. Bartholomew's.

We have just opened up a choice and clean assortment of every description, which we are selling rapidly at 5 cents per pound, at Fyfield Embry & Co.'s.

It is not wind pudding, but a guarantee fact, that we sell the best oysters for 25 cents per can ever offered in Charlevoix. Fyfield Embry & Co.

Wood, Wood, Wood.

100 cords of good dry birch and white rock wood for sale. Good measure guaranteed. Call at the office of

J. MILO EATON.

The Temperature.

The following is a record of observations of the thermometer at the JOURNAL office, at 7 a. m. and 7 p. m. each day, for the week ending Tuesday, as above zero in all cases unless marked with a (-).

	7 A.M.	7 P.M.
Thursday	8	24
Friday	22	4
Saturday	26	6
Sunday	11	15
Monday	4	10
Tuesday	16	16
Wednesday	2	11

Provision Market.

Retail prices to consumers, as corrected every Wednesday evening by UPRIGHT, EMERY & CO., general dealers.

FLOUR, per bbl, $6.00, $7.00, and $8.00
BUCKWHEAT FLOUR, per cwt, $3.00
CORN MEAL, per cwt, bolted $2.00, unbolted, $1.90
HAY, per ton, $8@9.
OATS, per bu, 35c.
SHORTS FEED, per cwt, $1.60
APPLES, per bu, $1.00.
POTATOES, per bu, 30c.
ONIONS, per bu, $1.00.
BUTTER, per lb, 28@30c.
EGGS, per doz, 20@25c.
LARD, per lb, 10@12c
HAMS, per lb, Smoked, 12½c.
SALT PORK, lbc. Beef, 8c.
CHEESE, 10c.
WATER WHITE OIL, 25c
FARMERS PRODUCE in good demand

Fresh Meats from the Market.

STEAK, beef steak, 12@15c; pork steak, 12c; roasts, 8@12c; sausage, 10c; hams, 14c; shoulders, 12c.
TALLOW, 4@5c.

Local News Brevities.

St. Patrick almanacs at Weed's.

S. G. Isaman, of South Arm, recently sold a stall fed steer that dressed 1,015 pounds.

Seven and one half columns of state news in the last issue of the Kalamazoo Telegraph.

Stoepel & Co., of East Jordan, have on hand five million feet of lumber to open spring business.

H. B. Chapman and wife of Bay Springs favored the JOURNAL with a brief call on Monday.

L. D. Bartholomew writes from Bartow, Fla., that he may be home about the first of April.

A company of amateurs is to play the "Octoroon" in East Jordan Saturday evening, March 8th.

Summer boarders are already calling for rooms for next summer, and a large business is predicted.

Neighboring papers predict a great immigration to this northern country during the coming summer.

Rev. B. F. Van Anken had a very interesting and successful series of meetings at Northport last week.

Capt. A. H. Beaniett will command the Clara Belle next season, and will run from East Jordan to Petoskey.

W. F. Orrell has gone to Chicago to work until business opens here. He expects to engage in paper hanging.

H. Mitchell, of East Jordan, has built a 10 horse power engine, the first ever built in Charlevoix county.

A portion of Geo. Miller's new spring goods have arrived, and he is putting them on the shelves this week.

Chas. Ely was remembered a few days since by some Ypsilanti friends who sent him a very fine gold watch as a present.

Has anyone anything to offer on the important question of getting another railroad here? We must shoo that Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad one into this country if there is any such thing.—Kalkaska Leader.

The wife of John McCabe went to Petoskey for medical treatment recently, and reports received yesterday indicate that she is gradually failing.

Messrs. Jas. Hemmings and Chas. Swallow, painters, have gone to Chicago for the balance of the winter. They will return in time for business in the spring.

The W. C. T. U. will hold a special meeting at the home of Mrs. L. E. Allen on Friday at 3 o'clock. It is desired that every member of the union be present.

We had a story written telling how cold it was last Sunday morning, but on reading the Statesman determined not to print it. We were not cold enough to compete with him.

Last Friday morning fire destroyed the building in Traverse City occupied by Haskell's book store, the U. S. express office, and the Western Union telegraph office. Loss $10,000, partially insured.

J. Milo Eaton, has copies of the carnival edition of the New Orleans Times-Democrat, one side of each sheet being filled with colored illustrations representing features of the carnival in that city.

Contracts are being let for getting out the ties for the railroad between Alma and Mt. Pleasant, which will be a part of of the proposed Lansing, St. Johns and Mt. Pleasant railroad. Lansing Republican.

March is ushered in in no very lamb like manner, if cold weather be a consideration. The mercury has been playing around zero for a week past, and on Sunday morning reached 17° below. Fortunately, however, there was no wind with this extreme cold.

The party at the residence of Mr. Bordish, last Friday evening, was a very enjoyable affair. About twenty couples were in attendance. Dancing was the chief amusement, which was kept up until 12 o'clock, when a bountiful supper was served to which they seemed to do ample justice.

"The Methodist Episcopal pulpit has been occupied, for the past two weeks, by Rev. G. W. Howe. Next Sabbath, the pastor will preach morning and evening. The revival work is still progressing, and promises to extend especially through several weeks and generally through the conference year. The church is in earnest expectation. All are invited."

Messrs. H. O. Rose, M. F. Quinlan and F. J. Smith, of Petoskey, and S. E. Watson, supt. of the Bell Telephone Construction Co., in Michigan, visited Charlevoix on Monday to work up the necessary pledges of business for a line connecting Petoskey, Charlevoix, and Traverse City. One thousand dollars was asked for, and about $800 was pledged, but it is thought the whole amount can be secured.

Glenn & Porter's saw mill at East Jordan has been running about a month, and has averaged 17,000 feet per day of frozen timber. The head sawyer informs the Enterprise that the saws cut as clean lumber from frozen timber as they do from timber not frozen, and expressed the belief that saws rightly fitted would do as good work in the winter as in the summer. If this be proven it will make business lively in this region during the winter season, especially after we get a railroad.

Every dollar that our citizens spend in other cities takes just that amount from the business and the capital of our own town. In these matters there should be a spirit of reciprocity shown. There is a mutual dependence in a community like this which calls for mutual aid in all business relations. A lawyer has his clients among old residents, makes his money through their patronage and upon what principle is he justified in receiving such a favor and in return spending the money thus earned with the residents of some other city? A physician has his patients from our business men, why should he be justified in purchasing his clothes, his household furniture, his carriages or his provisions at some place where dealers, contractors, working men and all employes owe their living to the business men of the city who hire them, and their duty in return is to patronize those by whom they are thus favored. The dry goods men who sell to our hardware merchants should reciprocate, and so through all branches of trade. So long as these mutual obligations exist they should be observed, and the citizen who fails in his part need not be surprised to find that he is left in the cold by those who would otherwise be his patrons and business friends. Patronize our own institutions and as an inevitable result you are promoting the welfare of the city and all its interests.

The meeting called at the old town hall last Saturday evening for considering the question of nominating a prohibition ticket in the village this spring, brought out considerable discussion, and developed a determination to make this one of the chief issues in local politics. A few favored postponing the caucus until other tickets are nominated and see if a third ticket be necessary, while others favored an aggressive movement regardless of other parties. The meeting adjourned to meet Wednesday evening, at the same place, when it is expected a full ticket will be nominated.

J. S. Hyland received a dispatch on Saturday from the Elk Rapids Iron Co., to come at once to do some repairing. He went on Tuesday with help and tools. Mr. Hyland's reputation as a workman brings him numerous good jobs. Not least among his work this winter has been the overhauling and rebuilding of the boilers for the tugs Bob Stephenson and L. S. Payne, the former owned by the Pine Lake Iron Co., of Ironton, and the latter by Eli Tonkouse, of Charlevoix. Mr. Hyland's institution will save many dollars to the county that would otherwise go out, and, as in the job this week, may bring many dollars into the county. He should receive the entire business of this community.

A private letter received by one of our citizens mentions the possibility of Charlevoix getting the Lansing, Alma, Mt. Pleasant and Northern Railroad, recently organized. It would be an almost straight line to Lansing, and would pass through some of the richest agricultural and timber land in Northern Michigan, that is not reached by any other road. The letter mentioned predicts that the cars will be running on a portion of the road within a year. Work has already been commenced, as will be seen by the following dispatch from Alma to a Detroit paper: "The contract for driving the piles on which to build the bridge of the Lansing, Alma, Mount Pleasant & Northern railroad has been let to G. D. Barton of this place, and work begins yesterday morning. It will be pushed rapidly to completion."

The County Jail.

In our court proceedings it will be noticed that the Judge designated the jail at Traverse City as the county jail for this county. This is a reflection on the public spirit and progress of the citizens of this county. Will they permit their law breakers to be taken to another county for safe keeping. The expense of transportation will go far toward renting or building suitable quarters at some point in the county.

As the village and surrounding country increases in population, we shall need a village lock up among other things, and why would it not be a good investment to build a town hall, council room, lock-up, engine house, etc., large enough to accommodate the board of supervisors, circuit court, and county criminals, and then by renting to the county, manage to keep our funds at home as much as possible.

The village needs such a building, and if the county does not want to build, they would certainly be willing to rent of the village, and thus counsel in their own expenses, as well keep the cash at home.

Historical Society.

Fifty-five persons assembled at the parlors of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Green on Tuesday evening, to enjoy the exercises of the historical society. Ed. Farmelee read the historical paper, upon the character of Benjamin Franklin, and his influence during the revolution. R. W. Kane read a sketch from Do Quincy. Miss Severance read "Paul Revere's Ride." The music of the evening was by Mrs. O. D. Wood, Miss Amelia, Mrs. Mayne, Maggie Green, and Edith Hawkins. The company spent a portion of the evening examining the new books, 27 volumes having been added to the society's library. The next meeting will be held at A. H. Upright's Tuesday evening.

Circuit Court Proceedings.

The following cases were disposed of after making our report last week:

Robert Bowles was sentenced to the reformatory at Ionia for two years.

Bennett v. Genett. Judgment for defendant, $12.50 and costs.

Guyles & Nash v. Genett. Replevin. Judgment for defendant, $37.50 and costs including attorney fee.

Catherine Their v. Addis. Judgment for plaintiff, $120.66 and costs.

Thomer v. Meloch. Assumpsit. Continued.

Wood v. Township of Norwood. Continued.

Clark v. Coleman. Judgment for plaintiff $23.12 and costs.

Hahn et al v. Lavanway. Assumpsit. Judgment for plaintiff $288.36 and costs.

Brown v. Sweet. Assumpsit. Judgment for plaintiff $29.08 and costs in chiding attorney fee.

Bush v. Macy. Replication to be filed within ten days or bill dismissed.

Chapman v. Morgan. Bill dismissed.

Fuller et al. v. Strong. Judgment for plaintiff $214.00 and costs.

Willis v. Dyer and wife. Foreclosure. Decree confirmed.

An order was entered designating the jail at Traverse City as the county jail for Charlevoix county, on account of the unsafe condition of the jail here.

Ironton School.

The following is a report of senior department of Ironton school, for month ending February 26.

NAMES.	GEOGRAPHY	GRAMMER	HISTORY	ARITHMETIC	READING	SPELLING	ORTHOGRAPHY	WRITING	GENERAL AVE.
FIRST GRADE.
Geneva Bee	100	88	90	85	96	92	96	90	93
Nellie Noyes	100	88	99	96	92	92	92	88	94
Katie Smith	100	93	87	99	93	100	89	85	93
Anna Moorhouse	90	90	85	90	91	92	92	90	90
Owen Hammond	95	90	90	100	85	90	90	85	90
Frank Hammond	85	90	90	90	85	85	90	85	87
Frank Shearer	90	87	83	92	85	85	85	85	86
Hattie Bird	75	75	69	82	83	75	85	78	78
SECOND GRADE.
Lizzie Wheeler	95	90	90	90	95	95	95	95	93
Ella Bird	90	100	90	90	90	85	85	90	89
Gertie Jackson	90	90	90	90	85	85	85	90	88
Freddie Hammond	92	80	74	85	92	85	92	92	85
Frank Holland	78	75	78	85	85	85	85	85	82
Lucy Metcherr	78	75	78	85	85	85	85	85	82
Lewis Hammond	75	75	78	85	85	85	85	85	81
Fred Green	80	75	78	85	85	80	80	80	80
George Smith	80	75	69	85	85	80	80	78	78
Harvey Weeks	75	75	69	80	85	75	75	78	77
Percy Shearer	75	75	56	90	75	75	85	75	75
Ella Hill	75	75	56	80	75	75	75	75	73
Hiram Brock	85	90	100	50	60	85	85	75	79
THIRD GRADE.
Willie Weeks	95	95	95	95	95	95	95	95	95
Lester Odell	85	85	85	85	85	85	85	85	85
Katie Briner	85	85	85	85	85	85	85	85	85
Katie Kinney	75	85	85	85	80	80	80	80	79
Frank Williams	75	75	75	80	80	80	75	75	77
FOURTH GRADE.
Willie Weeks	95	95	95	95	95	95	95	95	95
Jennie Shearer	85	85	85	85	85	85	85	85	85
Jessie Hunt	90	85	80	90	75	75	75	75	79
Nellie Hammond	75	75	75	75	75	75	75	75	75
Nettie Weldon	75	75	80	80	75	75	75	75	76
Caroline Newton	75	100	75	75	75	75	75	75	78
Hannah Murphy	70	75	75	75	75	80	75	75	75
Mary Scoville	70	75	75	75	75	75	75	75	74

J. M. HAMMS, Teacher.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by Tremaine Bros., real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, March 4, 1884, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Harriet L. Clifford to George W. Crouter, lot No. 9 of Clifford's addition to Charlevoix, $175.

George W. Crouter and wife to Lydo Hallett, lot No. 9 of Clifford's addition to Charlevoix, $175.

O. S. Washburn and wife to Edwin M. Clark, part of sec. 26-34-8, $714.30.

Jane Muldeck to William H. How and s e ¼ 20-32-6, $200.

How it Takes.

The following extracts from letters commendatory of the revised view of Charlevoix explain themselves:

Reading, Mich., March 3.

We thank you for revised birds-eye view of Charlevoix, received this afternoon. It shows Breezy Point cottage finely. * * *

H. P. FARMELEE.

Middleville, Mich., March 4.

The cut you enclose is a fine one. I will have it photographed on glass, and present it to the public through my stereoscopic instruments.

M. WRIGHT.

G. A. R. at Eastport.

Maj. E. H. Green, assisted by Adjt. Frank Shaubut, and comrades H. Bardus, Wm. Kanagy, D. Flannigan, A. W. Hartwell, and R. R. Sweet, of Baxter Post, No. 119, of Charlevoix, went to Eastport last Saturday, and there organized Geo. Martin Post, No. 227, with 21 members and the following officers:

P. Com.—D. W. Sage.
S. V. Com.—W. H. Barnes.
Jr. V. Com.—A. J. Drake.
O. D.—D. Blakely.
O. M.—S. B. Anway.
Adjt.—H. Blakely.
Chap.—J. R. Childs.
O. G.—L. Kinyon.
Sergt. Major.—Wm. Cook.
Q. M. Sergt.—L. R. Rogers.
Sentry.—Jno. McPherson.

After the business of organization was completed, the "boys" gathered around a fire and enjoyed themselves with cigars and reminiscence until long after midnight. The occasion was one to be remembered by all the participants.

Ironton.

Mr. Box's saw mill is running again.

The brewery is moving upward slowly.

Mr. John Otis, of Mancelona, is in town.

The family of Mr. James Freel is expected every day.

Town meeting is close at hand, and the question is, Who shall be supervisor?

The furnace made 320 tons of iron last week, the largest run it has ever made.

Mr. Robinson is looking over the prospects here with a view of starting another grocery.

Richard Lake registered at the Pioneer house on Saturday. He is still looking after taxes.

Rev. Mr. Blake preached at the school house last Sunday morning. A revival service might be of some benefit here.

Mrs. Thomas, a widow with three small children, slipped and fell last Saturday night, breaking one of her legs, just above the ankle.

Mr. James Otis is mending slowly. He says he will be out in two weeks, but his physician thinks that if he gets up in six weeks he will be doing well.

Burgess.

School closed last Friday.

Will Burgess build a church?

Cold weather interferes with business at Whitford's mill.

There was a pleasant surprise party at J. A. Root's on the 22d.

Moses Cooper is pushing the post and tie business this winter.

Albert Norman's mother, who has been quite sick, is recovering under the treatment of Dr. Lewis.

It is safe to say that some people's cattle are more trouble to the neighbors than they are to the owners.

The revival at Fair Grove had a tendency to quiet matters at the "corners," and, as the boys say, everything is lovely.

Last Friday afternoon the inhabitants of Hayes were made glad by the whistle of the Charlevoix Mfg. Co., although many did not know what it was.

The spelling school at Lakeview school house on Friday evening was well attended, considering the cold weather. Miss Mary Bennett is the champion speller.

NOTICE OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, } ss.
County of Charlevoix, }
In the matter of the estate of

FRANK CHALOUTKA, Minor.

Notice is hereby given, that in pursuance of an order granted to the undersigned, guardian of the estate of said Frank Chaloutka, by the Hon. Judge of Probate for the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, March 4, A. D. 1884, there will be sold at public vendue, to the highest bidder, at the front door of Lewis's hall, in the county of Charlevoix, in said state, on Saturday, the 5th day of April, A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, subject to all incumbrances by mortgage or otherwise existing at the time of the sale, the following described real estate, viz: The north west quarter of the north east quarter of section twenty, four (20) in township thirty-four (34) north of range eight (8) west, containing forty (40) acres more or less.

CHARLES CHALOUTKA, Guardian.

JOHN NICHOLLS,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades,

WAGON TONGUES, SHINGLES, LATH, ETC.

LUMBER SAWED AND BILLS FILLED TO ORDER.

HASTE NOT—REST NOT.

BY GOSTRE.

Without haste! without rest!
Bind the sheaves in the field!
Reap it with speed!
Storm or cumulous, it will
Bend not flowers that round thee bloom,
Bear it onward to the tomb!

Haste not—let no thoughtless deed
Breed a thought of sorrow!
Ponder well and know the right,
Onward, then, strike at the right;
Have not—years can never atone
For one reckless action done!

Rest not! life is sweeping by,
Go and dare before the day
Some great society and sublime
Leave behind to conquer time!
Rest not—'tis the law or
When those forms have passed away!

Haste not! rest not! calmly wait.
Meekly bear life's ills and smile!
Duty is thy judge guide—
Do the right, whether bedide
Haste not—rest not—conflicts, rust,
God shall crown thy work at last!

"Kept Till Called For."

BY MRS. W. A. DAVIS.

I.

"It's all well enough for your highty-tighty rich folk to keep Christmas. Where's the use in our a-doin' it? I ain't had a square meal in a month, an' I'd rather have had a Christmas plum-puddin' any day. Shake the ashes out o' that old rusty pot, Doll, an' pick out what we can find; I'm cold to the bone. Hark, an' the old roof creaks! Listen! what's that noise?"

Was it the surf beating on the rocks, or a hungry demon howling through the storm?

"I don't hear nuthin', Pop."

"But I do. Hark! there it is again!"

The boy flung a handful of half-burned coals on the fire, and then fastened his nose on the window-pane in the effort to hear what his father's keener ear had caught.

"Thin' no use, Doll; these here coals ain't no good. I'll go out an' git some drift-wood."

"It's all wet and won't burn." Doll had hugged the coals all the way from the village ash heap on account of the storm, and in hopes of having a little colored warmth.

"So you won't keep Christmas, Pop?" he asked, again returning to the subject they had been discussing.

"Keep it?—no. There's that noise again. I'm goin' out. Jet you stay here, an' hold on to things, or mebbe we'll be drawed out afore mornin'."

Doll held the door as his father plunged into the darkness, or the wind would have prevented, its being shut again.

Wrapping himself in an old pea-jacket much too big for him, Doll sat down to await his father's return. It was after the fashion that his thoughts ran:

"Me an' father's lived all alone here as long as I can remember. We ain't had much to eat an' drink on 'ceasions, an' I ain't had no schoolin'. Class is about all we've got, or it is wasn't for class we might as well be drowded, an' done with it."

Then he drew from his pocket a crumpled half-sheet of an illustrated paper, and gazed longingly at the picture of a Christmas dinner party on it. Around a bountiful table were the cheery faces of well-fed children, looking with delight at an immense plum-pudding. Scraps of holly and wreaths of evergreen, with the usual branch of mistletoe, decked the page. Besides this there was the old story in the cornice—the three Wise Men on their camels in the desert, the bright star above guiding them, the old inn at Bethlehem, the manger, and the Blessed Babe.

What did it all mean? In vain he spelled out a word or two. He could not understand it.

Meantime the wind rattled at the latch, and howled down the chimney, and shrieked through every loop-hole. Doll was getting sleepy, and the fire was almost out. Why didn't Pop come back? Should he go to bed, or would he wait? Fatigue soon settled the question, for he fell asleep in the rocking-chair.

Waking late in the night, he found that the wind had died down, and the stern was over.

Where was Pop? He must find out, for he and Pop were all in all to each other. Opening the door, he crept out.

He had not gone far when he saw something quiet. Under a jutting rock, a big bundle seemed to be lying, all twisted up with ropes and seaweed and broken timber.

Doll looked and looked; then he went nearer, then a little nearer still, and at last he touched the bundle cautiously. As he did so, something cried. What was it? and who was it that hugged something so tight? Surely not—yes, it was—Pop!

II.

Doll's curiosity and fear were about equal. He knelt down and put his hand on Pop's cold face; he tried to get at his heart, but as he did so there was that cry again, and he jumped back in a trigit.

Pop glad he was to see a little flutter of Pop's eyelids, and a little little hand pulling at it, and Pop's eyes unclose and shut again, and his old weather-coat give a great heave.

"Pop! Pop!" cried Doll, bursting into tears, "please wake up—please!" And then Pop really did try to speak, but his voice was very low and faint.

"Take this home first, Doll," he said; and he put the strange object he was hugging into Doll's arms. "Take it home and put it in your bed; be very careful; and then come back and help me."

Doll did as he was bidden. The queer little thing struggled and struck him with its tiny fist, and kicked against his breast with all its small strength, but he did not let go; and, after putting it on his cot, and tucking it up carefully, he hastened back to his father. Pop was hardly hurt, but with Doll's help crawled home and got to bed, leaving Doll giving the boy directions what to do.

Doll must go over to Granny Crane's and get the cent's worth of milk which she always let them have when they could afford the luxury, and he was to warm a few spoonfuls and feed the baby. And he wasn't to say a word about it. It was a rule among the rude people of the shore to pay little attention to the wrecks in their vicinity; there was no life-saving station there, and they wanted none—for reasons of their own.

So Doll got the milk, and after he had made the fire burn took the little creature on his lap and tried to feed it. He wished it had been a kitten, for then it could have fed itself; but it winked its great blue eyes at him, and spluttered and choked until he was scared out of his wits. It wakened his father, who was now groaning with pain, and to quiet it Doll thought of a way of feeding entirely original with himself—he dipped the end of a towel in the milk, and the child sucked it.

It was slow work, but it succeeded, and Doll had the happiness of seeing the hungry little creature satisfied. Then he fondled and caressed it, just as he would have done a kitten, and its warm breath was sweet as it snuggled against his rosy cheeks. All day long this was repeated, and at night he built a big fire, and drew his bed beside it, to keep the child still in his arms.

The next day he wanted some and tried to bathe it; but, between the soap suds and the kicking and screaming, he was glad to wrap it up again in one of his own joyous but clean garments, and quiet its cries.

Doll was supremely happy—it was his or possession. He had often wished for brothers and sisters, but this was much better; it was all his own, and he took the tiny thing in a grasp with fatherly fondness, only one thing marring his joy, and that was Pop.

Poor Pop was very ill; all day long he moaned and moaned, and refused food; nothing but a little clam juice passed his lips; and Doll began to think something must be done. What the something should be he did not know, but he would try just as he had done for the baby.

When he went over to Granny Crane's for his next penny-worth of milk he asked her for some bonesset, and she gave him a big bunch of it herb. This he steeped in hot water, and gave his father to drink. Pop certainly did get better after he had swallowed a big pitcherful; but there seemed to be something the matter with his legs, and Doll was afraid to touch them; as there was nothing to do but travel all five miles away, and ask Dr. Perkins to come over. It would have been a great trial for Doll to leave the baby, so he didn't do it; he just bundled it up in an old piece of bed-quilt, and started on his journey. Fortunately he did not have to go the whole way, for he met the Doctor on the road.

The gig was going slowly, and when Doll stopped it stopped, for the Doctor's horse knew when to do this quite as well as his master.

"So something's the matter with Pop, eh?" said the Doctor. "Well, I'll come down that way before I go home. What have you got there—clams?"

"No, sir."

"Well, I was in hopes you had some—they're wanting them at home."

"I'll bring 'em sure, Doctor—soon as you take a look at Pop," answered Doll, in a great hurry to get off, and sending away as fast as his legs could carry him.

"That was an odd sort of a bundle he carried," thought the Doctor, as he tickled his horse with his whip.

He still thought it odd when he was gently but firmly handling Pop's poor bruised body, finding one leg broken, and the other one almost as badly hurt.

Doll was crouching over his bundle in the most remote corner of the room, unaware that the Doctor's keen eye was watching him. He thought the Doctor wouldn't find out what it was, but his little charge was hungry, and he could not prevent its crying.

"Hello, Doll! that's a queer kind of a kitten," said the Doctor.

"Tain't no cat," said Doll, indignantly.

"What under the sun is it, then?"

"There was no use in trying to conceal it any longer.

"It's a baby, that's what it is, an' it's mine; ain't it, Pop?" said Doll, holding his treasure closely, but still proud to show the little hair head, and fists like crumpled rose leaves.

"A babe! Good gracious! Where did you get that, Doll?"

"I didn't find it—Pop did; but I'm going to keep it till it's called for."

"Well, I'm blest! Pop, you've done, said Pop, feebly. "It was the only one I could save—all the rest went down. There were three men an' a woman; an' I might have saved her but I was afraid to leave the baby too long enough, though, an' the wind was awful."

"Ah! I heard there was a schooner ashore the other night."

"That was it."

"I must make inquiries. And this child—poor little thing! I will have to go to the county house."

"No, it ain't," sobbed Doll. "Pop says I may keep it. It's his find, an nobody wants it. I say, Doc, I'll bring you clams every day if you'll let it about with me."

"Nonsense, child! How can you bring up a baby?"

"I can, an' I will," said Doll, proud and defiant.

The Doctor laughed, and turned toward his patient, who, laying his hand on his arm, said softly, "Let him be, Doc; it's Christmas, you know. I ain't got nuthin' else ter give him."

III.

Years passed, and it was Christmas Eve again and there was a heavy beating on the coast, and rearing its angry waves high upon the shore; again the old rafters shook, and the chimney flutted, and the door seemed about to burst open; but it did not, for in place of the rusty latch was a great strong bolt, and within was light and cheer and comfort. A bright fire of drift-wood leaped in clear flames, the floor was covered with rag carpet, and all about the chimney, and over the window, and half barring the dresser, with its row of shining platters, were bunglas and beauties of some estimation. To the fire-place chair in the second corner of the room sat an old man, with a mass of white wine-beside hair, netting; opposite him a young man and a boy were playing checkers; while a young woman with a pleasant face was moving about to the time she was humming, thoroughly arranging the supper table and giving a stir to the pudding spluttering in the pot.

Presently she called them all to the table, and took the pot from the fire. Then she bore upon it a dish of fish as she was the plums, and even the old man nodded a little faster as the steam curled up about the sauce.

"It's all owin' to Dick that we keep Christmas, isn't it, Doll?" said the old man.

The child looked up curiously, yes, Pop; and this young man, nodding, "it's all Dick's doings."

"He is that!" said the young woman, with a smile toward the child, who was holding up his plate for a good third slice of pudding.

"Why, ye see, Doll an' me just sort o' crawled along anyhow, till Dick come. We didn't care for nuthin' nor nobody, an' long's we ding the clams an' kept the fires goin', just when Dick came, it seem' o' give us a start. I never saw nuthin' like Doll prize that; he mauled that boy like an old hen with its chicks, an' if any one looked at Dick, it riled him an' ruffled up his feathers. He watched him night an' day—he farmed to read, so he could teach Dick; he farmed to sew, so he might mend Dick's clothes, an' he farmed to rhymetize, so's he could earn money to pay Granny Crane for doin' chores for Dick. I tell ye, Dick's a lucky lad, an' I tell ye, I'm a happy old man."

The child had listened and eaten until he could not eat no more. He now pushed away his plate, and sprang into Pop's arms, while the young woman looked proudly at the fair head leaning against the manly shoulder. At this instant there came a loud rapping at the door, and as the young man rose to open it, for above the din of the storm came a hearty voice:

"Hello there! let me in," it cried. "Merry Christmas to you all!"

"Why, what on airth, Doc, has brought you out such a night as this?" said Doll, as he held the door in his arms, but rising to meet the visitor.

"Somebody a-sick?" suggested Pop.

"Not just at present," answered the Doctor, with a twinkle in his eye, and pulling off his wet things—"not just at present. I've only called in with a little trifle for Dick, seeing it's Christmas, and to say that somebody wants him."

"Nobody wants Dick—nobody an' me, Doc," put in Doll, hurriedly; and the child clung to him still closer.

"Wait till I have said my say," replied the Doctor. "How do you keep anybody wants him?"

"I don't. I lay your pardon, Doc. But I'm always afraid of somebody claiming him."

"Nobody shall," whispered the boy, blessing Doll.

"Suppose somebody wants an heir to some property?"

"Well, what of that?"

"And suppose that heir happens to be a boy called Dick?"

"Nonsense!"

"Is it, indeed? Well, just read this advertisement, and this, and this"—pulling out paper after paper and cutting after cutting, and ending with a little card with red tape. "Dick, I have been writing letters to lawyers and all sorts of people, using all my spare time, doing my best to unravel a very much twisted skein, and there the Blessed Babe is, I get."

Doll said no more but opened the papers and read. Pop, too, got out his spectacles, and plodded through a line or two, but gave up in despair, and then they all sought with only the crackling of the fire and the hissing of the tea-kettle breaking the silence. At last Doll stopped reading while they all looked expectantly at him. His face had a strange expression as he again took the fair head into his arms.

"Dick," he said, "I'm afraid it's true, an' that you'll be a rich man."

Dick's lips opened as the new boy Doll's grave face, and he put his arms around Doll's neck.

"You don't believe no doubt about it. We little thought, Pop an' I, ten years ago this very night, that the little hungry crying baby we brought home from the sea would be to us ye know by such as you, nor that, bein' a boy, ye might grow to be a man, an' a rich one at that. No, Dick, we didn't but we loved ye all the same. An' now, Dick, ye must promise me that ye'll never forget what ye owe to the One who gave ye to Pop, and that ye'll be good—be good."

Doll could not say another word, but hurried his face to Dick's curls, and there was again silence in the room, until the Doctor jumped up and made a great racket getting his things together, and coughing, and saying it was time he was off.

"Dick, ye must come to see me, Doll," said the Doctor.

"Yes, sir," said Doll, with a bow.

"It was really true. The wealth was not so very great, but Dick, being the only survivor of both his parents, poor little sam had been growing all this time. Had not Pop carefully saved a handkerchief and a ring with letters inside it, which he had found in a trunk washed ashore on the beach, even he found Dick, there would have been much trouble in proving who the child was.

Dick, of course, had to be educated, and Doll was very loth to leave his home, but he never forgot Pop or Doll, and always spent Christmas Eve with them.

—Harper's Young Folks.

He Twisted Her Tail.

It was a cow, with mild brown eyes, auburn lungs, and a tail with a loose joint in it, and she was grazing in and knocked imaginary flies into the horseflies' white soap. She was being led down West street, toward Long Island street ferry, by a famous looking Jersey man, who was conspicuous, owing to the cold weather and his shirt, was red as a meteorite sunset. Suddenly, with what was apparently unnecessary cruelty, the Jersey man twisted the cow across the Bulls Head clubs, swung his arms over his head, danced a nondescript dance in front of the street, and sat down with strange rapidity upon a car-rail. The cow looked over her shoulder approvingly, and stood in her tracks. The Jersey man, with the instinct of his race made upon the ice, smoothed his coat tails carefully, and started toward the ferry. He put her cows, spat on his hands, rapped her twice, put his shoulder against her side and wore her out of the track of the drays—but to no avail. A crowd assembled. The cow looked on with a mild interest, but no assistance. One man suggested that she had frozen fast; another that she was undecided about the policy of the new Board of Aldermen; a third thought she was gas of H. O. T.'s unbottled fluids and was afraid of Jersey justice. The owner went a few yards ahead, grained a ghastly grin, and, slinking his club behind him in a suppressed way, pleaded in persuasive tones, "Come, Mosby—come, Mosby—Mosby." But Mosby saw the club.

At last from the crowd stepped a tall and unknown specimen of a long-shoreman. He was gifted with wisdom beyond his kind. He drew the cows a little aside, and whispered in his ear: "Twist her tail." The Jersey man stood his head. Then, as though big drop for the support of the multitude, he quietly twisted the tail of the cow. She shook his head. Then, as though big drop for the support of the multitude, he twisted the tail of the cow. She shook his head. Then, as though big drop for the support of the multitude, he twisted the tail of the cow. She shook his head.

It was really true. The wealth was not so very great, but Dick, being the only survivor of both his parents, poor little sam had been growing all this time. Had not Pop carefully saved a handkerchief and a ring with letters inside it, which he had found in a trunk washed ashore on the beach, even he found Dick, there would have been much trouble in proving who the child was.

Dick, of course, had to be educated, and Doll was very loth to leave his home, but he never forgot Pop or Doll, and always spent Christmas Eve with them.

—Harper's Young Folks.

He Twisted Her Tail.

It was a cow, with mild brown eyes, auburn lungs, and a tail with a loose joint in it, and she was grazing in and knocked imaginary flies into the horseflies' white soap. She was being led down West street, toward Long Island street ferry, by a famous-looking Jersey man, who was conspicuous, owing to the cold weather and his shirt, was red as a meteorite sunset. Suddenly, with what was apparently unnecessary cruelty, the Jersey man twisted the cow across the Bulls Head clubs, swung his arms over his head, danced a nondescript dance in front of the street, and sat down with strange rapidity upon a car-rail. The cow looked over her shoulder approvingly, and stood in her tracks. The Jersey man, with the instinct of his race made upon the ice, smoothed his coat tails carefully, and started toward the ferry. He put her cows, spat on his hands, rapped her twice, put his shoulder against her side and wore her out of the track of the drays—but to no avail. A crowd assembled. The cow looked on with a mild interest, but no assistance. One man suggested that she had frozen fast; another that she was undecided about the policy of the new Board of Aldermen; a third thought she was gas of H. O. T.'s unbottled fluids and was afraid of Jersey justice. The owner went a few yards ahead, grained a ghastly grin, and, slinking his club behind him in a suppressed way, pleaded in persuasive tones, "Come, Mosby—come, Mosby—Mosby." But Mosby saw the club.

At last from the crowd stepped a tall and unknown specimen of a long-shoreman. He was gifted with wisdom beyond his kind. He drew the cows a little aside, and whispered in his ear: "Twist her tail." The Jersey man stood his head. Then, as though big drop for the support of the multitude, the long-shoreman raised his arm and, making a sweeping gesture, exclaimed: "Gents, I says twist her tail."

"Twist it yerself," was the answer.

A glance of scorn upon the crowd, and the long-shoreman bared his brawny arms and stepped up to the cow. He put one hand on her tail in a loose way, and, spitting upon another, he twisted the tail of the cow. She shook her head. Then, as though big drop for the support of the multitude, he twisted the tail of the cow. She shook his head. Then, as though big drop for the support of the multitude, he twisted the tail of the cow. She shook his head.

HUMOR.

If you wish to take care of your health, take air.

Eyes in death they had to its be jaw up," fearfully remarked a Sparta man when called in to look at the body of his deceased wife, who lay with a bandage around her face.

Its answer to his remark that she had ventured away from home on a holiday, she said: "It does look like rain, but I brought my gossiper with me, and I ordered John to meet me at the station with the phaetons."

"Is this your property?" asked the District Attorney of a lady who had been robbed of some jewelry, as he handed her a pin. "Yes, sir, it certainly is mine." "But how do you identify it?" "How do I? By having bought it and paid for it."

A BATHER green looking young fellow—though he evidently lived in the city—went into a dry goods store and walked up to one of the lady clerks and the following conversation occurred: "I want to get four yards of wide ribbon for a girl." "All right, sir. What color do you want?" "I don't know. I just want four yards of ribbon, that's all." "Yes, but we ought to give her some color that will suit her." "Is she a blonde or a brunette?" "Well, I guess she's a mixed girl." Evansville Argus.

"Mose!" he called out to his son, who sat reading the paper, "Mose, is you coming in Congress?" "No, father, did I read all right when I read that you were coming?" "No, sonny." "Then you don't know nuthin'." "Why, father, what do you mean?" "Mean? Why, I mean that you don't know nuthin' about politics." "Why, father, I know all about politics." "No, sonny, I know more about politics in the twinkling of an eye than you know in a year

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., March 6, 1884.

ORIGIN OF THE GRAND TRAVERSE REGION.

BY HON. J. G. RANDELL.

In the Grand Traverse region, one bright autumn day,
I sat on a bluff, o'er looking the bay
As it spread out below, in the bosom of which
Like a broad jewel clasped in a setting of gold,
And, wonder-ing, gazed on the beautiful scene,—
All dappled with carmine and russet and green;
And dwelt in the glory of autumnal hues,
For the cause of this beauty I questioned the Muse.

"You ask," said the goddess of verse and of song,
"Why all these rich hues in this region belong;
Why its waters so pure, its breezes so bland,
Its soil so fruitful, its sky so dark grand,
Its climate so healthful, its winters so mild,
And why fickle fortune on this land has smiled,
And all nature is quiet and Peace seems to reign?
Then listen, O mortal, and I will explain.

"The world was created, the continents made,
The mountains uplifted, the foundations laid
For oceans and islands, for rivers and seas,
When the gods Zeus assembled, and thus his decrees
To the august assemblage in thunder proclaimed:

"'I will,' said the monarch of heaven 'a high bed,
'That I may be seated, whatever the east,
Fit abode for the gods—where all races of men
Can flourish in peace My will must be done.'

"Apollo uprose, and the deep-throat broke
With his silver-toned voice, and the monarch bespoke—
'Great sire! potent ruler of heaven and earth!
My duty has call'd me since creation's birth
To drive the golden sun through ether's vast space,
And guide heaven's courses as onward they race.
To view all the countries spread out on the face
Of the broad rolling world, and admire their place.

"'There's the Orient mild, by the great ocean bound;
And Egypt most fruitful from waste doom'd saved
By the dark-rolling Nile—and Attica's high-land,—
Bright Italy's plains,—and Erin's green island,—
And there's sweet sunny France, and still sunlier Spain—
Fit abodes for the Gods, an elysium for man.'

"The Thunderer Phoebus mentions,' the monarch replied,
'Though favored by nature, yet Fate has decreed
Shall blood and under tyrants,—be wasted by war,—
A prey to each neighbor. Better by far
Be the land I ordain.

"'Go, swift footed Hermes, with out more delay,
And summon the Titans, and tell them away
To that continent vast, to remain unknown,
Till the time the West near the late-setting sun,
To create there a country as fertile and famed,
And the peer of all these which Apollo has named
In every virtue, without the dire fate
Which fortune decrees to each tyrant state.

"'Bid Zephyr, and Auster, and Boreas come forth;
The West and the South must unite with the North
To temper the climate of that favored land,
And make it congenial, salubrious and bland.'

"On Mercury's pinions the message was speed;
The Titans were summoned, the Titans obeyed,
And o'er the broad ocean, with Neptune they roam
To the land pre-ordained to be Liberty's home.
In the heart of the continent, far from the sea,
They selected a place,—Phoebus lighting the way
With his broad vermilion shield, and beaming the ray—
To build up a country on Jupiter's plan

"They delved down the mountains, and rolled up the hills,
And scooped the fountains, and traced out the rills;
Pushing vast moving glaciers adown the broad ways
Of the high polar region, they scooped out the bays;
And placed off the highlands, and dimpled the face
Of the country with lakelets; and in every place
Poured the transparent flood, until each one was filled
With water as pure as e'er rain-drop distilled.

"Then melting the glaciers, they filled up the bed
And turned on the seas-man and hastened away
Each scattering seeds as bounteous they stray,
Which grew up the forests you see here today.

"Great Jove then I ordered them, from his throne in the skies,
On the newly-made landscape, With indulgent surprise,
He swore by himself, 'By Jove, it's well done!
'Tis the loveliest country that lies 'neath the sun!

"Then turning to Boreas, who came to complain
That his realm was invaded, his rightful domain
Usurped by his brother, the monarch replies,—
'Your realm is bounded; but warm summer skies
Rest both such a landscape; and Zephyr's mild breeze
Must wave its green woodlands and fan its bright seas.
But salt, to counteract, my blustering child,
You may reign half the year, but you must govern mild.'"

The Discovery of Tin in North Carolina.

We notice that some of our esteemed contemporaries are congratulating the American people on the opening of some valuable tin mines in North Carolina. Until this deposit of tin ore was discovered it was thought that there were no appreciable quantities of that metal in this country. We have in the past depended upon the English mines for our supply of tin.

While naturally it should be a matter for rejoicing that America numbers this new form of mineral wealth among its almost boundless natural resources, yet we are not disposed to look upon the opening of the North Carolina mines with the same degree of enthusiasm that some of our esteemed contemporaries regard it. We have serious misgivings about the people ever receiving any substantial benefit from these mines. They may think their stars if they do not actually suffer a severe pecuniary loss on account of these North Carolina tin deposits.

There are very good reasons for believing that as soon as they get fairly to working their mines the owners will appreciate the importance of having a monopoly of the American market and will go up to Washington and petition congress in the most plaintive terms to place a high duty on tin and thereby shut out the product of the "pauper labor" of Europe. Just watch these tin men and see if this isn't their game. It has been successfully played by the copper, the iron, the steel and the brass men, for the latter have become rich "beyond the wildest dreams of avarice." The tin men will naturally try to profit by the same game.

If they should obtain favorable tariff legislation, what will be the result? The whole country will be compelled to pay tribute to the half-dozen favored individuals who own the mines. The unprotected millions of toilers will be taxed to swell the coffers of another set of "protected" monopolists. This is what the tariff on tin will do. Is this a pleasing prospect for the American consumer to contemplate? Does this scheme come up to his idea of "dignifying American labor?"—Lansing Journal.

Free Iron Ore.

It is well known that the iron and steel trades are the keystone of the system of public plunder known as "protection," and Mr. Hewitt, as member of the house ways and means committee, being himself an iron miner and manufacturer, is letting a good deal of needed light on the necessity of nursing the iron infant. The iron lords appeared before the committee in full force on Saturday and were treated to a series of questions which it puzzled them to answer without practically conceding that their iron interests demanded the very changes in the tariff which they have been fighting against. Joseph Wharton of the Bessemer steel association conceded that free iron ore would make cheaper steel and give the steel workers more money to pay for labor. He also conceded that the introduction of foreign ores increased the consumption of domestic ores, as the foreign ores mixed more advantageously with some domestic ores and make them really more valuable. This brought the Lake Superior iron people to the front in a hurry. Mr. G. H. Ely, of Cleveland, president of the Lake Superior companies, was first heard, but before he had been on the stand ten minutes he had admitted that the greatest development and prosperity of the Lake Superior mines occurred under a low duty on iron ore, and was concurrent with and dependent on the introduction of foreign ores. He also admitted that there had been no increase of wages since the duty on iron ore had been doubled, and that under the higher duty there had been greater depression in the trade than ever before. Mr. Van Dyke of the Menominee mining company opposed free iron ore, but on cross examination said that he believed the price of domestic ores would go up if the duty on foreign ores was removed. When again asked why, then, he opposed free ores he did not answer. The reason, however, was apparent enough. The strength of the protection rather lies in united action, and protectionists dare not let a single stone in the protection arch be disturbed, lest the whole structure fall.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY has purchased the

Ladies' and Children's Furnishing Goods

Lately owned by Fisher & Inwood, and will be pleased to retain all the old customers, and gain as many more as possible. Call and see my stock.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at ten dollars each. Call soon and have your pick.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. S. WAY.

WOOD WANTED.

Fifty Cords good Hickory block wood wanted on subscription, at the JOURNAL office. Bring in while the roads are good.

PIMPLES.

I will mail (Free) the recipe for a simple Vegetable Balm that will remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples and mildewes, leaving the skin soft, clear and beautiful; also best remedy for pealing off of Dandruff, and for a clean scalp, and a smooth face. Address, inclosing stamp, Mrs. DR. VANDELL & CO., 12 Barclay St., N. Y.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, Lost Manhood, &c., &c., will send (free) to his fellow sufferers the means of cure. Address, in confidence, JOHN B. OGDEN, 47 Cedar St., New York.

FARM FOR SALE.

Consisting of 40 acres, six miles from Charlevoix, on the Boyne City road. Good house, barn, cause house, and hardwood stick timber. About 20 acres in cleared, balance good hardwood timber. About 200 fruit trees in bearing; plenty of the best of water piped and saw mill. Terms: Five hundred down, balance on time, with interest. Inquire of the undersigned, or address, for further particulars, enclosing stamp, DAVID PICKARD, Charlevoix, Mich.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To those who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription, used (free of charge), with the direction for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. Parties wishing the prescription, will please address, REV. E. A. WILSON, Brooklyn, E. D., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

FOR SALE.

SECOND HAND

Stationary Engine and Boiler.

Size of cylinder 10x30 in. Boiler 16 feet long by 42 inches diameter. Will be sold cheap for cash or good notes. Address, or call on, Pingree & Smith, Grand Rapids.

Or of Westcott & Eckert, at the Machine Shop.

NOTICE OF ELECTION

The annual village election of Charlevoix village will be held at the village hall in said village, on Monday, the twelfth day of March, A. D. 1884, at which time the following officers are to be elected: A village president, to succeed Byron Sher; a village clerk, to succeed Fred. W. Mayne; a village treasurer, to succeed Fred. W. Mayne; a village assessor, to succeed Samuel M. Inwood; and three trustees to succeed Henry Cooper, John Nicholls, and A. E. Wright, whose terms of office expire; also on the said day of election, the polls shall be opened at eight o'clock in the morning and shall close at four o'clock in the afternoon, at which time the election will be closed.

The board of registration in said village will be in session at the law office of F. W. Mayne, in said village, on Saturday, March 8th, 1884, from 9 o'clock a. m. to 5 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of registering the names of electors.

Dated Charlevoix, Feb. 12, 1884.

FRED. W. MAYNE, Village Clerk.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT. State of Michigan, The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. In chancery. Wm. Mason, Plaintiff, vs. Lewis Jackson, Walter W. Jackson, Frank Jackson, Charles Jackson, and Alexander Jackson, defendants. Notice is hereby given that on the 19th day of January, 1884, a writ of attachment was duly issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, at the suit of the above named plaintiff, against the above named defendants, for the sum of one thousand one hundred and twenty-five dollars and ninety cents ($1,125 90) and costs, on a promissory note for the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000) and interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum, and for the sum of twenty-five dollars ($25) for the services of an attorney in the collection of said note, which said writ was duly returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1884.

Dated February 6th, A. D. 1884.

CRUCKSHANK & CRIPE, Attorneys for plaintiff.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT. State of Michigan, The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. In chancery. Joseph C. Colegrove, complainant, vs. Martin J. Staley, Martin J. Ayers, Mary H. Wood, defendants. Suit pending in the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, at the office of the clerk of said county, in the city of Charlevoix, on the 13th day of February, A. D. 1884. In this cause it appearing from affidavit on file, that the defendant, Martin J. Ayers, is not a resident of this state, but resides in Ellenburg in the state of New York, on motion of Cruckshank & Cripe, complainant's attorneys, it is ordered that the said defendant, Martin J. Ayers, cause her appearance to be entered herein within four months from the date of this order, and in case of her appearance that she cause her answer to the complainant's bill of complaint to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on said complainant's attorneys, within twenty days after service on her of a copy of said bill, and notice of this order; and that in default thereof, said bill will be taken as confessed by the said Martin J. Ayers. And it is further ordered that within twenty days the complainant cause a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Journal, a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county, and that said publication be continued therein at least once in each week, for six weeks. In default of such publication this order to be null and void. Dated at Charlevoix, February 13, 1884. Judge of Circuit Court.

OSCAR E. WINSER, Circuit court commissioner.

CRUCKSHANK & CRIPE, Complainant's solicitors.

A true copy, attest. OSCAR E. WINSER, Circuit court commissioner.

CRUCKSHANK & CRIPE, Complainant's solicitors.

A true copy, attest. OSCAR E. WRIGHT, Deputy Register.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 76 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Democrat.—By mail, $8.00 per year, in advance, postage paid.

Weekly Democrat.—$1.50 per year, 75 cents for six months; 10 cents for three months, invariably in advance. Address,

THE DEMOCRAT, Grand Rapids, Mich.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

IMMENSE CUT IN PRICES

—OF—

All-Wool Goods,

Overcoats and Suitings,

Boots and Shoes.

I have a large stock of Clothing and Boots and Shoes which I will close out at actual cost, as I wish to make room for spring goods. All my goods I will warrant

First-Class,

And will be pleased to show them to all parties whether they intend to purchase or not. Remember, I have stricken these goods down at actual cost, and they are

Big Bargains.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Feb. 12, 1884.

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS,

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 35. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 1884. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL is published every Thursday morning, BY CHAS. J. STRANG. Office over D. Smith's grocery, CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

ROSENBAUM & GRIEE, Attorneys at Law, Office in Bohlmer's Block, Charlevoix, Mich. C. J. GRIEE. O. A. ROSENBAUM.

FORD & ALDRICH, Attorneys at Law, East Jordan, Mich.

FRED W. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor at Law and Real Estate Business promptly attended to. POINT TO LAKE.

H. S. JESSEY, Attorney and Counselor at Law, Office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

J. M. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

WHEDON, SEAY & MARTIN, Attorneys at Law, Office opposite U. S. Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

OSCAR E. WINSER, Attorney and Solicitor, and U. S. Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX—Capital $50,000. Savings department. Deposits received by mail. Foreign and domestic bills and exchange bought and sold. Interest paid on time deposits. Collections promptly made. Sight exchange. H. WOODS & BROS.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH—Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sabbath school at 12 m. Prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 7 p. m. C. P. VANALSTINE, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH—Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sabbath school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting Thursday evening at 7 p. m. J. T. DIMMICK, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOUGH AND READY FIRE COMPANY meet the first and third Tuesday evenings of each month in the council hall. F. F. DAVIS, Secretary.

HOMEOPATHIC PHARMACY.

J. SEFFRIDGE, Homeopathic Medicines, Books, Sponges, Atomizers, Charlevoix, Mich.

LIVERY STABLE.

J. MILO EATON, Proprietor. Geo. Inwood, Manager. Only first-class Horses and Carriages kept. Good Saddle Horses a Specialty.

PHYSICIANS.

J. A. CHRISTIEN, M. D., Physician and Surgeon, at the Eagle Hotel.

L. LEWIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon, Office on Bridge St., Charlevoix, Mich.

W. H. PERSHON, M. D., Surgeon and Homeopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HIRAM S. HARMON, Notary Public, Real Estate, Loan and Insurance Agt., Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

O. E.—Easter Star No. 176, meets second Monday in each month, at Odd Fellows' hall.

F. & A. M.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 327, meets every Friday evening, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 205, meets every Wednesday evening, in their hall.

I. O. L.—True Blues No. 167, meet Saturday on or before full moon, in Odd Fellows' hall.

MASONIC—Charlevoix Lodge No. 327, meets Friday on or before full moon. Visit now possible.

A. BUTLER, President. A. R. LONGHURST, Vice President.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

A general banking business transacted. Money loaned on approved paper at reasonable rates. Deposits received. Collections given careful attention and remitted on day of payment.

G. S. THOMAS, Cashier.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Prices reasonable. W. S. JOHNSON, Op. Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor,

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations are equal to any. The table supplied with the best the market affords. Only simple room in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, - Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public, and headquarters for the Pelosky and Elk Lands Stages.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

Rooms thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

1872 DR. G. W. CROUTER, 1884

THE DRUGGIST.

Our Motto: P. P.

PURITY, POLITENESS.

WE MAKE IT A POINT TO SELL ONLY

Full Strength & Fresh Goods

OUR PRICES WILL ALWAYS BE AS LOW AS

STRICTLY PURE DRUGS

CAN BE SOLD.

Our Stock is the Largest in the County.

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

at his store near the bridge.

All kinds of fruit and vegetables in their season. Note, comfort, cost, cheap life, all always on hand. Call and see me. West side Bridge St.

C. R. BELLINGER

carries the largest and finest stock of

JEWELRY,

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and optical goods in Charlevoix county. Agent for the celebrated ROCKFORD WATCH, the best time-piece ever made. All goods left for repairing will receive prompt attention. Jewelry sent by express for repairs will be promptly returned. Prices for fresh jewelry are sure to be satisfactory.

O. W. SMITH,

ELECTRO-PLATER,

Manufacturing Jeweler and Lapidist.

Electro plating in Gold and Silver. Any original design made to order. AGATES AND JASPERS cut to order.

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card in Effect January, 1884.

GOING NORTH.

STATIONS.	No 1	No 3	No. 5	No. 7
Cincinnati, lv		7 45pm	7 15pm
Richmond	2 37pm	10 27	9 50
Winchester	3 12	11 07	10 31
Eaton	3 31	11 37	11 03
Muncie	3 57	12 07am	11 34
Gas City	4 16	12 32	12 00am
Marion	4 35	12 57	12 27
Converse	5 00	1 27	1 57
Peru	5 25	1 57	2 32	9 45am
Chelsea	6 11	3 13	4 18	10 40
Kokomo	6 25	3 28	4 35	10 55
Kokomo, lv	6 40	3 35	4 45	11 05
Greentown	7 10am	4 06	5 32	11 44
Tipton	7 30	4 32	6 05	12 20pm
Atlanta	7 45	4 50	6 27	12 45
Big Rapids	8 35	12 10pm	7 32	2 00
Reed City	9 05	1 00	8 20	2 45
Cadillac, lv	9 45	1 45	9 15	3 30
Manistee, ar	11 15	3 15	10 45	5 00
Traverse City, lv	10 15am	2 20pm	9 45am	4 05pm
Petoskey, lv	11 45	4 00	11 00	5 45
Mackinaw City, ar	1 45pm	7 15	2 45pm	10 00

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No 2	No. 4	No. 6	No. 8
Mackinaw City, lv		9 15am	7 30am
Petoskey, lv		11 45	10 00
Traverse City, lv		2 40pm	4 05pm
Manistee, lv	5 30am	11 45	5 50
Cadillac, lv	6 50	1 15pm	7 15
Reed City	7 35	2 00	8 05
Big Rapids	8 05	2 35	8 47
Atlanta	8 45	3 15	9 35
Tipton	9 00	3 35	9 57
Greentown		4 00	10 27
Kokomo, lv	9 35	4 25	11 00	2 00pm
Kokomo, ar	9 50	4 35	11 15	2 15
Chelsea	10 05	4 50	11 32	2 32
Peru	10 40	5 25	12 10am	3 10
Converse	11 05	5 50	12 35	3 35
Marion	11 30	6 15	1 00	4 00
Gas City	11 55	6 40	1 25	4 25
Muncie	12 20pm	7 05	1 50	4 50
Eaton	12 46	7 31	2 16	5 16
Winchester	1 05	7 50	2 35	5 35
Richmond	1 40	8 25	3 10	6 10
Cincinnati, ar	4 05pm	10 50pm	7 30am

C. L. LOCKWOOD, Act'g. G. P. A.

CHAS. MACKIE, Gen'l Pass. Agent.

HALL'S

Catarrh Cure

is Recommended by Physicians

$100 REWARD PAID FOR NONE!

We manufacture and sell this positive remedy. We guarantee that it will cure any case, and we will forfeit the above sum if it fails in a single instance.

It is unlike any other catarrh remedy, as it is taken internally, acting upon the blood. Send for circular containing testimonials and proof from the Mayor of Toledo, and by druggists generally. If not kept by your druggist, we will forward one dollar per bottle, or five bottles for $5, upon receipt of price. Sold by druggists, 75 cents per bottle.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.Ills.

DR. CROUTER, Agt., Charlevoix. 23

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at G. H. Wood & Co.'s drug store.

The Food of Birds.

The practical utility of birds as agents for the destruction of noxious insects can hardly be overestimated. But their agency, by the great majority of farmers, is generally overlooked or considered too lightly. If such would only study the habits of birds and insects they would discover the importance of nature, and history itself proves that any interference with their relations to each other is sure to be followed with disastrous results. Nature, if left to herself, establishes a wonderfu balance among her creatures; that is, she produces no more of one species than shall be kept in check by another. If there is an insect which feeds upon a certain plant there is also a bird which destroys the insect and an animal which devours the bird, and so on up the scale, each curbing the undue increase of the next inferior creature. It is when man interferes with the working of this law that results are sure to follow which are disastrous. Take for instance the silkworm, which feeds upon the foliage of the mulberry tree and spins the cocoon which is its manufacture furnishes profitable employment to many men, women and children, and brings in large revenues to the country. Insects we must think for money, the greatest of sweets, the air we breathe and the water we drink are kept pure and wholesome by the agency of myriads of little creatures which draw sustenance from the impurities of the elements. A study into the lives and purposes of insects convinces the student that it would not be good policy to destroy them entirely, even if we had the power; but it is well to keep them in check if possible. In regard to the fertility of birds and insects, the majority of birds have but one brood of young in the course of the year; a few have two or three. In the case of the smaller insect-eating birds, the number of eggs to a brood is on an average not more than five. Some of the larger birds, as the various Gallinæ, lay from five or six to twenty eggs to a brood. On the other hand, the reproductive energy of insects is truly marvelous. A single pair of grain weevils will produce 5,000 young between April and August. The common varieties of aphides, or plant lice, which are found on almost all plants, are produced in spring from eggs laid the season before, and through the summer only females are developed. At the last of the season males and females both appear, and eggs are laid for the brood which hatches early in the spring. Reaumur says that one individual in our season may become the progenitor of 6,000,000,000. The silkworm moth produces about 500 eggs; the great goat moth about 1,100, and so on down to the white ants, one of which deposits at less than sixty eggs a minute, giving 3,000 in an hour. With this wonderful power of production the question arises what shall prevent them from overrunning the country? Various causes operate to check undue increase of insects, chief of which is the appetite and instinct which a wise Providence has given to birds. If the number of eggs produced by insects is astonishing, the number destroyed by a single bird is no less so. A woodcock will eat its own weight of insects in a single night; a pair of sparrows will destroy 3,300 caterpillars in a week. A brood of partridges will nearly exterminate the destructive ox ant-hill in a couple of days. All birds of these that live mostly on insects are constantly employed in destroying insects and their eggs. Birds are more common prey to mankind than insects, and as a matter of course insects are on the increase and birds on the decrease, and this will continue to be the case, unless birds are protected, until eventually insects will destroy everything that grows. Herewith we give the names of a few birds that destroy insects. Hummingbirds, swifts, whippoorwills, night hawks, flycatchers, thrushes, titmice, wood pickers, wrens, warblers, nuthatches, creepers, wrens, warblers, swallows, chatterers, starlings, orioles, blackbirds, crows, herons, snipes, etc. Of all the birds that are useful, perhaps the crow and the robin have been the most discussed by farmers, some contending that such destroyers have their good, and vice versa. The fact is that the crow does really more harm in destroying the eggs of insect-eating birds than he does directly to the farmer. There is no rose without its thorn. We must take the bitter with the sweet. But let us bear in mind that it is to our advantage to protect the birds.—San Francisco Chronicle.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

—The Fulton (N. Y.) Times says, telegram was sent from that village to Sidney, Australia, the other evening and an answer received in forty-five minutes.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease seed your in the system you will find Dr. Hess's Condition Powders unsurpassed. Full pounds, 25 cents. Sold by G. H. Wood & Co. 8-60

NEVERTHELESS nor friendship, to please any man, should cause us to do so well.

Incipient consumption, coughs, colds, bronchitis, &c., are all the results of the slight or exposure, and must have prompt and active remedies to remove them. Croup and whooping cough cause great suffering because no effective remedy is used at hand. Why then leave yourself and children exposed to danger and death, when Hamilton's Cough Balsam will relieve all of these and prevent diseases, such as pneumonia, inflammation of lungs, and consumption. All lung difficulties are removed by this remedy. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. H. Wood & Co.

A Stage-Coach Dialogue.

The sent of honor and pleasure in a journey overland is, by the driver, and there is always a scramble for it, and the one who succeeds in securing it is regarded as a lucky fellow. I got left in my contest, for a seat on the top and found myself re-outly inside of the stage, with a cheerfulness and a man given I took for a miner, during a trip to Silver City, N. M. The preacher and I sat on the back seat and the native sat facing us. He was dressed in the regulation costume of the country: Dark pants stuck in his boots and held up by a six-shooter buckled around the waist, blue flannel shirt, flaming red necktie, and a great sombrero. A knife was stuck in his boot and he carried a Winchester rifle on the seat beside him. Taking him all in all he was about as ugly-looking a specimen of humanity as I have met. As the stage rolled along, the miner looked out of the window as if in deep thought. The preacher and I entered into conversation, during which he asked my business. I told him, when he asked:

"Do the great papers buy literary articles?"

"Yes, sir, when they are good."

"Do they pay for them liberally?"

"I may do, when they accept the article."

"Well, I have got some very interesting subjects. I could write about," he continued, as the stage jolted over the rough road, making it a little hard to distinguish what he was saying. "For five years I was a missionary at Siem and saw many strange and even startling things."

"What were those scenes you refer to?" I asked.

"Well, the punishment of criminals was exceedingly strange and is worthy of description. When a person is convicted of crime there he is taken out upon the public square for execution. His neck is laced well down upon the shoulders, and the executioner dips his finger in mud and with it makes a mark upon the neck of the doomed man."

"What kind of mud?" shouted the miner in a voice like a thunder-clap, while he glared at the parson savagely. I noticed that, although he kept peering out of the window, he had followed our conversation for some time.

"A sort of yellow clay," replied the preacher, evidently disturbed by the miner's look and manner. But he continued:

"The executioner then takes his heavy sword and with one quick and derisive blow severs the victim's head from his body."

"It's an infernal lie," yelled the miner, in tones that might have been heard for miles. "The boys do occasionally hang a horse-thief there, and the town has a pretty cool name, but they never cut people's heads off. There ain't only one sword in the whole place, and that belongs to a million Chinaman and wouldn't cut the head off of a turnip."

"Did I was a missionary there for five years," meekly interposed the minister.

"And I was a barber there for seven years, and I never shaved you, neither."

"My friend, that can not be; for the people never shave there."

"That's another on your infernal lies; they're as clean a shaven set of people as ever I saw in the West. You're a nice man to be giving the town a bad name after you have left it. If it weren't kind of agin the Scriptures to hit a parson I'd knock your head off of you for your lies," cried the miner, getting madder every minute.

"My dear friend," said the minister, imploringly, and evidently much disturbed for his safety, "there certainly must be some mistake. You do not seem to say that you were a barber in the Kingdom of Siam, where people never shave?"

"Oh! I thought you were talking about Cheyenne," said the miner, as he fell back into his chair disgusted.

I was the only man who seemed to enjoy this morning's incident, and even I found it good policy to show as little disposition to laugh as possible. The stage rolled on for miles after it occurred, and not a word was spoken by any one. The miner looked more intently than ever out of the window, and yet there was not an expression on his stolid face to indicate what his thoughts were. The preacher looked at intently out from the opposite side of the stage, and I spent my time watching the miner, looking at the strange region through which we were passing.—Cor. Philadelphia Press.

Blood! Blood! Blood! is a necessity to all animalite, and to be free from disease the blood must be pure. There is no doubt that Parmelee's Blood Purifier excels in the driving out of all impurities and building up the system by making new blood, thus preventing the disease from occasioning, of sores, ulcers, boils, humors, pimples, erysipelas, &c. Do not wait but procure them by a free use of Dr. Parmelee's Purifier. Large bottles $1.00. 8-2-75 G. H. Wood & Co.

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY has purchased the

Ladies' and Children's Furnishing Goods

Lately owned by Fisher & Inwood, and will be pleased to retain all the old customers, and gain as many more as possible. Call and see my stock.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at ten dollars each. Call soon and have your pick.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. S. WAY.

JOHN NICHOLLS,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades,

WAGON HUBS, SHINGLES, LATH, ETC.

LUMBER SAWED AND BILLS FILLED TO ORDER.

NEW GOODS.

I am pleased to say that my

Spring Stock

Is ready for inspection. Come and see them, and when you want a suit of clothes that are JUST IN STYLE, you will know where to find them. My stock is all in the

LATE STYLES,

AND

Price to Correspond With the Times.

GEO. W. MILLER.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

Hand-Sleigh for Sale.

Just the thing for logging. Inquire at this office.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

885.45; Durango, $889,778; Culiacan, $852,143; Hermosillo, $449,460; Oaxaca, $39,650.

THE recent debate in the House of Representatives over the bill for the relief of Gen. Fitz John Porter drew upon the dictionaries and cyclopedias of poetical quotations to an extent quite unusual in Congress, except on days specially devoted to the business of eulogy. Mr. Browne, of Indiana, a veteran legislator and an enemy of the bill, led off on Jan. 19, with Robert Burns:

But man we man' weak and little to be trusted;
And when they want to do a thing
The balance is rarely right adjusted.

This was followed by an argument from Tennyson, with one misquotation:

Not though the soldiers knew
Some one had blundered;
Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do and die.

Then came a new member, Mr. McAdoo, of New Jersey, in defense of the bill with the sentiment, which was greeted with applause:

The purest treasure mortal times afford
Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam or painted clay.

That is from Shakspeare, and it was correctly quoted by Mr. McAdoo. A week later Mr. Thomas, of Illinois, who opposed the bill, enlivened the debate by interjecting a scrap of "Pinafore:"

It is pretty to your cousin,
For you yourself have said it.

That, also, was misquoted. Mr. George W. Ray of Norwich, N. Y., another new member, then filed the following exhibit for the defense:

Truth crushed to earth shall rise again;
The eternal years of God are mine;
But Error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies among his worshipers.

It is from Bryant's "Battle Field." Mr. Ray also submitted for the consideration of the House three lines from Joel Barlow's poem on Hasty Pudding:

I sing the sweets I know, the charms I feel,
My morning incense and my evening meal,
The sweets of hasty pudding.

Mr. Ray's colleague, Mr. Francis B. Brewer, closed the poetical case against Gen. Porter with not less than three quotations in the same speech. The first was from the Lady of the Lake:

Where, where was Roderick then?
One hour alone his lands been
Were worth a thousand men.

The second was from the "Charge of the Light Brigade" again, and again that stirring lyric suffered misquotation:

Forward, the Light Brigade!
Charge for the guns! he said.
Cannon to the right of them,
Cannon to the left of them,
Cannon in front of them,
Into the jaws of Death
Rode the six hundred!

Finally, Mr. Brewer quoted from "Lucile Birds and Books Reviewed:"

So she struck eagle, stretched upon the plain,
No more through rolling clouds to soar again,
View the sun better on the firmament,
And sing of the shaft that quivered in his heart;
Then wave his pinions, lay herself to bed,
He nursed the pinion which impelled the steel.
Here, then, we find Shakspeare, Bryant, and Joel Barlow summoned before the bar of the House in behalf of Gen. Porter, while Burns, Tennyson, Byron, Scott, and Gilbert are marshaled against him. The lesser host prevailed, however. Shakspeare, Bryant, and Barlow carried the day with Burns, Tennyson, Byron, Scott, and the author of "Pinafore," by a decisive vote of 184 to 78.

How a Proverb Originated.

Albert Durer is more famous and more widely known as an engraver than as a painter. His first copper-plate engraving was made in 1497, and from that time he executed numerous works of this kind. One of the first of these was "St. Jerome's Penance," a good impression of which was sold a few years ago for $500. In 1498 Durer published his first series of wood-cuts illustrating the Apocalypse of St. John. These cuts marked a new era in wood-engraving, and showed what possibilities it contained. Before this time it had been a rude art, chiefly used by uneducated monks. There are 174 wood-cuts attributed to Durer. The other important series are the "Great and Little Passion," showing the sufferings of Christ, and the "Life of the Virgin." The other three such scenes as round us only of death, sorrow, and sin. Again, his grotesque and fantastic humor was shown; and nothing more vile and sensual could be imagined than some of his fancies which he made almost immortal through the great artistic power. A wood-cut called the "Triumphal Arch of Maximilian" is two and a half feet high and nine feet wide; it was composed of ninety-two blocks, and all the remarkable genius in the Emperor's life are illustrated in it, as well as many symbolical figures and pictures expressive of his pomp, nobility, and power.

It is said that, while this engraving was being finished by the engraver Rosch, the Emperor drove often to see it. On one occasion several of Rosch's pet cats ran into the presence of the sovereign, and from this incident arose the proverb, "A cat may look at a king."—Clara Erskine Clement, in St. Nicholas.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

PROBABLY the longest lovers' quarrel on record came to an end the other day in Bradford, Conn., when Miss Jennie Bond and James O. Smith were married again for fifty-eight years. They quarreled in 1825, and did not speak again for fifty-eight years. The groom was 80 and the bride 77.

SENTIMENT in Washington told Gen. Sherman that a great many people had like to see him President, and the General, according to a more or less accurate reporter, burst out with: "What an ass I would be to take that!—to give up the good thing I've got for 20 to four years of purgatory."

THE youngest member of the present House of Representatives is Hon. Geo. A. Post, of Pennsylvania, who, curiously enough, comes from the same congressional district from which the oldest member in the person of Galusha A. Grow. Messrs. Grow and Post are both elected Congress at the same age—28 years.

THE sales of blooded cattle during last year were very satisfactory to breeders. A review of the sales in the different States is given in the Breeders' Gazette. Shorthorns brought an average of $235.56 per head; Herefords, $256.61; Aberdeen-Angus, $316.28; Galloways, $422.81; Holsteins, $373.60; Jerseys, $366.61; Guernseys, $222.50; all polled, $295.90.

A CERTAIN alleged literary gentleman of New York is engaged on a book that he confidently expects will astonish the world. In it he will attempt to show that Queen Victoria and John Brown were secretly married shortly after the death of the Prince Consort. He further claims that Disraeli is some manner of a relation, and that it appears on and read it to his own advancement. The New York literary gentleman probably aspires to become the Baron Stockmar of the Western world.

LAWRENCE T. EXLE, inspector of Bull Lake in New Jersey, reports that about 12,000 children are employed in factories in that State, and that this labor imposes ignorance, moral degradation, and misery upon these unfortunates. Some of them do not know the name of the State they live in, and have never been to school. It will require three weeks to find after 7,000 factories.

THE E. J. Jones, while on a visit in Germany last summer, asked the professors at twelve German universities "Do you think that our young men are studying at the universities?" Almost unanimously the answer was, "There is no doubt of it." "Germany said one of them, "is now considering the growth of a class of presumably educated men for whom there is no room in the professions and who are proved to go into business of any sort. Beault poverty or suicide."

WRITE the clerks in the Treasury Department at Washington is a young man who was found buried among the sand on the field of the recent battle of Ivy Bridge. When the burial squad pulled him out from among the dead he was found to have a terrible wound in the side and his left hand was hanging by the tendons. These he bit off and threw the hand away, save his eastern wife, Cuzzlemam and crawled off toward the hospital, preferring to help himself on the squad could search for him the night he in the same Rt. Throat day he received his commission as Lieutenant. He married the sister of the "Johnny" to whom he gave his hand drop of water he had, and lives happily on Capitol Hill.

THE author of "The Broyl-winners" has written a card replying to the criticisms of his critics. He says: "My novel is in withholding my name is simply enough. I can stand the heat, and have never been scalped. It will require three weeks to find after 7,000 factories.

THE Rev. Dr. Talmage, while on a visit to Germany last summer, asked the professors at twelve German universities "Do you think that our young men are studying at the universities?" Almost unanimously the answer was, "There is no doubt of it." "Germany said one of them, "is now considering the growth of a class of presumably educated men for whom there is no room in the professions and who are proved to go into business of any sort. Beault poverty or suicide."

THE youngest member of the present House of Representatives is Hon. Geo. A. Post, of Pennsylvania, who, curiously enough, comes from the same congressional district from which the oldest member in the person of Galusha A. Grow. Messrs. Grow and Post are both elected Congress at the same age—28 years.

THE sales of blooded cattle during last year were very satisfactory to breeders. A review of the sales in the different States is given in the Breeders' Gazette. Shorthorns brought an average of $235.56 per head; Herefords, $256.61; Aberdeen-Angus, $316.28; Galloways, $422.81; Holsteins, $373.60; Jerseys, $366.61; Guernseys, $222.50; all polled, $295.90.

A CERTAIN alleged literary gentleman of New York is engaged on a book that he confidently expects will astonish the world. In it he will attempt to show that Queen Victoria and John Brown were secretly married shortly after the death of the Prince Consort. He further claims that Disraeli is some manner of a relation, and that it appears on and read it to his own advancement. The New York literary gentleman probably aspires to become the Baron Stockmar of the Western world.

LAWRENCE T. EXLE, inspector of Bull Lake in New Jersey, reports that about 12,000 children are employed in factories in that State, and that this labor imposes ignorance, moral degradation, and misery upon these unfortunates. Some of them do not know the name of the State they live in, and have never been to school. It will require three weeks to find after 7,000 factories.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

RE-CHRISTENED.

New name for "Baby's Sister."
I had a name before;
Yes is the Maud you're looking to?
I'm not it any more.

My new name you must give me,
Some baby name, indeed,
I'm Baby's Sister—see me
To bring what thing you need.

I'll remain, one, four errands
Or two, if you prefer;
I'll be last as right one By,
And every do as ay.

But if Ye Maud you're wanting,
I'm just as old and spry;
I do not see Maud anywhere,
I know she's gone to stay.

Then call me "Baby's Sister,"
Or else how can I know
It's me or not some other girl
You truly want should go?

Here's cap and spoon and bandwhat,
I quickly wear the same;
Say, "Tank you, Baby's Sister,"
For that's my very name.

—Good Cheer.

A Story for Boys.

The robins flew from the far away Southland where the summer loves to stay. Plenty more were with them, bluebirds, thrushes, blackbirds, wrens, and others, but it is only with these two that we have to do. They flew many and many a mile over hill, mountain, and valley, lake, forest, and prairie, till they came to the land where Jack Frost lays his cold hand on the trees with a tight and persuasive grip that the tender leaves never venture a peep out until long after the birds who stay in warmer climes are singing under bowers of green among full blooming flowers.

It seems a wonder, sometimes, why the dear little singers ever leave such sunny lands; but they do, and, what would the girls and boys of the North do?

The two knew of a beautiful spot where they had built a nest for several years past. It was in an old tree close by a waterfall, which sashed at them, gleaming and sparkling in the sunshine all day long, and then sang them to sleep at night. The eyes of the pretty things brightened and their tired little wings moved more lightly as they drew near what they had come to look upon as their summer home. Who then can imagine their sorrow and dismay at finding the dear old tree lying prostrate beside the limpbing water?

"What shall we do?" said Robin.

Mrs. Redbreast could hardly answer at first.

"We shall never find such another spot," she sighed.

"Never! The location was so good."

"Such a cosy peak to hold the dangling hammock!"

"No facing the north, where the cold winds could blow upon them."

"And the water, which lulled us so long in the afternoon."

"Nor way up by the sky, where the nest might be blown away."

"Nor too near the ground, where it might be found by those dreadful young savages—boys?"

And again, ruefully shaking their heads:

"What shall we do?"

Then, however, little time to waste in lamentation, for the season was already late. They took a day to hunt a building spot, and at its close Mrs. Redbreast said to Robin in a tone of importance.

"I think I have found the very place," she said.

"Well, I have a moment's peace in a tree. Supposing the old one had gone down last summer with that darling nestful of young? I wonder if I thinkful it Robin, we must choose a safer place. Come, let us see what I have found."

She flew before him to a building which stood at some distance from their former home.

"See," she said, "it is empty. No fear of our being disturbed here; and look what a cunning nook I have found."

It really did look very safe and inviting, the crazy old place, and in a corner of the woodwork of the piazza Robin looked at it from all directions, gravely turned his head from side to side, feeling great doubts of the wisdom of building anywhere but in a tree, yet fully aware of the importance to Mrs. Redbreast's feeling quite safe and secure in her new home.

He could not find anything to object to, and the next morning birdlee began work in great spirits and with such energy that before the week closed some blue eggs had made their appearance in the snug little nest, over which Mr. and Mrs. Redbreast hovered and chirped as if they had only just gone to housekeeping instead of having already raised several fine families.

But one morning soon afterward, as Robin returned from a short absence from the nest, Mrs. Redbreast received him with such a frightened face that he anxiously inquired what was the matter.

"Oh, Robin! I have seen—I have seen—"

"What?" cried Robin, "not fire?"

"No—worse."

"Not a man with a gun?"

"Oh, worse, Robin. Boys! A great crowd of boys!"

Robin turned pale to the very point of his beak.

"Where?" he asks despairingly.

"Running all over the grass, and now they are gone into the house."

"Boys in the house!—What shall we do?"

"What shall we do?" was all poor Mrs. Redbreast could echo, directly adding, "But I shall never forsake my precious eggs, Robin."

And he said in the same breath:

"And I shall never forsake you."

"Hurrah! Hurrah!" The boys gathered in school after a week's holiday rushed out in room. "What shall we do?" Redbreast could have sat perfectly still in her nest above the piazza, no one, perhaps, would have seen her; but a short time after, the cat, half affrighted, while Robin scurried about in helpless alarm. A big boy climbed up a pillar to look.

"A nest with five eggs!"

"Bring it down."

"No, no," cried the others, "let the poor birds alone."

The parent birds were uttering sharp cries of distress, when the teacher came out. He smiled when he saw what had been found, and, he himself climbed up to see it, and, to the surprise of all, carefully took out and brought the nest down.

"I don't care," muttered Billy Barlow. "I say I saw it first. It's not fair for him to have it."

The nobody minded Billy, as the teacher showed the pretty eggs to the children had so lovingly prepared for them, then pointed to the excited robins.

"I don't think the Longfellow school has ever before received such a compliment," he said. "These little birds have made a direct appeal to the honor and manliness of every boy here. They have helpless, except for the strength this very helplessness gives them in the eyes of every noble and generous nature. The Master puts his little creatures in our mercy, that we may show mercy in protecting their weakness. Now, shall we, each and all, determine that these young birds shall be reared without harm from any one belonging to Longfellow school?"

There was a clapping of hands with loud cheering, and in another minute the nest was replaced and the noise let the crowd had dispersed.

And Robin and Mrs. Redbreast could hardly believe their eyes as they stood on either side of the nest twittering and remonstrating, until she nestled upon her eggs and he flew away to see about a lunch for her.

Billy Barlow, the next morning, an hour before school, came and fastened his shaky little eyes upon the modding behind which he knew the coveted nest lay. Upon a pillar he climed, but neither his arms nor his legs were as long as the teacher's, nor yet as the big boys', so could barely touch with a finger end a tantalizing bit of twig which helped to form the outer circle of Mrs. Redbreast's throne. Stretching and tiptoeing were of no avail, and he ran to an upper window, through which he crept out upon the piazza roof. It was steep, and as he leaned over and reached out his cruel hand, regardless of poor Mrs. Redbreast's cries, he lost his balance. And missing the nest, away he went over the ornamental woodwork—and caught. Hanging head and feet down with a tightness of clothing about the middle which made him sick and faint he lay kicked and called lastily for help, which, however, did not come until he had laid there some many shaky resolutions never, never, never more to rob a bird of its nest.

The boys, as they gathered, tried their best to release Billy; but unhand was strong, and the teacher's, when it came, when he was unhung and set down in a circle of enthusiastic bird defenders, full of virtuous indignation at the cruelty of the poor Robins.

"Who ever would have seen her; but a bird's nest as old, few of it affrighted, while Robin scurried about in helpless alarm. A big boy climbed up a pillar to look.

"A nest with five eggs!"

"Bring it down."

"No, no," cried the others, "let the poor birds alone."

The parent birds were uttering sharp cries of distress, when the teacher came out. He smiled when he saw what had been found, and, he himself climbed up to see it, and, to the surprise of all, carefully took out and brought the nest down.

"I don't care," muttered Billy Barlow. "I say I saw it first. It's not fair for him to have it."

The nobody minded Billy, as the teacher showed the pretty eggs to the children had so lovingly prepared for them, then pointed to the excited robins.

"I don't think the Longfellow school has ever before received such a compliment," he said. "These little birds have made a direct appeal to the honor and manliness of every boy here. They are helpless, except for the strength this very helplessness gives them in the eyes of every noble and generous nature. The Master puts his little creatures in our mercy, that we may show mercy in protecting their weakness. Now, shall we, each and all, determine that these young birds shall be reared without harm from any one belonging to Longfellow school?"

There was a clapping of hands with loud cheering, and in another minute the nest was replaced and the noisy lit the crowd had dispersed.

And Robin and Mrs. Redbreast could hardly believe their eyes as they stood on either side of the nest twittering and remonstrating, until she nestled upon her eggs and he flew away to see about a lunch for her.

Billy Barlow, the next morning, an hour before school, came and fastened his shaky little eyes upon the modding behind which he knew the coveted nest lay. Upon a pillar he climed, but neither his arms nor his legs were as long as the teacher's, nor yet as the big boys', so could barely touch with a finger end a tantalizing bit of twig which helped to form the outer circle of Mrs. Redbreast's throne. Stretching and tiptoeing were of no avail, and he ran to an upper window, through which he crept out upon the piazza roof. It was steep, and as he leaned over and reached out his cruel hand, regardless of poor Mrs. Redbreast's cries, he lost his balance. And missing the nest, away he went over the ornamental woodwork—and caught. Hanging head and feet down with a tightness of clothing about the middle which made him sick and faint he lay kicked and called lastily for help, which, however, did not come until he had laid there some many shaky resolutions never, never, never more to rob a bird of its nest.

The boys, as they gathered, tried their best to release Billy; but unhand was strong, and the teacher's, when it came, when he was unhung and set down in a circle of enthusiastic bird defenders, full of virtuous indignation

IN THE JAWS OF A SHARK.

A Marine Diver's Remarkable Adventure with a Huge Man-Eater.

The following, a thrilling adventure with a shark, was related to your correspondent by a gentleman of authority, and who claims to know both the diver and the Atlanta, which was capsized in a storm on Sept. 22, 1885, on the coast of North Carolina. He says: "The owners of the craft contracted with a diving company to have her raised and to recover as much of her cargo as possible. Two divers went to work at once. They made several successful descents, but on the fourth trip one of them not with the adventure which we are about to speak of. His comrade signaled hastily to be drawn up, and when he had been hauled into the boat he related how his other comrade had been seized by a monster shark and carried off too scarcely had he done speaking when the one that was supposed to be in hot devoured rose from the water about fifty yards from the boat and was picked up insensible, with several holes punched in the metallic part of his diving suit. Means were successfully adopted to bring him around, and he day he told the following story:

"We made our fourth descent, and, while my companion clambered into the wreck I waited on the ground in order to draw some more air into the pipe. I was quite alone, for I had left my companion in the wreck, when I noticed a shadowy body moving at some distance above me and swept me. In a moment every fish had disappeared, the very crustaceans lay still upon the sand, and the cuttlefish scurried away as fast as they could. I was thinking of danger, and not for a moment was it that it was the shadow of a passing boat. But suddenly a feeling of terror seized me. I felt impelled to fly from something. I knew not what; a vague horror seized grasping after me such as a child fancies when looking at a dimly seen. By this time the shadow had come nearer and taken shape. It scarcely needed a glance to show me that it was a man-eater, and of the largest size. Had I signaled to be drawn up then it would have been certain death. All I could do was to remain still until it left. It lay off about twenty feet, and, judging of the rig of the ship, its body measured, in the four barely stirring the water. Again and again it came, but I knew that I was safe so long as I remained motionless. Turned on its back as it swooped down on me like a hawk on a sparrow. The conversions grew repeated, and the shining teeth grated as they closed on my metal harness. It took me, I could feel its teeth grinding upon my copper breastplate, as it tried to bite me in two. Or, fortunately, it had made no just across the middle, where I was well protected. Having swept on, it went tearing through the water; I could feel it bound forward at each stroke of its tail. Had it not been for my copper helmet, my head would have been torn off by the rush through the water. I was perfectly conscious, but somehow I felt no terror at all, only a feeling of numbness. I wondered how long it would be before those teeth would crush my skull, and whether they would strike just into my back or breast. Then I thought of my wife and the baby, and wondered who would take care of them, if she should ever know what had become of me. All these thoughts passed through my brain in an instant, but in that time the monster had been snapped, and my head seemed ready to burst with the pressure, while the monster's teeth kept crunching and grinding away on my harness. The I felt the cold water begin to pour in, and heard the bubble, bubble, bubble, as the air escaped into the creature's mouth. I began to hear great guns and to see fire-works and rainbows, and sunshine, and all kinds of pretty things; then I thought I was floating away on a rosy summer cloud, dreaming to the sound of sweet music. Then all became dark. The shark might have eaten me then at his leisure and I never would have been the wiser. Imagine my astonishment, then, when I opened my eyes on board this boat and found you fellows around me. Yes, sir, I thought I was dead and eaten up, sar."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

INSANITY as he was able to make an unbridged dictionary. I wondered if Webster never found a man who kept his word.

He who pays more attention to his hat than to his head shows which is most valuable and which contains the more.

THE inebriate man thinks more of his boots than his head, and will not allow them on the ground if he can help it.

A BOTTLE of chill medicine does not require to be labeled "Shake well before taking."

WROTE THE "BROAD-WINNERS."

Ex-Gov. John Letcher, of Virginia, whose death occurred not long since, was born in Rockbridge County, Virginia, in 1813. His father was a carpenter, and young Letcher was for five years his apprentice. He studied at night, however, and attended Washington College for a time, getting a fair education. In 1833 he was admitted to the bar, and for some time he practiced law and edited a country newspaper. In 1848 he was a Democratic Presidential Elector, and in 1852 he entered Congress. For four terms he was re-elected to the National Legislature without opposition, a record unprecedented in the history of public men. He left Congress March 3, 1859. A leading actor in all the scenes that led to the civil war, he became a central figure in it, and was chosen Governor of Virginia in 1860, and remained its chief executive during the most important years of the war. A man of positive character, he made a deep impression in his State and time, and but for a stroke of paralysis in 1873, he would probably have been active in later political conflicts of Virginia.

MANY persons have long suspected that the disease called kleptomania was not incurable, and this suspicion is verified by the testimony of a Philadelphia detective. According to his story the merchants of that city have discovered and make application of a remedy which acts like a charm. The cure is as follows: When a person is observed to have committed a theft some one of the special officers, who are constantly upon the floor, is notified, and the guilty one is gently tapped upon the shoulder and directed to go to the private office of the proprietor. The victim invariably demands to know the reason why and is then politely told that she has in her possession an article or articles which she had abstracted from one of the counters. By the time the office is reached the woman is about ready to faint, and piteously begs not to be exposed. She, of course, readily succumbs. Her body is searched, according to the formality of a search, and receives a Christian-like lecture and is admonished to sin no more. Payment is invariably demanded for the stolen articles. That the cure is effective and permanent is proved by the fact that one application is sufficient in each case, and that shoplifting is perceptibly decreasing.

BEN PRESLEY PERKIN writes: "John C. Calhoun was Vice President of the United States, and consequently President of the Senate, a position which to him was very irksome, as he was forced to sit and dimbly listen to debates in which he was eager to participate. He was a great favorite of some of the best men in the country as a candidate during the recent Presidential election, but the North had no ticket in the field, and had been left off by the rank through the water. I was perfectly conscious, but somehow I felt no terror at all, only a feeling of numbness. I wondered how long it would be before those teeth would crush my skull, and whether they would strike just into my back or breast. Then I thought of my wife and the baby, and wondered who would take care of them, if she should ever know what had become of me. All these thoughts passed through my brain in an instant, but in that time the monster had been snapped, and my head seemed ready to burst with the pressure, while the monster's teeth kept crunching and grinding away on my harness. The I felt the cold water begin to pour in, and heard the bubble, bubble, bubble, as the air escaped into the creature's mouth. I began to hear great guns and to see fire-works and rainbows, and sunshine, and all kinds of pretty things; then I thought I was floating away on a rosy summer cloud, dreaming to the sound of sweet music. Then all became dark. The shark might have eaten me then at his leisure and I never would have been the wiser. Imagine my astonishment, then, when I opened my eyes on board this boat and found you fellows around me. Yes, sir, I thought I was dead and eaten up, sar."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

INSANITY as he was able to make an unbridged dictionary. I wondered if never found a man who kept his word.

He who pays more attention to his hat than to his head shows which is most valuable and which contains the more.

THE inebriate man thinks more of his boots than his head, and will not allow them on the ground if he can help it.

A BOTTLE of chill medicine does not require to be labeled "Shake well before taking."

SECTIONAL AGITATION.

Only Sham, Film-Eyed Republicans Talk Bloody Shirt.

The people throughout the country are utterly sick of the sectional issue, and nothing is so calculated to excite the 4-degree and revenge as the exhumation of the "bloody shirt" and a celebration of the cry of Southern outrages. "There is no expression upon the Northern mind, Democratic or Republican, so sure to elicit a hearty response as the cry that the South is doing that which is political party in the North can do almost is with disgust. Crime in Virginia and Mississippi can no more be dealt with by Congress than crime on Long Island or in New Jersey. * * * It is the sound of a minority no Republican in Congress to spend their time in discussing Southern outrages, and not attempting to cover sectional animosities. It will not, no Democrats, and it will repel thousands of independent and sensible Republicans.—New York Times (independent).

That is Republican authority—history "as also is taught." Northern streams as they flow South bank-full symbolize the kindly feelings of the vast majority of the Northern people, and the South winds as they come Northward sing of peace and good-will. Only mean, film-eyed fanatics talk "bloody shirt." Large-souled Republicans abhor the whole business. They will not train in the ranks of a party whose the bloody-shirt flag flows.

The New York Tribune published a reminiscence of Wendell Phillips, which "bloody-shirt" men would do well to read and make the guide of their lives. It seems that Mr. Phillips, after delivering his lecture on "Lost Arts" in Jersey City, was pretty simply criticised by a lover of young ladies in a street car. Mr. Phillips was a silent but not unobservant listener. Subsequently, his attention being called to the incident, he replied as follows:

"Oh! that's nothing," he replied. "I am used to it. I remember that after making an abolitionist speech one evening, I took a car for home. Next to me sat a man who asked me if I had been to hear Phillips. I told him I had. He then asked me what I thought of the speech. I answered that I was pretty well satisfied with it. Slapping me on the knee, he said, excitedly: 'I did fellow—you make you believe black is white.' This set me thinking. I knew I was capable of exerting great influence over my audiences. In these old days I often stirred them up to such a pitch of excitement that it was only have been necessary for me to suggest that they should go out and burn a barn, make a pro-slavery meeting or do some other illegal act and they would have done it. But I reflected that this was not, after all, a very dignified use of my faculties. It is foolish to be of any permanent value, for the next day they would repent them of their folly and be ready to make me for leading them into it. From that time I sought to exercise the reason rather than the passions of an audience, and I know that the results were lasting and my influence was greater and more lasting."

The Republican party, its organs and leaders are still engaged in "firing the Northern heart." They are as bitter toward the South as in the days when slavery was in full sway. Its appeals to Southern blood, and the smoke of battle darkened the heavens. They want their misguided readers and hearers to burn barns, and hold meetings. They continually appeal to the passions of men, not to their reason. They would revive the memories, the injuries and hatreds engendered by the war. They want bloody chasms to yawn, and wide gulfs to open wide. They know or ought to know that the South is not doing that which political party in the North can do almost is with disgust. Crime in Virginia and Mississippi can no more be dealt with by Congress than crime on Long Island or in New Jersey. * * * It is the sound of a minority no Republican in Congress to spend their time in discussing Southern outrages, and not attempting to cover sectional animosities. It will not, no Democrats, and it will repel thousands of independent and sensible Republicans.—New York Times (independent).

That is Republican authority—history "as also is taught." Northern streams as they flow South bank-full symbolize the kindly feelings of the vast majority of the Northern people, and the South winds as they come Northward sing of peace and good-will. Only mean, film-eyed fanatics talk "bloody shirt." Large-souled Republicans abhor the whole business. They will not train in the ranks of a party whose the bloody-shirt flag flows.

The New York Tribune published a reminiscence of Wendell Phillips, which "bloody-shirt" men would do well to read and make the guide of their lives. It seems that Mr. Phillips, after delivering his lecture on "Lost Arts" in Jersey City, was pretty simply criticised by a lover of young ladies in a street car. Mr. Phillips was a silent but not unobservant listener. Subsequently, his attention being called to the incident, he replied as follows:

"Oh! that's nothing," he replied. "I am used to it. I remember that after making an abolitionist speech one evening, I took a car for home. Next to me sat a man who asked me if I had been to hear Phillips. I told him I had. He then asked me what I thought of the speech. I answered that I was pretty well satisfied with it. Slapping me on the knee, he said, excitedly: 'I did fellow—you make you believe black is white.' This set me thinking. I knew I was capable of exerting great influence over my audiences. In these old days I often stirred them up to such a pitch of excitement that it was only have been necessary for me to suggest that they should go out and burn a barn, make a pro-slavery meeting or do some other illegal act and they would have done it. But I reflected that this was not, after all, a very dignified use of my faculties. It is foolish to be of any permanent value, for the next day they would repent them of their folly and be ready to make me for leading them into it. From that time I sought to exercise the reason rather than the passions of an audience, and I know that the results were lasting and my influence was greater and more lasting."

The Republican party, its organs and leaders are still engaged in "firing the Northern heart." They are as bitter toward the South as in the days when slavery was in full sway. Its appeals to Southern blood, and the smoke of battle darkened the heavens. They want their misguided readers and hearers to burn barns, and hold meetings. They continually appeal to the passions of men, not to their reason. They would revive the memories, the injuries and hatreds engendered by the war. They want bloody chasms to yawn, and wide gulfs to open wide. They know or ought to know that there is partisan success in such a delicate policy. They demand political union, but they would girdle the Southern States with lines of fire and the Republican party with chains. They know that in many localities in the South the black race is numerically in the ascendency, and they encourage hostilities between the whites and the blacks. They would have Republican emissaries in Southern communities, where all is peace, strike up strife and inaugurate anarchy. They would give one Empire States of the South to negro rule, and place their destinies in negro hands. To accomplish their hellish purposes they appeal to passion rather than to reason. Wendell Phillips found out long before he died that it was a bad policy to appeal to the passions of men, and the Republican organs and leaders will do well to follow his advice and example. The people everywhere are tired at the exhibitions of satanic hate which many Republican organs and leaders manifest toward the South. The demand is for a union of hearts, now not two laws a union of lands, of States. A union of the people is the demand. It cannot be secured by appealing to men's passions. North or South. In pursuing that course the Republican organs perpetrate an atrocious outrage, and they are doomed to failure. The people will not tolerate the infamous policy. In the recent debate in the House of Representatives on the Fitz John Porter case, Mr. Outs, of Alabama, said:

"My friends, is that great war which sacrificed a million men, and billions of money, never and statesmen ever dreamed, but no Lincoln Arnold. It is alleged by some that good feeling suggests that some of the 'rebel brigadiers' should pass judgment upon their comrades. Why? Are we not American citizens, with all the rights, privileges, and immunities of any other citizens? Are we not here as representatives of the people, of sovereign States? Can we with any sense of propriety abolitionize our functions as Representatives because forsooth it accords with the ideas of taste of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Taylor), and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. Horr) and the unmilitated memories stand ready to answer their indictment upon the pending measure? Some gentlemen have intimated that the sincerity of the proposed amendment is questioned by by the people who sent me here. I am not ashamed of my record. The war was the logical consequence of a great conflict of ideas, which could be settled by no arbiter but the sword. I, in common with my constituents, made a hard fight, and made it honestly. The award was against us. We accepted it honestly, and to day I am as true a friend and supporter of the Constitution and the government of the United States as any gentleman on this floor, and will cast my vote on this bill with a proud consciousness of my right to do so, and as a representative the peer of any other in this chamber.

"That is frank, manly talk. Soldiers and all honorable men understand it. There was war; there was victory; there is peace. The award was against the South. Its cause was lost. Its flag went down. Its armies were shattered. Poverty and ruin overwhelmed the sunny land from the Potomac to the Rio Grande. Responding to the fiat of fate, forgetting defeat, accepting the inevitable, what do we see? Millions of men resuming their allegiance to the old flag, and declaring: "The award was against us, we accept it honestly, and are true friends to the Constitution and the Government of the United States." With such declarations, let the bloody shirt disappear. Bloody chasms are not only bridged, but the hostile sections are the supreme duty of all men is to cultivate confidence between the sections, and on all occasions appeal to the reason rather than to the passions of men.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

CITZ JOHN PORTER.

The Real Point in the Case—The Situation as Pope Understood it, and the Situation as It Actually Existed.

The one point upon which the case turns is, whether Fitz John Porter should have attacked Jackson's flank and rear when he got Pope's order. As Pope understood it, the situation was as follows:

The real situation was as expressed in the following diagram:

Pope expected Porter to get the order to advance at 5 o'clock. He did not get it until after 6. It is foolish to say that no matter what the situation was, Porter should have moved at once upon the receipt of the order. The order was to attack Jackson's flank, not to attack with Jackson's flank.

Republicans should not do themselves the injustice of affecting to discredit the Confederate testimony as to the hours at which movements were made, and the position of troops at certain times. There is no more doubt of the position of Longstreet on the evening of Aug. 29 than there is of that of Pope himself.—Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, Rep.

A Reformed Brigadier.

The Springer investigating committee is learning hard lessons from the ranks of converted Republicanism. Gen. Longstreet. The facts brought out by the examination of Mr. Bollin, one of the examiners of the Attorney General's office, have no room to doubt that Longstreet's administration as United States Marshal of Georgia has been corrupt and venal. Because of Longstreet's iniquities, Robinson, had become notorious as a fixer of false vouchers. The department had warned Longstreet frequently, but to no avail. Then it was found that he had actually appointed his son as chief deputy, and that he and Robinson were working together to defraud the government. An investigation was had. The son was compelled to resign his place, and Robinson was convicted of fraud and perjury and went to the penitentiary. Longstreet furnished the money for Robinson's defense, and has since strenuously worked for his pardon. The same investigation by the department which resulted in Robinson's conviction showed that Longstreet was himself short in his accounts between $16,000 and $11,000, which remains unsettled. The witness did not hesitate to express his conviction that the secret of the close relations between Longstreet and Robinson was that the former shared in the latter's system of swindling. And this is the distinguished Gen. Longstreet who fought in the Confederate army as a Lieutenant General, and who accepted the situation at the close of the war, became a decent Republican and was rewarded with an office. If a Confederate brigadier got out before Springer it would look as if his kind of "rebel brigadiers" were in company more discreditable to the republic than the other kind. The great fear in some circles is that the "rebel brigadiers" in Congress may land and ravish the Treasury, but if the testimony of Mr. Bollin is to be relied on Brigadier Longstreet resolved not to await the coming of his brother brigadiers in Congress, but sail in on his own hook. He seems to have made at least a partial success.—Chicago Herald.

THE American hog, upon investigation, is likely to be completely vindicated, which is more than can be said of Keiter, John Sherman, Dorsey, and some other Republican swine.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

THE new Republican "bloody-shirt" ticket: For President, John Sherman, of Ohio; Vice President, William Mahone, of Virginia. There is something singularly beautiful and appropriate about this ticket.

Man's Microscopic Enemies.

Man has suffered long from their ravages in person and estate; but he has usually attributed his misfortune to every cause but the real one. Intrenched as these foes of his are in citadels of littleness, he has mostly overlooked them, and has only of late years begun to hunt out their significant secrets, which are closely interwoven with famine, pestilence and pain. From his beginning he has struggled on through an unseen mist of organic atoms, wrestling hard all the while with the manifold evils these have wrought, and generally unwitting of the miasma that environed him, and that was bringing woe on himself and his household, and working sad havoc among his stock, and crop, and chattels. He can face the lion or tiger, and may conquer with gun or spear. But how can he dislodge these infinitely more fatal foes from their microscopic lairs; how overcome the countless multitude? The larger of the wild beasts fall back before him into the thickest forests and most distant solitudes, or their kind becomes extinct. The mammoth and mastodon, for instance, have vanished from the face of the earth. But the small vermin defy extinction. Rats and mice have for thousands of years feasted and sometimes fattened at man's expense, and yet he has all things been hunting them down, trapping, poisoning, plotting against them, devising ensuing schemes, setting cager dogs after them, encouraging patient cats to watch at holes and exercise the mental physique in eating up the vineyards of sunny France, in spite of the Academy of Sciences and its many prizes offered for a remedy. In North America the Colorado beetle gets copious doses of arsenical compounds, and yet it survives. Consider, then, that these small creatures, which seem made it so much harder to subdue than the great beasts of the field, are not of gigantic size when contrasted with the microscopic plants that are in league with his invisible enemies, famine, disease, and death.—Good Words.

Female Tenacity of Life.

It appears from the gathered statistics of the world that women have a greater tenacity of life than men. Nature worships the female in all its properties. Among insects the male perishes at a relatively earlier period. In plants the feminine blossoms die earliest, and are produced on the weaker limbs. Female quadrupeds have more endurance than males. In the human race, despite the intellectual and physical strength of the man, the woman endures the longest, and will bear pain to which the strong man succumbs. Zymotic diseases are more fatal to males, and more male children than female. Beverge asserts that the proportion dying suddenly is about 100 women to 780 men; 1,836 men in the United States, in 1870, committed suicide, to 285 women. Intemperance, apoplexy, gout, hydrocephalus, affections of the heart and liver, scrofula, paralysis, are far more fatal to males than females. Pulmonary consumption, on the other hand, is more deadly to the latter. Females in cities are more prone to consumption than in the country. All old countries not disturbed by emigration have a great majority of females in the population. In royal families the statistics show more

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

William Henry Hunt,

LATE AMERICAN MINISTER TO RUSSIA, WHO DIED AT ST. PETERSBURG, FEB. 27TH.

Hon. William Henry Hunt, American Minister to Russia, and ex secretary of the navy, who died at St. Petersburg, Wednesday, Feb. 27th, was born at Charleston, S. C., in 1824, the youngest of five sons of an influential lawyer and member of the state legislature.

Mr. Hunt was brought up in New Orleans, to which city his father removed on account of the Calhoun nullification excitement, but attended school at New Haven, Conn., and afterwards entered Yale college. He studied law with an elder brother, and was admitted to the bar in 1844 in New Orleans at the age of twenty. He soon took a high rank as a profound and eloquent lawyer, and was for a time a professor in a New Orleans law school. When the war came he refused to join in the secession movement, and was a consistent Union man. When Admiral Farragut entered New Orleans, Judge Hunt invited the officers of the navy to his house. He assisted in the reconstruction of the state, and was elected attorney-general on the Packard ticket in 1876. In 1878 he was appointed a judge of the United States court of claims. President Garfield took him into his cabinet as a representative of the south, and when President Arthur succeeded to the executive office he appointed him minister to Russia.

In this capacity Mr. Hunt performed an admirable service to his country in looking after the survivors of the Jeannette expedition, and assisting them in making their way from a remote corner of the Russian empire to St. Petersburg, and thence to their homes. Through his efforts the good offices of the Russian government were secured in bringing the remains of De Long and those who perished with him, from the western coast of Siberia to the Russian capital.

Judge Hunt was four times married. His first wife was a daughter of Commodore Bigdey. His second wife was a daughter-in-law of late Bishop Hopkins, of Connecticut. In his personal characteristics Mr. Hunt was one of the most winning of men. Handsome, learned and eloquent, he possessed all the graces of a finished gentleman. He leaves a widow, one daughter and four sons.

The following was received by President Arthur the day after Mr. Hunt's death:—

TO THE RUSSIAN MINISTER, WASHINGTON: The President instructs you to express to the President of to the government of the United States the sincere regret which Mr. Hunt's death causes His Majesty.

I have to add that the government and Russian society are much affected by his loss.

FRISH.

By order of secretary Chandler the navy department will be draped in mourning for thirty days.

The Muskegon News predicts that there will be few trade interests in Michigan which will not be permanently benefited by the coming revolution in the lumber trade which is to practically abolish the general lumber market at Chicago and establish markets at the mills of the manufacturers. Important lumber sales are now almost wholly made on orders, and not after personal inspection and selection by buyers, as was the custom a few years ago, and the need there fore for a convenient central market no longer exists, while the cost of maintaining lumber yards in Chicago has of late years greatly increased. For these reasons, as well as to save freights, the News says there is a "general movement among the lumbermen of the Northwest whose mills are in the vicinity of the pineries and whose storage yards are in Chicago," to quit that city and sell direct to dealers from their home yards. As to the result of this proposed change the News says: The effect of this change in business method will be in many ways advantageous to business in western Michigan. It will virtually cut off the expense of the present Chicago handling from the price of lumber, and by so much will make lumber cheaper to the consumer, and lead to a larger demand. It will multiply activity at the lumber centers of Michigan and the northwest, and will make cities of the villages which now cluster about the saw mills. It will give to Michigan railroads the lumber business of Lake Michigan; and growth in railroad traffic anywhere means added prosperity to every city and village which the railroad touches. Lumber shipments will be made from the mills to consumers in the far west and far south without breaking bulk; and this in time will necessitate the extension of railways which now branch westward and southward from Chicago into the heart of the lumber regions of the northwest. They will be compelled to reach out where the business is, or lose the business.

PITH AND POINT.

—Five Polish poets have been arrested in Europe. Poets in this country are occasionally killed, or crowded out.

—One of the charges against tobacco is that its use has a dwarfing effect. That's true. Many men get short by buying cigars.—Chicago Times.

—Worcester has an "H. A. T." club, which entertains the public with plays, operettas, and the like. "Hear no guess-ma," ought to be a favorite air.—Lowell Courier.

—A young correspondent complains that "there are too many lawyers in the country." Oh, no, my boy, there aren't too many lawyers. There aren't half enough clients, that's all.—Lafayette.

—"What is true bravery?" asks a New York paper. It is going to the door yourself when you don't know whether the caller is a dear friend, a book agent, or a man with a bill.—Buffalo Bulletin News.

—When the hired girl was asked to put an extra plate on the table she said she wasn't much of an arithmetician, but she could work an example in mold-dishes like that.—Cincinnati Commercial Traveler.

—The fellow at the other end of the telephone wire may be perfectly sound linguistically, but the man at this end should reflect, as he listens, that his business is in the hands of a "receiver."—Pittsburgh Telegraph.

—Clara Jane says that she shall never be satisfied until women are permitted to use as well as to be used. Perhaps it would be unkind to say that Clara Jane has never been used; therefore we shall not say it.—Boston Transcript.

—Swimming is becoming a favorite amusement with the New York ladies. It has long been known that the husbands of New York ladies often find it difficult to keep their own heads above water, and now, perhaps, their wives will help them.—New York Graphic.

—"Did you find the people indigent?" asked a clergyman of a wealthy member of his church, who had been calling on some very poor families. "Oh, dear, no," answered the lady, "they were respectable, but as poor as poverty."—Yonkers Gazette.

—A Philadelphia woman was poisoned by holding a cent in her mouth while hunting street car changes, and one in Chicago was similarly affected by holding a street car ticket. This causes the Detroit Free Press to ask: "Why doesn't the sex take a walk instead of riding?"

—"Why do young men remain single?" asks a newspaper writer. An old philosopher once observed that if more young men were to marry, there would be fewer old bachelors in the land, and the more we reflect on the subject the more it strikes us that the old philosopher hit the bull's-eye. Young men remain single because they don't marry.—The Judge.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Knoxville, Tenn., is entering largely into the manufacturing enterprises, and among its latest industries are car works.

—The making of sassafras oil is now a leading industry in many parts of Virginia. The raw root costs $1.50 for 1,000 pounds.

—In the United States, Ontario and Manitoba the increase of the lumber product this year over last is estimated at 750,000,000 feet.

—Washington Territory fir is in demand in San Francisco for car building, and a very large trade is expected to spring up in this lumber for the East, as it can be profitably used instead of hardwood for finished work.—Chicago Times.

Emma Larson's Trip.

"Hello! how far is it to the next town?"

These words greeted the ears of Mr. W. W. Davis and family as they sat at supper yesterday evening at their residence, Sixteenth and O'Neill Streets.

Mr. Davis looked out of the open door of his dining room upon Sixteenth Street. He saw there an unusual picture. A fine, large sorrel mare, with a yearling colt at her side, was standing by the sidewalk. Upon the mare's back sat a young woman sidewise in a man's saddle. She had on a man's broad brimmed hat, a close-fitting, red and white checked calico dress, rough lace shoes, and on one foot was a man's spurring. A yellow rubber coat was tied up behind the saddle. The young woman was embarrassed and red faced, but sat erect and looked as if she was able to take care of herself. She was a girl of about twenty or twenty-two years of age, having an intelligent face, with comely features. Her hair, which was brown, was cut somewhat short, and banged. Her complexion was of the fine kind that tan and gets even a man or woman, and her lips were chapped from the same cause. She had bright gray eyes and a straight handsome nose.

"What town do you want?"

"The next town, whatever it is."

"Where are you traveling to?"

"To California."

"Alone?"

"Yes, alone, and camping out. We've had fine good grass."

Mr. and Mrs. Davis, like good, hospitable people, invited the young lady to dismount and partake of some supper. She washed her hands and face, sat down to the table and talked about the trip she was making.

"My home is in Wisconsin," she said, "where I live with my father. I once spent some time visiting in Southern California, but it was some years ago. I have for several years thought of starting in the spring and making the journey on horseback, and this year I made up my mind that I would do it. I have been eight weeks on the road, from my home to the Mississippi River the distance is 180 miles; it is 350 across the State of Iowa, as I traveled, and then 500 and more to Cheyenne. So I have come over a thousand miles on horseback and alone.

"Have you a good horse?"

"Indeed I have. They wanted me to give up my horse in Kearney. Why, some folks there grew real angry with me because I persisted in going on. They wanted me to sell my mare and colt and take the money to pay my passage. But I didn't need money and I'll never part with that mare. She's a great animal. Has spared me a traffic, and weighs as much to a pound as when I started with her. Today I have ridden twenty-eight miles, but that is more than I generally make. I travel mornings and evenings, and stop a long while at noon. I started with a side saddle, but it made the mare's back sore, so I traded it off for a man's saddle. At night I picket the mare and live on the prairie. She won't answer but I know it. She got away twice, though. Once I followed her about a mile then turned back and met a band of thirty horses."

"What bedding has you in camping out?"

"Nothing but this yellow slicker and the saddle blanket. I haven't suffered from the cold, but it gets awful lonely sometimes at night when the coyotes are howling."

"Have you been annoyed by tramps?"

"Not a great deal. I go back from the railroad at least two miles and avoid them. Once a tramp came upon me in a lonely place when I had the saddle off the mare, and began talking. I directed his attention to some antelope a mile or so distance, and slipped on the saddle, hooked the four spurs, and got loped off. But I'm not afraid. I never think of danger, and I carry no fire arms."

"How do you manage about eating?"

"Where I have trouble. If I don't strike a station at meal time I get nothing to eat. Why, I've gone all day once without eating—two days sometimes. It was hard at first, but I got used to it. I don't want to travel with emigrants; there's no glory in that. I have set out to do this trip alone. I have been the bad day or two travel in at about the same rate with some emigrants to Washington Territory. Sometimes they're ahead, sometimes I am and I don't camp with them."

"Would you mind telling me your name?"

"Emma Larson."

"Miss Emma?"

"Yes, sir."—Cheyenne Leader

Do you value your horses and cattle? Attention to their health is as necessary as their regular food. If your horse is suffering from Epizootic, Bloplasm, Spavin, Spraintleg, Fever in feet, Mystina, Bruises or colic, or your cow has coked hog, sore teats, or bad blood, you will save money by buying Parmelee's Universal Liniment and using it freely for any of these troubles, and so bring your stock into a healthful and valuable condition. This the best liniment also for general family use. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by G. R. Weed & Co.

WILL M. GILBERT,

EAST JORDAN, MICHIGAN.

House, Sign, and Fresco Painting,

GRAINING AND KALSOMINING.

Plain and Decorative Paper Hanging.

The Oldest Established Business on South Arm

S. G. ISAMAN,

South Arm, Mich.

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

A Large and Well-Selected Stock Always on Hand.

Dry Goods, Ready-made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, Glassware, Hardware, Drugs, Stationery, Notions, &c.,

AT LOW PRICES.

PRODUCE OF ALL KINDS TAKEN IN EXCHANGE FOR GOODS.

Give Me a Call. S. G. ISAMAN.

EVERYTHING

IN THE LINE OF

Furniture and Undertakers' Goods

CAN BE FOUND AT THE OLD RELIABLE HOUSE OF

HENRY C. COOPER, CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See Me Before Buying.

Advance Lumber Company

Are now prepared to do

CUSTOM SAWING

Promptly and on short notice. We have on hand a large quantity of

Hard and Soft Wood Lumber and Hemlock Timber.

GIVE US A TRIAL. ADVANCE LUMBER CO. ADVANCE, MICH.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

AT COST!

All kinds of

Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Ever brought to Charlevoix.

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.

They have no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY.

And Satisfaction Guaranteed.

L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House CHARLEVOIX.

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., March 13, 1884.

Business Announcements.

A genuine article in Butter at B. Bek.

Any amount of Sap Buckets at bottom prices, at L. D. Bartholomew's.

New Cottons and Prints this week, select by the old and shut of worn goods, give us a call. Upright Emrey & Co.

We have just opened up a choice lot of Gem apples of very superior flavor, which we offer cheaply at 35 and 40 cents per peck, at Upright Emrey & Co.'s.

It is not wind pudding, but a goat skin hat, that we sell the 1883 vintage for 75 and 50 cents per can ever offered in Charlevoix. Upright Emrey & Co.

Provision Market.

Retail prices to consumers. As corrected every Wednesday evening by UPRIGHT, EMREY & CO., general dealers.

FLOUR, per bbl, $6.00, $7.00, and $8.00.
BUCKWHEAT FLOUR, per cwt, $4.50.
CORN MEAL, per cwt, bolted $2.00; unbolted, $1.90.
BRAN, per ton, $20.
OATS, per bu, 35c.
GROUND FEED, per cwt, $1.60.
APPLES, per bu, $1.50.
POTATOES, per bu, 50c.
ONIONS, per bu, $1.00.
BUTTER, per lb, 20@25c.
EGGS, per doz, 20@25c.
LARD, per lb, 14@15c.
HAMS, lbs., Sconsiders, 12½c.
SALT PORK, 12c. Beef, 8c.
CHEESE, 8c.
WATER WHITE OIL, 15c.
FARMERS' PRODUCE in good demand.

Fresh Meats from the Market.

MEAT, beef steak, 12@12½c; pork steak, 9@10c; roast, 8@7½c; sausage, 10c; hams, 14c; shoulders, 10c.
TALLOW, 4@5c.

Local News Brevities.

B. Glass' little child is quite sick.

Monday was a fine day for election.

A brass band is to be organized at Norwood.

The mercury reached 52 above on Tuesday.

There are 285 pupils enrolled in the Elk Rapids schools.

Ben Ingalls, of Boyne City, lost a valuable horse last week.

D. Blakely, of Eastport, gave the JOURNAL a call on Monday.

A. D. Cruickshank attended circuit court at Bellaire this week.

Dr. Hood, formerly of Boyne City, died recently at Marcelous.

J. Milo Eaton advertises a pair of oxen, for sale, cheap for cash.

M. J. Sullivan and W. A. Smith went to Detroit on Wednesday.

Will Fisher is suffering with hemorrhages of the lungs, at A. J. McLeod's.

Frank Shanhut will be found at Fox's store, while Al. Cooper is away.

A happy party joined the knot, on Arthy McNiel's last Thursday evening.

Upright, Emrey & Co., have over 25,000 cords of wood to begin spring business.

J. A. Becot has a notice of land and live stock for sale, in another column.

A. B. Noyes, of the Pioneer House, Ironton, gives the JOURNAL a call last Tuesday.

The Band of Hope will give a concert at the M. E. church next Wednesday evening.

Several members of the G. A. R. at Fastport visited Baxter post on Monday evening.

The democrats elected the entire ticket at the charter election in Sauganash last week.

Geo. Durange's big black dog went through the livery stable window yesterday afternoon.

The sudden change of weather on Wednesday made lively times for the boys on Round lake.

The rain of Tuesday morning was the first since November, except a part of a day in January.

Tuesday morning dawned with a severe sleet storm, but by nine o'clock was warm and spring like.

The JOURNAL acknowledges receipt of a set of Howell's annotated statutes from the secretary of state.

In a vote of 351 on "license" or "no license," Black River Falls, Wis., gave 63 majority for "no license."

Revival services are still being held at the M. E. church. Appointments are anticipated for some time to come. Service to night.

The T. T. F. F. club will give another of their select parties at the Bridge street house on Friday evening.

Dr. S. C. Graves has returned home from the northern peninsula, and is located in his old room in the See block.

Mr. A. B. Noyes sends the JOURNAL a card for the Pioneer House this week, which will be found in another column.

Rev. G. W. Howe returned to Boyne City last Thursday. His work in the M. E. church here gave satisfactory results.

A little daughter of W. F. Orrell, was bitten on the finger by a cat, one day last week, and for several days the hand was swollen and very painful.

Armstrong & Chisholm take possession of McLeod's meat market this week. They will probably be heard from through the JOURNAL later on.

W. F. Lance writes from Orlando, Fla., that they are living on fresh vegetables, such as radishes lettuce, green peas and cabbage. Thermometer 80° in the shade.

W. F. Orrell writes from Chicago that times are lively, and "spring trade booming." The ice is breaking up in the lake and river. Sleighing poor and walking sloppy.

The Adkins property, consisting of a stock of general merchandise, 600,000 feet of lumber, railroad engine, and 18 flat cars, will be sold at sheriff sale, at Bay Springs, on March 19th.

The residence of I. L. Stauffer, recently caught fire from a defective flue, and but for a timely discovery it might have been destroyed to there was a strong wind blowing at the time.

Our temperance report is omitted this week, but will be resumed next week and continued a few weeks longer. It is need for making comparisons, of the weather, by our eastern and southern readers.

Stormy weather prevented a large attendance of the historical society on Tuesday evening, and the usual program, we are informed, was not fully carried out. The next meeting will be with Mrs. O. S. Washburn.

On his last trip to Charlevoix, Jeff Weekel had a little experience which should be a warning to smokers. Driving in a strong wind, fire from his cigar fell onto a silk neck tie, and burned through that and two coats before he discovered it.

Next Sunday morning Rev. J. T. Iddings will give by request a sermon upon the "Grandeur of the orthodox faith." In the evening the discourse will be to the young people of Charlevoix. A cordial invitation is extended by the pastor and congregation to the public.

Will M. Gilbert, of East Jordan, recognizes the value of the JOURNAL as an advertising medium, and makes an announcement to our readers this week. Mr. Gilbert has a reputation for artistic work second to none in this vicinity, and from what we can learn, all who have employed him are willing to recommend his work to others.

I. A. DeLamarter, of the firm of E. T. Brown & Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., manufacturers' agents for portable and stationary engines, boilers, mill machinery, supplies, etc., gave the JOURNAL a call on Wednesday evening. He has sold considerable machinery in the county this winter, and to increase these sales he places a card in our advertising columns.

One of the JOURNAL force witnessed the drama, the "Octoroon" at East Jordan last Saturday evening. March 8th. It was the best play ever gotten up in that town, and the performance is seldom beaten by traveling troupes. A full house netted $50, which goes for the benefit of the band. They think of playing the same in Charlevoix, in the near future.

Capt. Crysler last Tuesday purchased at Grand Haven, the steam pleasure yacht Gracie Baker, for $7,000. We understand Mr. Crysler intends running his new boat next season as a passenger and mail boat between Beaver Island and points along the lake shore in this vicinity. The yacht is said by those who have seen her to be an excellent craft.—Petoskey Democrat.

The pioneer merchant of South Arm, Mr. S. G. Isaman, has something this week to interest the JOURNAL readers who live south and southeast of Charlevoix. Mr. Isaman has the oldest established business on the Arm, and his continued success is the best recommend for fair dealing and low prices. For further particulars call and see him at his store in South Arm.

Sufficient encouragement has been shown towards the location of telephone connections between various towns in this section, to be well assured of its being a success, and in operation early during the coming summer. This will prove a very desirable acquisition not only for the accommodation of our business men but for the convenience and use of the visitors to our community.—Petoskey Democrat.

The East Jordan Enterprise mentions a large cost by the foundry at that place, for Charlevoix parties. The first impression might be that our own foundry could not do the work, but such is not the case. There were other considerations in this transaction which make sufficient explanation. The Charlevoix foundry and machine shop can make anything that can be made in any foundry in northern Michigan.

The "Peak Family" will give an entertainment at the opera house on Friday evening, March 21st. It will be under the auspices of the ladies of the Congregational society, and the proceeds will be devoted to finishing the church. Admission, 25 cents; children 15 cents. After the entertainment, refreshments, consisting of cake, goffees, and ice cream, will be served in the same room. The cause is worthy, and the public should respond liberally.

Last Saturday afternoon, about 2 o'clock, the residence of Edward Skinner, near Eastport, was burned, involving a loss of about $1,000, with an insurance of $900 in the Home Mutual. At the time of the fire there were three sick children in the house who were removed to a neighbor's. The furniture was removed from the lower rooms, but the contents of the chamber were entirely destroyed. It is supposed to have originated from a defective chimney.

The Village Election.

At the hour of going to press last week (Wednesday evening) the prohibition caucus was in session, and did not conclude in time to give us a report without delaying the paper. The nominees of this caucus were: For president, A. R. Upright; for trustees, M. J. Steckman, L. E. Allen, and E. M. Clark; for clerk, R. W. Kane; for treasurer, F. W. Mayne; for assessor, O. Blair; for street commissioner, W. B. Taylor; for constable, G. Bonk.

On Saturday morning a call was issued for a Union caucus, to be held at Lewis' Hall Saturday evening. The nominees of this caucus were: For president, Amos Fox; for trustees, Chas. Ely, J. Milo Eaton, and W. C. Newman; for clerk, H. S. Harsha; for treasurer, Geo. W. Miller; for assessor, O. Blair; for street commissioner, J. Weyburn; for constable, Wm. Ferguson.

The democratic, greenback and republican parties did not make any nominations.

The work on Monday defined the issue to be prohibition against license. The following is the result.

PRESIDENT.	Vote.	Maj.
Fox	147	46
Upright	101
TRUSTEES.
Ely	149	*50
Eaton	102	*67
Stockman	151	104
Allen	95
Clark	87

* Over Stockman; † over Allen; ‡ over Clark.

CLERK.
Harsha	162	79
Kane	83
TREASURER.
Miller	146	46
Mayne	100
ASSESSOR.
Blair	241
STREET COMMISSIONER.
Weyburn	157	67
Taylor	90
CONSTABLE.
Ferguson	146	46
Bonk	100

There were seven imperfect and scattering votes.

E. T. BROWN & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS' AGENTS,

Portable and Stationary Engines,

Boilers, Mill and Wood-working Machinery.

Mill Supplies, Threshers, and Threshing Engines.

Bargains in Second-Hand Machinery.

WRITE FOR PRICE AND CATALOGUE.

WEST BRIDGE ST., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Delinquent Taxes.

Amount of taxes returned delinquent in the several townships of Charlevoix county for 1882:

Bear Lake	$437 06
Boyne Valley	881 57
Chandler	508 76
Charlevoix	127 10
Evangeline	1,063 27
Eveline	240 01
Hayes	545 02
Hudson	380 44
Marion	231 04
Melrose	785 04
Norwood	177 35
Resort	343 78
South Arm	344 59
Springvale	432 57
Wilson	897 80
	$7,395 46

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by UPRIGHT EMREY, real estate dealers.

James Ferguson and wife, to Sarah L. Wooster, e ½ w ½ of s ½, and s w ¼ of s ½ 33-35-7, $2,000.

William Smith to Jane Su...th, e of s w ¼ 4-32-6, $100.

Letitia F. A. Hood to Henry H. Eaton, lot 3 and s ½ of lot 4, 31-32-7, $1,000.

Same to Alfred Hood and wife, to Wm. A. Hood, s w ¼ of s ½, 31-32-7, $500.

Moses Cooper and wife to Ruth Trobridge, n w ¼ of n w ¼, 20-34-7, $200.

L. B. Malone to J. F. Lisbinowski, s w ¼ of s w ¼, 9-35-5, $425.

Stephenie Sieden to Daniel A. Shoden, n ½ of n w ¼, 20-33-7, $500.

Liberal Club.

The Liberal club will give another of their free entertainments at Bartholomew's opera house, on Monday evening, March 17th. The Rev. George W. Ball will deliver the lecture. Subject: "The effects of tobacco and whiskey." W. C. Newman will recite Shamus O'Brien. There will also be an interesting musical program, consisting of songs and duets, and the usual variety of instrumental solos, duets, etc., under the direction of Prof. Bice. It is intended to make the entertainment one of the best of the series. All are invited.

Charlevoix, March 11th, 1884.

ROBERT MILLER,
Chairman of Committee.

Burgess.

Lettie Webster visited her parents last Sunday.

Moses Cooper is thinking of going to Florida soon.

A child of Benjamin Walker died Tuesday morning, March 4th.

The church mentioned last week is to be built the coming season.

Bell Long, of Evangeline, formerly of Hayes, visited at Peter Kane's last week.

It is rumored that a gentleman by the name of Smith will erect a saw mill at J. A. Becot's on Pine Lake. He will also put in a planer.

For the next supervisor of Hayes, we would suggest the name of Flavius J. Smith, who has had experience, and would look out for the interests of his town.

Ironton.

W. A. Smith and wife were in town Thursday.

A. F. Draper and Frank Noyes were in town Sunday evening.

Mr. James Otis still lies in a critical condition. His recovery will be slow.

There will be preaching at the school house on Thursday evening.

There will be a school exhibition at Ironton on the 21st. A pleasant time is anticipated.

Harry Atkinson, of East Jordan, was in town Sunday. He predicts lively business up there this summer.

Isaac Debenham has returned from southern Michigan, and will engage in building. He already has several buildings engaged, to be finished this summer.

Will Seo, registered at the Pioneer House on Saturday. He is buying wood for T. D. Smith. He says there is more wood on the shore of Pine Lake than has been in one season for a long time.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year with Hall's Catarrh Cure, that the doctors had given up and said could not be cured. 75 cents a bottle. Sold by Dr. Crosier

Stock growers all agree that for general use in farrow business no powder is better calculated to give satisfactory results than those prepared by E. M. Parmelee, because they really contain the valuable remedies claimed, and do and fill as not quickly and effectively as coughs, colds, epizootic, foul blood, stoppage of water, and poor digestion, &c., in horses. For cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry, they are invaluable. Full pounds only 25 cents. Sold by G. R. Weed & Co.

Bring your Election Tickets to the JOURNAL OFFICE to be Printed.

TOWNSHIP CAUCUS.

A township caucus will be held at the Block School House in the TOWNSHIP OF MARION, on Saturday, the 29th day of March, 1884, at one o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating township officers.

FOR SALE.

Eighty acres of land, with or without improvements. About one acre was cleared last fall, and one good with barn, and one year old cow. Also about one-half a two year old cow. The above stock is in good condition. Inquire of J. A. Becot, on north shore of Pine Lake. 2tf

FOR SALE.

A FINE

Pair of Oxen

Yoke, Chain, and Sled, for Cash. Come Early.

J. MILO EATON.

PIONEER HOUSE,

A. B. NOYES, PROPRIETOR.

Ironton, Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public.

JOSEPH HYLAND,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Repairing and building of all kinds, and Repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds,

Imported and Domestic Perfumery,

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Bartholomew's new

Opera Block

THE STATUE OF CLAY.

"Make me a statue," said the king,
"Of marble white as stone;
It must be pure enough to stand
Before my throne at my right hand;
The niche is waiting! Go!"

The sculptor heard the king's command,
And went upon his way;
He had no marble; but he went,
With willing mind and high intent,
To mold his thoughts in clay.

Day after day he wrought the clay,
But never was satisfied;
He sought the help of every learned brain,
But could not make the noble plain—
It lay beyond his thought.

To-day the statue seemed to grow;
To-morrow it seemed still;
Because, forsooth, it went well aside;
Thus, year by year, the work went on; and, lo!
He viewed his marble's will.

At last his lifelong task was done;
It was a lovely day;
He called the people to the king,
And trembled like a guilty thing
Because it was but clay.

"Where is my statue?" asked the king.
"Here, Lord," the sculptor said.
"But I commanded marble!" "True:
I had no marble—but could I do
This work in clay instead?"

"They shall not unprecedented go,
Since thou hast done the best;
They statue shall ones glance skip;
It shall be as it should have been,
For I will do the rest."

He touched the statue, and it changed;
The clay falls off, and lo!
A marble shape before thine stands,
Oh, perfect work of heavenly hands,
An angel, pure as snow.

A NEMESIS.

"A bouquet, sir?"

Elmer Richards starts suddenly, and glances upwards only as the speaker, Surely there is nothing to fear in the little pink-robed figure before him, with sly-by drooping eyes, and white, dimpled hands that just now are engaged in wrapping a list of silver leaf around the stems of a bunch of flowers.

"Bouquet, sir?" she repeats. "Here is one I am sure you will like, myrtle and tuberoses. Shall I arrange it for you?"

He bends forward that she may pin the blossoms on his coat-lapel. He notices how small and white her hands are, and wishes she would raise her fringed lids.

"There: don't you like it?" she says. "The price is a shilling."

Elmer draws a sovereign from his well-filled wallet, and lays it on the counter.

"Keep the remainder for the cause," he says.

The young girl smiles, and raises her eyes to his.

Beautiful eyes they are, large and black, with a yellow fire smoldering in their depths like the gleam of a topaz. They thrill Elmer Richards heart with a strange emotion.

Can it be that he, a blase man of the world, who has been admired and sought by dozens of beautiful women, has fallen in love with a pretty flower-seller at a chance fancy, for it

He moves away, and recross an acquaintance moving around the brilliant apartment.

"Who is that young girl with the handsome black eyes—the flower-seller?"

George Ellis looks up at his companion with an amused smile.

"What, Richards, are you smitten?" he says. "Well, you are by no means the first one with whom those eyes have made sad havoc. Her name is Beatrice Irving."

Irving. Elmer gives an involuntary start. Irving! Ah, yes, that name is familiar to him! A sad, pale face rises before him, with wistful blue eyes and trembling lips.

It appeared to him once before this evening, when the first bugle Beatrice Irving's voice; it haunts him all the evening, and when the fair is over, and he returns to his bachelor apartments, he sees it still, and beside it glows the flower-sellers brilliant face.

He remembers the bright dance evening when other white lands than hers had decked him with blossoms, and other eyes had smiled upon his. Ah! those little hands will gather flowers no more; those pretty blue eyes sparkle never again; they are closed in the deep slumber that knows no waking.

Elmer Richards starts like a guilty thing as this thought comes to him; he knows why the sweet life ended so early: why the little grave was made so soon for her whose last words were of him—pretty Millie Irving.

"Why indulge in these morbid fancies?" he thinks. "It is a thing of the past now, and as such should be forgotten."

So he dismisses the sad, unpleasant memories, and, leaning back in his chair, lights a cigarette, and, watching the curling smoke-wreaths as they float upward, he sees in their midst a dim vision of the rose-tinted face of Beatrice Irving. The flower seller.

"What, Richards! are you going to snub your friends in this manner?"

"Jerry, old boy, is it you?" he exclaims. "You are honor I did not know you! Step up into my room and tell me the news.

"Nice place you've got here," says Jerry, as they enter the luxurious apartment.

"When did you return? Elmer asks.

"Only two days ago, is the reply. "Been down to see the folks; lots of company there—a whole household. Oh, by-the-by, Richard, Esther sent you an invitation to come down and enjoy yourself! Nothing else on hand, have you? No? Then of course you'll accept. It will be a good chance for you. Almost a dozen girls, Esther says, and every one either a beauty or an heiress."

"What, are you married?" Elmer inquires.

"No, but engaged, and that amounts to about the same thing," Jerry replies.

"Bessie Townsend—don't you remember her? Well, she's thoroughly, I assure you, I haven't told me whether you are coming or not."

"Yes, I will come."

"Soon as possible, mind," says Jerry, "Esther will be looking for you. Au revoir?"

He goes out, and a few moments later Elmer, looking out of the window, sees his tall form striding up the street with the same careless, swinging gait he remembers of old.

A few days later Elmer Richards enters the train en route for the Trows' country residence. That evening he makes a fashionable toilet, and descends to the lighted rooms.

Esther presents him to the other guests, and soon he is engaged in a lively conversation with Jerry's betrothed, Bessie Townsend. Then Esther comes and carries him off to the conservatory. As they enter a resonant figure rises, and in the dim light Elmer sees the yellow flash of jewels.

"Are you here?" cries Esther. Then, "Miss Irving, Mr. Richards."

The figure takes a step forward, and a ray of light, streaming through the half-open door, falls upon her face, the brilliant face and lustrous black orbs of Beatrice Irving.

She bows, and her face dimples in a smile of recognition; she has not forgotten that evening at the charity fair.

Elmer gives an amused smile; he is thinking of the little bouquet, the roses and myrtle, and wondering what she would say if she knew of its fate.

Then Esther slips away, and they are left alone together.

Beatrice is a charming conversationalist, and Elmer thinks it is infinitely more agreeable to pass the time with her in the dimly lit conservatory than to chatter with his one and that in the illuminated room beyond.

At last they rise and join the company. As they emerge into the light, Elmer glances at his companion; she looks wonderfully fascinating tonight.

Early one morning, a few days later, Elmer, while strolling through the garden, sees Beatrice standing by a rose-bush, endeavoring to disentangle her scarf from the thorns upon which it is caught.

"I am a prisoner, you see," she says, with a smile, "and, like most prisoners, much against my will."

"Shall I release you?" asks Elmer; and, coming forward, he deftly disengages the delicate thing.

"Thanks. You should be rewarded for your humanity," Beatrice says, and plucks a white rosebud with a spray of dark green leaves for a background.

As she lends forward to fasten it in his button-hole, their eyes meet, and something in his causes the girl to blush slightly; and, making a hasty movement, a stray thorn pierces her finger. A tiny red drop falls on one of the petals, and marks its whiteness.

"There!" Beatrice exclaims, in a vexed tone. "I have spoilt your flower. Let me get you another."

"Never mind," Elmer replies, "does it pain you, and, besides, you may scratch your hand again."

"No; I hope I should not be so foolish another time," says Beatrice.

They stroll down the shady path together, and enjoy a pleasant chat, until the bell calls them in to breakfast.

The summer days pass quickly by, and none of Esther's guests take their departure. Beatrice Irving and Elmer Richards are among the last that linger; it has been a blissful summer for him—one he will never forget.

One morning Beatrice announces her intention of returning to her home on the morrow, and that day Elmer determined to know his fate. That evening Beatrice comes down stairs, arrayed in a delicate pink dress, with no jewels, and for ornaments she wears her beauty, the topaz. Her oval cheeks are glowing with a warm color, and her eyes sparkle like stars. As Elmer watches her, he thinks he has never seen her so beautiful, so fascinating.

During the evening he requests her to walk with him in the garden, and she complies; perhaps she has an intuition of what is coming. A few commplace remarks passed between them; then Elmer Richards begins his passionate declaration of love, and Beatrice listens with clasped hands and downcast eyes. As he speaks, the whole scene passes from him, and he sees naught but the woman at his side. Ardently he pleads, for he loves Beatrice with all the depth and fervor of his strong, manly nature, and if he loses her, no loss at all.

As he ceases speaking, he ventures to glance into her half-averted face. It wears a fierce, triumphant expression, a strange look that one would not expect a girl to wear when listening to a lover's pleadings.

She turns and faces him, and in the moonlight he can see the yellow lights in her eyes flame his those irritating from her jewels.

"Mr. Richards," she says, calmly, "I can never be your wife!"

He draws back, and his face grows white. He is not prepared for this. He had expected a doubtful, wavering answer, a few months' probation, perhaps, but this cold, flat refusal, never!

"Then why have you led me on all these weeks?" he asks, hoarsely. "Are you heartless, that you can so trample on a man's heart? Are you a coquette, a jilt? Oh, Beatrice, I cannot believe it. Tell me you love me.

"No, I do not," she replies, firmly. "Listen, Mr. Richards. Five years ago there lived a young girl, a bright, happy girl whom all that knew her loved. One day a stranger came to the village, and—well, Elmer Richards, you know the story; it is needless for me to repeat it; you know of whom I am speaking—little Millie Irving. Where is she now? Who ruined her life, and broke her heart? You, Elmer Richards! Ah, you start and turn pale, and well you may, for you, and men are guilty! At her death-bed I made a vow that if you ever crossed my path I would have my revenge. She was my sister."

"Your sister?" Elmer echoes.

"Yes. Did she never speak of me to you? Beatrice says.

"Yes, yes," Elmer replies; "but she called you——"

"Tress," interrupts the girl. "Yes, that was her pet name for me."

There is a long silence. Then Elmer raises his white, haggard face.

"Beatrice," he says, in a moment no learn to you sister. I did not dream of such a sad ending. I was young then, young and thoughtless. Can you forgive me? Will you——"

But she cut him off with a mock-ing laugh, and, turning, flits down the garden path. He sees her amber robe flattering in the moonlight, and her jewels flash forth tiny flames of fire. Beatrice is gone, and he is alone with his sorrow and despair.

Her life do not meet again, and the next day Beatrice bids her hostess farewell, and returns to the city.

One year later, Elmer Richards goes to a second charity fair. He has been persuaded, much against his will, however, to attend, and he has another arm in arm with a friend, paying little attention to the gay scenes around him; they fall to interest and amuse him as they did a year ago.

Only one year has passed since the night in the moonlit garden, yet there are deep lines on his handsome face, and his dark brown hair is streaked with gray. He has not outlived his sorrow; it has followed him and haunted him down, making him an old man long before his time.

Before a stand of flowers he pauses, and memory carries him back to the time when two white hands fashioned for him a fragrant bouquet, and two bright eyes looked up into his. He hears the rustling of garments, and looking up, sees Beatrice—a ring stand by her side—standing in the same favorite color, amber, and wears the old gleaming jewels.

Their eyes meet, and the yellow light in her irises kindles. She leans over the counter, and her jewels dash in the gaslight.

"A bouquet, sir?" she asks, with a mocking smile.

Cards—An Analysis of Whist.

George W. Pettes gave an interesting address at Boston on "The History of Cards and an Analysis of Whist." The lecturer said that the first known of cards was in Hindoostan, some twelve centuries ago, when they were used for purposes of divination, fancy and emblems of various significance; and that some of these are yet in use in Persia, although very rare. In the reign of Charles VII. cards were introduced into Europe, although the Turks and Chinese claim to have invented them in different ages; and the reign of Edward VI. of England changes for cards are found in the royal accounts, while in 1392, in the account of Queen Joanna, 60 packs of paper were used for making playing cards. The use of cards was made to afford information and pleasure to the heathen, and in the Christian Europe that debased their use by the introduction of gambling and sharping. Whist probably took its name from a game called whisk or swabbers, although the two were very dissimilar, the one being noisy and the other quiet and a thinking game. In Edmond, Lord Edmondsor and friends introduced the ancient game of whist, and at the time present game of whist, and this was published in Edmond Hoyle's treatise in 1742, but he was not the author of the game, which was a patron saint of gamesters. The game is about what was connected by John Lorraine Bakinlin, of England, in 1761, and rules were then made for its play, and the lecturer endeavored it as being far inferior to the ball, long game, as the game of two points, or winning honors, which is sometimes played, and which he called a mongrel game. Mr. Pettes claimed that whist, properly played, was one of the most scientific of games, which, while it required close attention, was a rest from active business for the player, and was peculiarly a game which showed the disposition of every man who played it.

Noisy Music.

Shakspeare asserted that no man should be trusted who "is not moved with concord of sweet sounds." His dictum would include Turks and Chinese objects of suspicion, for music is not the clashing rather than the harmony of sounds. A Turkish ambassador at the Court of St. James once complained of a concert on Sunday which piece he preferred, he answered, "The first one." He meant the tinkling of the instruments. According to an anecdote told by Mr. S. C. Hall, Scotch Highlanders slaughtered a Turkish sentinel of the Turk.

"I once heard," said Mr. Hall, "a Scotch Highlandman declare that the greatest enjoyment he ever had in his life was one night, on his return home from a storm in a bothie twenty feet square, there were eight pipers about up with him, and, as each insisted on playing his own pibroch, all of them played together.

"'Ough!' ejaculated the Highlander, 'tal was music!'"

Worth $25,000,000.

Speaking of the telephone patent, the Chicago Tribune says: "The value of this patent is enormous, and we very much doubt if it could be purchased for $25,000,000. It is probably by far the most valuable single patent which has ever been issued."

Not Up on Science.

He sat by the stove in a Michigan Avenue grocery store for full twenty minutes before speaking. He spread out his legs to encroach as much of the fire as possible, drew his sleeve across his nose at regular intervals, and there was a strong smell of burning hoof leather as he finally looked up at the grocer and asked:

"Can you tell me why combustion causes a draught?"

"No, sir!" was the prompt reply.

"It's positively wonderful how ignorant the masses are on scientific subjects," continued the man as he rolled himself to an upple. "Can you tell me why this bright fire in your stove is not consumed by the heat?"

"I guess it's because you don't put all the heat," was the sneering reply.

"You are a liar, sir, and you say that to excite your prejudices! Now, then, what pressure does water exert on the bottom body at a depth of sixty feet? Can you tell a pressure of one hundred if you call me a liar again?" exclaimed the grocer. "What do you want, sir?"

"I want to ask you if you understand the principle by which birds fly?"

"I am getout of this! I have no time to fool away with such nonsense!"

"Nonsense! I guess the old chap; why, I don't believe you know the meaning of oxygen you consume at each respiration."

The grocer laid hold of the man to throw him to the door, but he caught a Tartar and was flopped on his back.

"I wanted to force of about one-eight horse-power to accomplish that," said the old man as he knelt on the prostrate body. "A child of twenty pounds from my first would flatten your nose, while two pounds additional would crack your skull."

"Get off! as sure as I'll slay you."

"I once knew a man who was a equal to the grasp of a hand lifting fourteen pounds of coal and I lump your head up the floor with a force equal to nine pounds."

"Let go my hair!" yelled the grocer as he kicked and struggled.

"You are now exhibiting a force equal to eight pounds to the square inch," said the old man as he lumped him again. "Not it is useless. I did my own exercise a force equal to the clutch of forty-eight grasshoppers to shut off your wind, and I will then administer a kick equal to the force necessary to upset a cord of fire-foot wood."

When the grocer got up the man was across the street.

"Police! police" shouted the victim. "You exhausted six gallons of oxygen in the first yell and five in the second," called the scientist, "but it was simply wasted. I will now make off at one-quarter the speed exercised by an antelope in outrunning a lion. Good-by, world's dispute, good-by."—Detroit Free Press.

Schoolboys' Cards.

That little world in which school boys live has its own code of honor. A man is a gentleman by school code, and it ignores the distinction between right and wrong. Yet it is a despotic code, and few schoolboys dare violate it, for the penalty is banishment from the social life of the school.

Yet a few in an Indiana school did have the moral courage to break one of its chief laws, being impelled to the violation by the temptation to be popular at the school. The teacher of the school, who tells the story, says:

As I was going into my school-house one morning, I noticed two of my boys engaged in a loud dispute over some thing. One of them held a book in his hand, and the other was trying to get it away from him.

Just as they reached the door, the one with the book succeeded in getting it, and to my surprise, he rushed into the school-room, around the desk, and, sat down the book into the fire.

The boy was completely at what seemed like an act of wanton destruction, because the fire was one of my most trusted and honored pupils. Such a thing could not pass unnoticed. So as soon as the school had been called to order, I called him to my desk and asked:

"Was that your book, John?"

"No, sir."

"Whose was it?"

"Hard's."

"Why did you take it away from him?"

"Because he had no business to have it."

"How? that? You said it was his."

"Yes, sir. But" here he hesitated a little, "but it was an indecent book, sir, and I felt as if I had a right to destroy such a book wherever I found it."

"You did right!" I exclaimed, as I shook hands with him heartily, and dismissed him to his seat.

A false idea of what is commonly called "honor" among boys has been prevented most boys from giving evidence against a schoolmate in cases like this. But I am thankful to say that this one brave example has already done much good in my own school, and cleared the ideas of some of my pupils on the vexed question of how far one boy may go in "telling on another."

DIFFERENCES in faith are inevitable. Men cannot believe alike; and as they can look alike or act alike. Their faith is very with their temperament, with their education, with their habits of thought, with the influences around them. Some will be able to believe what others cannot possibly believe. Some will readily what others cannot be persuaded to accept.—C. H. Brigham.

A not other knowledge is hurtful to one who has not the science of honesty and good-nature.—Montaigne.

HUMOR.

TAFFY is one of the sweetest things of love.

DISTRESSING accident—losing your scalp.

COULD conjugal affection be more strictly displayed than it is in the sentiment "And so, doctor, you think my wife will get well?" "I am sure of it. If you can persuade her to take the dose." "Doctor, take it she shall, if I have to break every bone in her body."

"Mamma, I wish I could be married like Esther." "Hush, child, you don't know what you are talking about." "Why, mamma, I know I'd like to be married like Esther, for then I should have a husband."

"Pa, what is a bachelor?" "A bachelor, my son, is a man who is a good deal like a mule—he is neither fish, flesh, nor fowl, nor good red herring."

"Can you tell me why cabbages cause a draught?"

"No, sir!" was the prompt reply.

"It's positively wonderful how ignorant the masses are on scientific subjects," continued the man as he rolled himself to an apple. "Can you tell me why this bright fire in your stove is not consumed by the heat?"

"I guess it's because you don't put all the heat," was the sneering reply.

"You are a liar, sir, and you say that to excite your prejudices! Now, then, what pressure does water exert on the bottom body at a depth of sixty feet? Can you tell a pressure of one hundred if you call me a liar again?" exclaimed the grocer. "What do you want, sir?"

"I want to ask you if you understand the principle by which birds fly?"

"I am getout of this! I have no time to fool away with such nonsense!"

"Nonsense! I guess the old chap; why, I don't believe you know the meaning of oxygen you consume at each respiration."

The grocer laid hold of the man to throw him to the door, but he caught a Tartar and was flopped on his back.

"I exerted a force of about one-eight horse-power to accomplish that," said the old man as he knelt on the prostrate body. "A child of twenty pounds from my first would flatten your nose, while two pounds additional would crack your skull."

"Get off! as sure as I'll slay you."

"I once knew a man who was a equal to the grasp of a hand lifting fourteen pounds of coal and I lump your head up the floor with a force equal to nine pounds."

"Let go my hair!" yelled the grocer as he kicked and struggled.

"You are now exhibiting a force equal to eight pounds to the square inch," said the old man as he lumped him again. "Not it is useless. I did my own exercise a force equal to the clutch of forty-eight grasshoppers to shut off your wind, and I will then administer a kick equal to the force necessary to upset a cord of fire-foot wood."

When the grocer got up the man was across the street.

"Police! police" shouted the victim. "You exhausted six gallons of oxygen in the first yell and five in the second," called the scientist, "but it was simply wasted. I will now make off at one-quarter the speed exercised by an antelope in outrunning a lion. Good-by, world's dispute, good-by."—Detroit Free Press.

Farmers' Folly.

Some farmers seldom, even against the behest of their wives, venture to offer for sale their entire butter with country produce, but reserve a portion for home use, and subsequently proceed made by taking an inferior article, and paying the difference to the grocer. Furthermore, the farmer's wife, who is the chief butter-maker, is not the only one who is guilty of this folly. Many farmers, who have a reputation for good butter, are in the habit of selling their best butter, and keeping a poorer article for home use. How long the farmers will continue to be thus deceived, and how long they will continue to deceive themselves, we do not know, but we feel convinced that the presence of a good article of butter on the table would be a powerful incentive to good cooking, and would, by the gain thus secured, more than compensate for the extra cost of the butter. At present the young folk can and do detect the difference between the remedy that brounded me to the other; and the consequence is, that many of them leave the farm and the farmer's table for Second-Hand Building Stuff.

"What are you going to do with that stuff?" was asked of a man who was placing on a truck the remnants of a building that had been torn down in Sixth avenue.

"Take it to the yard," he replied.

"And then what?"

"Sell it."

The yard referred to is the headquarters of a dealer in second-hand building material.

"This business is fifty years old," the superintendent said. "We occupy nearly forty city lots. They are covered with second-hand building material. We can supply brick for the interior walls, or brown stone for front walls, or granite columns for ornamental high stoops or porticoes. It is all ready for use, and it is of known quality. We have thousands of feet of timber and lumber of various kinds. Every kind of lumber used in building a house can be found here, joists, flooring, sinking, rafters and roof board. The roof itself can be had, too. Tin deteriorates some, but slates do not so much. We can supply tin roof that is as good as it was the day it was laid. We have several cords of slates. Our lumber is better than new. It is thoroughly seasoned. We supply the lumber for about all the swell mansions. Every piece of timber in Vanderbilt's house came from this yard. When men put thousands of dollars into fireplaces they want no shrinkage in the timbers of their houses."

"You do not confine your attention to dwellings, do you?"

"Your question reminds me of a man from a neighboring village who came here. He said he guessed he'd get an order that would puzzle us to fill. He wanted a second-hand pulpit. He was astonished when I showed him a complete outfit. We had stained glass windows, crosses, altars, candlesticks, rails, mourning benches, a pulpitthy land, and a baptistery. I showed him a full assortment of pews for the body of the church. Then I offered him a second-hand steeple with bell, complete and all set up. He bought a pulpit and paid for it in silence. He was so astonished he couldn't talk."

"What else can you fit out?"

"Anything. Here's a good door for a larger barn room, and back of it an elegant arrangement of shelves to hold the cut-glass bottles. There are mirrors between to reflect the back hair of the bartender. If you want one we can supply you with a first-class stall fit for Maud S. There would be an iron manger in one corner, a solid mahogany door at the other, and a rosewood lazy rack between, if you wanted it."

"You don't mean to say you've bought in second-hand stalls of that kind, do you?"

"Well, not quite that. We have everything but the hay rack, though, and have got the stuff for that. To return to the interior work of dwellings, we have everything necessary to fit out either a mansion in Fifth avenue or a shanty for a squatter sovereign. We just sold a pair of Italian marble mantels that probably cost $500 each when new. They are as good now as then. You can almost see through them they are so clear, and the carving is exquisite. We have mantels in various kinds of colored marble, and two in Mexican onyx that are beautiful. We get hold of hand-carved mantels and newel posts, stair rails, doors, and frames that would delight the heart of one able to appreciate the beauty of such work. These is a gas chandelier. The figures are extremely delicate. It is carved from solid walnut. In common articles it would tire you merely to hear them enumerated. You can not think of any article, door knobs, grilets, gas pipes, ranges, book cases, mirrors, anything that is known under the head of modern improvements or as a part of the house itself that we cannot supply. We'll buy any kind of a building. Booth's Theatre is now making its very best placement. The old bank building that stood at 40 and 42 Wall street is here. A part of the partition that once ornamented a Morrisania bank will go into Harry Miner's new theatre. It will make the handsomest box office you ever saw. He gets Booth's fancy iron-embossed railing also. We have a windlass here that was used in a downtown bank to hoist the gold up out of the vaults in the basement. In our office is a stool that was used in a succession of business houses for more than a hundred years. The clock, a round faced affair, two feet in diameter, is as old. It is more serviceable. An enormous eagle looks down on the bookkeeper from between masks out of an old theatre. He sits at a desk that was made in the time of Queen Elizabeth."

"How do you get it all?"

"We have three buyers out all the time. Usually, the contractor who puts up a new house gets the old one in the bargain. We buy and remove it for him if he wishes, or we buy any part of it. We sell mostly to builders and large real estate owners. Everything is sold on its merits."

"And prices?"

"About one-third that of new on the average. Some of the fine pieces which we sell to builders are turned in to the owners at ten times our prices. You can not say that it is a cheat either, because as such brie-a-brac goes the price is reasonable."

"How much of a business is it?"

"Ours is not the only yard. We sold $25,000 worth of firewood from the waste last year, and the total sales amounted to a little more than $250,000. We used to give away the kindling ten years ago. Now it keeps a good many teams going, especially in the winter. We have 317 men on our pay roll. Their pay is high. It takes a great skill to take the work out of a house as to put it in. — N. Y. Sun.

Any amount of Sap Buckets at lowest prices, at L. D. Bartlemore's.

The Mystery of Matches.

Matches are undoubtedly useful. They are an evidence and accompaniment of civilization. The savage knows nothing of matches. He has to depend upon the tedious process of rubbing a stick against a dry piece of board when he wants to kindle a fire or to light the gas, and very inconvenient he must find it when he hears a burglar in the night and wants to light a candle and go down stairs to search for him. And yet it is by no means certain that we are any better and happier for the invention of matches.

Think for a moment of the danger that always lurks in matches; how children set themselves and valuable things on fire with matches, and how rats try experiments with matches which they have stolen and dragged into their holes. Such dangers were unheard of in the days of the flint and steel and tinder box. No child could start an undesirable fire with flint and steel, for in order to use these implements successfully the intellect of a grown man, together with long experience and great command of temper, was necessary. As for the rats, they scorned flint and steel as articles maliciously designed for the purpose of injuring the teeth. In those happy days if was possible for a school-teacher to enforce discipline among small boys without the risk of setting them on fire by maliciously striking the matches which nowadays are found in every small boy's pocket. As to the influence of matches in promoting the habit of smoking there can be only one opinion. Not one-half of the amount of tobacco which is now daily consumed would be consumed were it not for the fact that the smoker always has matches in his pockets. There would be comparatively little smoking were it necessary for the smoker to sit down in some quiet place and spend half an hour to a struggle with flint and steel every time he might wish to light a cigar.

It is one of the objectionable features of matches that they are enveloped in mystery. Few people have considered this subject seriously, for had they really given their minds to it, the insoluble nature of the mystery of matches would have lead them to a wholesome hatred of the baffling little splinters of sulphur-tipped wood. Yet there is more than one mystery in connection with matches, and there is no prospect that the mysterious element in matches will ever be eliminated.

There are in the United States say twenty millions of people every one of whom uses, on an average, twenty matches daily. This will seem by no means a large estimate when we remember that the woman who lights fires, lamps, candles or gas always uses a match, and that a man who does not use to burn, and then the habitual smoker rarely uses less than forty matches per day. A match usually does its work and is extinguished by the time half of it is consumed, and of course the unconsumed half is thrown away. It is estimated that these half-consumed matches would, if evenly spread out over the surface of the earth, cover the United States to the depth of one inch. Obviously they do nothing of the sort, and the question therefore arises, what becomes of them? The mystery of the disappearance of pins is as nothing to this. Pins are moreover lost; strings and can easily work their way beneath the surface of the earth, or in many other ways successfully conceal themselves; but matches are large, blunt and clumsy; they can not readily escape notice, and they are so light that they do not easily sink out of sight in the grassor elsewhere. There is no rational hypothesis which will explain the utter disappearance of millions of half-burned matches annually, and we can only assume that there is something in the nature of the match which enables it to vanish at will.

This hypothesis is sustained by the mysterious and utterly inexplicable way in which matches disappear from the match-safes in which they are placed. No matter how carefully the housewife may go from room to room apportioning to each its due supply of matches, and placing them where no rat or other irresponsible animal can reach them, the matches will not remain where they are placed. A few days later the man of the house, busy in his room upstairs, wants a match with which to light his evening cigar. He looks in the match-safe in his room, and finds it empty. He goes from one room into another, and in each an empty match-safe mocks him. He descends to the first floor, and still his search for matches is fruitless, and it is not until he penetrates to the kitchen that he is able to find a match-safe containing, at the most, three matches. If he meets his wife during or soon after his search for matches, he naturally informs her that there is not a match in the house, and begs her to see that this state of things does not occur again. Of course she sends for more matches, and fills every match-safe to overflowing, but three days later they are as empty as before.

Now it has been established hundreds of times by unimpeachable testimony that no human hand is concerned in the disappearance of matches from match-safes. The man of the house is always prepared to make affidavit that he has scarcely touched them, and has used at the utmost any three matches out of the hundreds which his wife has distributed through the house, the children maintain that they have never touched a match, and the wife is perfectly well convinced that she has used even fewer matches than her husband has used. The conclusion that matches have secret and apparently supernatural ways of disappearing is irresistible. Clearly there is something uncanny in the mystery of matches, and when we have once grasped the fact of its existence, it cannot fail to influence our feeling and conduct toward them.—Harper's.

WOOD WANTED.

I will pay Cords good beech black wood wanted on my premises, at the JOURNAL office. Bring it while the roads are good.

PIMPLES.

I will mail, free, the recipe for a simple vegetable remedy that removes Pimples, Blotches, Tubercles and more unsightly blemishes, while it clears and beautifies also leaves no trace of its use, but a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, inclosing a 3c. stamp, THOS. CLAYTON & CO., 12 Barclay St., N. Y.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from NERVOUS DEBILITY, PREMATURE DECAY, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will for the sake of suffering humanity, send free to any address, the receipt by which he was cured. Address, in simple English, or German, or French, with stamp for postage, JOHN B. OGDEN, 12 Cedar St., New York.

FARM FOR SALE.

Consisting of 114 acres, six miles from Charlevoix, on main road. Soil, clay loam; 8 room frame house, and 1 no-frame bank barns. About 40 acres cleared, balance timber and stump land. About one-half cleared from beginning to stump. One bank barn nearly new, cost $1,000. Price, three thousand seven hundred dollars, with not less than two thousand down; balance to suit purchaser. For further particulars, apply to DAVID H. CRANTS Charlevoix, Mich.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dreadful disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, after many years of severe suffering, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means by which he was cured. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription he used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a safe cure for Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c. Parties wishing the prescription will please address, REV. EDWARD WILSON, Brooklyn, E. D., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

FOR SALE.

SECOND HAND

Stationary Engine and Boiler

Size of cylinder, 10x20 in.; Boiler 12 feet long, 42 in. diameter, 40 flues. The engine has been thoroughly overhauled, and is practically as good as new. Price and terms cash. Address

S. M. NOLF,

Cor. of Washburn & Ackert, at the Mill, Grand Rapids.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix.—Wilbur J. Addis, plaintiff, vs. Lucius Williams, defendant.—Notice is hereby given that on the 26th day of January, 1884, a writ of attachment was duly issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in the above entitled cause, in favor of said plaintiff, against the property of said defendant, for the sum of one hundred dollars ($100) of the value of which said writ was returnable on the fifth day of February, A. D. 1884. CHICKSHANKS & GRIER, Attorneys for plaintiff.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix.—Wilbur J. Addis, plaintiff, vs. Lucius Williams, defendant.—Notice is hereby given that on the 26th day of January, A. D. 1884, a writ of attachment was duly issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in the above entitled cause, in favor of said plaintiff, against the property of said defendant, for the sum of one hundred dollars ($100) of the value of which said writ was returnable on the fifth day of February, A. D. 1884. CHICKSHANKS & GRIER, Attorneys for plaintiff.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix.—Archibald Buttars, Adelbert E. Tyrrell, and Degrove Haight, plaintiffs, vs. John Monroe, James Mathews, defendants.—Notice is hereby given that on the 9th day of December, A. D. 1883, a writ of attachment was issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, at the suit of Lewis Hanchett, in favor of said plaintiffs, against the property of said defendants, for the sum of $1,000, of the value of which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1884. CHICKSHANKS & GRIER, Attorneys for plaintiffs.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix.—Archibald Buttars, Adelbert E. Tyrrell, and Degrove Haight, plaintiffs, vs. John Monroe, James Mathews, defendants.—Notice is hereby given that on the 9th day of December, A. D. 1883, a writ of attachment was issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, at the suit of Lewis Hanchett, in favor of said plaintiffs, against the property of said defendants, for the sum of $1,000, of the value of which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1884. CHICKSHANKS & GRIER, Attorneys for plaintiffs.

NOTICE OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, } ss.
County of Charlevoix, }

In the matter of the estate of

FRANK CHAUFURKA, Minor.

Notice is hereby given, that in pursuance of an order granted by the undersigned, guardian of the estate of said Frank Chaufurka, to the undersigned, Judge of Probate, for the county of Charlevoix, on the 3d day of March, A. D. 1884, there will be sold at public vendue, to the highest bidder, at the front door of said Probate hall, in the county of Charlevoix, on the premises hereinafter, on the 5th day of April, A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day (subject to all incumbrances by mortgage or otherwise existing at the time of sale) the following described real estate, to wit: The south east quarter of the north west quarter of section twenty four (24) in township thirty five north of range ten west, containing forty (40) acres, more or less.

CHARLES CHALOUPKA, Guardian.

STATE OF MICHIGAN.—Thirteenth judicial circuit, in chancery. Joseph C. Ayers, complainant, vs. Martin J. Staley, Martha J. Ayers, Mary H. Wood, defendants. Suit pending in the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, at Charlevoix, on the 10th day of February, A. D. 1884. In this cause it appearing from affidavit of Wm. H. Wood, one of the solicitors for complainant, that the defendant, Martha J. Ayers, is not a resident of this state, but resides at Glenwood in the state of New York, on motion of Chickshank & Grier, complainant's solicitors, it is ordered that the said defendant, Martha J. Ayers, cause her appearance to be entered herein within four months from the date of this order, and in default thereof be informed that the bill of complaint in the complainant's bill of complaint to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on said complainant's solicitors, within twenty days after service on her of a copy of said bill, and that in case of her non-appearance and default said bill will be taken as confessed by the said Martha J. Ayers. And it is further ordered that within twenty days the said complainant causes a notice of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Journal, a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county, and that the said publication be continued therein once in each week, for six weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non-resident defendant, at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for her appearance. CHAS. A. SUMNER, Circuit court commissioner.

CHICKSHANK & GRIER, Complainant's solicitors.

A true copy, attest, OSCAR EURIGHT, Deputy Register.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 75 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Democrat.—By mail, $8.00 per year in advance, postage paid.

Weekly Democrat.—$1.50 per year; 75 cents for six months; 40 cents for three months, invariably in advance. Address,

THE DEMOCRAT,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

IMMENSE CUT IN PRICES

—OF—

All-Wool Goods,

Overcoats and Suitings,

Boots and Shoes.

I have a large stock of Clothing and Boots and Shoes which I will close out at actual cost, as I wish to make room for spring goods. All my goods I will warrant

First-Class,

And will be pleased to show them to all parties whether they intend to purchase or not. In manner, I have marked these goods down at actual cost, and they are

Big Bargains.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Feb. 12, 1884.

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY GONE YEARS.

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 36. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1884. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL is published every Thursday morning, BY CHAS. J. STYLANG. Office over T. D. Smith's grocery, CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

CHICKSHANK & GRIER, Attorneys at Law, Office in Hayes Block, Charlevoix, Mich. A. J. CHICKSHANK. C. J. GRIER.

FOOS & ALBRICH, Attorneys at Law, East Jordan, Mich.

FRED W. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor, Real Estate business promptly attended to. MONEY TO LOAN.

H. J. JERSEY, Attorney and Counselor at Law, Office in United States Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

J. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

DAVID EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

WESTON, KEAT & MARTIN, Attorneys at Law. Office opposite C. S. Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

GEORGE F. WEBNER, Attorney and solicitor, U. S. Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX.—Capital $50,000. Buy and sell exchange. Collections promptly made. Interest allowed on time deposits. Loans on approved security only. Money to loan on first mortgages. EAST NOLAN & DUPEE'S.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10:30 A. M. and 7 P. M. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7:30 P. M. G. F. VANANDEL, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10:30 A. M. and 7 P. M. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting Thursday evening at 7 P. M. J. T. DODSON, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX ROUGH AND READY FIRE COMPANY meet the first and third Thursday evenings of each month, at the hook and ladder house. R. F. BISSEE, Secretary.

HOMEOPATHIC PHARMACY.

H. SUTFIELD, Homeopathic Medicines, Books, Domestic Cases, etc. Charlevoix, Mich.

LIVERY STABLE.

J. MILO EATON, Proprietor. Gens. Durango, Manager. Only First-class Horses and Carriages kept. Good Saddle Horses a Specialty.

PHYSICIANS.

J. A. CARLSTEDT, M. D., Office at the Ingleside.

L. LEWIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office in the Lewis Block, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. M. PRESTON, M. D., Surgeon and Homeopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HORACE S. HARMON, Notary Public, Real Estate, Loan, and Insurance Agt., Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

G. A. R.—Baxter Post No. 152, meets second Monday in each month, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. G. T.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 827, meets every Friday evening, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Round Lake Lodge No. 366, meets every Wednesday evening, in their hall.

I. O. L.—True Hiram No. 137, meet Saturday on or before full moon in Odd Fellows' hall.

MASONIC—Charlevoix Lodge No. 99, meet Tuesday on or before full moon. Hall over postoffice.

A. B. BUTTARS, President. A. B. EURIGHT, Vice President.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

A general banking business transacted. Money to loan on approved paper at reasonable rates. Deposits received. Collections given careful attention and remittances made promptly.

G. S. THOMAS, Cashier.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor,

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations excellent. The tables supplied with the best the market affords. Only sample room in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, - Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public. Headquarters for the Pelotkey and Elk River stages.

Pioneer House,

A. B. NOYES, Proprietor.

Ironton, Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

Newly thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

1872 — 1884

DR. G. W. CROUTER,

THE DRUGGIST.

Our Motto: P. P.
PURITY, POLITENESS.

WE MAKE IT A POINT TO SELL ONLY

Full Strength & Fresh Goods

OUR PRICES WILL ALWAYS BE AS LOW AS

STRICTLY PURE DRUGS

CAN BE SOLD.

Our Stock is the Largest in the County.

E. T. BROWN & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS' AGENTS,

Portable and Stationary Engines,

Boilers, Mill and Wood-working Machinery,

Mill Supplies, Threshers, and Threshing Engines.

Bargains in Second-Hand Machinery.

WRITE FOR PRICE AND CATALOGUE.

WEST BRIDGE ST., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

WILL M. GILBERT,

EAST JORDAN, MICHIGAN.

House, Sign, and Fresco Painting,

GRAINING AND KALSOMINING,

Plain and Decorative Paper Hanging.

Advance Lumber Company

Are now prepared to do

CUSTOM SAWING

Promptly and on short notice. We have on hand a large quantity of

Hard and Soft Wood Lumber and Hemlock Timber.

GIVE US A TRIAL. ADVANCE LUMBER CO. ADVANCE, MICH.

EVERYTHING

IN THE LINE OF

Furniture and Undertakers' Goods

CAN BE FOUND AT THE OLD RELIABLE HOUSE OF

HENRY C. COOPER, CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

CHEAP FOR CASH.

Come and See Me Before Buying.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Prices Reasonable. W. S. JOHNSON,
Op. Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at C. S. Wood & Co.'s drug store.

L. L. CARR

Has just received a fresh lot of

Fruit and Vegetables

At his store near the bridge.

All kinds of fruit and vegetables in their season. Nuts, candies, pop, ginger ale, etc., always on hand. Call and see me. West side Bridge St.

Hon. Thos. Ochiltree.

PROPOSER OF THE FAMOUS LASKER RESOLUTION.

There is probably no other representative in the forty-eighth congress whose name is more frequently mentioned throughout the United States, and even in foreign countries, than is that of the above congressman from Texas. This sudden notoriety has been gained by Mr. Ochiltree's introduction a few weeks ago, in the house of representatives, of the now famous Lasker resolutions, which Prince Bismarck has thrust back upon our congress with the intimation that our country should attend to its own affairs. This insult stirs the American heart to resent it, and brings Mr. Ochiltree into a national prominence in connection with the affair which will perpetrate his name in our civil history.

Mr. Ochiltree is a resident of Galvestos, Texas, and the first native Texan ever elected to our congress. He represents twenty-seven counties, which compose the seventh district, and comprise over 37,000 square miles of territory, reaching from Galveston, on the Gulf, to Eagle Pass, on the upper Rio Grande. He was elected to congress as an independent by a majority exceeding 3,000 votes over Findlay, the democratic candidate.

After receiving a limited education at the public schools of his state, at the age of seventeen he became a private in the Texas Rangers, and was engaged in the campaign against the Apache and Comanche Indians in 1854-5. When the war broke out Mr. Ochiltree went in with the confederacy and his war record on the staffs of General Green, Taylor and Sibley, is replete with incidents of bravery that would have been more profitable in a better cause. But when the victorious armies of the north had suppressed the rebellion, Colonel Ochiltree accepted the new order of things in good faith, and was in time appointed United States marshal of Texas by President Grant, and thereafter was appointed United States commissioner of emigration to Europe, in which capacity he several times visited foreign countries, and when in Berlin had numerous audiences with Bismarck on emigration affairs.

In personal appearance Mr. Ochiltree is one of the original freaks of human nature. Heavy set, with canary-colored unkept hair and a heavy light-colored mustache, eyes twinkling with good nature, a ruddy complexion, protruding lips and rather antiquated dress, he is a striking oddity in the present congress, but very popular and always the centre of a group of attentive listeners.

Michigan Census of 1884.

The state decennial census, contemplated by the constitution, will be taken in June of this year, pursuant to the provisions of act No. 146, laws of 1883. The act is not an amendment of the law under which the censuses of 1854, 1864, and 1874, were taken but is an entirely new act, and repeals all former census acts. It provides for a much fuller census than has ever yet been taken under state authority. Excepting certain special investigations provided for by the national census law, our present state law is scarcely less comprehensive than the national law. The schedules to be used in the enumeration are believed to be an improvement on those used in taking the national census. The statistics of manufactures will be equally as good as the manufacturing statistics collected by enumerators for the census of 1880, and the statistics of births, marriages, deaths, and occupations will be better, and of agriculture much fuller, than in 1880. The inquiries as to the acreage in growing crops June 1, 1884,—barley, buckwheat, corn, oats, rye, winter wheat, spring wheat, potatoes, sorghum, and grass, required by the state census law, are new and important.

Former state censuses have been taken by supervisors at the time of taking the assessment. Objections has been made that assessing officers cannot take a complete and accurate census, both on account of the many other duties imposed upon them, and the fact that the inhabitants cannot be persuaded that honestly answering the various census questions will not in some way increase the amount of their taxes. That no such objection may lie against the census of 1884, the law provides that it shall be taken in the month of June, or more than a month after the completion of the assessment, and by enumerators appointed specially for that purpose. The enumerators are to be appointed after the first Monday in April, and on or before the first Monday in May. The appointments in cities are to be made by common councils, and in townships by township boards.

The enumeration is to commence on the first day of June, and be completed in the month of June. It is to be of date June 1, or just four years after the National census of 1880.

After the enumeration is completed the population schedule will be publicly reviewed, but no unauthorized person should be allowed to examine, or in any way to ascertain the facts contained in any the other schedules. If an enumerator shall communicate to any person not authorized to receive the same, any statistics of property or business included in his return he will be subject to a fine of three hundred dollars, or thirty days' imprisonment in the county jail, or both fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court. This clause is necessary for the protection of individual interests. Men naturally hesitate, if they do not altogether refuse to answer the questions relating to their private business required by census laws, but there is no excuse for concealment when assured that their answers will be treated as confidential. The census of business will be tabulated by the secretary of state so as to show the aggregates for state, counties, townships, cities, and wards, but the tables will in no instance expose the operations or business of an individual, firm, or corporation.

Enumerators will receive for their services two dollars and fifty cents per day for the time actually and necessarily engaged in the canvass and in the review of the population schedule, and ten cents per mile for going to the office of the county clerk to obtain the necessary blank schedules and ten cents per mile for carrying the returns to the office of the county clerk. The amount due each enumerator will be calculated by the clerk and paid by the county treasurer on the certificate of the clerk. Before the county clerk can certify the amount due an enumerator, he is required to satisfy himself that the returns are properly made out and duly certified. He will "closely examine each census sheet for omissions, erasures, interlineations, and other defects, including careless or imperfect entries, and a torn or soiled condition of the sheets, causing indistinctness in the entries." Every sheet thus defaced will be rejected as not 'properly made out' as required by law."

It will be seen from the foregoing that a high order of intelligence will be necessary for the proper taking of the census under the present law, and it is hoped that those authorized to make the appointments will select only those persons for enumerators who are in every respect thoroughly competent.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

NEW HAVEN News: The following advertisement was printed in the Morning News a couple of days ago:

BOY WANTED—Good responsible respectable man, employment. Apply to G. D. H. HUBBARD, Pilsner Warehouse, 372 State street.

The Morning News received the following notice last night:

HUBBARD—In this city, Aug. 4, a son to Mr. and Mrs. G. D. H. HUBBARD.

DR. REEVES, of Wheeling, stated in a paper read before the American Public Health Association, that if you count the number of deaths in a community for any given period, and multiply it by thirteen—the estimated number of sick you have on hand for each death—you have the average total of sick persons cared for at an expense much greater than would have been necessary for their support in health."

THE Medical Times and Gazette having recently referred to the value of adder's poison as a curative agent in lockjaw, Dr. Richard Reale calls attention to the fact that in 1874 there were 1,438 persons exposed to yellow fever who were inoculated with adder venom, not one of whom died, although seven were attacked with the disease. The account of the matter, written by a nephew of Baron Humboldt, appeared in the Medical Digest.

M. REEL is a sort of French Hollo way. He began life by selling matches, and then became the largest manufacturer of them in France, his wealth being estimated at 25,000,000 francs. One of his charitable enterprises was to start a restaurant for the poor in the Rue de Rochechouart, Paris, at which a hearty dinner can be obtained for ten cents, and of which an average of 6,000 patrons avail themselves daily. He has now, from equally benevolent motives, built the Hotel Reel, Passage, at Cannes, where invalids compelled to go there for their health can have board and lodging for from seven to twelve francs a day.

VICTOR HUGO is in excellent health, but suffers from ennui. His deafness, which he does not like to show or confess, isolates him. His receptions now last hardly twenty minutes, and are still held after dinner. Strangers are not welcome visitors, though courteously received. It is necessary to say something to them, and so to betray the single intimacy from which the poet suffers. What he appears to enjoy most is seeing his friends at dinner. At the head of his table he can talk for himself and those around him. He retires to his bedroom at 9 o'clock, and walks up and down until midnight, thinking about what he is to write next morning.

A CERTAIN Herr Sauer has produced an electric battery which will work in the sunlight and not in the shade. The point is to find out, simply, whether by chemical effect or some other way, it needs to keep work and electric battery. The object will be to get the sunlight to do as much of the work as possible, and to reduce the cost of the other elements employed to a minimum. Then, supposing that cheap and portable accumulators can be invented, instead of the cumbrous and expensive apparatus now in use for storing electricity, force enough may be obtained out of the sunshine of a single summer to drive all the mills and railway trains in the country for years.

The income of London charities in 1882, just published, is divided as follows: Seventeen general hospitals, £274,152; twenty-seven special hospitals, £109,012; twenty hospitals for women and children, £64,105; twenty-four charities for the blind, £65,572; three institutions for idiots, £35,724; eight convalescent hospitals, £53,078; forty-four convalescent institutions, £62,125; nine charities for lunatics, £36,657; thirty-three general dispensaries, £27,286; eight charities for the deaf and dumb, £16,092; five institutions for surgical appliances, £11,139; thirty-two provident dispensaries, £9,916; five ophthalmic institutions, £9,816; sixteen nursing institutions, £7,105; sixty-five hospitals, £57,732; three orthopedic hospitals, £5,541; four for skin diseases, £6,022; and two institutions for vaccination, £2,766.

THERE is a great interest in regard to the status of London in point of commercial growth, and Leffler's "History of London," now in the hands of the English public, gives the exact facts and figures as they have been obtained from careful research. The London of 1760, lying almost wholly north of the Thames River, occupied an area of only twenty-nine miles in extent. In 1818 it had increased to an area of six square miles. Between that date and 1834 the metropolis a little more than doubled its extent. But the marvelous growth was from 1834 to 1881. In the period of time between these dates the bulk of London was swollen till, instead of having six square miles as it did in 1818, or sixteen as in 1834, it reached over an area of between seventy and eighty square miles, and is yet increasing rather than diminishing. It is fact, however, that some of the other English cities shows an adequate correspondence of growth.

JOHN W. MACKEY, the "Bonanza King," says the Louisville Courier-Journal, not the woman whom he married long before he became a millionaire. She was a widow when he became acquainted with her, and was the daughter of Maj. Houghford, of New Orleans. She married a doctor and moved to Nevada City, where the husband died some time afterward. He was a poor man, and left his wife and child in rather destitute circumstances. Mackey heard of this some months later, and started a subscription for the widow's benefit, contributing liberally himself, and raising a neat little sum. This so touched the widow's heart that she offered to hire to him for his kindness. She was young and pretty, with a childish face and winning ways, and captured Mackey's heart completely. His courtship was quiet, and of short duration, and soon the pretty widow united her destiny with his. Mackey was then a rich man, but he kept widening his field of action until in connection with Flood, O'Brien, and Fair, he established the Nevada Bank, and Long McCain went from Baltimore to manage it. Since that time Mackey's career has been familiar to almost every schoolboy. Unlike the majority of men, however, he does not forget that he was once dependent himself, and his charity has been great. He is a member of the Catholic Church, and established an orphan asylum for the children of that denomination in Nevada City.

THE jewelry of Mrs. John W. Mackey has been amply described in Paris journals. Many of the stones are unique, and the ornaments in general are said to be characterized as much by the artistic beauty of their workmanship as by the splendor of the gems whereof they are composed. Foremost is the famous set of sapphires which was exhibited at the Parisian Universal Exhibition of 1878. It is valued at $300,000, and comprises diadem, bracelets, ring, ear-rings, and necklace, with a large pendant. Next in beauty and value come the pearls, the set including the necklace, bracelets, and diadem. The necklace has five rows, the pearls in the lowest row being of the size of the largest hackleberry, and those in the uppermost being larger than a large pea. Each pearl is perfect in color and shape, the strings having been composed with the greatest care. The clasp is a sapphire set with diamonds. A set of turquoises is unique, so large and fine in color are the gems. They are said to surpass the turquoise of the same stones belonging to the Empress of Russia. For the hair there is a long garland of small fern leaves in diamonds, studded with diamond dewdrops. One bracelet is a diamond serpent that encircles the arm above the elbow five times; it is formed of a single row of very large diamonds, 200 in number. These treasures are not kept in the residence of Mrs. Mackey, but in a bank. They are contained in a small chest of metal, closed with a secret spring. The interior of this chest is lined with red velvet, and is divided into three compartments, each fitted with a series of numbered trays. The value of the contents cannot be far from $1,000,000.

What We Left.

The occasion of a school-committee man turning red in the face was the failure of his attempt to puzzle the boys. The reason why his colleagues laughed and he didn't was the answer given to the following question proposed by one of them:

"If I had a mince pie, and should give two-twelfths to John, two-twelfths to Jane, twenty-fifths to Harry, and should keep half of the pie to myself, what would there be left?"

There was a profound study among the boys, and finally one lad held up his hand as a signal that he was ready to answer.

"Well, sir, what would there be left? Speak up loud, so that all can hear," and the committee man.

"The plate!" shouted the hopeful fellow.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

Where Did They Go?

Grandma says we little witches
Are just as much alike as peas,
Laughing, fun, and early stitches,
All our plagues, and all our pleases.
For when I bounced my little hatchet
Head myself, she didn't see it,
To boat be sure—I meant to hide
Th dents dropped. She said, or more,
Pull the hatchet and bounced—well, that
Was a serious mess, be getting blind.
—Our Little Ones.

About Earning Money.

Some of the boys have written to the editor to know how to earn money, and some of the girls have written about earning vacation. One bright-eyed little miss—five years old, I fine is his name—has solved the problem for herself. She has a boat called Pocahontas, and as her home is near a Lake Michigan resort, she visited during the season by numbers of people from the city, he tows passengers across a certain little stream at twenty a trip. He intends to buy a sway with his money when he shall have earned enough to pay for one. I will not tell you where George lives, but it is not at all improbable that among toy young friends there may be a lad shown who, before vacation is over, may take a seat in the pretty Pocahontas, and have my brave little ladoie for their ferryman.

Another boy of my acquaintance, who expected a year or two ago to spend his vacation wholly in town, asked his father's permission to learn something about business life in the ten weeks before school should reopen. He sought and found a place in an office, and pleased his employers so well by his promptness and intelligence that when he had been graduated they at once gave him a permanent situation.

But I want to tell you about Jed W. and his sister Bessie. They wanted very so much to go to the mountains this summer, and weeks ago I my asked their mother if she would give her consent. She shook her head rather sadly.

"Where is the money to come from, my dears?"

Bessie knew, if Hal did not, that there was no money to spare. Mr. W. paints pictures, and is sometimes paid very well for them, and sometimes, alas! the pictures do not find purchasers.

"If you and Bessie can manage to earn enough to pay your own expenses, you may go to Waldronsville in August," said the mother.

Now, some children would have said, "What's the use of trying?" Not so Bessie and Hal, who are young Americans, and have plenty of pluck and perseverance. Hal had a little money left out of their savings bank, and consulted them, and added to their sum several silver pieces which had been given them about the Fourth of July by uncles and cousins to cover it in impulses. They had not want to come on to-gether, and soon the funds their wealth amounted to $3. With this Bessie bought a good many yards of strong cotton goods, and commenced sewing. After she had finished a dozen aprons such as working girls use to protect their clothing from soil and dust, and when they were done Hal took the basket on his arm, and went to a great building, where he saw man employed, some in one way and some in another, and there he offered the aprons for sale. He asked a quarter of a dollar apiece for them, but he sold the dozen in an hour. Bessie went on making and Hal went on selling these useful aprons to men who were glad of the chance to buy them, until they had disposed of nickels than 200.

Another girl who wanted money, not for herself, but for charity, to bestow on some poor children who were in great need, went every day for a month to read the newspaper and the Bible to an old lady whose eyes were failing, but who wanted to hear the Psalms and chapters she loved, and also to know what was going on in the world. The lady paid her liberally for her trouble.

There is a boy who writes a wonderfully clear hand, almost equal to engraving. He came to Andover. He is in request among the ladies who know him, to write their invitations and their visiting-cards.

Other boys earn money with their printing-presses, or by weeding in the neighbors' gardens, going errands, or rock of the baby's cradle.

If you wish to be of use, you must have on the lookout for your own neighborhood. Above all things, be practical, lively, and honest, showing that you are worth of 22 C.

Honor to willmer workers! Thank I say this, I do not want any of my boys and girls to think that in itself the pursuit is a very grand or noble thing. Work is for a purpose, and let that purpose be unselfish. Prof. Agassiz once said, when urged to by aside his scientific pursuits and engage in lecturing, so that he might secure a fortune, "I have no time to make money." Excellent lasty honored him for feeling that his life work was above mere gain or loss.—Harper's Young People.

Something About Flies.

Some of you, I hope, began to make collections last summer of leaves and stones, flowers and insects, mosses and sea-scrambling.

Yet have all, I mean, found something.

Shall I open the box where one of you keeps her treasures?

Here are a common housefly and a blue-bottle, a large brown-beetle, a smaller pale-yellow one, a cricket, a katydid, two or three butterflies, a dragon-fly a moth, and a humblebee.

In another box a little girl has carefully put away a reddish-brown leaf with something that rattles inside it, and some stiff, shining, brown, dead creatures that were once large caterpillars. Here is enough for a whole week's work.

Look at whatever you have in the first box, and see if you can find the bodies of your insects divided in any way.

If you look at your flies carefully, you will see that the head is partly separated from the upper half of the body, and that in its turn from the lower half.

The word insect means cut into, and the bodies of all true insects are divided, when they are full-grown, in this way, in three parts.

The divisions of some classes are much more plainly marked than of others.

Look at your fly again.

How many wings has he?

Two.

He belongs to the class of two-winged insects.

Perhaps some of you can think of another two-winged insect which makes himself very disagreeable on summer nights.

All insects breathe, not as we do, through a nose but through holes in their sides, that cannot be seen without the aid of a strong glass.

The little pocket-spaces that some of your have will, however, help you in finding many things that you would not know without them.

Do you see the hairs on your blue-bottle?

Look at his legs.

How many?

Count them, and then remember that all true insects, when grown up, have six same number.

When grown up?

Yes, for insects change their forms more than once.

Your baby sister or brother has just as many legs and arms as your mother, just as many eyes and ears, fingers and toes, but baby insects do not look at all like their mothers.

Even the fly you have here also does not sit on them as the bird does to keep them warm until they are ready to hatch, but lays them about a stable, or in meat or cheese, where they will keep warm without her, and her children will find food all ready for them.

What are the children?

Not the little flies that you see sometimes in the air on summer evenings, with small, soft, whitish creatures without wings.

After a while they grow hard and brown, then they begin to creep out of them, and come forth full-grown flies.

How does a fly eat? Put a live one under a glass with a lump of sugar, and see if you can find out.

Do you say something that comes in six months and rests on the sunny side of a house, that chirps also, and that keeps, curled and shut in springs.

The mode of these traces is peculiar and knows one skin when a fly lights on one tree or land.

How does a fly walk on the ceiling?

Nobody knows exactly.

Some boys, who studied this for many years, thinks that something at each pore from each of the little hairs on the feet, and another that sticks out like a sucker, as a piece of leather does when you lift it stone up by it.

Can you see a fly's ears?

Not without a strong microscope; but you can find out with your eyes if glass where they are, on the sides of his head.

Each of the eyes is made up of many small ones, more than you could count in a long time.

Now, ask somebody to find you some verses that begin "Baby-fly, here's a fly; let us watch it, you and I," and perhaps you will like them as well as I do, and you will learn them.—Child's Companion.

Waxed Floors.

Yes, I dwell in antique furniture, and getting new furniture or antique dealing, and repair things, and so on, but my principal business is in waxing floors—hard-wood floors, of course. That is increasing all the time. I don't have much to do with the floors of dancing halls, because the men having charge of them take to the way of waxing the floors themselves. It is in private houses that my services are in demand. For years and years there were very few waxed floors in New York residences, but they are all the rage now, and some New Yorkers we live in great luxury. Some have them because they are nearer to a genuine or a small purse; but they are also popular among those who do not, because they give an air of richness, of well keeping, and are so much cleaner than carpets ever can be. When you sweep a carpet you send up a cloud of dust and fibers from it, but that cannot be the case with a waxed floor, which gathers no dust, and the more it is swept and brushed and polished the smoother and brighter it grows. A hard-wood floor should be waxed thoroughly three or four times a year, besides being rubbed occasionally by the servants of the house.—New York Sun.

Equimaux Houses.

As probably many people know, an igloo is usually built of snow. The word, however, means house, and a igloo house consists of a single room—for it means room. A long, low passage way leads into each dwelling, so constructed as to exclude the wind from the interior, through which ventilation is given by leaving open the door. A igloo is made of snow-blocks about three feet by eighteen inches wide and from six to eight inches thick.

The snow knife is simply a long, broad-bladed knife, like a cheese knife, or the carving knife, with a handle long enough to be conveniently grasped by both hands. Before iron and brass became so plentiful as at present, snow knives were made of bone and sometimes of wooden scapulas, but such knives are quite rare now. The Netchilik, Iwillik, and Oweperoksilik tribes are still quite deficient in iron weapons and implements; and many of their knives are marvels of ingenuity. I saw one made of a little bit of iron, perhaps an inch square, mounted on a handle two feet long, and so shaped that the man would do much of the cutting and scraping, and the handle would be used as a wedge to assist the operation. I also saw a man making a knife by cutting a thick piece of iron with a cold chisel, afterward to be pounded out flat and ground down on stones. The entire operation would probably take about three or four weeks with the poor tools at their disposal.

The builder selects some of the proper snow blocks by sounding them with a cane, made for the purpose, or rather two canes, straight and strong, and worked down until about half an inch in diameter, with a ferrule of walrus tusk at the bottom, and a knob at the top. By thrusting this into the snow he can tell whether the block is strong by successive winds are separated by voids of soft snow, which would cause the blocks to break. When the snow is selected he digs a pit to the depth of eighteen inches or two feet, and about the length of the snow block. He then enlarges the pit and proceeds to cut out the blocks by first cutting down at the end of the pit and then the bottom, afterward, cutting a little channel along each side to two deep, marking the thickness of the proposed block.

Now comes the part that requires practice to accomplish successfully. The expert will, with a few thrusts of the knife in just the right places, split off the snow block and lift it carefully out to stand upon it as the position on the wall. The type will almost instantly break the block into one or three pieces utterly unfit for the use of the builder. When two men are building an igloo one cuts the blocks and the other erects the wall. When sufficient blocks have been cut he commences work the builder marks with his eyes, or perhaps draws a line with his knife, describing the circumference of the building, usually a circle about ten or fifteen feet in diameter. The first tier of blocks is then arranged, the block resting on a wooden rabbet, and then arranged each other at ends, thus affording mutual support. When this work is completed the builder cuts away the first and second blocks, slanting them from the ground upward, so that the second tier resting upon the edges of the first can be continued on and round spirally, and be gradually increasing the inward slant a perfect dome is constructed of such strength that the builder can be flat on the outside while finishing the interstices between the blocks. The chinking is, however, usually done by the women and children, as the building progresses, and additional protection secured from the weather by covering it over by banking up with a large wooden spade, about the snow at the base often being piled to the height of several feet. This enables the light perfectly impervious to the wind and to temperatures of weather. When the house is completed the bedbloks are walled in. Then a small hole about two feet square is cut in the wall on the side away from the prevailing winds to be used as the entrance. The higher the bed and bedding. It is then walled up and the regular door, about two feet high, and nicked at the top. It would bring bad luck to carry the bedding into the igloo by the same door it would be taken out. Before the door is opened the bedding is carried out on snow blocks, and made from one to three or four feet long, and occupies three-fourths of the entire space. The higher the bed and the lower is the door the warmer the igloo will be.—Arctic.

Raising a Silver Dollar.

"How are you getting on, Uncle Isaac? They tell me you have been very sick."

"Bless God, massa, I is gittin' well. Sudse like to kill me wid de medicine, but de old preacher cum along, and sas he, 'Hebbder bum, sas he, you hain't been giv nuffin to de Lord lately, sas he, so de Lord say he must kill you, sas he, unless you gib sumthin' to de Lord, sas he. Den he say dat if I can raise a silver dollar he cure me, and so de ole Nunc she borrow some and bag some, and gib de dollar, and de preacher go out in de woods and dig a hole and bury de money, and pray to de Lord over de hole, and he turn de air of de wind to de Lord satyddle and forgive me, and gwine to let me git well, he send angel for de money dat night and take it away.

"And shore nuff, bless God, when de ole nunc go dar in de mornin' de money dun gone, bless God, and I kin gittin' better ever since then, bless God. How is all your people, massa?"—Texas Siftings.

SCENERY is getting so fast and furious, that it will soon be all in a lather.

IGNORANCE is the soil of innocence.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

A GIANTESS BIGGER THAN THUMB died in London a few days ago, aged 39. She weighed nearly 500 pounds, was twenty-one feet high, and measured round the shoulders over eight feet.

THE recent loss of 2,500,000 francs by the Panama Canal Company to the Republic of Colombia gives the French member grip on that canal that looks very close to an absolute foreclosure. The company already enjoys possession of 12,000 hectares of land ceded by the Government of Colombia out of the 200,000 granted by the canal contract.

AN interesting archæological discovery has been made at Nicaragua, being traces of human footsteps in stone, lying from a quarry at a depth of fifteen feet below the surface. Dr. Earl Flint has examined them, and calculates that they are at least 20,000 years old. The size of sizes as if made by men, women, and children. In other excavations pieces of pottery, covered with rude figures of animals, have been found, and on one the drawing of a crossing-gown almost identical with the European fashion of to-day. This goes some fair evidence that prehistoric man was not nearly the savage that some scientists would have us believe, if only these new "finds" prove to be genuine.

THERE are a deal of young the remedies to the effect that Aaron Burr and other peculiarities the embalcment of a valuable estate in the Nonte. Mrs. Sarah Daisy Burroughs, perhaps the oldest resident of New York makes the charge. She says she placed in Aaron's hands little deeds and papers to an estate left to her by her father, John Daisy, and after the deed with Hamilton, Burr disappeared with the papers, and she has never been able to get them back. Her last look at all 22 is their mother.

Now some children would have said, "What's the use of trying?" Not so Bessie and Hal, who are young Americans, and have plenty of pluck and perseverance. Hal had a little money left out of their savings bank, and consulted them, and added to their sum several silver pieces which had been given them about the Fourth of July by uncles and cousins to cover it in impulses. They had not want to come on to-gether, and soon the funds their wealth amounted to $3. With this Bessie bought a good many yards of strong cotton goods, and commenced sewing. After she had finished a dozen aprons such as working girls use to protect their clothing from soil and dust, and when they were done Hal took the basket on his arm, and went to a great building, where he saw man employed, some in one way and some in another, and there he offered the aprons for sale. He asked a quarter of a dollar apiece for them, but he sold the dozen in an hour. Bessie went on making and Hal went on selling these useful aprons to men who were glad of the chance to buy them, until they had disposed of nickels than 200.

Another girl who wanted money, not for herself, but for charity, to bestow on some poor children who were in great need, went every day for a month to read the newspaper and the Bible to an old lady whose eyes were failing, but who wanted to hear the Psalms and chapters she loved, and also to know what was going on in the world. The lady paid her liberally for her trouble.

There is a boy who writes a wonderfully clear hand, almost equal to engraving. He came to Andover. He is in request among the ladies who know him, to write their invitations and their visiting-cards.

Other boys earn money with their printing-presses, or by weeding in the neighbors' gardens, going errands, or rock of the baby's cradle.

If you wish to be of use, you must keep on the lookout for your own neighborhood. Above all things, be practical, lively, and honest, showing that you are worth of 22 C.

Honor to willmer workers! Thank I say this, I do not want any of my boys and girls to think that in itself the pursuit is a very grand or noble thing. Work is for a purpose, and let that purpose be unselfish. Prof. Agassiz once said, when urged to by aside his scientific pursuits and engage in lecturing, so that he might secure a fortune, "I have no time to make money." Excellent lasty honored him for feeling that his life work was above mere gain or loss.—Harper's Young People.

WAR TARIFF.

The Boston Post Publishes a Letter from a Vermonter, and Adds a Few Remarks in the Way of Enlightenment.

To the Editor of the Boston Post:

I learn from the Post that England is regarded as a free trade country, and yet I do not know why she is so regarded, and wish to be informed; and, if this information occasions surprise, please consider that I don't reside in a State where all the rays of light concentrate. I have hitherto supposed England for years being a free trade Government, and believed she had practiced, almost from time immemorial, the exact opposite of free trade, and, as the advocates of protectionists claim, the poor are enriched in an inverse ratio to the prosperity of the long continued bleeding system had given England free trade paupers known in my Christian land. I always supposed, too, that we borrowed or copied from England our bleeding system of tariff for revenue and protection, which perhaps from the poverty and ignorance unfortunate enough to produce a portion of such meal to enrich and elevate other citizens who have no right to be, by Government aid, above one common level.

I hold that the man who cleans your well owns as much Government as Vanderbilt and Gould; that the true and just nature of a government is perverted when administered for any other object than government; and I regret that there is some prospect of having a new and platform of principles one plank worth contending for, and if you can dance or promote the dance, I wish you to stop playing tag with the Republicans, which they have been doing for about twenty years, I believe; we shall shorten the income and lessen the days of a delectable binding, and you will deserve more praise than "Sainted Lincoln."

I know that I am not the only person who can be enlightened on the subject which was suggested this letter. I wish you to explain in the Post what gives England the enviable reputation of being a free trade country, and whether England has a different system from those which prevail in her foreign possessions. If you can not, for any reason, give the desired information in the Post, I think you will be pleased to give me some light in a more private way, and as I believe at present stands, having upon its face what is supposed to be a likeness of the great and good George Washington, the people's friend.

Yours truly, D. G. DIXON.

South Hero, Vt.

We will endeavor to give Mr. Dixon some light, as requested in his interesting letter, and we will shed that light through the columns of the Post, because, if we succeed in enlighting only Mr. Dixon's cosy Green Mountain home, but thousands of other homes throughout the land. Great Britain has the reputation of being a free trade country because she is, in a country, or the nearest to it of any civilized country in the world. Some of her ports are open without a protective tariff; none, however, a horrible monopoly like our tariff. No productive duties are now levied on goods imported into Great Britain, customs being changed solely for the sake of revenue. Formerly the articles subjected to duty were nearly a thousand; now they are only twenty-two, the chief being tobacco, spirits, tea, and wine. The following is the complete list:

	£	S.	D.
Alcohol, specific gravity not exceeding 1.0,000, per gallon	0	9	9
Alcohol, specific gravity not exceeding 1.0,000, per bottle	0	1	6
Ale or beer, specific gravity exceeding 1.0,054, per barrel	0	16	8
Other liquors, various rates of duty.
Currants, per hundredweight	0	2	3
Cikoory, per cwt.	0	1	0
Chicory, per cwt.	0	2	0
Coffee, per pound	0	0	4
Chicoderoon, per pound	0	0	2
Cocoa, per pound	0	0	4
Cocoa, other conditions, various rates of duty.
Corn, per cwt.	0	0	6
Coffee, sanded or ground	0	0	5
Chicoderoon, per gallon	0	1	4
Ether, per gallon	0	0	6
Fruit, dried, raisins, currants, figs, per pound	0	0	1
Malt, per quarter	0	1	4
Pickles, in vinegar, per gallon	0	1	6
Pickles, in other liquors, per gallon	0	2	6
Plate gold, ounce	0	0	17
Plate silver, ounce	0	0	1
Spirits, brandy, rum, etc., gallon	0	10	5
Spirits, rum, from British colonies	0	7	6
Spirits, sugar water, gallon	0	16	5
Tea, per pound	0	0	6
Tobacco, containing less than 10 per cent. moisture, pound	0	3	6
Cavendish or Negro Head	0	4	6
Other manufactured tobacco	0	4	6
Sugar, various rates of duty.
Tobacco, cigars, pound	0	5	0
Vermuth containing alcohol, gallon	0	2	0
Wine, gallon	0	1	0
Wines, rates varying from 1s. to 3s. per gallon

Among the articles upon which a customs tax is levied in the United States are barley, books, buttons, chicory, cinnamon, clocks and clockware, coal, cotton goods, earthenware, fruit, glassware, straw goods, India rubber goods, leather and manufactured, cutlery, jewelry, leather and leather goods, lemons and oranges, oils, oats, sardines, silk, spices, spirits and wines, sugar, molasses, tobacco, toys, boards, planks and deals, wooden goods, carpets and carpetings, dress goods of all sorts, earthenware, glass, marble, etc., etc. In short, everything to wear, to eat and to make a shelter, is taxed in this country, and in many cases the exactions are so outrageously high that even a Government of a free trade country, and that a grand a country as the United States of America should impose them. But we are glad to be able to agree with our friend at South Hero, Vt., in the belief that at last the masses are getting their eyes open to the iniquities of our monstrous war tariff, and that the Democratic party in the immediate future will be marshaled for battle under the banners of tariff reform and under the leadership of statesmen who will count about the Democracy shall longer play tag with the Republican party. The war tariff must and shall be and all who are calling themselves Democrats, who favor the retention of that "masterpiece of injustice," in its present form must get into the Republican party, where they rightly belong, and those calling themselves Republicans, who favor a genuine reduction and reform of our tariff laws, must come into the Democratic party, where they belong. No more cozying with the lobbyists and siding with the few; no more "policy" at the expense of principle; no more grinding the sweat of the masses to please and enrich a favored few; down with fiddle-faddle, fan and favor, and up with common sense, firmness and justice to all.

Facts for Workingmen.

The telegraph announces that all cotton factories in the West have been closed for six weeks, which throws not less than 5,000 men out of employment. In this brief announcement lies an other illustration of the beauty and wholesomeness of protection. In the whole protected list there is none so highly favored as the manufacture of mills, the duties ranging from 529 to 876 per ton. In superior machinery, organization of labor, raw materials, and all the other aids and appliances to boot, the manufacturer of mills in this country can defy the competition of the world. If there were no protective system largely enhancing the cost of all competitors, the mill manufacturers of the United States need fear no rivalry from abroad. But for the operation of the tariff they are mainly confined to the home market, and when that is glutted with more than it can consume, they must perforce be content to be idle. By the exorbitant duties, which tax consumers, production is unhealthily stimulated, and at the great interests the combination of millmakers must suspend manufacture in order that the supply may not too far outstrip the demand, and that prices may be maintained. In the meantime the thousands of hands who are turned out of employment are obliged to consume their earnings in enforced idleness, or to gain a living as best they may in some unaccustomed occupation. When the demand comes up again operations begin anew, prices are raised against consumers, and the old songs and dances of protection to labor, the workingmen of America are regaled with. Yet from protection to American labor, the tariff exposes them go and such vicissitudes as this which the millmakers are now undergoing.—Philadelphia Record.

We invite the attention of the monopoly, high tariff organs to the foregoing, from the Record, and we also invite the attention of workingmen to the same subject. There is no mistake about the facts, and the deductions are in consonance with them. An immensely protected industry has, for the time being, collapsed. Workingmen are driven to idleness and to the penalties of idleness. The Republican tariff law protects the monopolist, prostrates the workingman. The capitalist's money may be idle—it may be unremunerative—it may remain locked in a bank vault. What of it? The owner wants it, and he finds that it has not suffered from being idle. The capital of the laboring man is his ability to work, his health and strength. Stop earnings and you rob him of it. And the millmakers are finding it out. Protection does not protect labor, it simply protects money capital and degrades labor. Labor has been fed on fiction. It is now getting fact, and the scales are drying from the eyes of the well.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Sad Plight of the "Grand Old Party" in New York.

The reorganization of the Republican party in New York which began with such promise by the re-enrollment of the Republican voters last fall appears to have ended apparently in the tri umph of the old machine. The re-enrollment was the work of a committee of eighteen, a temporary body created for that purpose were. The ruling power of the party is the County Committee. That body met last Tuesday, and it was evident at once that the machine was in full control. One of the prominent reformers, Mr. Edward Mitchell, who had been relied upon to uphold the standard of those who sought to rescue the party from its old bosses, sank out of the conflict for some inexplicable reason, and refused to stand as candidate for temporary Chairman. Thereupon "Jimmy" O'Brien was elected. As the temporary Chairman names his committee on Contested Seats, and as that committee settles all contested cases whether "reform" or "regular" delegates shall be admitted to the committee, it will be seen at once that the reformers surrendered the organization of the party. "Mike" Cregan, "Barney" Biglin, and "Jimmy" O'Brien were at the helm, and had things all their own way. "The state of the party," the Times constantly declares, "is worse than it was before." Stronger language could not be used.—Chicago Tribune, Rep.

STANLEY MATTHEWS, Jay Gould's $100,000 Supreme Judge, treated Arthur to a dinner, and had the bills of fare printed in French. They were "Dorsey dumplings," "soap soup," and "salted bragans," but the dish which Arthur most relished was ante-lope, cooked in a jack-pot, and seasoned with a draw-poker.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

CHINESE WISDOM.

Some Wise Sayings of the Celestials That Apply the World Over.

There seem to be very few European proverbs which have not been paralleled in the Flowery Kingdom, and it had it makes the world appear smaller than ever when one finds that the Chinese, a people or 10,000 years ago, thought and said the same things that our ancestors crystallized into proverbs under much differing conditions. Mr. Giles says of the Chinese proverbial philosophy: "Most Western proverbs, means household words, etc., are to be found embodied therein; sometimes expressed in strictly identical terms, at other times differing only in point of local color. Here are a few which will be recognized at once:

One potter does not make a pile.

Out of the wolf's lair into the tiger's mouth.

Prevention is better than cure.

Better a living dog than a dead lion.

As the twig is bent the tree's inclined.

When the cat's away the rats play.

It is the unexpected which always happens.

Then till the fields and rats eat the corn.

Better be a fox's back than a bulldog's rump.

And here are a few the three of which are more decidedly Chinese, though some of them have long been common property:

Heal with the faults of others as gently as if it your own.

A man thinks he knows, but a woman knows better.

No medicine is as good as a sensible doctor.

No needle is sharp at both ends.

Straight trees are felled first.

Only imbeciles want credit for the achievements of their ancestors.

Better a dog and peace than a man in war.

Don't break a vase for a sly at a rat.

Every one gives a shove to the tumbling wall.

You can't chop a thing as round as you can pare it.

Don't ride a tiger cannot dismount.

Politeness before force.

Don't make dumplings in a teapot.

Don't take a poleax to kill a fowl.

Money makes a blind man see.

A near neighbor is better than a distant relation.

Women share adversity better than prosperity.

There is abundance of shrewdness and homely wisdom in these and scores more of Chinese proverbs and sayings given by Mr. Giles, and in many of the specimens of literary style there is an elegance and evidence of ripe culture which indicate that fully a thousand years ago China had attained a place in literature such as no Western nation attained until much later.—New York Tribune.

Keep Out of Debt.

"Keep out of debt," says a popular writer. This should be taken especially by young people. One of the most fatal steps a young man can make is to contract a debt. It mortgages his future. It means nearly every case that he is living beyond his means. Debt is what ruins so many of our business men. They begin with small accounts, and as their business increases their accounts with their creditors, and finally their habits of living have become so expensive that the debts begin to far exceed the returns of business. The result is failure, disappointment, and disgrace. A young man starts out in life. He is quick, apt, and successful. He gains the confidence of employers and acquaintances. He is honest and upright, and merchants and others like to deal with him. He is diligent and economical. He is patronized by the public. He buys fine things, goes in good society, and from a frugal mode of living he gradually launches out into an expensive style. At first his debts were small, and he found no trouble in meeting them. But they have now become a burden, and to straighten things out necessitates a vigorous struggle. Self-denial comes harder than it once did, and the debt becomes a matter of pay that will not be quieted. If sickness comes, instead of having a fund to draw on, there is deficiency; the wolf at the door will be at his door. Things have changed since long ago. Then it was customary for the young man to practice self-denial in his youth, to work hard, gain experience and super leasure in the years beyond the line that divides youth and old age. Now it seems that the young man works on a different principle—his aim is to enjoy the sweets of life at once and save the labor and self-denial for a future day. There is enough of pleasure—healthy, joyous pleasure—that comes with legitimate and successful work, so that young people can afford to live slower for a few years that they may be better able to enjoy the years that follow.

Thrift is a stranger to those times. The tendency is in the opposite direction. Debt-contracting is the rule, not the exception. Nothing should be more carefully avoided by young people. Debt is a great curse. It brings no comfort. On the other hand, it is accompanied by worry and anxiety. The young man who keeps out of debt and secures a debt on the other side of the ledger, not only forms correct habits but he gains a satisfied peace of mind that cannot be secured in any other way, and he stands armed and ready for an emergency when it comes.—Peck's Sun.

AN old record shows that on Long Island, in 1765, Mary Case was fined for interrupting Mr. Laverich during his sermon. She said: "Come down thou whited wall, that feedest thyself and starvest the people."

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

Owen O'Donnell's fine residence on Beaver Island burned last Friday.

The Frankfort Express has evidently engaged a new humorist recently.

It is anticipated that a company will be organized at Bellaire with a capital of $50,000 for the manufacture of the Harriman patent table.

Grand Rapids and Allegan were both visited by very destructive fires last week. The loss of the latter town is nearly half a million dollars.

We have received from the press of the Traverse bay Eagle the proceedings of the Western Michigan Press Association, at its fifth annual meeting, Aug. 28-31, 1883, at Reed City, Mich.

A syndicate of land owners who hold hundreds of acres of good farming lands in the vicinity of Cheboygan has been formed to pay the expenses of an immigration commissioner to reside in New York this summer to induce immigrants to locate in their section.

The new manager of the Charlotte Leader adopts as a motto, "when the press compromises truth it ceases to be the guardian of liberty," and in the same page adds sixteen years to the age of the paper, making it volume thirty instead of fourteen. How does the editor harmonize these matters?

A Cross Village correspondent writes to the Harbor Springs Independent that Capt. Neil Gallagher and Paddy Frank were over from Beaver Island Thursday, with a double team. While the team were leaping across a creek, the sleigh caught in the ice in such a manner that Mr. Frank was thrown out and his right leg was badly fractured.

A house belonging to and occupied by John Jock and his wife, a couple of aged Hollanders, in Missaukee county was recently burned, and the charred bodies of the inmates were found in the ruins. There are grave suspicions of murder and incendiarism, as there were known to be several hundred dollars in the house at the time.

Another good boy has gone wrong by reading dime novels. James Riley, a New York messenger boy, was found on the streets a raving maniac. At first it was supposed that overwork in carrying messages had done it, but when he was heard to say "I'm Butts, the boy detective," the cause was plain. He has been in the habit of carrying a dime novel in his pocket with which to beguile the hours when delivering dispatches.

Fruit Prospects.

The following reports from Antrim and Grand Traverse counties, to the secretary of state, indicate to some extent the effect of the severe winter on fruit trees in this region:

From W. W. Johnson, Snowflake, Antrim county—The thermometer here indicated 12° below zero on the night of February 28. Last night (March 4) it showed 22 below. The peach buds were destroyed in the valleys by a cold night in January (29 below) but on the hills they were all right until this last cold spell. Have not time to learn to day the extent of the injury, if any. Am inclined to believe, however, that the crop will be only a partial failure in orchards on high ground. Apples are all right.

From Geo. Parmelee, Old Mission, Grand Traverse county—Previous to the "cold snap," the last of February, there was no damage to sweet cherry buds, and but very little to peaches. Yesterday (March 5) I found a few sweet cherry buds killed, though not enough to be missed in the crop, but of peach buds, except on seedlings, quite a number are killed, while some seedlings have suffered too. Look I think peat buds are all right, but the trees did not set full, and a large crop cannot be expected, though a few trees are showing well. Have not been able to go about much, but think the above represents fairly the conditions about here. Last fall I passed through several counties in this vicinity, and found everywhere a more or less unhealthy foliage, and have little faith in a heavy crop of apples on this account. A few varieties promise an average crop. Among these are the Baldwin, Duchess of Oldenburg, Tolofsky, and Hubbardston Nonsuch.

From J. G. Ramsdell, Traverse City, Grand Traverse county—Up to March 1 no material damage had been done in the county, although on one occasion the temperature had gone as low as 20° below zero. On March 2 the thermometer marked 22 degrees below zero at sunrise. What effect this may have upon fruit it is impossible to tell before the weather moderates. Cutting branches and bringing them into a warm room to thaw is too uncertain a test to report upon.

Curios.

Bahna seemed to fancy that I, as a zoologist, must take an equal interest in every class of animal life, and that, therefore, their application to the use and purpose of curry must be an important natural problem. So, if on Monday the vertebrata were represented by some delicate fish in my curry, on Tuesday this was replaced by noble prawns and shrimps, or by small crabs, as representing the crustacea. On Wednesday cuttle-fish (sepia or loligo) would appear, the most highly organized of the mollusca; while on Thursday we condescended to some edible oyster or to baked oysters. On Friday the worthy race of radiata were represented by starfish or echinodermata, the eggs of the sea-urchin, or the gelatinous texture of a holothuria, (trepang.) On Saturday I fully expected to have come down to the zoophytes, and to find medusæ or corals, sponges or actinia in my bowl of curry. My cook, however, clinging to an antiquated system, evidently regarded zoophytes as plants, and supplied their place with some winged creature—bats or birds, or sometimes the fleshy bodies of a burned beetle or moth. On Sundays, of course, he laid himself out to give me some special treat, and my curry was of the best, containing a fowl or a fat iguana, occasionally even a snake, which I at first mistook for an eel. Bahna was evidently convinced of the close affinities of birds with reptiles, and thought it made no difference whether he sent the earlier or the more recent type of sauropsis to table. Happily for my European prejudices, I was gradually initiated into the mongrel mysteries of curry, and consequently knew nothing of its constituents till after I had swallowed it in blind resignation. Besides, the thick sauce in which they were disguised contained such a mixture of spices, with particles of roots, fruits and leaves, that nothing short of anatomical analysis would have revealed the nature of the first elements, and this I carefully avoided.—A Visit to Ceylon, Haeckel.

—Fine sawdust, highly compressed, has been successfully used to make up center frames of carriage wheels. It is said to be so solid that it will bear a pressure equal to twenty-three tons per square inch. As sawdust has also been used for partitions and bricks, the application to the production of complex carvings and mouldings does not seem to be far off. This opens up quite a new market for sawdust, which has hitherto been a comparatively waste product.—Boston Post.

JOHN NICHOLLS,
CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,
Manufacturer of and Dealer in
HARDWOOD AND PINE
LUMBER!
ALSO
Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades,
WAGON TONGUES, SHINGLES, LATH, ETC.
LUMBER SAWED AND BILLS FILLED TO ORDER.

O. B. WEED & CO.
Are headquarters for
DRUGS
CHEMICALS,
Patent Medicines, all Kinds,
Imported and Domestic Perfumery.
Toilet Articles,
AND FANCY GOODS.
None but Pure Medicines
Kept in stock.
Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and unadulterated drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Bartholomew's new
Opera Block

JOSEPH HYLAND,
CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,
Sheet-Iron Worker,
and manufacturer of
Hyland's Patent Fireman.
Dealer in all kinds of
SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.
Heavy blacksmithing of all kinds, and Repairing of boilers promptly attended to.

O. W. SMITH,
ELECTRO-PLATER,
Manufacturing Jeweler
and Lapidist.
Electro-plating in Gold and Silver. Any article of Jewelry made to order. AGATES AND JASPERS cut to order. 29

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY
has purchased the
Ladies' and Children's
Furnishing Goods
Lately owned by Fisher & Brouwer, and will be pleased to retain all the old customers, and gain as many more as possible. Call and see my stock.

Sewing Machines
CHEAP.
A few fine sewing machines for sale at ten dollars each. Call soon and save your pay.
EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED
D. S. WAY.

FOR SALE.
A FINE
Pair of Oxen
Yoke, Chain, and Sled, for Cash.
Come Early.
J. MILO EATON.

New Goods.
At Cost
FOR CASH
For the Next 30 Days.
MISS L. SPAULDING,
Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

G. W. JEFFERIES,
Dealer in
Fresh and Cured Meat
Fresh and Salt Fish,
AND VEGETABLES.
Fat Stock and Farm Produce
Wanted.
West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

NEW GOODS.
I am pleased to say that my
Spring Stock
is ready for inspection. Come and see them, and when you want a suit of clothes that are JUST IN STYLE, you will know where to find them. My stock is all of the LATE STYLES,
AND Price to Correspond With the Times.
GEO. W. MILLER.

C. R. BELLINGER
carries the largest and finest stock of
JEWELRY
Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Optical Goods in Charlevoix county. Agent for the celebrated ROCKFORD WATCH, the best time-piece ever made. All goods left for repairs and not called for in six months are subject to sale for charges.

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at O. B. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

Bring your Election Tickets to the JOURNAL OFFICE to be Printed.

$1 A YEAR. $1
ONE DOLLAR. ONE DOLLAR.

$1 A YEAR. $1
TWO PAPERS FOR THE PRICE OF ONE
THE WEEKLY
Detroit Free Press
THE HOUSEHOLD
ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.
Two Large Pages of News and Reading Matter.
Specimen copies sent free. Address THE DETROIT FREE PRESS, DETROIT, MICH.

$1 A YEAR. $1
ONE DOLLAR. ONE DOLLAR.

$1 A YEAR. $1
Old Newspapers for Sale.

The Oldest Established Business on South Arm

S. G. ISAMAN,
South Arm, Mich.
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
A Large and Well-Selected Stock Always on Hand.
Dry Goods, Ready-made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, Glassware, Hardware, Drugs, Stationery, Notions, &c.,
AT LOW PRICES.
PRODUCE OF ALL KINDS TAKEN IN EXCHANGE FOR GOODS.
Give Me a Call. S. G. ISAMAN.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,
DEALER IN
Hardware,
FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.
Charlevoix, Mich.

AT COST!
All kinds of
Boots, Shoes, and Rubber Goods.
The Finest Line of
French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear
Ever brought to Charlevoix.
Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Burt Shoes.
They have no Superior.
CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY,
And Satisfaction Guaranteed.
L. B. CONNOR, opposite Bridge St. House
CHARLEVOIX.

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card in effect January, 1884.

GOING NORTH.

STATIONS.	No 1	No. 3	No. 5	No. 7
Chicago, lv.		9 00am	7 15pm
Kalamazoo	2 37pm	10 37	11 00
Allegan	3 24	11 27	11 56
Holland	4 11	11 57	12 21
Fort Wayne, ar.	6 32	2 20pm	3 30am
Fort Wayne, lv.		2 40	3 50	8 05pm
Kendallville		3 13	4 28	8 42
Ligonier		3 23	4 41	10 35
Goshen		3 43	5 10	11 05
Elkhart		4 00	5 35	11 35
Vicksburg		6 11	6 13	11 41
Kalamazoo, ar.		6 52	6 52	12 29am
Kalamazoo, lv.		7 02	7 12	1 32
Otsego		7 27	7 37	2 02
Allegan		7 45	7 55	2 20
Otsego		8 15am	10 05	3 45
Plainwell		8 27	10 20	3 57
Gun Prairie		8 33	10 26	4 03
Otsego		8 43	10 36	4 13
Otsego		8 53	12 10pm	7 12
Allegan		9 17	12 37	8 12
Holland		10 27	2 23	9 30
Grand Rapids, ar.		11 25	3 25	10 30
Grand Rapids, lv.			5 55
Kalkaska			1 17	12 00am
Mancelona			1 49	12 35
Bear Lake			5 47	2 29
Petoskey, ar.			6 24	3 14
Harbor Springs			6 45	3 40
Traverse City, lv.			8 00	6 00
St. Ignace			6 00	6 50
Marquette			7 00am	5 50am
Negaunee, ar.			7 12	7 00

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No. 2	No. 4	No. 6	No. 8
Negaunee, lv.			5 15pm	7 20am
Marquette			9 00	8 30
St. Ignace			5 45am	6 15pm
Mackinaw City			6 10	7 10
Harbor Springs			7 00	8 30
Petoskey, lv.			7 35	9 00
Bear Lake			8 14	12 17am
Mancelona			9 19	1 22
Kalkaska			9 35	1 34
Traverse City, lv.			8 15am
Cadillac, lv.		5 30pm	11 45	5 50
Wexford		5 54	12 03	6 16
Manton		6 12	12 20pm	6 35
Grand Rapids, ar.		8 35	2 35	8 47
Grand Rapids, lv.	8 35am	9 00	4 00	10 25
Grand Haven	11 15	11 40	6 22	12 25pm
Holland	12 11	12 35pm	7 22	2 29
Allegan	1 08	2 35	8 47	4 00
Otsego	1 27	2 54	9 06	4 19
Plainwell	1 40	3 07	9 19	4 32
Gun Prairie		3 13	9 25	4 38
Otsego		3 23	9 35	4 48
Otsego		3 53	10 05	5 18
Kalamazoo		4 25	10 37	5 49
Vicksburg		5 07
Kalamazoo, ar.		5 17	10 47	6 49
Kalamazoo, lv.		5 27	11 00
Battle Creek		5 55	11 28
Marshall		6 14	11 47
Albion		6 29	12 02am
Jackson		7 00	12 35
Chicago, ar.		7 00pm	12 00pm	7 30am

C. L. LOCKWOOD, Agt. G. P. Agt., Grand Rapids, Mich.

THE JOURNAL
Charlevoix, Mich., March 20, 1884.

Business Announcements.

A genuine article in Butter at B. Mer.

Any amount of Sap Buckets at bottom prices, at L. D. Bartholomew's.

The best oysters of the season, going the most cheap, at Upright, Emery & Co.'s.

Upright, Emery & Co. have just received the finest sample ever offered to the trade, 50c, the finest sample ever offered to the trade.

Upright, Emery & Co. are headquarters for fine Fresh Groceries and Flavoring Extracts.

Fresh Coffees, Teas, Spices, Crackers, Oysters, Foreign and Domestic Dried Fruits and Canned Goods received this week. Upright Emery & Co.

The Temperature.

The following is a record of observations of the thermometer at the house of office, at 7 a. m. and 2 p. m., each day, for the week ending yesterday:

	7 A.M.	2 P.M.
Thursday	18	28
Friday	18	31
Saturday	18	24
Sunday	16	29
Monday	26	29
Tuesday	19	34
Wednesday	30	42

Provision Market.

Retail prices to consumers, as corrected every Wednesday evening by UPRIGHT, EMERY & CO.'S GROCERY:

FLOUR, per bbl, $6.00, $7.00, and $8.00.
BUCKWHEAT FLOUR, per cwt, $3.00.
CORN MEAL, per cwt, bolted $1.00; unbolted, $1.00.
HAY, per ton, $22.
OATS, per bu, 45c.
GROUND FEED, per cwt, $1.00.
APPLES, per bu, $1.50.
POTATOES, per bu, 50c.
ONIONS, per bu, $1.00.
BUTTER, per lb, 22c.
EGGS, per doz, 15@20c.
LARD, per lb, 10@12c.
HAMS, sm. Shoulders, 12@c.
SALT PORK, per lbs, 8c.
MAN'FACT'D TOBACCO, per lb, 60c.
CHEESE, 9c.
WATER WHITE OIL, 25c.
FARMERS PRODUCE in good demand

Fresh Meats from the Market.

MEAT, per lb, Sirloin steak, 20c; pork steak, 20c; mutton steak, 15@17c; sausage, 15c; hams, 14c; shoulders, 12c.
TALLOW, 4@5c.

Local News Brevities.

"Octoroon" Saturday night.

Peak family to-morrow night.

The business outlook is encouraging.

Won't some of our subscribers bring us some wood.

Geo. W. Jefferies returned home yesterday.

Read L. L. Carr's new advertisement this week.

Some of our correspondents are taking a long rest.

Mike Latney's robust form is again visible on our streets.

C. Y. Cook and family returned to Charlevoix on Tuesday.

Harrison Miller expects to return to Beaver Island this week.

The last laugh of the season,—at opera house to morrow night.

Strangers are accumulating around our hotels and boarding houses.

R. W. Kane will visit Kalamazoo and other places south this week.

J. A. Cameron, of Boyne City, gave the JOURNAL a call on Wednesday.

Fred. Smith and Al. Washburne will visit friends in Flint this week.

Refreshments at opera house to-morrow night after the entertainment.

E. H. Green is to muster a post of the G. A. R. at Boyne City to night.

The family of Wm. Hamlin rejoices over a ten pound girl, born Tuesday morning.

We have sampled Upright, Emery & Co's mackerel, and know them to be fine.

John Connor, book-keeper for the Pine Lake Iron Co., goes to Chicago this week.

Charlie Mason, who cut his leg so severely a few weeks ago, is making a good recovery.

Do not forget the entertainment at the opera house to-morrow evening. Admission 25 cents.

While coasting one day this week Bert Mason ran through a fence and had his nose broken.

It has been intimated that the portrait on our first page might easily be mistaken for our genial prosecuting attorney.

Robert Miller's wife was called to her father's home this week by the sickness of her father.

Charlevoix can boast of another live young attorney. He will reside with J. M. Clark for a few years.

D. Sherwood & Co. are enlarging their store, to make room for a large spring stock of boots and shoes.

The first of the season,—a young man fell off the pier, and was thoroughly wet, yesterday about noon.

A fly-wheel weighing nearly half a ton, was cast at the Charlevoix foundry last Thursday, for Bernard Barnes.

Messrs. C. A. Reinhart and Merritt Smith, of the East Jordan dramatic club, gave the JOURNAL a call last Thursday.

Henry O. Johnson and Florence M. Cole joined their fortunes on the 17th. May their investment prove a profitable and happy one.

L. G. Evins finds business good on his Charlevoix and Elk Rapids express line this winter and spring. Last week two extra trips were required to accommodate the traffic of this line.

Will our correspondents please remember and sign their names to all communications? We do not require them to publish, but it is necessary to know the author of all communications published.

We have been told that the Peak Family are from Alaska. If this true, they are a long distance from home, and this alone is sufficient to excite curiosity as to what sort of people they are. The only way to settle the question is to go and see.

"I am alpha and omega," is the text announced for the morning service at M. E. church next Sunday. In the evening a temperance lecture will be delivered on the theory that "if we can control the buyer, we will have a wonderful grip on the drinker."

The East Jordan dramatic club will present the four act drama, the "Octoroon," at the opera house on Saturday evening. The Enterprise, in noticing the performance in East Jordan, pronounce it a success, equal to the performance of most professional travelling troupes.

O. W. Smith has invented two articles likely to come into general use, and he may yet reap fame and wealth from them. One is his patent sleighbrake, mentioned in another column, and the other is a paint-brush holder. This latter will relieve painters of much of the strain on the fingers, and in house-painting will add a large percentage to a man's work. We predict a large sale.

The concert given by the Band of Hope at the M. E. church last evening was a success in every respect. The little ones did well in both songs and recitations, and their performance is a great credit to the ladies in charge of the entertainment. The ladies desire to thank Prof. Rice and others for the active interest shown in the exercises. A collection was taken, amounting to $4.46, for which the society also return thanks.

"There has been good sleighing at Charlevoix since December, and an unprecedented amount of wood, bark, posts, ties and logs have been banked around Pine lake. One Charlevoix firm has on hand 25,000 cedar posts 20,000 cedar ties, 6,000 cords of wood and 400,000 feet of hardwood logs, etc. New lumber and shingle mills are being built at different points, and the coming navigation season promises to be the most active and profitable in the history of Charlevoix county."—Evening News.

A recent letter from Westfield, N. Y., contains the following in praise of our winter weather: "I have been very much interested in the daily thermometric observations taken at your office. I have compared them carefully with our temperature here, and find for the month of January the average temperature to be eight degrees lower here on the south shore of lake Erie than at your place, three degrees farther north. Lowest temperature here, 24° below. February temperature very nearly alike. In the last cold spell of over one week's duration, you have had the temperature (on Sunday, March 2) three degrees lower than here; the rest of the time, at morning observation about the same, but at afternoon observation you have it warmer than with us. These observations speak well for your latitude in winter."

The Village Finances.

To satisfy those who may be inclined to watch with suspicion the actions of the new council, we give below a statement of the condition of the village treasury at the present time, and also the indebtedness to be provided for this year. The report of the treasurer shows the following:

Cash on hand, March, 1883	$400 62
Received from saloon licenses	297 00
Received from all other sources	47 63
Total	$745 25
Total expenses	743 95
Balance on hand	$1 33

In addition to this amount there is $10 in the hands of the clerk, and $14 in the hands of the marshal, making a total of $25.33 available funds at this date.

The total indebtedness of the village, to be provided for by the council, is something like the following, as shown in a report by clerk Mayne at the last meeting:

Unpaid orders	$8 58
Salaries and bills allowed. Amount to become due for clearing snow from sidewalks	90 05
Interest on park bond, due June 8	95 00
Balance on fire engine, due July 12	59 50
Hose and firemen supplies due Oct. 19, including interest	275 00
Total	$1,013 65

Deducting from this the $25.33 cash on hand, leaves $988.32 to be provided for, in addition to the other necessary expenses to be incurred from time to time. As this all comes due before the December taxes are collected, it may be necessary to call in a portion of the tax early in the year. And if the taxes are increased this year, it should be credited to the proper source.

Alcohol and Tobacco.

Rev. Geo. W. Bell discussed the above subject before the liberal club at the opera house Monday evening, showing their evil effects upon the human organism, and classing them with narcotic poisons. The cause of drunkenness he attributed to the very prevalent use of tobacco, and produced statistics showing that many who had committed crime while intoxicated, acknowledged that they commenced with tobacco. He said that tobacco creates a desire for stimulants. The evil effects of both upon the constitution were shown, and medical and scientific authorities quoted. The lecture was illustrated with an experiment with alcohol.

Remarks by members of the club generally admitted the evil effects shown by the speaker, though some were not prepared to admit all the statements made.

The club wish to return thanks to Messrs. Bice, Wheat, and Carr, and the young ladies who furnished the music. Also to W. C. Newman for his recitation of Shanus O'Brien, and to Dan Rhoades who enlivened the occasion with his banjo.

Log Broken.

Yesterday afternoon, while Jos. McElroy and Eddy Stewart, a fifteen year old son of Alex. Stewart, were driving to the woods for a load of ties and posts, the boy dropped his legs down through the sleigh, and one was caught by a stump, breaking it just above the ankle. Mr. M. turned the team homeward, and on the way was fortunately met by Dr. Preston, who gave the case his attention, and in fifteen minutes from the time of the accident the doctor was at work on the broken limb, which will doubtless make a quick recovery.

Rumors from Hayes.

That two Indians, after imbibing too much "body rot" at Ironton one evening last week, started to cross Pine Lake, and were frozen before reaching the opposite shore.

That the daughter of one of our prominent Hayesites was married to an engineer on one of our inland boats.

That our treasurer has not been very successful in getting in all the taxes of this town. Money seems to be scarce in spite of the republican business boom.

That there is to be telephonic communication established between lake Michigan and our "corner grocery."

That if some of the inhabitants of Hayes, when they went to Charlevoix, would imbibe less "body-rot," it would be better for themselves and families.

Lakeview school closes next Friday after a most successful term of four months. The teacher, though young, is favorably mentioned by all the patrons of the school.

Sugar-making will soon have a boom.

D. H. Pierce had the misfortune to lose a valuable ox he was wintering for Josiah Gibson.

Sudden Death at Norwood.

Last Monday it was announced here that Mrs. Eva Johnson, wife of Nathan Johnson, and youngest daughter of Hon. Richard Knight, of Norwood, died suddenly at her father's residence that morning. The facts as near as we can learn were that on Sunday morning she had attended church with her husband, and on her return home, not feeling well, had lain down to rest and sleep, remaining the afternoon and evening. At 12 and again at 3 o'clock Monday morning, she called for water, which was given and then she dropped to sleep. Two hours later, her husband spoke to her, and getting no answer, was surprised to find her dead.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson were married Dec. 27. A portion of the time since has been spent visiting friends, but for a few weeks they have lived with her parents. She has been in good health at all times, which makes the announcement more severely felt by the community and friends.

Smith's Patent Sleigh Brake.

This is an invention recently introduced to our business men, the inventor and proprietors being prominent residents of this village. If it always works as well as at the trial last Thursday, there is no doubt of its success and value both to dealers and users. It can be applied to any sleigh, is simple in construction, always ready for use, cannot get out of repair, and makes it possible to draw a heavy load down a steep hill without danger to team or load. The smallest team can hold the largest load on a very steep hill; the track is left in good condition, the ice being left where broken, and not dragged down as with a chain. The brake also prevents a sideways movement of the sleigh. Arrangements are being made for introducing it, and we have no doubt it will come into general use next winter. For particulars call on Class. Ely.

Historical Society.

Over 60 of our citizens gathered at O. S. Washburn's on Tuesday evening at the regular meeting of this society. The opening exercise was an instrumental solo, by Luna Washburn.

Mrs. Mayne followed with select readings, both amusing and instructive.

Jos. Dixon gave a recitation and the usual intermission followed.

After the intermission, Fred. W. Mayne read a selection from McCauley, touching the competitive civil service examination of England for her official appointments in India.

Miss Maud Loveley recited "The Chieftain's daughter."

The next meeting will be held at O. D. Wood's, the second at N. Aingle's, the third at Bridge street house, and fourth and last for the season, at A. Buttars' on April 8th.

Ironton.

Wood is coming in lively.

Town caucus next Saturday.

John Otis went to Mancelona Sunday evening.

The furnace makes its usual run from week to week.

Rev. Mr. May preached at the school house Thursday evening.

Rev. Mr. Blake proceed to an attentive audience last Sunday.

Geo Burton has a display of fine arts at the school house.

The school exhibition came off Friday evening with J. M. Harris principal, and 100 children as actors.

Quarterly meeting next Saturday and Sunday. Don't forget to bring your dues. [Our correspondent does not state what society meets.]

A. F. Draper and James Draper, an uncle from southern Michigan, visited his sister, Mrs. Walter Manney, this week.

Death of James Otis.

We learn that Mr. James Otis, superintendent of the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s furnace at Ironton, died at that place at two o'clock yesterday morning, as a result of his injuries received on Feb. 22d. Mr. Otis has been constantly under the care of Dr. Carlstein, who gave up 24 his other patients, and devoted his whole time, day and night, to this case. For the first two weeks there were hopes of recovery, but since that time he has grown weaker quite fast, until death relieved him of his suffering.

We do not know to what extent this will effect the workings of the affairs of the company, but from what we have heard of him, it will be difficult to find a more active, thorough manager than Mr. Otis.

Episcopal Service.

Rev. E. J. Babcock, general missionary of the diocese of western Michigan, expects to hold service and preach at the school house in this village on Monday evening, March 24th, at 7:30 o'clock. He would be glad to see all who will come and especially would he like to meet personally all communicants, and all others who may in any way connected with or interested in the Episcopal church, after the service, to confer with reference to more frequent occasional services.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by Upright Bros., real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, March 18, 1884, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

John Nicholls and wife to R. R. Chapman, lots 1 and 2, Sec. 6, $400.
David Hyland and wife to Joseph Hyland, s w ¼, 13-32-4, $1,000.
David Hyland and wife to Joseph Hyland, n w ¼, 13-32-4, $1,200.
Martin V. Beer to George C. Rundall, and ½ of 1 acre, Sec. 2-31-7, $1,500.
Frank Aiko and wife to Settle Karlokis, lot 5, block E, Advance, $150.

Born.

HAMLIN—On Tuesday, March 11, a daughter to Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hamlin.

Married.

JOHNSON—COLE—At the M. E. parsonage, March 17, 1884, by Rev. J. J. Gilbert, Mr. HENRY O. JOHNSON and Miss FLORENCE M. COLE, all of Charlevoix.

CROTHERS—NEFF—At the M. E. parsonage, by Rev. J. J. Gilbert, Mr. JOHN CROTHERS, of East Jordan, and FLORA B. NEFF, of Levisville, Mich.

Died.

OTIS—At Ironton, March 19, 1884, Mr. James Otis, superintendent of the Pine Lake Iron Co's furnace, from injuries received on Feb. 22d.

JOHNSON—At Norwood, March 17, 1884, Mrs. Eva Johnson, wife of Nathan Johnson, and youngest daughter of Richard Knight.

Thousands are being cured of CATARRH every year which Dr. Sykes's Catarrh Cure, that the doctors had given up and said could not be cured. 75 cents a bottle. Sold by Dr. Crouter

Fresh Oysters
Just Received.
300 pounds Candy and Nuts.
Two Barrels Fresh Butter.
Golden Thread Sauer Kraut.
Two Cases Fresh Oysters, 25 and 35 Cents.
AT L. L. CARR'S.

TOWNSHIP CAUCUS.

A township caucus will be held at the Block School House, in the township of MARION, on Saturday, the 29th day of March, 1884, at one o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating township officers.

FOR SALE.
Eighty acres of land, with or without improvements. Also one hundred and twenty acres, all cleared, well fenced, and in good condition. Inquire of J. A. Hurd, on north shore of Pine Lake.
J. A. HURD.
3tf

HALL'S
Catarrh Cure
Is Recommended by Physicians
$100 REWARD FOR A CASE IT FAILS TO CURE.
We manufacture and sell it with positive guarantee that it will cure any case of catarrh, no matter how long standing, and we will deposit the above amount in Gold in a single instance.
It is unlike any other catarrh remedy, as it is taken internally, acting upon the blood, and not snuffed into the nostrils or blown from an atomizer, as most catarrh remedies are, and consequently it has not got to send 10 cts and we will forward immediately. Price, 75 cents per bottle.
F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.
Dr. Crouter, Agt., Charlevoix. 22

A QUESTION.

If death be an eternal sleep,
Why doth the spring return
To scatter flowers beneath our feet,
And the wastes of winter spurn?

If death be an eternal sleep,
Why do the buried plants
Send forth new buds, as if to mock
And whom the spreading plants?

If death be an eternal sleep,
Why the ocean's ceaseless flow,
When we possess all their journeys keep
And leave weary gone?

If death be an eternal sleep,
Why do we hope for heaven,
When we approach the mercy seat
And ask to be forgiven?

If death be an eternal sleep,
When will justice come
To those who rob the widow's meat,
And receive her scanty crumbs?

If death be an eternal sleep,
Why do we sing aloud
The joy it must be local to Abraham's seat,
Where angels sing loud?

If death be an eternal sleep,
Why we must live
And why should he life vigils keep,
If there be no coming more?

LADY BEST'S MISTAKE.

They lived in a creeper-covered cottage, nestling among verdure in the highly cultivated valley of one of the Home counties. There was a small dairy farm attached to it, upon which Lady Best busied herself for her leisure hours, and thereby managed to add no inconsiderable sum to her income, which since her husband's death had been rather limited.

With the money derived from this source she had been able to send her only son, Arthur, to Oxford—Arthur, who was the apple of her eye, the one only being for whom she really cared. She had given him a liberal education, and it had not been received on stony ground, for Arthur was clever, and in a book-worm, too much so for worthly purposes, since he had indulged in study and contemplation till his head became a dreamer. By the time he reached the age of 25 it had been declared by all the neighbors, and Lady Best's circle generally, that Arthur would never do any good for himself in life—a hard verdict, considering that he had not a single vice, and was handsome and manly looking. Not that his habits and pursuits were exactly manly; fishing was the only sport in which he had ever been known to indulge, and his sport his time for the most part in wandering listlessly about the valley, wearing clothes of a somewhat esthetic cut, which was particularly distasteful to his rural neighbors, a slouching felt hat on his head, and a book—generally poetry—in his hand.

Idolizing Arthur though she did, it depressed Lady Best not a little to see him take to an effeminate, do-nothing style of life; and since he had now wasted more than a year in this sort of dream, she began to despair of seeing him embark in any of the professions for which she had hoped his education would have fitted him. What she was to do—how she was to change the current of events—she did not know.

"Was he in love? Had he had a disappointment?" her acquaintances asked her till she was tired of answering. The question, however, at last suggested a remedy. Why should not a touch of the very disease from which people thought he was suffering, bring about his cure?

Girls! she would surround him with girls; of course, while she had a the regard for good looks, never forgetting that, in her estimation, nothing made the eyes glisten with so much pleasure as the sight of gold.

So Lady Best gave a tennis party, and invited all the beauty of the county, including two or three heiresses; but before the afternoon was half over, Arthur had disappeared. He had wandered down into the valley, away from "the noise," as he called the musical laughter of these maidens, promising himself to return as soon as they should all be gone.

Lady Best was disappointed, but not crushed; she would try again, this time in a quieter, but, she hoped, more effectual way.

"Arthur was out so much, she was at times very dull," she told him; "more over she wanted some assistance in effecting one or two dairy reforms." Her oldest brother's daughter—Hannah Milton—aged 16, was, she understood, a decidedly practical, energetic girl. She had not seen her since she was a baby, but she should like to invite her on a long visit, and make her her assistant. Had Arthur any objection?

"No, none whatever. Of course his mother was perfectly free to do as she liked."

But would he be civil and kind to this unknown cousin when she came?

"If she pleased him, certainly; but doubtless, she would in no way interfere with his pursuits."

Not very encouraging if Lady Best had any serious intentions in reference to Miss Hannah Milton, who—we will observe in parenthesis—she believed would sooner or later come into the possession of at least a hundred thousand pounds.

Not a word of this did she, however, utter to Arthur; but, without further discussion, wrote an affectionate letter to her niece, asking her to come and stay at the cottage as long as she could endure the frugality and smallness of their impecunious life.

Miss Hannah Milton answered her offer of past that she would be delighted to avail herself of her aunt's invitation, more especially as her father was going abroad on business, and she should be her own mistress for the next two months. She might be expected to arrive, bag and baggage, at the cottage on the 5th of July. It was then the end of June.

To this announcement followed a postscript that she hoped her dear aunt did not object to living animals, as of course she could not leave her all alone at Milton Hall during her own and her father's absence.

Lady Best was delighted at the success of her letter, and wrote again to say that both she and Arthur were particularly fond of pets.

Arthur had read Miss Milton's letter, and merely said that he hoped the dogs, if they were dogs, were thoroughbreds; he hated everything that was not perfect.

So, till the 5th of July, the Cottage, whenever Arthur went out—for it could not be expected that he should endure fuss and clutter—was converted into preparations for the arrival of the heir-presumptive and her retinue. A bedroom was turned into a boudoir for her private use, and two bedrooms adjoining were set aside for herself and her maid.

The Cottage was one of those cosiest establishments, with countless small rooms, capable of taking in a far larger number of people than its exterior would lead you to imagine.

Hannah Milton's home was in the north; it would be quite evening before she would arrive, and Lady Best passed all the day in a state of feverish excitement, wandering from room to room. She seemed to feel that there was a deficiency at stake; while Arthur—the individual who was in all probability the most concerned—was quietness itself, and collected, and passed the hours in his habitual placid enjoyment of a book.

The poetic shade of twilight was already creeping up the valley when wheels were heard approaching the cottage, and Lady Best' went out into the porch to receive her guest. Pain would she have persuaded Arthur to accompany her, but he preferred an armchair by the window.

At last the carriage is at the door, and Hannah Milton, having sprung out, is clamorously kissing her aunt.

There is nothing aesthetic or dreamy about her. She has a broad, plain, honest, open face, with fine eyes, and a large mouth full of strong-looking white teeth—not the adjectival pearls, she is beauty, but you can see at a glance that Hannah Milton is a thoroughly good, kind, sincere woman. Her voice is very loud, but it has the ring of a true heart. It frightens Lady Best, however, as she thinks, "What will Arthur say? Will he run away from Hannah, or allow himself to be subdued by her?"

In the carriage besides Hannah—half concealed by bird-cages, a Persian cat, and three small dogs of different breeds—there is a girl; the maid, of course. The dogs and the cat spring out after Hannah, and the maid collects the bird-cages, dust as the unnoticed occupant of the carriage is stepping out, Hannah turns round.

"Oh, I forgot; let me introduce my dearest friend, Agatha Burghley. Of course you expected her; she never leaves me, you know."

Lady Best held out her hand in a welcome to which her heart had no response; nor did she speak, except to say:

"And your maid, Hannah?"

Miss Milton burst out laughing. "That is a luxury to which I am not entitled—is we, Aggy? We arrange our toilets ourselves, and very effective they are sometimes—eh?"

Lady Best looked again at this companion of whom she had never heard before. No, decidedly not; if she had known of her existence she would never have asked Hannah to the cottage. For Agatha was beautiful, of that refined, spiritualized beauty about which poets rave.

For an indefinite period she had invited Hannah, and this companion, this Agatha, was she also to be their hostess—to share their rooms?

The meeting with Arthur, however, could not be deferred, and Lady Best led the way into the drawing-room.

She was as cordial as it was in her nature to be in her conventional excusion, but when the same formula of greeting was with which Lady Best had been greeted was gone through, and Agatha, dragged forward by her earthly friend, stood before him, with the pale gleam of the rising moonlight on her face, he started back as though he had seen a spectre, more in fear than in admiration, as it seemed to his anxious watching mother.

There was no time, however, for speculation as to what feelings Agatha had awakened in Arthur's breast, the revelries were unerring themselves, and Hannah, in her blunt way, declared herself to be famishing.

"A rapid toilet and dinner. Come on, Agatha, we shall not keep Lady Best waiting long," and the two girls went quickly up into the rooms that had been prepared for them.

In less than a quarter of an hour they came back, looking as fine and span as if they had made no long journey. It was very obvious that the services of a maid were unnecessary.

The evening, however, was scarcely a merry one. Arthur was more than usually silent and so—Hannah was very tired; she was not so robust as Hannah, who was the only lively one of the party, and chattered incessantly to Lady Best, who, for once in her life, was not a good listener. All her attention was riveted on "that young person," as she, already, in her mind, designated the somewhat fashionably dressed Agatha.

Hannah was very full of the projected dairy reforms. She loved everything that gave her practical tendencies full vent; but Lady Best was by no means as keen as she was.

"While they were reforming, what would Arthur and his beautiful Agatha be doing?" she asked herself. If Hannah would only turn her full attention on the Lr more important work of reforming Arthur?

Lady Best was, however, too much of a diplomatist to let her thoughts appear in words; no, she must act, manœuvre, watch.

Of course the first thing next morning Hannah expressed a wish to go over the farm, and, accompanied by Agatha, she and Lady Best started on a tour of inspection. Arthur had gone the farm at sunrise, he said, and it did not cause him; he preferred remaining in the house till luncheon time.

With the explanations and discussions which this farming pilgrimage entailed, Lady Best's spirits rose, and she became thoroughly absorbed in her subject, rejoicing that she had found so congenial a companion and able coworker in Hannah. On a sudden, however, her spirits fell to zero—Agatha had disappeared. "Of course, she had gone to join Arthur; it was a preconcerted plan between them," and the mother as she thought of it became perfectly miserable.

No more talk about gallons of milk, butter, and cheese, in her imagination. She was tired, she said, and if Hannah did not mind, they would return to the house. They reached the bottom of the garden, which lay in front of the drawing-room window, just as Agatha, accompanied by Arthur, strolled up the terrace toward the wood.

The sight was just tearing; this then was to be the end of her loving care for Arthur! he was going to Hannah's parlous companion. Nor did Hannah's mind, as she, too, perceived them, tend to calm the excited mother's fears.

"Oh! they are going to have a little chat. I will lagge the reapers and over the better."

"A chat with my son? Has this—this Miss Burghley not Arthur before?"

Hannah laughed. "Did you not know? Oh then I must not tell the secret—it is a very, very, very, I think, I don't look so rueful, aunty mine. The secret is not of a very dreadful nature."

Lady Best was, however, in no mood to be consoled by this intelligence. "Arthur has been carrying on with this girl unknown to her, and hence the reason of his dejection and listlessness, of course the neighbors were right, love was the root of all evil. And to think of the little minx forcing herself in here under Hannah's auspices! Oh! it was too bad to entertain such a bad; she had been treated shamefully."

And, her heart too full to speak without committing herself, she quickly prevented when she remembered that this girl must have been conniving to deceive her, she went indeed, up into her own room, of which she locked the door, and then indulged in the luxury of a vehemence burst of tears.

For more than an hour she remained there, sobbing and composing herself by turns, till at last she heard voices under the window. Cautiously approaching herself, she peeped from behind the curtain.

There they were, all three talking and laughing. "Young people!" was Arthur's face which she had not seen before for months.

It was strange, very strange; and, as she stood and watched them, she could not make up her mind whether she had not made a mistake in asking these people to come. Arthur all of his love for Agatha saved Arthur from despondency and made a man of him, she might to consider her object gained.

Any way, she made up her mind to hasten for the present and think no more; and, so deciding, she washed her face, smoothed her silvering hair, set her cap quietly on her head, and went down stairs, where the luncheon was ready, and waited for more observe than she her had been on the previous evening.

And the days passed on—life at the Cottage seemed very bright to Lady Best, in her mind, and Lady Best felt that she had been deceived—not even though it gladdened her heart to hear Arthur laughing merrily, as he sometimes did at his cousin's sallies, or to see him take an interest he never took before in the farm and its workings.

Agatha's pale, beautiful face would come between the mother and the change her presence seemed to have effected, and Lady Best felt that she could never love Agatha, even though Arthur's whole happiness was centered in her.

But if she had lost a son she had gained a daughter; for, appreciating Hannah's merits as she did to the fullest, she felt that she was each day learning to love her more and more. Many times was it on her lips to tell her how grieved she was at the direction Arthur's fancy seemed to have taken, but pride held her back.

At last, almost before they could believe in its approach, St. Partridge arrived, and with it a letter from Mr. Milton, saying he should be back in less than a week, but he would take the Cottage on his way, see his sister, and escort his daughter home.

What tears and heart-throbbings did this letter produce! Hannah was evidently in despair at leaving the Cottage, Arthur became as despondent as he was two months ago; only Agatha seemed tranquil and happy.

"Of course not, since she expects to stay here always; not that she is happy. She will not live here with me," regret Lady Best to herself.

And in this mood Arthur found her one morning when he sought her in the little morning room she called her own. He broke the ice without my preliminary skirting over it.

"Mother, will it not be a pleasure to you if I bring you a daughter to welcome?"

"Oh, Arthur, if you only knew how I have dreaded this question!"

"Dreaded it, mother? I thought you would be delighted."

"How could I? A penniless, lackadaisical, intriguing—" the rest of SONGS OF THE HUMORISTS.

A DILEMMA.

To write, or not to write, that is the question.
Whether it is better in the mind to suffer
The pettish a or letters outrageous
A young lady to write, in her account sign allow,
And having kept the back two years, more or Or
And then not written in
Or to take the pen against a host of doubts and
And, if once wishing, end them? To start to write—
To write—perchance to make a hit—ay, there's the rub.
For in that sickness kind what feelings are
Would fall to sympathy, when distressed self,
And many distressed—but, no,
Whose one is willing to take grief, for time
If he should make a hint, he draws a line
Upon the spot.
It is sentimental, and meant to mark
The place where I did time. And
Before she read and knows it, and thinks
That she is happy.

DROPPED ON HIS NAME.

Blinson says one feel a sympathy
Not round, and big, and round
Because Blinson's name was Jerry.
To almost eclipse her hand.

Beside her young Nicolas was standing—
And Nicolas's own apples, too,
"An, Nellie," said Nicolas, "you frighten
A bite of your apple—all, do!"

Dear Nellie held out the big apple;
Nicl opened his mouth very wide—
So wide that the mouth of my apple
Could almost have gone inside!

Nicl said, when he had eaten her apple,
The apple looked small, I declare,
When Nellie said, "Nicl, I hate to be rude,
Leaving that bite behind me."

Nicl said, "Nellie, I meant it a compliment,
The a thought times her face grew bright;
"Well, yours tastes like the apple—
I'd rather have bite like!"

EUROPEAN HYMN.

Change yr heart, ole Uncle Moses,
Change yr heart!
For de black skin on yer nose
Is yellow!
All de world's comin' down,
Change yr heart!

Chorus—Yes, de ole chap's comin' down,
Change yr heart!
Lookin' at de world's comin' down,
Change yr heart!
That wa way ole Uncle Moses,
Change yr heart!
Yes, de ole chap's comin' down,
Change yr heart!

Uncle Moses, you always yer way
Jine de hole band,
Ar' white Prince Bismarck
Ole Uncle Moses,
Change yr heart!
Yes, de ole chap's comin' down,
Change yr heart!

Chorus—Gosh! look at de Prince!
Lemme see his a shiner,
Ole Moses, change yr de color,
Change yr heart!
Ar' white Prince Bismarck
Ar' ole Uncle Moses,
Change yr heart!

—Texas Siftings.

TO MY LOVE.

I'm in love while you, Baby Louise!
With your brown hair and your blue eyes,
And the dimples that come in your cheeks
And the smile that I see back in your skies—
Yes, sunshine, Baby Louise!

When you hold your hands, Baby Louise!
Your hands, little and soft and white
With a pretty, tameness, saint-like air,
As you bring to mind some angel-taught prayer
Or a round above, Baby Louise!

I'm in love with you, Baby Louise!
Why, you are just the most beautiful head
Since the days when your cheek will grow red
With a blush of delight to see the noble said,
Yes, sunshine, Baby Louise!

Do you love me, Baby Louise?
I have sung your praise in lays of light and lower,
And your kisses keep dancing lower and lower,
And your caresses are sweeter than honey,
Unqualified fairest Louise!

HOW IT WAS INVENTED.

Old Mother Hubbard
Went to the cupboard
To get her poor dog a bone;
But when she got there
The cupboard was bare
And he got her out and gone.

She went to a grocery
To know what to do,
For of course she had not a cent;
So she sold her best suit
To her aunt for the brute,
And so down in her shoes she went.

The shoes she wore
And the clothes to boot
Bought the dog a bone, I meant;
But when she came back
Lookin' ever so black,
Why, I know they got rushing about.

—Washington Hatchetman.

A VIS SIDER.

The Whitehall Times gives a sensational dramatic news of an impending spiritual relief, with much economy of type:

Tyler is a lawyer. He is Enough to take life fro.
Tyler is a lawyer. He is
And thinks of what he
He hears the chatter of the J's
As they make other T's.
Ah! Tyler, Tyler, I wish D K's
Ar' Jack's lawyer, too.

A pair of oxen he will U's,
With many laws and A's
And, if he wins, he will B's Q's
With papers for the U's.

In raising crops to sell X L's
And buy new clothes for Ma,
And where he sows his seed by spelin
He also sells in law.

Very Fastidious.

A couple of gentlemen were dining, or preparing to dine, at a certain restaurant. When the eloquent waiter had said: "Hasselbeefandtomoloporkeandsausagedrisliver?" one of the gentlemen shrugged his shoulders and exclaimed:

"Don't bring me any liver."

"Ah!" exclaimed the other gentleman, "then I take it you are not particularly fond of liver."

"No, not in the least. I don't yearn for liver."

"Any particular reason?"

"Why, you. You see I can hardly take up a copy of a daily paper, nowadays, but I see the advertisement, 'Look—A liver complaint! Cure dig.' So you see the association is not pleasant. So far as I am concerned, it doesn't make a shit's difference whether it is a liver-colored dog or a dog-colored liver with which they hand my appetite."—Texas Siftings.

Keat's Verbal Power.

As regards verbal expression, a close test of original power, he certainly outranks my poet since Shakspeare. Others are pools and something more, or less—reformers, men of the world, or like Kerner and Chenier, agiow for heroic action. Keats had but one ambition; he was all poet, and I think he would have remained so.—Edmund C. Stedman, in the Century.

A MASSACHUSETTS cult has become so fast that it chews tobacco and drinks liquor.

WALKING made easy—that is, by riding.

A HUNTER'S STORY.

How He Was Overcome, and He Was by Which He Was Finally Saved.

(Extracted one fight of the Times)

An unusual adventure which recently occurred to your correspondent while hunting at Bonaventure, in this State, is so illustrative and amusing so much that can be made, valuable to all readers, that I venture to reproduce it under.

The day was a most inclement one and the snow quite deep, rapid tracks were plenty, but they cruelly led to the disposition of a large swamp, in which the rabbits could run without difficulty, but where the hunter would lose his game if he followed. Thus, by the time I had reached the swamp, I was hot, and thoroughly fatigued, the writer being not very long in the habit of taking exercise. While musing about through a tangled thicket a malarial portion of the swamp, a hidden snake suddenly came into view, emitting a musical hiss, coiling, and composed, ready to strike, in the usual fashion of the rattlesnake. Natural curiosity, aside from the involuntary envy that instinctively arose, prompted the writer to enter into conversation with the man, with the following result:

"You've had fine success; where did you get all that game?"

"Shot here in the swamp."

"It's pretty rough hunting in these parts, generally, when a man goes in to get a bag every other step."

"Yes, it is; very pleasant, but I am used to it, and don't mind it."

"How long have you hunted here? Why, however, have you not been out of my life not hunted up to ten years ago every year?"

"How does it happen you omitted the last year?"

"Because I was scarcely able to move, much less hunt."

"I don't understand you?"

"Well, you see, about last years ago, after I had been tramping around all day in this swamp, I felt quite a little unwell, and I didn't mind it very much, but it kept troubling me more and more, and I could not find it kept increasing. The great thing I knew, I was sick, and I had to come out of the swamp and it passed me to measure. The thing kept getting on and increasing, and though I was a man of the feeling and make-up, not still this it was only a little temporary weakness, I found that it did not so. Nearly after the pain points began to ache at the back of my head. I finally became so bad that I had to remain in the house most of the time."

"And did you trace all this to the fact that you had hunted so much in this swamp?"

"Yes, I did; I knew what to by it to, but I knew that I was to recovery. My joints swelled and it seemed as though all the first I felt my tissues; to whole to my joints, the muscles in every way and some of them became double jointed. In fact, every point in my body ached and I was in a state of mind which could never be forgotten and never one the proposed something. In the way general I was a prey to all the surprises, and I felt greatly nearly helpless. I became so nervous and sensitive that I would jump out of quite the chair and call to people that entered the room to come near me or even move in my chair. While all this was going on, I felt an intense pain in my back, with occasional chills running all over my body, but especially along my back and through my kidneys. Then again my tissues seemed to be so sensitive that my brain felt so free.

"Did you try to prevent all this spoyer?"

"Try? I should think I did to; I tried every doctor that came within my reach and did everything that was recommended to me. I used washes and lotions and tissues enough to fill a good sized trunk, and I tried every kind of medicine I ever heard of.

"Well, you talk in a very strange manner, and I should think that you had tried all the things that you mention, but I suppose you tried Hop Bitters?"

"Hop Bitters! Why, I tried every thing and my brain is in a state of confusion.

"Why, I should think I did to. I tried every bottle that came within my reach and the proprietary medicines I could hear of, and I tried them enough to last me for all time, but the only relief I received was a temporary one.

"Well, you talk in a strange manner, and I should think that you had tried all the things

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich. March 20, 1894.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Grape-culture is assuming large proportions in North Carolina. One grower near Charlotte expects to ship twenty-five tons of the fruit this season.—N. Y. Tribune.

—According to the Weiss system of type-setting, recently introduced in Vienna, the type is cast in syllables, common prefixes, suffixes, etc., instead of letters, and a great saving of time is thus effected, it is claimed.

—A piece of oyster-ground off Milford, Conn., containing six hundred acres, has been sold to parties in California, who have been shipping seed oysters quite extensively to their coast to plant in San Francisco bay.—Boston Herald.

—Scientific engineers say that the bridge over East River is the last long bridge that will ever be erected, and that, had engineers known as much in 1870 as they do now, this bridge would not have been erected. Tunnels are to take the place of bridges.—N. Y. Tribune.

—The Rio Grande Sugar Company Cape May County, N. J., have now 1,200 acres of sorghum under cultivation. They have more than doubled the capacity of their works, and look forward to a very prosperous season. The cane is growing finely, and an excellent crop is anticipated.

—A "Commission," presumably of experts, appointed by the French Society of Hygiene, has studied the condensed milk question, and reports that when it is diluted with twice or four times its weight of water it may in some cases be useful as a food for infants, but is always to be considered "incontestably inferior to good cow's milk."—Health Monthly.

—The dredging of South Carolina rivers for phosphates is a new industry of considerable importance to the territory surrounding Charleston. Some of the crude rock is shipped to Europe, but most of it is ground at home before it goes to market. At the present time the demand is great, and all the companies are working on full time.—Chicago Herald.

—An organization has been incorporated in New York under the name of the National Horse Show Association of America, with a capital of $100,000, in shares of one hundred dollars each. This association will hold its first show of horses next fall, at which time it is announced liberal premiums will be offered for all classes of horses. It is expected that this will be the largest and most notable exhibition of horses held in this country, and will occupy the same position here that the horse shows held at the Agricultural Hall, London, do in England.—N. Y. Sun.

Those who object to the odors of the disinfectants used at the present day will find charcoal unobjectionable on this account, while it absorbs gases in a surprising way; pieces can be laid on plates and put out of sight in a sick-room.—N. Y. Times.

—The nettle, a growth common to nearly all of the States, and which has hitherto been a source of great trouble to farmers, has now been found to yield a fiber, which it is claimed, will supplement cotton in the manufacture of cloth. Cloth made from it, on trial, has been adjudged equal in texture and appearance to linen.—Chicago Journal.

—A Swiss watchmaker in Pennsylvania has completed an automatic clock, which for intricate mechanism is said to surpass the celebrated one at Strasburg. During twelve hours it plays three musical selections, and 2,022 automatic movements are made. Of course, the machinery is so arranged as to permit the entire performance of the automatons taking place every fifteen or twenty minutes.—Philadelphia Press.

—Mr. F. L. Slocum has examined the ink for writing on glass and, according to the American Journal Pharmacy, reports that it is made by mixing barium sulphate, three parts; ammonium fluoride, one part; and sulphuric acid q. s. to decompose the ammonium fluoride and make the mixture of a semi-fluid consistency. It should be prepared in a leaden dish, and kept in a gutta-percha or leaden bottle.

—Patent plastering was a novelty exhibited at a recent building exhibition held in London. It is claimed for it that it saves both time and labor. The material is prepared beforehand in slabs which are fixed to the joists direct, with great speed, forming the ceiling at once. Thus, plastering which would ordinarily weeks to execute can be accomplished by this slab system in as many days. It is also claimed for this patent that the ceilings are fire resisting.

—Turpentine is regarded by many persons as an antidote to poisoning by phosphorus. It is not the ordinary turpentine which should be given, but the acid French turpentine, or old turpentine which has been exposed to the air long enough to have become oxidized by absorbing oxygen. If this be administered while the phosphorus is still in the stomach it changes the poison into an inert substance which resembles spermaceti. After phosphorus has entered into the circulation the only remedy is transfusion of fresh blood into the veins.—N. Y. Times.

Blood! Blood! Blood! Is a necessity to all animalkin, and to be free from disease the blood must be pure. There is no doubt that Parmelee's Blood Purifier excels in the driving out of all impurities and building up the system by making new blood, thus preventing the disorders so common, of sores, ulcers, boils, humors, pimples, erysipelas, &c. Do not wait but procure this by a free use of the Purifier. Large bottles $1.00. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

PITH AND POINT.

—The sale of boot-jacks last year was 91,000 less than the year before. Is this country going to bed with her boots on?—Detroit Free Press.

—Three-fifths of the fashionable alligator satchels and pocket-books are made from pig-skin. This, at least, is the allegation, but perhaps the alligator lies.—Philadelphia News.

—"I am saturated to the epidermis," said the high-school girl, throwing her gum boots into the corner. "I don't wonder at that," replied her mother; "they give you such hard lessons at school!"—N. Y. Journal.

—The Crow Indians have been caught putting rocks in the bales of hay they sell to the Government. The day is not far distant when all Indians will be civilized enough to vote.—Philadelphia News.

—In modern Egypt a young man is not permitted to see his wife's face before marriage. Whoever has invested in pina jackapes can imagine the feelings of the average young Egyptian as he gazes on his trinket for the first time.—Modern Argo.

—"A beautiful Boston girl has crossed to Europe in the steerage of the Cunard liner, just to see how it was," says an exchange. For the same reason her mother has been keeping boarders to pay the daughter's expenses.—N. O. Picayune.

—They were approaching an ice-cream saloon, and she said: "Oh, Charley, I'm going to have a new dress cut bias—Oh—so. S-p-p-p!—there a-ice-cream saloon. Goody!" "Yes and it is like your new dress, for it will be cut by us;" and the horrid old wretch led the panting damsel across the street.—New Haven Register.

—Little Johnny says that when he was a baby, his mother tells him that he was as good as pie, and used to sleep all night and half the day. Now, when he does not get up the first time he is called, he gets a fearful scolding and occasionally something else beside. He can't see why what was praiseworthy in the infant should be reprehensible in the boy.—N. Y. Post.

—Miss Fanny Marks, of Baltimore won a sewing-machine by making 2 pieces at the number of pills in a bottle in a window. There were 25,106 pills in the bottle, and she guessed 25,196. There were over 5,000 guesses, and the worst one was a guess of 9,000,000. The man who guessed 9,000,000 was one of those fellows who get their education by reading gas-meters.—Oil City Derrick.

—It is estimated that the Illinois Central Railroad handles a million trunks in six months, unhandling not less than a quarter of them. It is a great trunk line.—Chicago News.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of Catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unrivalled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 8-00

—Ah! You is the proudest Chinese girl ever brought to America. She was one of the wonders of San Francisco's Chinese quarter, and as such was pointed out to all tourists. One of them, an Englishman, has fallen in love with and married her.—N. Y. Sun.

—David Brown, a colored man, has been the messenger of the Philadelphia Board of Health forty years.

Incipient consumption, coughs' colds, bronchitis, &c., are all the results of neglect or exposure, and must have prompt and active remedies to remove them. Croup and whooping cough cause great suffering because an effective remedy is not at hand. Why then leave yourself and children exposed to danger and death, when Hamilton's Cough Balsam will relieve all of these and prevent diseases, such as pneumonia, inflamation of lungs, and consumption. All lung difficulties are removed by this remedy. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

—The London Lancet tells how to cure a bone felon. As soon as it is felt put directly over the spot a fly blister the size of your thumb nail. Let it remain for six hours, at the expiration of which time directly under the surface of the blister may be seen the felon, which can instantly be taken out with the point of a needle.

Stock growers all agree that for general use in their business no powder is better calculated to give satisfactory results than those prepared by E. M. Parmelee, because they really contain the valuable remedies claimed, and do not fail to act quickly and effectively in coughs, colds, epizootic, bad blood, stoppage of water, and poor digestion, &c., in horses. For cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry, they are invaluable. Full pounds only 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

—Pine sawdust, highly compressed, has been successfully used to make up center frames of carriage wheels. It is said to be so solid that it will bear a pressure equal to twenty-three tons per square inch. As sawdust has been used for partitions and bricks, its application to the production of complex carvings and mouldings does not seem to be far off. This opens up quite new market for sawdust, which hitherto been a comparatively waste product.—Boston Post.

Do you value your horses and cattle? Attention to their health is as necessary as their regular food. If your horse is suffering from Epizootic, Ringbone, Spavin, Sprained leg, Fever in feet, Strains, Bruises or cuts, or your cow has caked bag, sore teats, or bad blood, you will save money by using Parmelee's Universal Liniment and using it freely for any or all of these troubles, and so bring your stock into a healthful and valuable condition. It is the best liniment also for general family use. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

WOOD WANTED.

Fifty Cords good inch wood, delivered on subscription, at the JOURNAL office. Bring it while the roads are good.

PIMPLES.

I will mail (Free) the recipe for a simple VEGETABLE BALM that will remove TAN, SUNBURN, PIMPLES and BLOTCHES, leaving the skin soft, clear and beautiful, also instructions for producing a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, inclosing 2c. in stamps, THE VANDER & CO., 12 Barclay St., N. Y.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from the effects of YOUTHFUL ERRORS, early decay, loss of manhood, &c., will send free to any man who is in need it, the recipe and direction for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Sufferers wishing to profit by the advertiser's experience can do so by addressing in perfect confidence, JOHN H. OGDEN, 42 Cedar St., New York.

FARM FOR SALE.

Consisting of 141 acres, six miles from Charlevoix, on main road. Soil clay loam. A good house, barn and other buildings. About 50 acres cleared, balance good beech and maple timber. About 200 fruit trees beginning to bear. One-half mile from school and saw mill. Terms, three thousand seven hundred dollars, with not less than two thousand down; balance to suit purchaser. Inquire of the owner, ALFRED H. FRANCIS, Charlevoix, Mich.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of the dreadful disease consumption by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used, (free of charge,) with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all throat and lung affections. Parties wishing the prescription, will please address, Rev. E. A. WILSON, 194 Penn. St., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

FOR SALE.

SECOND HAND

Stationary Engine and Boiler

Nine-of-railway engine, Boiler 12 feet long, 42 in diameter, 48 flues. The engine has been thoroughly overhauled and is practically as good as new. Price and terms to suit. Enquire of or Washburn & Assart at the Machine shop. 291

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. The Fourth National Bank of Grand Rapids vs. William T. Addis. Notice is hereby given that on the 16th day of January, 1894, a writ of attachment was issued against the effects of the above named defendant, at the suit of the Fourth National Bank of Grand Rapids, the above named plaintiff, against the lands, tenements, goods, chattels, moneys and effects of William T. Addis, the above named defendant, for the sum of one thousand three hundred and twenty-one dollars, which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1894.

Dated February 16, A. D. 1894.

CRUCKSHANK & CRIER,
Attorneys for plaintiff. 32-33

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. Lewis Reynolds, Walter F. Brown, plaintiffs, vs. John Monroe, James Matthews, defendants. Notice is hereby given that on the 28th day of November, A. D. 1893, a writ of attachment was issued against the effects of the above named defendants, at the suit of the above named plaintiffs, who are doing banking business in the village of Charlevoix, under the style and firm name of Butters, Upright & Co., against the lands, tenements, goods and chattels, moneys and effects of John Monroe and James Matthews, the defendants above named, for the sum of six hundred and seventy-five dollars, which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1894.

Dated February 16, A. D. 1894.

CRUCKSHANK & CRIER,
Attorneys for plaintiffs. 32-33

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. Lewis Reynolds, Walter F. Brown, and Ingersol Upright, plaintiffs, vs. John Monroe and James Matthews, defendants. Notice is hereby given that on the 28th day of November, A. D. 1893, a writ of attachment was issued against the effects of the above named defendants, at the suit of the above named plaintiffs, who are doing banking business in the village of Charlevoix, under the style and firm name of Butters, Upright & Co., against the lands, tenements, goods and chattels, moneys and effects of John Monroe and James Matthews, the defendants above named, for the sum of six hundred and seventy-five dollars, which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1894.

Dated February 16, A. D. 1894.

CRUCKSHANK & CRIER,
Attorneys for plaintiffs.

NOTICE OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

STATE OF MICHIGAN } ss.
County of Charlevoix. }

In the matter of the estate of

FRANK CHALOUPKA, Minor.

Notice is hereby given, that in pursuance of an order granted to the undersigned, guardian of the estate of said Frank Chaloupka, by the Hon. Judge of Probate for the county of Charlevoix, on the 14th day of March, A. D. 1894, there will be sold at public vendue, at the highest bidder, at the front door of Lewis's hall, in the county of Charlevoix, in said state, on Saturday, the 5th day of April, A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day (subject to all incumbrances by mortgage or otherwise existing at the time of the sale) the following described real estate, to the north east quarter of the north east quarter of section twenty four (24) in township thirty-four (34) north of range eight (8) west, containing forty (40) acres more or less.

CHARLES CHALOUPKA
Guardian.

STATE OF MICHIGAN.—Thirteenth judicial circuit, in chancery. Joseph C. Gorge, complainant, vs. Martin J. Sayers, Martha J. Ayers, Mary B. Wood, defendants. Suit pending in the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, at Charlevoix, on the 15th day of February, A. D. 1894. In this cause it appearing from affidavit on file, that the defendant, Martha J. Ayers, is not a resident of this state, but resides at Ellsworth, in the state of New Jersey, and cannot be served with the ordinary process of this court, it is ordered that the said defendant, Martha J. Ayers, cause her appearance to be entered herein within four months from the date of this order, and in case of her appearance that she cause her answer to the complainant's bill of complaint to be entered herein, and that in default thereof the said complainant's solicitors, within twenty days after service on her of a copy of said bill, and notice of this order, and that in default thereof, said bill will be taken as confessed by the said Martha J. Ayers. And it is further ordered that within twenty days after service on the said Martha J. Ayers of a copy of said bill, and notice of this order, a copy thereof be published in the Charlevoix Journal, a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county, and that said publication be continued therein at least once in each week, for six weeks in succession, or that the complainant's solicitors within twenty days after service on said non-resident defendant, at the twenty days before the time above prescribed for her appearance.

OSCAR P. WISNER,
Circuit court commissioner.

CRUCKSHANK & CRIER,
Complainant's solicitors.

A true copy, attest.

OSCAR UPRIGHT,
Deputy Register.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 75 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Democrat.—By mail, $6.00 per year in advance, postage paid.

Weekly Democrat.—$1.00 per year; 75 cents for six months; 25 cents for three months—invariably in advance. Address,

THE DEMOCRAT,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

IMMENSE CUT IN PRICES

—OF—

All-Wool Goods,

Overcoats and Suitings,

Boots and Shoes.

I have a large stock of Clothing and Boots and Shoes which I will close out at actual cost, as I wish to make room for spring goods. All my goods I will warrant

First-Class,

And will be pleased to show them to all parties whether they intend to purchase or not. Remember, I have marked these goods down at actual cost, and they are

Big Bargains.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Feb. 12, 1894.

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS,

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to catch him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 37. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1894. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

is published every Thursday morning.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

Office over T. D. Smith's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

CRUCKSHANK & CRIER, Attorneys at Law. Office in Bulson's Block, Charlevoix, Mich. A. S. CRUCKSHANK. C. A. CRIER.

PART & CASL, Attorneys at Law, Real Estate and Loan Agents. Lake st., east of postoffice, Petoskey, Mich.

ISAAC S. ALDRICH, Attorney at Law, East Jordan, Mich.

FRED W. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor, Gov. Rooms Building promptly attended to. MONEY TO LOAN.

H. A. JESSEY, Attorney and Counselor at Law. Office in Gaffney Block, Petoskey, Mich. 21-93

S. L. SWHERRY, Attorney at Law, and Circuit Court Commissioner. Office in bank building, entrance Mitchell Street, Petoskey, Mich.

J. S. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

NORTON, KEAT & MARTIN, Attorneys at Law. Office opposite M. C. R. R. Depot, Bay City, Mich.

GEO. A. WINNEY, Attorney and Solicitor, U. S. Circuit Court Commissioner.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX.—Capital $50,000. Banking department. Deposits secured by pledge of gilt edged bonds, real estate, and stocks. Loans for more than above amount, to loan on first mortgages. Foreign and domestic exchange. RICKNOLDS & EMONS.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Sunday School at 12 m. Preaching at 7 p. m. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7 in the school house. C. P. VANARSDEL, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer and praise meeting Thursday evening at 7. J. T. DUNCAN, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX ROUGH AND READY FIRE COMPANY meet the first and third Thursday evenings of each month, at the town hall. H. F. BISSEE, Secretary.

HOMEOPATHIC PHARMACY.

R. SUTFIELD, Homeopathic Medicines, Books, Humboldt Cases, etc., Charlevoix, Mich.

LIVERY STABLE.

J. MILO EATON, Proprietor. Livery, Hackney, Road-Wagon and Carriages for Hire. Good Saddle Horses a Specialty.

PHYSICIANS.

J. A. CARLETON, M. D. Office at the Ingleside.

J. LEWIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office for the Lewis block, Charlevoix, Mich.

W. N. PRESTON, M. D., Surgeon and Homeopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich. 10

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

HORACE S. HARMON, Notary Public, Real Estate, Loan, and Insurance Agt., Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

C. A. R.—Sunset Post No. 116 meets second Monday in each month, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. G. T.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 827, meets every Friday evening, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Round Lake Lodge No. 395, meets every Wednesday evening, in their hall.

I. O. L.—True Blues No. 187, meet Saturday on or before full moon in Odd Fellows' hall.

MASONIC.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 382, meets Tuesday on or before full moon. Hall over postoffice.

CHEAP FOR CASH.

A. BEYERS, President. A. R. UPHAM, Vice President.

Merchants' & Farmers' Bank,

OF CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

A general banking business transacted. Money loaned on approved paper at reasonable rates. Deposits received. Collections given careful attention and remittances made promptly. G. S. THOMAS, Cashier.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor,

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations excellent. Fine rigs supplied with the best the market affords. Only sample room in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public. Headquarters for the Petoskey and Elk Rapids stages.

Board by the Day or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tobacco and Cigars.

Prices reasonable. W. S. JOHNSON, Bridge St., Near Depot, Charlevoix.

Old Newspapers for Sale.

1872 DR. G. W. CROUTER, 1884

THE DRUGGIST.

Our Motto: P. P.

PURITY, POLITENESS.

WE MAKE IT A POINT TO SELL ONLY

Full Strength & Fresh Goods

STRICTLY PURE DRUGS

CAN BE SOLD.

Our Stock is the Largest in the County.

E. T. BROWN & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS' AGENTS,

Portable and Stationary Engines,

Boilers, Mill and Wood-working Machinery,

Mill Supplies, Threshers, and Threshing Engines.

Bargains in Second-Hand Machinery.

WRITE FOR PRICE AND CATALOGUE.

WEST BRIDGE ST., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Advance Lumber Company

Are now prepared to do

CUSTOM SAWING

Promptly and on short notice. We have on hand a large quantity of

Hard and Soft Wood Lumber and Hemlock Timber.

GIVE US A TRIAL ADVANCE LUMBER CO. ADVANCE, MICH.

EVERYTHING

IN THE LINE OF

Furniture and Undertakers' Goods

CAN BE FOUND AT THE OLD RELIABLE HOUSE OF

HENRY C. COOPER, CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

Come and See Me Before Buying.

THE MOST USEFUL BOOK EVER PUBLISHED!

A Book that should be in Every House.

The press, teachers, and professional people throughout the country pronounce it to be the BOOK OF BOOKS. It contains upwards of 80,000 WORDS, with their definition and pronunciation, according to Webster and other recognized authorities; a large number of additional words and definitions in general use. It contains a mine of information for everybody. This book is handsomely bound in cloth, containing 542 Pages Profusely Illustrated. We propose to send you one of these valuable books, by mail, all shipping charges prepaid, to any address, on receipt of only ONE DOLLAR.

Address M. STOLZ & CO.,

26 Park Place, New York.

Pioneer House,

A. B. NOYES, Proprietor.

Ironton, Michigan.

Every convenience for the traveling public.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

House thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

Prince Bismarck,

IMPERIAL CHANCELLOR OF GERMANY.

The recent events in connection with the return of the Lasker resolutions, and Prince Bismarck's speech on the subject in the Reichstag the other day, when he declared his friendly feelings toward this country but vehemently stated his objections to being made his "uncomfy's postman," have of late made the burly figure of the German Chancellor a notable object in the politics of the day.

Otto Edouard Leopold Bismarck-Schonhausen, Chancellor of Germany, and politically the most powerful single man in the world, was born at Brandenburg, April 1st, 1815, of an old and wealthy family. He studied at the universities of Gottingen and Berlin, and his reputation is still high in the estimation of students as a duellist and beer drinker.

Bismarck's diplomatic career began in 1851, when he was made chief secretary of the Prussian Legation at Frankfurt. Before this he was known as an ultra royalist and absolutist. The interests of Prussia, and its elevation to the head of a confederacy of German States, were objects always in his mind. He was special envoy to St. Petersburg in 1859, constantly grew in the regard of King William, and in 1862 was given the most important diplomatic position in the gift of the court—that of minister to France. Before long he was recalled and made president of the cabinet and minister of foreign affairs. The popular opposition to the militarism that was fast becoming the overpowering feature of Prussian politics met with strong opposition in the parliament, and in October, 1862, Bismarck dismissed the deputies. A revolution would doubtless have followed this arbitrary action, but the complicated Slesvig-Holstein question aroused a strong feeling in Prussia for the national unity of Germany.

From this time the policy of Bismarck was secure, and Prussia at once took the lead of the German states. The war of 1866 completed the supremacy of Prussia, and Bismarck, from being the most hated minister became the most popular man in Germany.

When, in 1870, Napoleon III. took advantage of the so-called Spanish question to precipitate a war with Prussia, feeling that the security of his throne depended on proving that he possessed the military genius of the great Napoleon, Germany was prepared at every point, armed, as it were, to the teeth. The war of 1870-'71 was soon decided. The discipline and skill in strategy of the Prussian troops were invincible. The anticipated "march to Berlin" of the French troops became a sudden retreat. Paris was surrounded, and at last the German soldiers marched through the streets of the French capital. The terms dictated by Bismarck included the surrender of Alsace and part of Lorraine, and a war indemnity of 5,000 million francs (about $1,000,000,000). The unification of Germany was the natural result. In 1871 Bismarck was made a prince, and in the same year was raised to the position of imperial chancellor. It is probably a fact that he is the ruler if Germany in an absolute degree that is hardly true even of the Russian Czar. The emperor follows his advice implicitly, and the Reichstag is almost always subservient to his will.

For some time Prince Bismarck's health has been very poor, but he has of late submitted to a severe course of training, and the other day, when about to make his speech on the Lasker question, walked to the Reichstag—the first time for many months—receiving an ovation from the people of Berlin.

The Record of the Republican Party.

If republican politicians imagine that financial issues are to be the only ones in the campaign of this year they make a grave mistake. The democracy can confidently go before the country on the Morrison bill. It is so obviously just, and deals so wisely and directly with the passing needs of the country, that the only effect of discussion must be to commend the bill to the voters in every state. If under any circumstances a due regard for consistence can work estoppel, the republican party is estopped from assailing the bill. Mr. Morrison has moulded up and put in practical and definite form the recommendations of the tariff commission. They were overridden by lobbies of manufacturers when the tariff schedules as they now stand were in process of passage. Those schedules were framed, not with any view to the effect they might have upon the interests of the country at large, but with the sole, single purpose of meeting the wishes and interests of the lobbies which were in force at Washington at the time they were prepared. A more conspicuous instance of class legislation, confirming and extending monopoly, and in contempt of the interests of the people, cannot be found in our history, save in the legislation concerning the Pacific railroads.

The democracy will enter the campaign with every advantage on its side on the question of the tariff reform, but it does not propose that the criminal record of its opponents shall be forgotten. That record will be an important feature in the coming contest. The republican party will be placed on the defensive. The charges and specifications will be minute and particular, and the proof will be clearly presented. Surely the discontent and honesty of the people must take cognizance of that record. The demand for reform which was so effective in the Tilden campaign may be urged with increased impressiveness now, because the dominant party, grown insolent by long continuance in power, has added immeasurably to its list of corrupt legislation. Not only this, but the proofs of corruption in all of the departments of the government, executive, legislative and judicial, are so conclusive as to preclude denial. Three or four days ago the Democrat reproduced extracts from an article published by the Chicago Tribune containing direct charges that the United States supreme court was controlled in its decisions by the Pacific railroads in all matters where their interests were involved. Had a democratic newspaper made such an assault upon the court it would have been regarded as partisan malevolence. Coming from the source it does, it cannot do otherwise than arrest the attention of the people, irrespective of party. The fact must be made plain that personal and party, and not public interests, are the controlling motives of the party in power. Its legislative acts, and its administration are confined to these ends, and nothing higher than personal greed and ambition enters into the calculations of its leading politicians. It is an alliance with the corporate interests and monopolists of the nation, and it looks to the influence and capital of these for success. It is, in fact, the agent of these. Their interests are forwarded in utter disregard of the interests of the people. The people are not blind. The majority which carried Gov. Cleveland into his present seat was not due altogether, or chiefly, to dissensions in the republican ranks. It was an awakened moral sense, acting through the ballot box, for the punishment of corruption. That sentiment still exists. It will be a prominent feature in the campaign this year. There is enough of it to break down prejudice of party and declare for purity of administration. And this republican party must go.—Gr. R. Democrat.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

WILLIAM KING, upon being converted in a Methodist revival meeting in Caldwell, Ky., arose and confessed that he had robbed a store in 1863 of $300 worth of goods. He went to the proprietor the next day and paid the amount, with twenty years' interest, but was immediately arrested for the theft, and now languishes in jail.

THE exact numbers killed and wounded last year in the Isle of Ischia eruption are not now been obtained. On the island the total killed and wounded (not counting those who were badly bruised) amount to 3,075, of whom 2,312 were killed and 762 were maimed—the most of the latter for life. About one-half of the fatalities occurred at Casamicciola. This little town contained just 4,300 inhabitants, and of these 1,784 were killed and 443 were wounded—a fearful total. There were 672 houses at Casamicciola. Of these, 557 were crushed and crumbled into ruins, 194 were damaged, and only one escaped intact! Of foreigners on the island there were 54 killed.

THE Athlone woolen-mills experiment in Ireland has proved successful. A spay 300 feet long, built out to the deep waters of the Shannon, gives excellent facilities for shipment. Cheap turf fuel is obtained from the bogs adjoining, giving help to poor farmers, who deliver it for 14 cents a ton of twenty cubic feet. On the quay stands the mill, filled with the most improved machinery and a large wool storehouse. The wool is taken in for twenty miles round. There is a good home trade, and many cases are sent to this country and Canada. The goods are said to have a bright, clear appearance, given them by the peculiar purity of the Shannon water. The effect is that house property is at a premium, markets are large and increasing, and scarcely an idle hand is to be seen.

PUBLISHED tables show that out of 133 mines whose stocks are listed at the New York Exchange only nineteen paid dividends in 1883, and the dividends amounted to $4,145,000. Less than one-third of the sixty commonly classed as "dividend-paying" appear to have paid dividends last year. But it is not to be inferred that the production of gold or of silver decreased in any such ratio. On the contrary, Mr. Valentine's annual statement shows that the product of mines in this country, west of the Mississippi, was $81,623,212, against about $80,000,000 during the previous year, and about $65,000,000 in the most productive year in the entire period covered by the Wells-Fargo reports. The explanation is that the mines which really produce the most gold and silver are not, as a rule, those whose owners make haste to have stocks listed for sale.

THE French war transport ship Poitou has just left Toulon for China, having on board a complete military balloon equipment, which was dispatched from the arsenal at Meudon and filled nine railway wagons. The corps consists of 100 men, including a Colonel and two Captains, is intended to act specially in ambuscades, and is attached to the artillery. The balloons are manufactured of the finest silk, and will be inflated with vitriol acid gas. A complete photographic apparatus is attached to each car, which can turn out 100 impressions a second, and printed instantaneously, besides uranic compasses, aneroids, thermometers, and other scientific instruments of recent invention, including the new electro-magnetic balancing bar, which prevents the balloon from gyrating, and, it is expected, will be the means of eventually dispensing with ballast.

MISS KEZIAH BLACKMAN, an elderly spinster, who earned a scanty livelihood by sewing for charitably disposed persons, and who was generally supposed to be very poor, occupied for a long time a small room on the top floor of a house in Brooklyn. She was recently found dead in her room, and her will, which had been deposited with her spiritual adviser, showed her to be possessed of $1,200, and its provisions made it compulsory with her executor at her death to dress her body in white, place it in a solid rosewood casket, having six silver handles and a silver plate, on which should be inscribed her name and age. The hearse at her funeral was to be drawn by six black horses, and there were to be six pall-bearers, wearing white gloves and white ties. Her body was to be buried in Evergreen Cemetery beside her parents, and a tombstone bearing the inscription:

"Blessed be the who reverse these stones,
And cursed be he who moves these bones."

was to be erected over her grave. Any money remaining after the expense of these numerous behests had been defrayed she desired her executor to place at interest to be paid to a man to keep her grave in order.

AN able article on "Henry Irving" is contributed to the March Century by J. Bauken Towne, who says apropos of the fact that most of the actors who saw Irving as Louis XI. pronounced the impersonation a masterpiece: "New actors, as a rule, are not good critics, inasmuch as their professional habit leads them to study the mechanical rather than the imaginative or creative powers of the performer. They are apt to estimate a work, not by the soul which animates it, but by the executive detail which gives it a good surface finish. When the business is minute and neat, the grouping varied and effective, the exits and entrances picturesque, and the meaning of every line illustrated by a great wealth of intricate gesture, their ideal of dramatic expression is satisfied. Inspiration is a quality with which few of them have any intimate dealings; and when they happen to encounter it, they are likely to regard it with a feeling akin to contempt, if it does not happen to be in accord with that lame of the modern stage—tradition. Of mechanism, however, pure and simple, they are necessarily excellent judges."

ALEXANDER JEFFERSON, colored, sentenced recently at Brooklyn to be hanged for murder, made a strong and touching plea for his life, but without avail. He said: "I was under the influence of liquor when I committed this crime. I was not in my proper senses at the time. Life is given unto man from God, and I cannot see how the taking of my life is going to better the condition of these I am accused of killing. They are dead; I am not." The same argument has been advanced by those opposed to capital punishment on principle. It is faulty, because the logic is false. It is a sound principle in both human and divine law that he who wantonly sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed. To take a man's life according to law will not restore that of his victim, nor will it make good the loss to society; but it may have a restraining influence upon others murderously inclined, and unquestionably puts the man hanged beyond the possibility of committing other murders. The principle is that a man, who would wantonly kill a fellow-man would possibly do so again if opportunity offered or inclination suggested, and humanity from punishment would be prejudicial to the best interests of society. A man whose moral nature is so warped that he would kill a man without cause is unfit to live, and is a menace to the community.

Why Farragut Wanted Promotion.

It has been a source of great trouble to our naval officers for so many years that, no matter what their position in our navy, they had to go to the foot of the ladder if they took dinner on a foreign squadron. It is the habit among nations to extend the courtesies of the table to other naval officers, and Farragut had often, when he was in England or the Mediterranean, to take his position down below some young scrub of a rear or vice-admiral, who had not been half his time on the ocean. They did not grade according to relative rank, but according to the word of rank, and our highest officer was a captain. When Farragut went to New Orleans, Secretary Welles, or Assistant Secretary Fox, said to him: "Captain, if you can take New Orleans, I will make you an admiral, or have Congress do it." Farragut said: "Admiral? That is what I have been trying to get this Government to do with us for years." So, when he took New Orleans, the old man knew he was going to get a reward of honor for it.—Cable.

How to Prevent Divorces.

Old maids should dress so as to attract the fancy of any old maids, and there would be only one-half the unpleasant marriages chronicled in our dailies, to harrow up the souls of the matrimonially inclined, and scare away their intentions.

Three-fourths of the divorces which take place to-day are the result of careless, unsuspicious men marrying old maids in mistake for young widows. Let a costume be particularly designed for old maids, and let a law be passed compelling them to assume it. And there would be less ceremony, not so many Sarahs moaning, fewer divorces, more harmony, and less alimony in this divorce-ridden land.—Pretzel's Weekly.

LOVE is the dawn of civility and grace in the coarse and rustic. It makes the clown gentle and gives the coward heart.

THE LITTLE FOLKS.

A Year—1818.

Brant Rock Cove is a summer resort near Marshfield, on what is called the South Shore of Massachusetts Bay. Perhaps some of you have been there in your vacation, and have had rare sport on the beach. But, unless they rejoicing yourselves, you did not realize what a thrilling scene happened there in the war of 1812 between England and the United States.

It was a lowering morning many a year ago, that the schooner Swallow was off the harbor mouth at Cape Cod. She was bound for Boston with some prisoners she had taken from an English merchantman. The wind was northeast and fair, although threatening a storm. The Swallow was a private liner belonging to New York. That is, she was a privateer ship which carried guns and a large crew, and was permitted by the Government to attack the enemy's ships as if she were a man-of-war. For this reason, although the wind was fair for making her port, the trim little schooner was not quite sure of reaching Boston without a struggle. For as soon as it was light enough to see clearly, the lookout shouted, "Sail ho!" "Wheraway?" cried the Captain, eagerly.

"On the weather quarter, sir," replied the lookout, whose name was Luther Thomas.

The Captain immediately directed his spy glass towards the stranger; for if she proved to be one of the enemy's men-of-war, chase must be made at once, while if she turned out to be a merchant all sail must be crowded on the spars to get away from her, if she was large and heavily armed.

It took the Captain only a minute to discover that the stranger was a British frigate bearing directly down on the Swallow with all canvas set. The orders now rang quickly through the schooner. The crew took up the rigging like spiders, and sail after sail was spread, until the little privateer fairly staggered under the pressure of her canvas, and flew over the foaming crest like a wild.

An hour passed away, and, as the sunburst for a moment out of the darkening clouds and lit up the lurid sea and the sails of the frigate, it became evident that she was gaining fast on the Yankee schooner. The latter sailed somewhat better than the frigate, so much larger, she walked two miles for every mile the schooner made. The prize cargo that was aboard had been the deck was started and thrown overboard, and the ship sat a little lighter in the water, with bales of choice stuffs. But still the frigate gained on the chase, and in proportion as the wind freshened, the advantage was with the larger vessel, of course. The breeze grew stronger, and the Swallow had to take in her lighter sails lest she carry away her spars. To balance the reduction of sail, a portion of the guns and the anchor were thrown overboard. But the frigate still gained so fast that the course of the schooner was changed to southeast, with the hope that a night's start might get to Scituate or some other port on the south shore of Massachusetts and overtake her. The chase now became amazingly exciting, especially after the frigate opened fire with her bow guns, hoping to cripple the spars of the Yankee before she could get within range, at least, could range on shore. The balls came nearer and nearer. Among the English prisoners on the Swallow was a young woman who now found herself in a fight at sea for the first time. She sat alone in the cabin, listening to the ceaseless Boat Cove, purposing to run the schooner on shore in that place. This was the only hope now left her crew for escaping from the frigate.

As the Swallow neared the shore the Captain cried to the man at the wheel, "Steady as you go!" and headed directly for the breakers. It was a wild and thrilling moment; it took coolness and courage to run a foe ship right to destruction.

"Look out for your lives!" shouted the Captain again, as he felt the critical moment at hand. Scarcely had he said the words when the Swallow struck the bottom with a tremendous shock which carried away the foremast. It fell with a violent crash, killing or injuring several of the crew. But it was high time she should reach the land, for a shot from the frigate were now flying fast over the schooner, and would soon have sunk her.

All hands rushed forward, and, leaping over the bow of the stranded privateer, made for the shore as best they could in the surf. They had all got safely on shore and were retreating as fast as their legs could carry them for a shelter from the British guns, when the young woman in the ship appeared on deck screaming for help. In their hurry to escape, the crew had forgotten her, and she so fully particularly anxious to go ashore for fear now, if indeed, it were possible to do so.

Then it was that Luther Thomas, the sailor lad, showed of what true metal he was made. He heard the cries of the poor woman, and decided at once that it was his duty to go to the rescue, although he could only do so at the imminent risk of his life. He found a fisherman's dory lying on the beach. Shoving off in this crazy craft against the surf, which threatened to dash it to pieces at every moment, and unloosing the bails which whistled around him, he finally got under the lee of the Swallow, and told the young woman to let herself down into the boat with a rope. While the heavy log was rocking her sailors the bails fell fast around them, and as they landed a bar-shot actually flew between their heads and lodged in the sand just beyond them. But Providence smiled on this generous action, and they escaped unharmed.

Finding she could do no more mischief, the Chatham, which proved to be the name of the frigate, stood out to sea again, after robbing the Swallow of with bulls. The privateer remained where she went to pieces. But it is said that her keel and part of her frame are still lying there, embedded in the sand, and can be seen sometimes at very low tides.

The bar shot which came so very near killing the young hero was picked up and preserved by him. He decided to remain at Marshfield the rest of his life, and this shot, which looks like a dumb-bell, is still kept by his descendants, who have used it for a plaguing. It was at the house of his granddaughter that the writer of this story saw this venerable missile of war.—Anon.

A Brakeman's Life.

A long freight train came to a stop on the siding near Richards, a small station in Dakota, on the Northwestern Railroad. One of the brakemen entered the little office, where we were trying to send a message to Chicago. But the wires worked badly, for it was bitter cold, nearly ten below zero. We turned to the brakeman, and with a nod, said, "Chilly night?"

"How would you like to sleep places with me?" he asked. "Nice cool ride between here and Pierre."

With a little more interest in the man, we asked, "You don't mean to say you're going to ride to Junction on the outside?"

"Fact!" said he, emphatically. "There's nothing easy about a brakeman's life, I tell you! Folks think it's a soft job to ride all over the country for nothin'! But let 'em try it on top of a freight train, such a night as this, and they'll prefer Raymond's five hundred-dollar excursions!

"We should think so!" we replied, seeing he was in a talking mood. "But how will you keep from freezing to-night?"

"Run," he said, laconically. "Run up and down the train. Comin' down from the crossing, I ran the whole length of the train a dozen times."

"Isn't it dangerous?"

"Well, no—not if you're used to it. The worst time is during a snow-storm, or just after the rain has frozen on the roofs of the cars. A cat with aches on her feet couldn't keep from slipping then.

"Did you ever slip?"

"Once I did. We were going about fifteen miles an hour, on a long night, and just as we rounded a curve, my foot slipped in passing into the car next the tender. Down I went between the two, and for a minute I thought I'd reached the end of my tether. I was all right, however, the rest time I'm just to forty miles an hour

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

The Kalkaskians are building a $5,000 school house.

The Detroit Free Press for last Sunday contained 18 pages.

Lansing has organized a "citizen's league" to enforce the liquor laws.

A stave mill is being built between the Arlington house, Petoskey, and Bay View.

The Detroit Times continues to improve from day to day. It is a complete newspaper.

A life saving station will probably be established at Bois Blanc Island in Mackinac straits.

A forty pound trout caught wire a hook and line was one of the not able sight at St. Ignace, recently.

A young man named Burns, living at Muscelons, shot himself through the hand a few days ago while fooling with a revolver.

The Grand Rapids Radical is a nine-column folio newspaper, nearly all reading matter, and sent to any address for $1 a year.

W. W. Ashley, now editor of the Eaton Rapids Times, gave us our first lesson at the printer's case sixteen years ago this week.

John Kelly says the laws of prohibition can never be enforced. No better evidence of this is needed than their repeated and open violation in Maine and Kansas.

Chicago-like, the fire sufferers of Allegan and Grand Rapids are preparing to rebuild, and grander than before. For good grit look to the average Michigander.

A raft of walnut logs, each four feet through, which sunk about forty years ago in the St. Joseph river, is being raised. The logs are water-cured and worth about $74 per thousand.

The Elk Rapids Iron company's grist mill, besides supplying home consumption, in 1883 shipped 6,000 barrels of flour made from wheat grown within hauling distance.

Henry Clews, the New York banker and republican, says we must have as cheap labor as that of Europe or our interests will suffer. Workingmen must submit to a reduction of 33½ per cent in their wages.

The Grand Rapids Tradesman evidently found a good field. It started six months ago as a six-column folio, and its second enlargement makes it a six-column quarto, with a good advertising patronage.

The Traverse City Herald says that the Chicago Tribune or the New York Times in its denunciation of things republican. It says: "The republican party is snirched with the whisky ring swindles, and the star route swindles, and the Belknap swindles, and the salary grab, and the third term plot, and myriad other similar jobs and thefts and crimes. The argument will be that no reform is possible until such a party is turned out, and that it can be turned out only by putting in the democratic party. That such a plan is shrewd and promising is undeniable."

Catarrh is the seed of consumption, and unless taken in time is a very dangerous disease. Hall's Catarrh Cure never fails to cure. Price 75 cents. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH., HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORT.

G. W. JEFFERIES,

Dealer in

Fresh and Cured Meat

Fresh and Salt Fish,

AND VEGETABLES.

Fat Stock and Farm Produce Wanted.

West side Bridge Street, Charlevoix.

NEW GOODS.

I am pleased to say that my

Spring Stock

is ready for inspection. Come and see them, and when you want a suit of clothes that are JUST IN STYLE, you will know where to find them. My stock is all of the

LATE STYLES,

AND

Price to Correspond With the Times.

GEO. W. MILLER.

On saws is about 40 per cent of their value in a free market. The manufacturer pays the tariff tax on the raw material, but if he wants to sell it abroad a rebate is allowed of 99 per cent of the tax paid, at the time of exportation. The saw manufacturers' laborers are paid the market price of labor and no more. How do carpenters, cabinet makers and woodworkers generally like to pay 40 per cent of what they pay for their saws as a bonus for the privilege of having had them made in America? This is one of the incidental beauties of the policy of protection.—G. R. Democrat.

Harpers Weekly goes a step further than the Chicago Tribune or the New York Times in its denunciation of things republican. It says: "The republican party is snirched with the whisky ring swindles, and the star route swindles, and the Belknap swindles, and the salary grab, and the third term plot, and myriad other similar jobs and thefts and crimes. The argument will be that no reform is possible until such a party is turned out, and that it can be turned out only by putting in the democratic party. That such a plan is shrewd and promising is undeniable."

TOWNSHIP CAUCUS.

A township caucus will be held at the Block school house in the TOWNSHIP OF MARION, on Saturday, the 29th day of March, 1884, at one o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating township officers.

FOR SALE.

Eighty acres of land, with or without improvements. Also one seven-year old mare with colt, one three-year old colt, one two-year old horse, one cow, well broke, and one two year old cow. The above stock is in good condition. Inquire of J. A. Bacon, on north shore of Pine Lake.

J. A. BACON.

Sewing Machines CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at ten dollars each. Call soon and take your pick.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. S. WAY.

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY

has purchased the

Ladies' and Children's Furnishing Goods

Lately carried by Fisher & Inwood, and will be pleased to wait on her old customers, and gain as many more as possible. Call and see my stock.

C. R. BELLINGER

carries the largest and finest stock of

JEWELRY,

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Optical Goods in Charlevoix county. Agent for the celebrated Elgin Watches. All goods he has been there ever sold. All goods left for repairs and not called for in six months are subject to sale for charges.

O. W. SMITH,

ELECTRO-PLATER,

Manufacturing Jeweler and Lapidist.

Electro-plating in Gold and Silver. Any article of Jewelry made to order. AGATES AND JASPERS cut to order. 29

Fresh Oysters

Just Received.

300 pounds Candy and Nuts.
Two Barrels Fresh Butter.
Golden Thread Sauer Kraut.
Two Cases Fresh Oysters, 25 and 35 Cents.

AT L. L. CARR'S.

JOHN NICHOLLS,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades,

WAGON TONGUES, SHINGLES, LATH, ETC.

LUMBER SAWED AND BILLS FILLED TO ORDER.

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card to take effect January, 1884.

GOING NORTH.

STATIONS.	No. 1	No. 3	No. 5	No. 7
Cincinnati, lv.		7 40am	7 10pm
Richmond "	2 20am	10 32	11 08
Indianapolis "	4 35	12 35pm	1 00
Muncie "	5 41	1 37	2 08
Fort Wayne, ar.	6 42	2 35pm	3 10am
Fort Wayne, lv.		2 47	3 50	8 00am
Kendallville		3 35	4 38	9 11
Sturgis		4 13	5 14	10 35
Schoolcraft		5 11	6 11	11 48
Kalamazoo, ar.		5 45	6 45	12 25pm
Kalamazoo, lv.		7 05	7 32	12 30
Otsego		9 02	8 29	1 45
Otsego			9 50	4 45
Otsego			10 05	5 20
Otsego			10 40	6 22
Otsego			11 10	7 15
Otsego			11 40	8 15
Otsego			12 10am	9 30
Cadillac, ar.			2 00	9 50
Cadillac, lv.			2 30	9 50
Traverse City, ar			4 55
Kalkaska, lv.			4 17	12 00am
Kalkaska			4 49	12 55
Grayling			5 20	1 35
Petoskey, ar.			6 34	3 40
Harbor Springs			7 15	4 45
Mackinaw City			9 00	7 00
St. Ignace			10 00	8 50
Marquette			6 00am	5 00pm
Negaunee, ar			9 12	7 08

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No. 2	No. 4	No. 6	No. 8
Negaunee, lv.			5 15pm	7 30am
Marquette			9 00	8 30
St. Ignace			8 40am	6 40pm
Mackinaw City			9 30	8 15
Harbor Springs			10 50	9 35
Petoskey, lv.			7 26	6 33
Boyne Falls			8 15	12 27am
Mancelona			8 39	1 21
Kalkaska			9 10	2 21
Traverse City, lv			9 10am
Cadillac, ar.			11 32	5 20
Cadillac, lv.		3 30pm	11 45	5 50
Reed City		4 59	1 12pm	7 16
Big Rapids		5 12	1 48	7 49
Howard City		5 36	2 35	8 40
Ionia H & M cross		7 23	4 48	10 05
Grand Rapids, ar.		7 45	5 20	10 40
Grand Rapids, lv.	6 35am		5 32	12 20pm
Kalamazoo, ar.	8 32		6 32	2 21
Kalamazoo, lv.	8 37		6 52	2 31
Vicksburg	9 07		7 22	3 00
Schoolcraft	9 29		7 44	3 26
Sturgis	10 19		8 39	4 21
Fort Wayne, ar.	12 20pm		10 05	6 42
Fort Wayne, lv.	12 52	3 35am	10 15
Kidgeville	3 09	7 56	2 33
Waterloo	3 28	8 18	2 55
Richmond, ar.	5 27	9 17	4 42
Cincinnati, ar.	7 00pm	12 20pm	7 00

C. L. LOCKWOOD, Act'g G. P. Ag't, Grand Rapids, Mich.

New Goods.

At Cost

FOR CASH

For the Next 30 Days.

MISS L. SPAULDING,

Ladies' Furnishing Goods.

O. B. WEED & CO.

Are headquarters for

DRUGS

CHEMICALS,

Patent Medicines, all Kinds,

Imported and Domestic Perfumery,

Toilet Articles,

AND FANCY GOODS.

None but Pure Medicines

Kept in stock.

Prescriptions filled by competent druggists and with fresh and pure drugs. Call and see us. We will use you well. Our store is in Barthoolomew's new

Opera Block.

D. SHERWOOD & CO.

Have just received a fine stock of

Ladies' French Kid Shoes,

Made in the Latest Styles.

Ladies' Fine Shoes, all Kinds,

A Large Stock always on hand.

Men's Fine Walking Shoes,

ATEST STYLES.

AT COST!

All kinds of

BOOTS, SHOES, AND RUBBER GOODS.

The Finest Line of

French and American Kid Shoes for Ladies' Wear

Ever brought to Charlevoix.

Sole Agent in Charlevoix for the Celebrated Bart Shoes.

They have no Superior.

CUSTOM WORK AND REPAIRING DONE PROMPTLY, And Satisfaction Guaranteed.

L. B Connor

Opposite Bridge Street House, Charlevoix.

WILL M. GILBERT,

EAST JORDAN, MICHIGAN.

House, Sign, and Fresco Painting,

GRAINING AND KALSOMINING,

Plain and Decorative Paper Hanging.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW,

DEALER IN

Hardware,

FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Charlevoix, Mich.

The Oldest Established Business on South Arm

S. G. ISAMAN,

South Arm, Mich.

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

A Large and Well-Selected Stock Always on Hand.

Dry Goods, Ready-made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, Glassware, Hardware, Drugs, Stationery, Notions, &c.,

AT LOW PRICES.

PRODUCE OF ALL KINDS TAKEN IN EXCHANGE FOR GOODS.

Give Me a Call. S. G. ISAMAN.

JOSEPH HYLAND,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Boiler Maker,

Sheet-Iron Worker,

and manufacturer of

Hyland's Patent Fireman.

Dealer in all kinds of

SECOND-HAND MACHINERY.

Heavy boiler building of all kinds, and repairing of Boilers promptly attended to.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., March 27, 1884.

Business Announcements.

One of our last citizens would say to the public that he has tried Hall's Catarrh Cure, and a local nal is claimed for it. Refer to ad. for particulars. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

A genuine article in Butter at B. Isaac's.

Granulated sugar 10 cents per lb at E. M. Clark's.

The best oysters of the season, going like hot cakes, at Cordial, Emrey & Co.'s.

New invoices of shelf hardware and fishing tackle just received at L. D. Bartholomew's.

E. M. Clark is closing out his Books and Stoves at cost to make room for new goods.

Upright, Emrey & Co. have just opened a choice lot of English Breakfast Mocha, the finest sample ever offered in the trade.

Since the death of Mr. Otis, of Boston, Dr. J. A. Carlstein has taken a brief and from labor, but is now prepared to answer professional calls. Office at the "Bachelor."

Coffee sugar only 9 cents per lb at E. M. Clark's.

Upright, Emrey & Co. are noted for their Fresh Groceries and Flavoring Extracts.

Great bargains in all goods at E. M. Clark's to make room for new goods.

Fresh Coffees, Teas, Spices, Crackers, Oysters, Borden's and Domestic Dried Fruits and Canned Goods received this week. Upright, Emrey & Co.

E. M. Clark beats them all in selling Clothing.

Buy note paper and envelopes with a view of Charlevoix, at O. B. Weed & Co.'s drug store.

The Temperature.

The following is a record of observations of the thermometer at the JOURNAL office, at 7 a. m. and 2 p. m., each day, for the week ending yesterday:

	7 A'M	2 P'M
Thursday	28	40
Friday	26	47
Saturday	40	50
Sunday	42	48
Monday	31	43
Tuesday	33	45
Wednesday	32	40

Provision Market.

Retail prices to consumers, as corrected every Wednesday evening by UPRIGHT, EMREY & CO., general dealers:

FLOUR, per bbl, $4.00, $5.00, and $6.00.
BUCKWHEAT FLOUR, per cwt, $1.50.
CORN MEAL, per cwt, bolted $2.00, unbolted, $1.90.
HAY, per ton, $18@
OATS, per bu, 50c.
GRAVENSTEEN, per cwt, $1.00.
APPLES, per bu, $1.50.
POTATOES, per bu, 50c.
ONIONS, per bu, $1.00.
BUTTER, per lb, 28c.
EGGS, per doz, 20@25c.
LARD, per lb, 12@15c.
HAMS, per lb, Shoulders, 12½c.
SALT PORK, 12c, Beef, 9c.
MAPLE SUGAR, per lb, 10c.
CHEESE, 20c.
WATER-WHITE OIL, 25.
FARMERS' PRODUCE in good demand.

Fresh Meats from the Market.

BEEF, roast steak, 12½@15c; fresh pork, 10@12 10c; mutton, 12½@15c; sausage, 15c; hams, 16c; shoulders, 12½c.
TALLOW, 06@07c.

Local News Brevities.

Personal Gossip.

Mr. Bagley, of Atwood, is in town this week visiting friends.

Geo. Cook is out again. He has had a long, siege of sickness.

L. D. Bartholomew will return home from Florida next week.

Mrs Dr. Carlstein goes to Chicago this week, to be gone two months.

D. S. Hulbert and wife, of East Jordan, gave the JOURNAL a call last Saturday.

E. Carpenter and family expect to return home from Florida, about April 10th.

Dr. J. A. Carlstein will be found at his office at the "Bachelor," ready to attend to all calls.

C. E. Meech, of Detroit, has been canvassing Charlevoix for a marine directory to be published by a Buffalo firm.

Class. See and Montie Lewis returned last week from Valparaiso, Ind., where they have been attending a business college.

L. W. Skinner is home from Elk Rapids. He leaves for Alabama in a few days where he will take charge of the chemical works in connection with a furnace.

News Brevities.

Easter cards at Dr. Crouter's.

The ice is wasting away rapidly.

A nice rain on Tuesday evening.

It seems good to see bare ground again.

Best cuts of fresh meat are rising in price.

Is it not time to begin to boom the grist mill project?

The Clara Belle has been given another coat of paint.

A small boy got a ducking in the channel on Tuesday.

The fish tug Anspach has been given a new coat of paint.

The Bridge St. house had 40 extra for dinner last Saturday.

The discovery of coal near Horton's Bay has been announced.

The new council held its first meeting last Thursday evening.

Prejudice should not interfere with the building up of our town.

John S. Dixon now delivers milk at the door for six cents a quart.

Portions of the Sea Gem have been painted a bright green this week.

"Keeps" is what engages the average boy's undivided attention now days.

The orchestra added much to the entertainment last Saturday evening.

The Addis store property sold for $4,100. The lumber was sold in two lots.

Don't forget the Journal when you want tickets and slips for township election.

Messrs. Newman & Price gave the Newman house office a fresh coat of paint last Saturday.

L. B. Connor expects to announce the arrival of a large stock of boots and shoes next week.

School teachers are allowed by law to attend state teachers' institutes without loss of wages.

"We are of the opinion" that our neighbor's local page shows a remarkable growth since one year ago.

Geo. E. Barton exhibited his "Stereopticon" views at Lewis' hall on Monday evening to a small audience.

Beware of counterfeit silver dollars and half dollar pieces. They are circulating in different parts of the state.

G. W. Jefferies is back to business again, and opened his market on Tuesday with a fine lot of fresh meat.

Fire was discovered in James Ackerts house last Friday, but was extinguished before the department could get there.

Special communication of Charlevoix lodge F. & A. M. this (Thursday) evening, for work in the second degree. Turn out.

The entertainment given by the "Peak Sisters" drew out frequent applause from the audience, and netted the society over $30.

When the millions of ties and posts now piled up around Pine lake begin to move out, it will remove all excuse for crying "hard times.".

The Flint wagon, sold by W. R. Kilborn, Petoskey, possesses some advantages over all other wagons for use on rough roads in a new country.

The East Jordan band relieved the monotony of things considerably last Saturday by their playing on the street and in the opera house.

The little bee now buzzeth busily in the bonnet of the various candidates who are waiting patiently for honors and office to be "thrust upon them."

The old maxim "The early bird catches the worm," is true in business as well as elsewhere, and it is none too early to plant advertising for spring trade.

Repairs are being made to the machinery of the North Star, now lying near the machine shop. She will run between Charlevoix and Boyne City.

The Statesman says that the land belonging to J. A. Cameron drew six tons of baled hay at one load from Charlevoix to Boyne City. Pretty good load.

The time for repairing rickety sidewalks and straightening up the front gate—a silent listner to many loving sighs and blind to loving scenes—is near at hand.

When a newspaper says a kind word for a man he appears to never know it, but if it neglects him in the most trivial matter he finds it out in less than a minute.

Ice in lake Michigan is breaking up, and a favorable wind makes "open water" visible. Unless there is another freeze, business will soon be moving along briskly.

The business card of Dr. S. C. Graves will be found in this paper. The doctor has recently returned from the upper peninsula, and will be found in his old rooms in the See block.

In our business directory will be found the cards of Dart & Call, and Jay L. Newberry, attorneys, Petoskey, Mich. Our readers at the east end of the county will please remember these gentlemen when in need of legal services.

It behooves people to look carefully to their chimneys. The winter has been an exceptionally cold one, and chimneys and pipes are filled with soot which if once ignited, may cause a conflagration.

To extend the time within which the JOURNAL was to be "starved out," a friend and patron in southern Michigan has sent us a half barrel of bolted cornmeal, a portion of a consignment from Kansas. Thanks.

Because a girl "works out" it is no sign that she is not just as good and honest as any lady-taper-fingers who looks on honest toil as a mark of disgrace. Just put this in your hat, young man, and think of it occasionally.

The "History of the Traverse Region," now running in the Herald, has reached a point where the Mormon question becomes interesting. To add to the effect of the history, a sensational serial story of the early days of Mormonism, written by Josaphin Miller, is published in the same paper.

D. Sherwood & Co. make an announcement this week, of interest to the ladies. This firm carries a stock of boots and shoes which would be a credit to a much larger town than this. They have more goods than they can show to advantage in their present store room, and further enlargements may soon become necessary.

Young man, stop a minute when you are about to speak lightly of a young woman or girl, and think how you would like to hear some other young man to speak as you are about to, of your sister, and if you are the kind of a chap we give you credit for, you will change your mind and say something else.

A girl's character is a very precious jewel to her, and its brilliancy is easily dulled, and sometimes through no fault of her own.

The president and secretary being absent, Robert Miller and Fred W. Mayne acted as officers for the historical society at O. D. Wood's last Tuesday evening. The opening exercise was an instrumental solo by Miss Addie Bennett. F. W. Mayne read the historical chapter for the evening. Subject, The Surrender of Cornwallis. Instrumental duet by Mrs. O. D. Wood and Miss Abbie Bennett. Reading by Mrs. L. E. Allen. Recitation, "The Widow Budd," by Mrs. Dr. Carlstein. Vocal solo, Dr. J. A. Carlstein. The next meeting will be held at Mr. Ainslie's.

An East Jordan gentleman writes to the Grand Rapids Sportsman as follows: "If the sporting men of Grand Rapids, or any it may concern, wish to protect the trout in the Jordan river and its tributaries, they will have to look to it soon, or trout fishing in this country will be a thing of the past. You can see from ten to twenty men and boys daily at the mouth of the Jordan, catching trout through the ice, and some are making a business of it. One well known Detroit man, I am told, has been buying trout and shipping them home. They are caught here weighing from one ounce to two and a half pounds, and hundreds of them daily. If you cannot see to it yourself, please notify some one that will."

It was not the aim of the JOURNAL last week, as the Sentinel intimates, to charge previous village councils with making unnecessary debts, but to show the people how much indebtedness there is to be provided for by the present council. The purchase of the fire engine created the principal part of the debt, and it is a necessity. The necessity of this or other portions of the debt has not been questioned. But the debt exists, and there are people who would insist that, as the members of the council were elected in opposition to a prohibition ticket, it cannot be other than a "whiskey council," and all increase of taxes would be charged as a direct result of this election. To neutralize such an unjust accusation is what the JOURNAL's figures intended and nothing else.

M. E. Church Notice.

Preaching next Sunday morning on "The Relation of Belief to Practice." At night there will given a second discourse on the "Grandeur of the Orthodox Religion." If you desire to hear sermons upon these themes, please be present.

Citizens' League.

A citizens' league to maintain law and order in general, and enforce the liquor laws in particular, has been organized in Lansing, and we commend the subject to the thoughtful consideration of our citizens. At the meeting for organization, Mr. Andrew Paxton, of Chicago, outlined a similar work in that city which had very published good results, and had been the means of saving many young men and girls from ruin. A resolution defining the work of the Lansing League was unanimously adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That we, the citizens of Lansing, do hereby form a citizens' league, for the suppression of the sale of liquor to minors, and for the enforcement of laws and ordinances regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors.

At the close of the meeting, 132 persons signed the following pledge:

"This league shall be called the citizens' league of Lansing. Its object shall be to secure by all proper means the suppression of the sale of liquor to minors, and the enforcement of laws and ordinances regulating the sale of intoxicating liquor."

The Octoroon.

The East Jordan dramatic club gave a most excellent entertainment, for amateurs, at the opera house last Saturday evening. With few exceptions, every part was so well performed as by most traveling troupes. It would be hard to beat C. A. Reinhart in the character of Jacob McClosky, G. W. Fast, as Salem Scudder, played his part well, though he did not entirely satisfy our ideas of a yankee. Will Rogers made an excellent mulcineer, while S. M. Rose and A. J. Preeso, as negro servants, created much merriment. Miss Minnie Shear, as Zoe, the octoroon girl, played her part well enough, but we could not see much of the octoroon in her appearance. Mrs. G. W. Fast well represented the rich widow, and little Ollie Fast, as Paul, the yellow boy, was a complete success. The other characters were more or less creditable, but lack of room prevents further mention.

Burgess.

The Lewis brothers intend to erect a large barn the coming season.

John Brown has contracted to sow ten acres of peas on Dr. Lewis' farm in Hayes.

Dr. Lewis intends to build a lot of wire fence this spring.

George Howe is very sick at his fathers. His sister has returned home to take care of him.

It is intimated that "leap year" is being observed.

Mrs. Carrie Wilks visited with her sister Mrs. Frank Kane, last Saturday.

Geo. Banks has had a good business skidding logs this winter.

Mr. Miniter is making preparations for sugar-making this spring.

Mr. Sayers, formerly clerk in the Cushman house, Petoskey, has decided to remain on his farm this season.

Mr. Van Schoick, who has been visiting in the southern part of the state, has returned home.

Mr. Case will engage extensively in the fishing business this summer.

South Arm.

The rain of Saturday night took away a large portion of our snow.

Who will seek the groundhog's open door, when nature has provided such a bountious store of juicy sweetness that from the tree does pour; and he will ne'er get "tight" though he sip forevermore!

Mr. and Mrs. C. Pupineau, of Charlevoix, were visiting Mrs. P's parents in Echo last week.

Mr. G. W. Jones, of Boyne Valley, was in town recently.

James A. Kent attended court at Bellaire.

The East Jordan machine shop seems to be doing considerable business. It can plainly be heard on this side of the Arm.

Z. Fairbanks, of Traverse City passed through town recently.

People are wondering why J. R. Vance looks so smiling lately. We are informed that the cause is the arrival of a young heiress, March 12th.

Drunken rows, breaking teapots, killing deer, razors under pillows, threatening lives, prison birds on the wing, and a divorce suit, are some of the happenings in Echo.

We are sorry to hear that in your village election, the whiskey element prevailed, but we hope and pray that the "good time coming" is near at hand, this "long, long, long on the way." [We do not understand that the recent election means more whiskey, but simply a benefit of the license and the better control of what is drunk by our citizens.—ED.]

Ironton.

Sunday was quarterly meeting at Ironton. The presiding elder failed to put in an appearance. As there was no preacher, the good people had a sort of love feast.

Rev. J. F. Walkley, from New Boston, Wayne county, preached Sunday evening to a large congregation.

The school exhibition Friday evening was the finest thing of the kind ever in Ironton. Teacher Harris and the school are entitled to the banner.

Our enterprising merchant, J. G. Peterson, finds a steady increasing business.

John Otis is expected home on Tuesday, from Chicago, where he went to bury his brother James, Otis.

Maple sugar days have come.

Town caucus was held last Saturday.

Last Sunday there were several men on our streets too drunk to walk.

Ironton School.

The following is a report of the general average of the senior department of the Ironton school for the term ending March 21. [We are compelled to omit the figures for each study on account of our material being in use.—ED.]

First Grade.

Nellie Noyes	91	George Smith	62

Third Grade.

Katie Smith	94	Warren Webster	71
Emery Roy	92	Katie Bennett	71
Owen Hammond	89	Katie Maroney	84
Frank Hammond	85	Frank Hammond	74
Eddie Hammond	84	Charles Roy	74
Eddie Bird	72	Charlie Showers	17

Second Grade.

Ellie Jackson	86	Frank Williams	69
Fred Hammond	86	Fourth Grade.
Harvey Woodner	85	Walter Bird	76
Dessie Holland	78	Emma McGuire	76
Eddie Webster	75	Minnie Maroney	74
Jack Webster	75	Nellie Hammond	85
Ora Kane	73	Caroline Nelson	76
Lizzie Webster	73	Nellie Waldron	88
Ella Hunt	72	Mary Schoffen	66
Lizzie McClellan	72
Dewitt Hammond	62
Hiram Brock	82

J. M. HARRIS, Teacher.

Standing Committees.

The following are the standing committees of the council for the year 1884-5:

Public Buildings—W. C. Newman, J. M. Eaton, and A. J. McLeod.

Sanitary matters and Police.—Chas. Ely, A. E. Mason, and T. W. Crouter.

Claims and Finance.—Mason, Newman, and McLeod.

Ordinances.—Eaton, Crouter, and McLeod.

Streets and Sidewalks—Eaton, Mason, and Newman.

Fires and other Preventions—McLeod, Newman, and Ely.

Licenses and Printing—Crouter, Ely, and Mason.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by Uranus Boss, real estate dealer.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, March 25, 1884, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Mary J. Stone to Mary W. Hotchkiss, e ½ of lots 1 and 2, block 3, East Jordan, $125.

Thomas Phelps and wife to Richard H. Crane, n ½ of s ½ of lot 3, block 4, $100.

John S. Dixon and wife to Henry P. Cook, lot 5, block 2, Dixon's addition, Charlevoix, $1,000.

Sandy Bennett to Jacob Bennett, lot 4, block 10, $100.

Oscar J. Smith and wife to Melvin Thompson, lot 18, block 12, Charlevoix, $425.

S. C. GRAVES, M. D.,

Office in See Block, Charlevoix.

FOR SALE.

A FINE

Pair of Oxen

Yoke, Chain, and Sled, for Cash. Come Early.

J. MILO EATON.

HALL'S

Catarrh Cure

is recommended by Physicians!

$100 REWARD FOR A CASE IT FAILS TO CURE!

Wonderful and still with positive guarantee that it will cure any case, and we will forfeit the above amount if it fails in a single instance.

It is unlike all other Catarrh remedy, as it is taken internally, acting upon the blood, and is a vegetable preparation. Sold by druggists for $1, and ACCEPT NO IMITATION OR SUBSTITUTE. If he has not got it, send to us and we will forward immediately. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

DR. CROUTER, Agt., Charlevoix. 23

THE TALISMAN AND THE LEECH: A FRAGMENT.

It was a lovely lady that on her sick-bed lay;
It was a goodly lover that squeezed for her fresh gore;
And, not upon the highway, crouched on the well lined stone,
A withered white-haired beggar that made for alms her moan.

The lovely lover cast her his purse from saddle-bow,
"My love is lying dying, and for the leech I go.
Is yonder long physician a many arc I know;
Would that thy skillfulness of all among them I could know!"

"Take this," the crone, upstarting, placed on her hand a charm
Of dull and tarnished copper, a moss and battered thing.
"Wear this, and when thou ridest up to the leech's door, See for thyself what company of guests doth stand before."

And before the knight could thank her she vanished quite away,
And there was naught but a wee brown bird sailing upon the spray;
And the light hearted lover onward he squared his way,
And kissed the battered talisman, and blessed the kindly lay.

Up the ringing street he darted to the chief physician's door,
Heavens! what ghastly company was standing it before!
The souls of all the slain were there, ten thousand souls, I trow!
Like silver gleam in a pallid night, a-wavering to and fro.

On passed the knight to another leech, but he was worse yet;
Was crime as grossly if not quite so great a company;
And up and down the long street he rode, but everywhere he went,
Was the spirit of each patient under a monument.

"Alack! doth none a leech have skill?" was his despairing cry;
"And must the Lady Funcemoni in her youth and beauty die?"
There is but one physician left, and yonder at his door—
Oh, heavens! there floats a single ghost—a single ghost, no more!"

"Oh, a blessing on the talisman and on the kindly lay!"
Here is the surgeon skilled shall charm my lady's hurt away.
Ho! leech, ho! leech, ye, Master Leech, and ride hence with speed,
And then shall save a precious life, and win a precious mee!"

Up sprang the good physician then behind the stalline knight,
And swiftly the sounding cual clattered the pavement light;
And merrily the knight he sang, and shouted in his glee,
"A blessing on the kindly fay that guided me to thee!"

"Now, by our good Saint Anthony, what is it thou dost say?
Dost thou not know, Sir Knight, there is no physic, neither fay?
But tell me truly, who it was to me thy steps did guide,
For how should a poor leech be known through one the world wide?"

"Oh, trust me, trust me, Master Leech, thy fame spreads far and wide;
On every side of thy healing skill what miracles we hear!
For though thy stack doth lightly bear the rosy tint of youth,
There is no doctor so renowned in all the land, good sooth."

"Sir Knight, it ill becomes thy rank to mock a simple man;
One who doth practice Galen's art with all the skill he can;
But only yesterday I hung my chingle out at my door,
And I have had not a single evil—one patient, and no more."

"Now by Saint Anthony!" exclaimed the knight

The remainder of this interesting ballad has been lost.—Harper's Magazine.

HIGH UP in a BALLOON.

Late on a clear autumn afternoon of 188- the well-known "Woodard's Gardens," in the city of San Francisco, could scarcely contain a surging crowd come together from all quarters of the city to witness the ascent of a monster balloon. In that ascent our artist and the faithful reporter were directly interested; nor was the flight into ether which they and the Captain (an experienced seaman) of the undertaking proposed by any means a common-place affair, being more than an attempt to cross in mid-air the mighty range of the Sierra Nevada, and land far on the other side of that tremendous palisade, in Salt Lake City itself.

It is hardly necessary to state that this aeronautic feat had never been accomplished. Undertaken, the truthful writer regrets to confess, it had been, and by the same venturesome trio, who, rising in shame on the roof of the one-sided where they had collapsed at the very outset of their trip, railed at the brick chimney which had wrecked their air ship, endured the jeers of the throng below with humility, and vowed to repeat the attempt within a week. A clearly picture afforded an excellent opportunity. The balloon had been patched, the temper of the trio restored, and once again the immense swollen bag toppled in air, pulling upward with all of its 34,000 cubic feet of gas.

Our party were fairly prompt. We took our places amid the cheers of the crowd. Everything was looked to quickly. "Are you ready?" rang out the question. "Ready; let go!" sounded the Captain. The cables were packed off; with the sweep of the hurricane our aeronat shot up into space. The ground, the crowd, the buildings and shipping of the gardens, the tallest treetops outlying us, dropped like enchantment beneath—still further below—far beneath. Our undertaking was well begun.

So much has been said of the impressions which the air voyager derives during the first half hour of his ascent that space may be saved here. The thrill of intense excitement as all concertion with earth ceased, the numbed tones and black coats in the concourse of spectators becoming black and white dots; the universal "forearbearing" of all creation as one looks down upon it—all combine to produce a feeling that can never pall. The giddiness, felt at so vast an altitude as a balloon can soon attain is delicious. Few persons are troubled by giddiness. Confined somewhat rarefied atmosphere, one scarcely distinguishable from the rest. A kind of intoxication steals over the navigator. To live and move thus seems a rapture. Small wonder that the man who "balloons" once will "balloon" again and again, each time becoming more infatuated in tempting fate.

Our evening was perfectly serene and cloudless. A gentle breeze wafted us northward. The earth became a pale green and gray map as we reached the level of 2,000 feet above the Bay of San Francisco, which stretched out glimmering toward the horizon. We could discern the city, the Golden Gate, the Farallone Islands, the fog on Mount Diablo and the Coast Range summits. Northward rippled Sacramento Bay, with a golden dust of wheat hanging over it. The prospect invigorated usual soda water was appropriately absorbed by all present, stronger beverages being interdicted.

Sunset came on. We had been gradually reaching the speed of ninety miles an hour. Not that it was possible to perceive the fact without scientific help. Even if a hurricane is blowing, there is still the endless sensation of floating, floating, for the air-current and the air-ship keep exact pace. Thanks to the pieces of tissue paper which were flung out lavishly from time to time, and to the gauze streamers fluttering from our cordage, we could ascertain the direction of the wind. Even a few handfuls of sand thrown out from the ballast bags hanging over the rail caused us to rise perceptibly, for the best and most delicate scale in the chemist's laboratory cannot register the fractions of an ounce in size the balloon felt. The sun went down. Dusk advanced. "We must descend and put up for the night, friends," said our Captain. With the vault above turning to a deep indigo, we sank gently, and skirted along the country from which the Coast Range rises.

We were just in time to attract the attention of a number of farm hands returning from work through the fields. With unch shouting back and forth, our dragging ropes were caught and made fast. "I'm it to anything, from a gate-post to a steeple," suggested our artist, in a series of whoops worthy of a calliope. After a stiff battle, in which some of our kind assistors were pretty severely pulled about, we found ourselves on terra firma, and on the way to a neighboring farmhouse. There we made light of a famous supper, washed down gayly with superb California wine. Our first stage was accomplished, and we slept the sleep which is would be a great pity for only the just to enjoy.

"Daylight already?" was the common exclamation when our vigilant Captain administered sundry shakings to each one of us. In an hour breakfast was over, and we were retracing our steps through the fields. The anchors were loosed after hearty handshakes with our hospitable hosts; once more the delightful sensation of boundless freedom thrilled us. Isn't this rising early in the morning with a vengeance? queried one of the fraternity, as the Captain announced to be overtopping 16,000 feet.

The man who will make a joke of that character under such sustainal circumstances, deserves to be thrown out of this company," responded the Captain, gravely. But our atmospheric conditions were not long favorable to joking. The cold grew intense. Our voices seemed mysteriously muffled, and it was necessary to shout instead of chat. Ears tingled, and the rush of blood to the forehead foreboded the sudden nose-bleedings that followed. Our Captain, prudent sailor, thoroughly approved of husbanding the aeronautical powers of his craft. We dropped upon less than an attempt to cross in mid-air the mighty range of the Sierra Nevada, and land far on the other side of that tremendous palisade, in Salt Lake City itself.

It is hardly necessary to state that this aeronautic feat had never been accomplished. Undertaken, the truthful writer regrets to confess, it had been, and by the same venturesome trio, who, rising in shame on the roof of the one-sided where they had collapsed at the very outset of their trip, railed at the brick chimney which had wrecked their air ship, endured the jeers of the throng below with humility, and vowed to repeat the attempt within a week. A clearly picture afforded an excellent opportunity. The balloon had been patched, the temper of the trio restored, and once again the immense swollen bag toppled in air, pulling upward with all of its 34,000 cubic feet of gas.

Our party were fairly prompt. We took our places amid the cheers of the crowd. Everything was looked to quickly. "Are you ready?" rang out the question. "Ready; let go!" sounded the Captain. The cables were packed off; with the sweep of the hurricane our aeronat shot up into space. The ground, the crowd, the buildings and shipping of the gardens, the tallest treetops outlying us, dropped like enchantment beneath—still further below—far beneath. Our undertaking was well begun.

So much has been said of the impressions which the air voyager derives during the first half hour of his ascent that space may be saved here. The thrill of intense excitement as all concertion with earth ceased, the numbed tones and black coats in the concourse of spectators becoming black and white dots; the universal "forearbearing" of all creation as one looks down upon it—all combine to produce a feeling that can never pall. The giddiness, felt at so vast an altitude as a balloon can soon attain is delicious. Few persons are troubled by giddiness. Confined somewhat rarefied atmosphere, one scarcely distinguishable from the rest. A kind of intoxication steals over the navigator. To live and move thus seems a rapture. Small wonder that the man who "balloons" once will "balloon" again and again, each time becoming more infatuated in tempting fate.

Our evening was perfectly serene and cloudless. A gentle breeze wafted us northward. The earth became a pale green and gray map as we reached the level of 2,000 feet above the Bay of San Francisco, which stretched out glimmering toward the horizon. We could discern the city, the Golden Gate, the Farallone Islands, the fog on Mount Diablo and the Coast Range summits. Northward rippled Sacramento Bay, with a golden dust of wheat hanging over it. The prospect invigorated usual soda water was appropriately absorbed by all present, stronger beverages being interdicted.

Sunset came on. We had been gradually reaching the speed of ninety miles an hour. Not that it was possible to perceive the fact without scientific help. Even if a hurricane is blowing, there is still the endless sensation of floating, floating, for the air-current and the air-ship keep exact pace. Thanks to the pieces of tissue paper which were flung out lavishly from time to time, and to the gauze streamers fluttering from our cordage, we could ascertain the direction of the wind. Even a few handfuls of sand thrown out from the ballast bags hanging over the rail caused us to rise perceptibly, for the best and most delicate scale in the chemist's laboratory cannot register the fractions of an ounce in size the balloon felt. The sun went down. Dusk advanced. "We must descend and put up for the night, friends," said our Captain. With the vault above turning to a deep indigo, we sank gently, and skirted along the country from which the Coast Range rises.

We were just in time to attract the attention of a number of farm hands returning from work through the fields. With unch shouting back and forth, our dragging ropes were caught and made fast. "I'm it to anything, from a gate-post to a steeple," suggested our artist, in a series of whoops worthy of a calliope. After a stiff battle, in which some of our kind assistors were pretty severely pulled about, we found ourselves on terra firma, and on the way to a neighboring farmhouse. There we made light of a famous supper, washed down gayly with superb California wine. Our first stage was accomplished, and we slept the sleep which is would be a great pity for only the just to enjoy.

"Daylight already?" was the common exclamation when our vigilant Captain administered sundry shakings to each one of us. In an hour breakfast was over, and we were retracing our steps through the fields. The anchors were loosed after hearty handshakes with our hospitable hosts; once more the delightful sensation of boundless freedom thrilled us. Isn't this rising early in the morning with a vengeance? queried one of the fraternity, as the Captain announced to be overtopping 16,000 feet.

"The man who will make a joke of that character under such sustainal circumstances, deserves to be thrown out of this company," responded the Captain, gravely. But our atmospheric conditions were not long favorable to joking. The cold grew intense. Our voices seemed mysteriously muffled, and it was necessary to shout instead of chat. Ears tingled, and the rush of blood to the forehead foreboded the sudden nose-bleedings that followed. Our Captain, prudent sailor, thoroughly approved of husbanding the aeronautical powers of his craft. We dropped upon less than an attempt to cross in mid-air the mighty range of the Sierra Nevada, and land far on the other side of that tremendous palisade, in Salt Lake City itself.

It is hardly necessary to state that this aeronautic feat had never been accomplished. Undertaken, the truthful writer regrets to confess, it had been, and by the same venturesome trio, who, rising in shame on the roof of the one-sided where they had collapsed at the very outset of their trip, railed at the brick chimney which had wrecked their air ship, endured the jeers of the throng below with humility, and vowed to repeat the attempt within a week. A clearly picture afforded an excellent opportunity. The balloon had been patched, the temper of the trio restored, and once again the immense swollen bag toppled in air, pulling upward with all of its 34,000 cubic feet of gas.

Our party were fairly prompt. We took our places amid the cheers of the crowd. Everything was looked to quickly. "Are you ready?" rang out the question. "Ready; let go!" sounded the Captain. The cables were packed off; with the sweep of the hurricane our aeronat shot up into space. The ground, the crowd, the buildings and shipping of the gardens, the tallest treetops outlying us, dropped like enchantment beneath—still further below—far beneath. Our undertaking was well begun.

So much has been said of the impressions which the air voyager derives during the first half hour of his ascent that space may be saved here. The thrill of intense excitement as all concertion with earth ceased, the numbed tones and black coats in the concourse of spectators becoming black and white dots; the universal "forearbearing" of all creation as one looks down upon it—all combine to produce a feeling that can never pall. The giddiness, felt at so vast an altitude as a balloon can soon attain is delicious. Few persons are troubled by giddiness. Confined somewhat rarefied atmosphere, one scarcely distinguishable from the rest. A kind of in-

The First Pass.

If a man never has a pass on a railroad he goes through life paying his fare, and never thinks of the hard hardship, but when once the free pass enters the system he has good to a railroad forever after, and he looks upon the paying of fare on a railroad as a wicked scheme, an outrage, as it were. Up to 1860 the writer had always paid fare on railroads, and probably had expended as much as $7, all told, in riding from one town to another on the cars, and he never missed his money, feeling that it was the duty of every citizen to support the great highways of commerce. In an evil hour the writer became interested in a newspaper at Jefferson, and one day he came in the mail a pass for himself and his partner, on the Northwestern Railroad. It was a great event in his history of that road. After the recipient of the pass had recovered from the astonishment, and had begun to realize that he was entitled to ride free between Jefferson and Chicago, and had shown the pass to nearly all the people who were at the Post-office waiting for the mail to be distributed, he began to inquire of the depot agent what time the first train passed the depot, going either way. It did not make much difference to the editor which way the train was going, so long as it went. It was found that a freight train would go along in about five hours, bound south, and the holder of the new pass was compelled to put in those five hours waiting for it. It seemed a month, and the pass seemed to burn a hole in the pocket, and it was about a dozen times to cool off, and to show to different persons who had heard of its arrival and had come down to see it. Finally, the train pulled up to the depot, and the editor took his seat on the caboose, and it seemed as though the people on the depot-steps were talking over the new era in railroading. It seemed as though the train never would start, and after it started it seemed though the conductor never would come through to look at the pass. A fully half a crying baby, and the editor in his kind-heartedness attempted to quiet the baby by showing it the pass, and was nearly paralyzed when the child put a corner of the pass in its mouth and began to chew it. In prompt measures of clocking the infant the pass was recovered, and the conductor came along, and the editor handed up his pass with an air of one who always rode on a pass. The conductor looked at the date of the pass, and it did not take effect till the next day, and he said the editor would have to put up twenty cents, the fare between Jefferson and Fort Atkinson. It was cruel, but no argument would convince that freight conductor that the pass ought to be good until the day after, and it was necessary to pay good money for a ride down and back, forty cents, and the editor took the train on purpose on earth except to get the pass. The editor took a solemn obligation to make that railroad sorry for the outrage, and for a year afterward was a cold day when the railroad did not have to carry the writer or his partner somewhere. They divided themselves up into relieds, and it was the duty of one of them to go somewhere every day. They were both for days to work, and riding on the cars was just about exercise enough. They would go to Milton Junction, or Janesville, and back, and conductors got so that if one of the Jefferson editors did not show up at the depot when the train stopped they would hold the train. The pass became so well known that it fell of significance. It indicates that the wishes of deceased friends do not command the respect that they once did; that the will, when not based upon an equal distribution of property, has, in fact, become a decadent institution. Nowadays, with the watchwords of equality, cannot tolerate anything savoring of entailment and primogeniture. It permits people to accumulate large fortunes, but not to hand them down intact to the oldest born or nearest heir, or a favorite relative of friend. The will which often attempts to a greater or less degree this sort of thing is antagonistic to the spirit of the age. Equal distribution, not concentration of wealth, is the demand of democracy. Another fact has tended to loosen the foundations of the will. Not infrequently the testator, failing during his life to revenge himself upon some hated relative, seeks to accomplish his detestable object after death. He either deprives that relative of a rightful share in the estate, or makes conditions repugnant to justice, either in honor or self-respect. In such a case the will is almost certain to be broken. The hand of the dead must not be permitted to strike the living. The conscission to which these considerations lead us is plain. A will not based upon equity and justice is almost certain to be broken and the estate distributed equally among the heirs. But if a will has been made in accordance with the dictum, it is simply a performed document. Had it not been drawn up at all the laws would have made the distribution of the property.—Rochester Democrat.

The Way to Take Iron.

Bridget—"That did the doctor say was the matter wid you, Liz?"

Pat—"Faith, and he said me constitution was run down, and I needed drinkin iron for me blood."

Bridget—"Iron for yer blood! And how can ye drinkik iron?"

Pat—"By mellting it, to be sure."

Bridget—"But yer can't drinkk melted hot iron, ye fool."

Pat—"Indade, don't I know that? I can't drinkk melted hot iron, but can I wait till it cools?"—Exchange.

HUMOR.

The dark corse—a dead darky.

The last of his race—the distanced horse.

An old gentleman who got tripped up while trying to cross the ball-room, remarked, as he slowly crawled to his perpendicular, that it was always pleasant to be thrown in the company of young people.

"Are you near-sighted, miss?" said an impatient fellow to a young lady who did not choose to recognize him. "Yes," she retorted; "at this distance I can hardly tell whether you are an ape or a puppy."

"Are you to take astronomy next term, Elsie?" inquired a classmate of her young friend. "Hardly. I think gnomics is going me splendid astronomy. I learned some during the vacation." Gnomics! Gnomics! Gnomics!

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., March 27, 1884.

BODY ROT.

Col. Ingersoll's Description of It and Its Effects.

There is prejudice against any man engaged in the liquor business. I be leve that from the time it issues from the coiled and poisonous worm in the distillery until it empties into the hold of death, dishonor, and crime, that alcohol is demoralizing to everybody that touches it, from its source to where it ends. I do not believe that anybody can contemplate the subject without being prejudiced against the crime. All we have to do is to think of the wrecks on either side of the stream of death, of the suicides, of the insanity, of the poverty, pauperism, and destruction coming from alcohol; of the little children tugging at the breast of weeping, despairing, starving mothers begging for bread; of the men of genius it has wrecked, of the men struggling with imaginary serpents produced by this devilish thing; and when we think of the jails and almshouses, of the asylums, of the prisons, and of the scaffolds on either bank, I do not wonder that every thoughtful man is prejudiced against the vile stuff called alcohol.

Intemperance cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength, and age in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affection, destroys conjugal love, blots out filial attachments, blights paternal hope, and brings premature age in sorrow and dishonor to the grave. It produces weakness, not strength; sickness not health; death, not life. It makes wives widows, children orphans, fathers fiends, and all paupers. It feeds rheumatism, nurses gout, welcomes epidemics, invites cholera, imports pestilence, engenders consumption, and covers the land with idleness, misery, and crime. It produces controversies, fosters quarrels, cherishes riots. It crowds our penitentiaries and furnishes victims for the scaffold.

Alcohol is the blood of the gambler, the inspiration of the burglar, the stimulus of the highwayman, and the support of the midnight incendiary. It suggests the lie and countenances the liar, emboldens the thief, esteems the blasphemer. It violates obligations, reverences fraud, turns love to hate, scorns virtue and innocence. It incites the father to butcher his helpless offspring, and the child to sharpen the parricidal ax.

Alcohol burns up men, consumes women, destroys life, curses God and despises heaven. It suborns witnesses, nurses perfidy, defiles the jury box and stains the judicial ermine. It bribes voters, disqualifies votes, corrupts elections, pollutes our institutions, and endangers the government. It degrades the citizen, debases the legislator, dishonors the statesman, and disarms the patriot. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not hopes; misery, not happiness; and with the malevolence of a fiend calmly surveys its frightful desolation; and reveling in havoc, it poisons felicity, destroys peace, ruins morals, wipes out national honor, curses the world, and laughs at the ruin it has wrought. It does that and more—it murders the soul. It is the sum of all villainies, the father of all crimes, the mother of abominations, the devil's best friend and God's worst enemy.

F. J. Cheney & Co., proprietors Hall's Catarrh Cure, offer $100 reward for any case of Catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

Waiting For the Boom.

The conditions are now favorable in this country and in England for one of those sudden jumps which invariably start an era of good times. The two conditions are cheap food and cheap money. Cheap food acts by allowing the laboring man to save something over and above the cost of living. Having to spend less on food the laboring classes have more to spend on other things. This force acts gently throughout all lines of trade, but is especially effective in trades which deal in machines and instruments used in commerce and in the materials for such.

The experience of both America and England shows that iron is the first trade to feel the influence of this increased demand; and signs are not wanting in the iron centers to show that an upward movement has already begun in a small way. The fact that the variations in iron are as yet normal should cause no anxiety, for such was the condition of things for six months immediately preceding the rapid rise in 1879.

The manufacture of iron being stimulated the good effects are extended with rapidity to all other trades. Now cheap money comes in to play its part. Stimulated trade requires more capital, which is readily had at the banks. The money which has been idle rapidly comes into use and recovering credit adds largely to swell the tide. So perfect is the system of exchanges that all these changes act great with rapidity, and almost before one is able to realize the fact the boom has come.—Detroit Times.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Pierneker's Condition Powders unsurpassed. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co. 1-60

The ways and means committee room is said to be thronged with iron and steel men, from all parts of the country but notably from Pennsylvania, who loudly protest against any change of tariff. Some of them are said to be sleek tongued fellows and can talk iron and steel and the necessity for their protection, without any lot up, for hours, waxing warmer and more eloquent as they proceed. Hon. Abram S. Hewitt member of the committee, himself an iron and steel manufacturer, can see them on every point, tell them facts that they do not seem to know and asks them questions that when answered, shows completely the hollowness of their pretensions.

Oh! this protection is a sham, cheat, and delusion, and we earnestly hope its days are numbered.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Blood! Blood! Blood! In a necessity in all animal life, and to be free from disease the blood must be pure. There is no doubt that Pierneker's Blood Purifier excels in the driving out of salt rheum and bathing up the system by making new blood, thus preventing the disorders so common of sores, ulcers, boils, tumors, pimples, erysipelas, &c. Do not wait but prevent them by a free use of the Purifier. Large bottles $1.00. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

In Brazil, where the inhabitants take coffee many times a day, alcoholism is unknown. Immigrants gradually contract a fondness for coffee, and their children fall into the habit, and never contract a love for liquors that are so fatal in other countries. The number of cafes in the large cities is enormous, while the drinking saloons are very few.

Incipient consumption, coughs, colds, bronchitis, &c., are all the results of neglect or exposure, and must have prompt and active remedies to remove them. Croup and whooping cough cause great suffering because no effective remedy is near at hand. Why then leave yourself and children exposed to danger and death, when Hamilton's Cough Balsam will relieve all of these and prevent diseases, such as pneumonia, inflammation of lungs, and consumption. All these difficulties are removed by this remedy. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

The Cheboygan Democrat says some of the lumbermen in that vicinity have reduced the wages of their employes to $12 a month. As protectionists insist that protection is for the benefit of the laborer, it is probably according to their theory that lumber should be "protected" more but the probability is that it would simply cost the consumer more, put more money in the pockets of the owners of large tracts of pine, who would keep right on importing cheaper labor from Canada as they do now. The claim that protection benefits the laborer is a humbug.

Stock growers all agree that for general use Infinite Sanitarian in powders is better calculated to give satisfactory results than those prepared by E. M. Parmelee, because they really contain the valuable remedies claimed, and do not fail to act quickly and effectively in coughs, colds, epizootic, foul blood, stoppage of water, and poor digestion, &c., in horses. For cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry, they are invaluable. Full pounds only 25 cents. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

Do you value your horses and cattle? Attention to their health is as necessary as their regular food. If your horse is suffering from Epizootic, Blindness, Spavin, Spraindeg, Fever in foot, Strains, Bruises or cuts, or your cow has caked bag, sore teats, or bad blood, you will save money by buying Parmelee's Universal Liniment and using it freely for any or all of these troubles, and so bring your stock into a healthful and valuable condition. It is the best liniment also for general family use. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. R. Weed & Co.

Bring your Election Tickets to the JOURNAL OFFICE to be Printed.

WOOD WANTED.

Fifty Cords good merchantable wood wanted on subscription, at the JOURNAL office. Bring it while the roads are good.

PIMPLES.

I will mail (Free) the receipt for a simple vegetable compound that will remove TAN, PIMPLES, FRECKLES and PIMPLES, leaving the skin soft, clear and beautiful, and will also inform you how to obtain a luxuriant growth of hair on a bald head or smooth face. Address, inclosing a 3c. stamp, REV. V. MOLES & CO., 12 Barclay St., N. Y.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.

A GENTLEMAN who suffered for years from NERVOUS DEBILITY, PREMATURE DECAY, and all the effects of youthful indiscretion, will for the sake of suffering humanity, send free to all who need it, the recipe and direction for making the simple remedy by which he was cured. Address, JOHN B. OGDEN, 42 Cedar St., New York.

FARM FOR SALE.

Consisting of 144 acres, six miles from Charlevoix, on main road. Soil, clay loam. A good frame house, and two frame bark barns. About 30 acres cleared, balance good beech and maple timber. Also about 250 fruit trees beginning to bear. One half mile from school house. Price, one thousand seven hundred dollars, with one hundred dollars down; balance to suit purchaser. For further particulars apply to DAVID H. FRANCIS, Charlevoix, Mich.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send the recipe used, (with directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE for COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. Parties wishing the prescription will please address, REV. E. A. WILSON, 194 Penn St., Williamsburgh, N. Y.

FOR SALE.

SECOND HAND

Stationary Engine and Boiler

Size of cylinder, 10x20 in.; Boiler 12 feet long, 42 in. diameter, 40 flues. The engine has been thoroughly overhauled, and is practically as good as new. Price and terms reasonable. Enquire of S. M. MOTT,

Cor. of Washburn & Ackert, at the Machine Shop.

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. The Grand Rapids Chair Company, Respondent, vs. William T. Adsit. Notice is hereby given that on the 26th day of January, 1884, a writ of attachment was duly issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in the above entitled cause, against the goods, chattels and effects of William T. Adsit, the above named defendant, for the sum of one thousand one hundred and 14.00 dollars ($1,00, 00) on which said writ was returnable on the fifth Tuesday of February, 1884. Dated February 11th, A. D. 1884.

BEARD, KINGSLEY & KILLY, Attorneys for plaintiff.

2-36

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan, The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. Thomas Bennett, Jacob Bennett, Reuben Bennett, Walter Bennett, Plaintiffs, vs. John Monroe, Andrew Matthews, defendants. Notice is hereby given that on the 6th day of December, A. D. 1883, a writ of attachment was issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, at the suit of Lewis Bennett, plaintiff, vs. John Monroe, defendant, for the sum of Seven Hundred Dollars, on which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1884.

Dated February 11th, A. D. 1884.

CRUCKSHANK & GRIFE, Attorneys for plaintiffs.

2-35

NOTICE OF ATTACHMENT.—State of Michigan. The circuit court for the county of Charlevoix. Archibald Buttars, Adelbert B. Upright, and Dorcas Blaight, plaintiffs, vs. John Monroe and Amelia Matthews, defendants. Notice is hereby given that on the 6th day of December, A. D. 1883, a writ of attachment was issued out of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, at the suit of Archibald Buttars, Adelbert B. Upright, and Dorcas Blaight, the above named plaintiffs, against the goods, chattels, moneys and effects of John Monroe and Amelia Matthews, the defendants above named, for the sum of three thousand three hundred dollars, on which said writ was made returnable on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1884.

Dated February 11th, A. D. 1884.

CRUCKSHANK & GRIFE, Attorneys for plaintiffs.

2-37

NOTICE OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

STATE OF MICHIGAN } ss.
County of Charlevoix.

Notice is hereby given that the estate of

FRANK CHALOUTKA, Minor.

Notice is hereby given, that in pursuance of an order granted by the Judge of Probate, for the county of Charlevoix, on the 20 day of March, A. D. 1884, there will be sold at public vendue, to the highest bidder, at the front door of Lewis's hall, in the county of Charlevoix, in said state, on the 26 day of April, A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day (subject to all incumbrances by mortgage or otherwise existing at the time of sale, viz: following described real estate, to wit, The north east quarter of the north east quarter of section twenty four (24) in township Thirty-four (34) north of range eight (8) west, containing forty (40) acres more or less.

CHARLES CHALOUTKA, Guardian.

STATE OF MICHIGAN.—Thirteenth judicial circuit, in chancery. Joseph Clemens, complainant, vs. Martin J. Staley, Martha J. Ayers, Mary H. Wood, defendants. Suit pending in the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, at chambers, on the 19th day of December, A. D. 1883. In this cause it appearing from affidavit of Wm. H. Wood, that the defendant, Ayers, is not a resident of this state, but resides at Ellenburg in the state of New York, on motion of Crukshank & Grife, complainant's solicitors, it is ordered that the said defendant, Martha J. Ayers, cause her appearance to be entered within four months from the date of this order, and in case of her appearance that she cause her answer to the complainant's bill of complaint to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on said complainant's solicitors, within twenty days after service on her of a copy of said bill, and in default thereof the said bill of complaint be taken as confessed by the said Martha J. Ayers. And it is further ordered that within twenty days the said complainant cause a notice of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Democrat, a newspaper printed and published in said county, and that such publication be continued therein at least once in each week, for six weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non-resident defendant, at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for her appearance.

OSCAR F. WENTZ,
Circuit court commissioner.

CRUCKSHANK & GRIFE,
Complainant's solicitors.

A true copy, attest. OSCAR UPRIGHT,
Deputy Register.

2-36

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 75 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Democrat.—By mail, $8.00 per year in advance, postage free.

Weekly Democrat.—$1.50 per year; 75 cents for six months, 40 cents for three months—invariably in advance.

THE DEMOCRAT,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

J. MILO EATON,

DEALER IN

REAL ESTATE

OF ALL KINDS.

Houses and Lots for Sale

IN THE MOST DESIRABLE PARTS OF CHARLEVOIX.

WILD LANDS AND IMPROVED FARMS

FOR SALE IN ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTY.

Abstracts of Title Furnished on Short Notice.

Represents the

Best Insurance Companies.

OFFICE ON BRIDGE STREET. ESTABLISHED IN 1875.

IMMENSE CUT IN PRICES

—OF—

All-Wool Goods.

Overcoats and Suitings,

Boots and Shoes.

I have a large stock of Clothing and Boots and Shoes which I will close out at actual cost, as I wish to make room for spring goods. All my goods I will warrant.

First-Class,

And will be pleased to show them to all parties whether they intend to purchase or not. Remember, I have marked these goods down at actual cost, and they are

Big Bargains.

E. M. Clark.

Charlevoix, Feb. 12, 1884.

THIS IS THE SAME

OLD FOX

OF BY-GONE YEARS.

And he is, this spring and summer, giving the hounds a hard run to seten him. They are all after him, in full cry, but he distances them all.

The Old Reliable Establishment in Charlevoix

Is full to overflowing with the most complete assortment of

DRESS GOODS, CLOTHING

Boots and Shoes,

Hats and Caps, Gents' Goods,

Ladies' Goods, Crockery, Glassware, Carpets,

Groceries, Provisions, Flour & Feed

And you can't guess anything we haven't got

FRESH.

Our sales thus far this year are far in excess of the same time a year ago, and are daily increasing, which attests the popularity of our establishment.

REMEMBER

We deliver promptly all goods to steamers, stages, private houses or resorts, and we give our customers prompt attention and perfect satisfaction.

COME AND SEE US

Yours,

AMOS FOX.

THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL.

NUMBER 38. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1884. $1.50 PER YEAR.

THE JOURNAL

Published every Thursday morning,

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

Office over T. D. Smith's grocery,

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ATTORNEYS.

CRUCKSHANK & GRIFE, Attorneys at Law, Office in Lewis' block, Charlevoix, Mich. A. P. CRUCKSHANK. O. J. GRIFE.

DEY & CAUL, Attorneys at Law, Real Estate and Loan Agents. Lake st., east of postoffice, Petoskey, Mich.

CHAS. S. ALDRICH, Attorney at Law, East Jordan, Mich.

FRED W. MAYNE, Attorney and Counselor, Real Estate Agent. Prompt attention to all business. Office in Union State Bank, Boyne City, Mich.

JAY L. NEWBERRY, Attorney at Law, and Circuit Court Commissioner. Office in bank building, entrance on Mitchell St. Petoskey, Mich.

A. T. CLARK, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

J. MILO EATON, Attorney at Law, Charlevoix, Mich.

NORTON, KEAY & MARTIN, Attorneys at Law, Office opposite U. S. Hotel, Boyne City, Mich.

C. F. WINNEE, Attorney and Solicitor, U. S. Circuit Court Commissioner.

C. W. VARNUM, Attorney at Law, Boyne City, Mich.

BANKS AND BANKERS.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX. Capital $50,000. Makes no investment deposits received by pledge of government bonds, real estate, and indorsed notes for more than above amount. Exists to loan on first mortgages. Foreign and domestic exchange. BELDING & BROWN.

CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. In the school house. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 7:30. REV. C. F. VANASKEN, pastor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Sunday services at 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at close of morning service. Prayer and praise meeting Thursday evening at 7 o'clock. A. J. HODGES, pastor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

CHARLEVOIX HOUGH AND READY FIRE COMPANY meet the first and third Thursday evenings of each month. H. F. BISSER, Secretary.

HOMEOPATHIC PHARMACY.

R. SUTHERLAND, Homeopathic Medicines, Books, Humphrey's cards, etc., Charlevoix, Mich.

LIVERY STABLE.

J. MILO EATON, Proprietor. Gent. Turnouts on stages and for pleasure parties. Prices reasonable. Good Saddle Horses a Specialty.

PHYSICIANS.

J. A. CARLSTEDT, M. D. Office at his residence.

J. LEWIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. Office in the lower block, Charlevoix, Mich.

N. G. GRAVES, M. D., Office in See Block, Charlevoix.

W. H. PRESTON, M. D., Surgeon and Homeopathic Physician, Charlevoix, Mich.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

PERRY S. HARSHA, Notary Public, Real Estate, Loan, and Insurance Agt., Charlevoix.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

A. E.—Bacher Post No. 119, meets second Monday in each month, at Odd Fellows' hall.

F. C. T.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 327, meets every Tuesday evening, at Odd Fellows' hall.

I. O. O. F.—Round Lake Lodge No. 293, meets every Wednesday evening, in their hall.

O. L. L.—True Blue No. 92, meet Saturday on or before full moon in Odd Fellows' hall.

MASONIC.—Charlevoix Lodge No. 328, meets Tuesday on or before full moon. Hall over postoffice.

1872 1884

DR. G. W. CROUTER,

THE DRUGGIST.

Our Motto: P. P.

PURITY, POLITENESS.

WE MAKE IT A POINT TO SELL ONLY

Full Strength & Fresh Goods

OUR PRICES WILL ALWAYS BE AS LOW AS

STRICTLY PURE DRUGS

CAN BE SOLD.

Our Stock is the Largest in the County.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY

The Great Agitator of Woman's Right to be Equal with Man at the Ballot Box.

At the foot of the Green Mountains, South Adams, Mass., in 1820, was born this woman who has so faithfully and devotedly championed the franchise of her sex at the ballot box. Her ingress into the ranks of the woman's rights cause emmuted from her early experience as a school teacher, her compensation being but eight dollars a month, while men received for the same service from twenty-four to thirty dollars. After fifteen years of the closest economy she had saved only $800 out of her meagre salary, while, had she received equal compensation for equal service her savings would have aggregated at least $2,000. The contrast aroused her conceptions of injustice, and from 1852 she has been one of the leading spirits in every woman's rights convention held in America; was all these years, and still is, the secretary of the national association.

A great many people suppose that "woman's rights" is an eccentric "hobby" with Miss Anthony. Not so. From 1856 to 1866 she was an ardent worker with Wendell Phillips and Lloyd Garrison in the anti-slavery cause, and continued to advocate freedom for the negro until the emancipation edict gave them their liberty. She is also a great temperance worker, and, in fact, wherever there is a cause in which justice and the good of all humanity is involved, the voice, the heart and sympathies of Susan B. Anthony is foremost in the contest.

Miss Anthony has a fine figure and large well-shaped head. The world calls her cross-grained and angular. She has indeed her peculiar ways, but they are only exterior. Her nature is a broad, generous and sympathetic one, though she never weeps or sentimentalizes. Our likeness well portrays the strong character of Miss Anthony, and our readers can rely upon its being a faithful reproduction of an excellent photograph very lately taken.

The Folly of Protection.

One great product of the American agriculturist has recently been shut out from the leading markets of continental Europe. Germany has placed an inhibition on the importation of American pork, and France has imitated Bismarck's example. This action is a severe blow to an interest that was rapidly developing into one of the most important of American enterprises.

The American farmer is the one who will suffer most by reason of this hostile attitude of Germany and France toward the American hog. It deprives him of an extensive market for his surplus pork product, and must necessarily tend to lower the price of that staple article. He is restricted now to the English and home markets, which of course must soon become glutted.

It is but natural that the American farmer should make inquiry as to the cause of these arbitrary decrees of the two great governments of Europe. He is told by the protectionist organs that they are due to the discovery of trichina in the American pork; that Germany and France were moved by the highest considerations of public policy in prohibiting American pork. But these statements are far from the truth. Neither the German chancellor nor the French government assign these reasons as the real ground of their arbitrary conduct. They put it squarely upon the ground of protection to their home pork raisers and packers. They found that the American imports were fast crowding out the home product, lowering prices, and working ruin to the German and French packing trade. They accordingly took immediate steps to prevent any further depression in the home markets, and resolved upon the prohibition of American pork. In taking this course they simply carried into practical effect the American idea of protection. How strange is the irony of fate!

The American people have no right to complain of this treatment. It is in perfect harmony with the divine injunction of "an eye for an eye," etc. For years we have placed restrictions upon the sale of foreign products in this country, and in every possible way hampered and hindered commercial intercourse with other nations. A few years ago Canada placed a retaliatory tariff upon American goods, and we no longer enjoy the benefit of her markets. Germany and France have also responded with prohibitory duties upon our products. Thus reciprocity has begot restriction, until to-day we enjoy the freedom of the markets of only one great country, viz., England. And the latter buys from us only what she cannot get elsewhere. She is largely dependent upon America for her provisions and grains, but she is encouraging by every means in her power the production of the breadstuffs in her Indian and African possessions, so that she may eventually be made absolutely independent of us. All this foreboded ruin to the American farmer. The tariff is responsible for this unfortunate condition of things, and the taxridden agriculturist is beginning to realize this fact. Protection must go! —Lansing Journal.

Another Form of Inflation.

A protective tariff is but another form of inflation, as it tends to create fictitious values, and free traders recognize the fact that to abolish it all at once would be injurious to the business interests of the country, in the same way that an immediate withdrawal of the greenbacks from circulation at the end of the war would have disturbed business so seriously. They demand that it shall be gradually reduced until on a free trade basis is reached. In this the people are with them, and the party that opposes them, or attempts to delay the party, will get left.—Grand Rapids Radical.

The American Journalist says "the country papers do more to shape the destinies of the people than the whole metropolitan press combined." It also says "the city press supplies the current news in the cities and the country newspaper digests it into the shape of practical and effective thought. * * The facts are spread before them by the great city dailies, and they control or guide public sentiment."

English farmers are clamoring for an act prohibiting the importation of American cattle or cattle from any country where the foot and mouth disease exists. It is stated that absolute exclusion of foreign cattle is the object of this move so that the price of home products may be increased. This is only another instance of the grasping nature of the protection policy.

The Big Rapids Herald has interviewed all the big lumbermen of that vicinity, and from the published opinions it seems that one-third favor free trade; one-third think that to remove the tariff would be injurious, while another portion think this would be obviated by setting a time ahead for the removal. With one or two exceptions those interviewed unanimously expressed the opinion that the people at large would be benefited by free lumber.

E. T. BROWN & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS' AGENTS.

Portable and Stationary Engines

Boilers, Mill and Wood-working Machinery.

Mill Supplies, Threshers, and Threshing Engines.

Bargains in Second-Hand Machinery.

WRITE FOR PRICE AND CATALOGUE.

WEST BRIDGE ST., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH

PINE LAKE HOUSE

A. J. HALL, Proprietor.

Boyne City, Michigan.

This house is finely located on the Boyne river, at the head of Pine Lake. It is large and commodious, and is well adapted to the entertainment of the travelling public.

Pioneer House,

A. E. NOYES, Proprietor.

Ironton, Michigan.

Every accommodation for the travelling public.

United States Hotel,

GEO. W. CHILDS, Proprietor,

Boyne City, Michigan.

House thoroughly refitted and refurnished.

Sewing Machines

CHEAP.

A few fine sewing machines for sale at from 1 to 5 cents. Call soon and see your bargain.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

D. N. WAY.

MRS. W. J. BRADLEY

Ladies' and Children's

Furnishing Goods

Lately owned by Fisher & Inwood, and will be pleased to retain all the old customers and as many more as possible. Call and see my stock.

C. R. BELLINGER

carries the largest and finest stock of

JEWELRY,

Silverware, Watches, Clocks, and Optical Goods in Charlevoix county. Agent for the celebrated ROCKFORD WATCH, the best time-piece ever made. All goods left for repairs warranted one year, for its six months are subjected to sale for charges.

O. W. SMITH,

ELECTRO-PLATER,

Manufacturing Jeweler

and Lapidist.

Electro-plating in gold and silver. Any article of jewelry made to order. AGATES AND JASPERS cut to order.

HALL'S

Catarrh Cure

Is Recommended by Physicians!

$100 REWARD PAID FOR NONE.

We manufacture and sell it with a positive guarantee that it will cure any case of catarrh, and we will do what we claim.

It is a simple remedy, and in its purification and other causes, acting upon the blood. If you will promise with the offering disease, ask your druggist for it, and use according to directions, and if you do not get it, send to us, and we will forward you a bottle, prepaid, on receipt of price, $1 per bottle.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

Dr. CROUTER, Agt., Charlevoix. 22

Old Newspapers for Sale.

Board by the Day

or Week

AND

WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS.

Also Tonsorial Figures.

Prices reasonable. W. S. JOHNSON,

Op. Bridge St. House, Charlevoix.

Bridge Street House,

ROBERT MILLER, Proprietor,

Charlevoix, Michigan.

This house is centrally located, and its accommodations excellent. The tables supplied with the best the market affords. Only sample room in Charlevoix.

Fountain City House,

RICHARD COOPER, Proprietor.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

Every convenience for the travelling public. Free Hack to and from all trains.

Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Time Card to Go into Effect January, 1884.

GOING NORTH.

STATIONS.	No. 1	No. 3	No. 5	No. 7
Cincinnati, lv		7 00am	11 45pm
Richmond	2 55am	10 32	1 00
Winchester	3 31	11 05	1 36
Muncie	4 11	11 47	2 16
Fort Wayne, ar	6 05	2 05pm	4 05	1 55am
Fort Wayne, lv		2 17	4 20	8 05am
Kendallville		2 55	5 02	9 17
Ligonier		3 13	5 21	9 35
Wawaka		3 32	5 40	9 54
Milford Junc.		3 41	5 51	10 05
Leesburg		3 52	6 02	10 16
Warsaw, ar	7 15am	4 20	6 30	10 45
Warsaw, lv	7 30	10 05	8 05
Pierceton	7 48	10 23	8 23
Mentone	8 05	10 40am	8 40
Burket	8 13	10 48	8 48
Leesburg	8 25	10 59	8 59
Claypool		11 12	9 12
Warsaw		2 20pm	9 50
Pierceton		2 40
Kalkaska, lv		4 17	12 00am
Sidney		4 27	12 10
Winona		4 34	12 17
Warsaw, ar		4 50	12 35
Warsaw, lv		4 55	3 44
Leesburg		5 08	3 55
Burket		5 19	4 06
Mentone		5 27	4 14
Pierceton		5 35	4 22
Warsaw, ar		5 55	4 40
Warsaw, lv		6 00	4 50
Atwood		6 18	5 08
Leesburg		6 25	5 15
Claypool		6 35	5 25
Warsaw		6 50	5 40
Ligonier	7 50	7 50	6 40
Kendallville		8 05	6 55
Fort Wayne, ar	12 35pm	10 05	8 45
Fort Wayne, lv	5 35am	10 20am
Huntington	6 40	7 56	2 30
Winchester	7 26	8 46	3 05
Richmond, ar	8 27	9 47	4 05
Cincinnati, ar	7 40pm	12 50pm	7 35am

GOING SOUTH.

STATIONS.	No. 2	No. 4	No. 6	No. 8
Cincinnati, lv		3 15pm	7 20am
Richmond		4 40	8 45
Winchester		5 45am	9 52
Muncie		6 26	10 33
Fort Wayne, ar		7 50	11 55
Fort Wayne, lv		7 56	11 52
Kendallville		8 19	12 11
Ligonier		8 37	12 29
Wawaka		8 46	12 38
Milford Junc.		8 57	12 49
Leesburg		9 08	12 59
Warsaw, ar		9 35	1 26
Warsaw, lv		9 40	1 30pm
Pierceton		9 58	1 48
Mentone		10 15pm	2 05
Burket		10 23	2 13
Leesburg		10 34	2 24
Claypool		10 45	2 35
Warsaw		11 00	2 50
Pierceton		11 20	3 10
Kalkaska, lv		11 40	3 30
Sidney		11 50	3 40
Winona		11 57	3 47
Warsaw, ar		12 15am	4 05
Warsaw, lv	3 30pm	11 45	3 50
Leesburg	4 20	12 32am	4 36
Claypool	4 32	1 12	4 47
Warsaw	4 46	2 35	5 47
Ligonier	5 28	3 30	6 40
Kendallville	5 46	3 50	6 57
Fort Wayne, ar	6 25pm	4 35	7 35
Fort Wayne, lv	6 35	4 52	2 20
Huntington	7 07	5 32	3 00
Winchester	7 50	6 05	3 35
Muncie	8 41	8 16	4 12
Richmond	9 19	9 00	4 52
Cincinnati, ar	4 30am	10 05	6 45

C. L. LOCKWOOD, Agt. G. P. Agt.
Grand Rapids, Mich.

Grand Rapids Democrat,

DAILY AND WEEKLY.

Office: 75 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Daily Democrat.—By mail, $8.00 per year in advance, postage free.

Weekly Democrat.—$1.50 per year; 75 cents for six months, 40 cents for three months—invariably in advance. Address,

THE DEMOCRAT,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

JOHN NICHOLLS,

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

HARDWOOD AND PINE

LUMBER!

ALSO

Dressed Lumber, Oar Blades,

WAGON TONGUES, SHINGLES, LATH, ETC.

LUMBER SAWED AND BILLS FILLED TO ORDER.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

